TO THE READER,
The Author rendreth this Account of his Vndertaking and Performance in the following Work.

IT is a great complaint with many, that they want time, either to undertake great matters, or to accompliſh thoſe they have undertaken: Whereas it is more truly affirmed by Seneca, that we do not ſo much want, as waſte it. Non parum temporis habemus, ſed multum perdimus, as that Author hath it. We trifle out too much of our precious time, as he well obſerveth, Aut malè agendo, aut nihil agendo, aut aliud agendo; either in doing ill, or nothing, or elſe things impertinent: and then crie out, that we want time convenient to perform thoſe duties, which are expected from us, in our ſeverall places. Nor have we only time enough to ſpend, but ſome time to ſpare; ſome privacies and retreats from buſineſs; ſome breathing fits from the affairs of our Vocations: and even of them, thoſe times of leiſure and receſs, we are to render an Accompt in Cato's judgement. Otii reddendam rationem judicabat Cato, as we read in Tullie. In which Accompt, as all men generally are concerned, ſo am I intereſſed therein as much as any. For being by the unhappineſs of my Deſtiny, or the infelicity of the times, deprived of my preferments, and diveſted of my Miniſteriall Function, (as to the ordinary and publique exerciſe thereof) I cannot chooſe but ſay I have leiſure enough; the opportunity of ſpending more idle hours (if I were ſo minded) than I ever expected or deſired. And though perhaps I could have ſpent thoſe times of leiſure, which the change of my affairs hath given me, with greater benefit to my ſelf, and more to the advantage of my private fortunes: yet that of Cato did ſo over-ballance me, that I was willing to do ſomewhat which might witneſs to enſuing times, how I had paſſed away thoſe hours, and employed that leiſure. And when I was conſidering of ſome particulars within the compaſs of my power, and anſwerable to that ſmall ſtock of Books which I had recruited, (mine own being taken from me and diſpoſed of, contrary unto publick Order) I was requeſted by ſome friends of no common quality, to review my Geographie; to make it more complete and uſefull to an Engliſh Reader: My vacancy from buſineſs, uſed by them as an Argument to induce me to it. A motion looked on, when firſt made, with neglect enough, my deſuetude from thoſe younger Studies, my great want of Books, the ſad complexion of the times, and the unhandſom entertainment which my endeavours for the publick had lately met with, ſeeming ſufficient to diſſwade me from the undertaking. Little encouragement, God wot, to write Books for others, when I could not be permitted to enjoy my own; or to employ my self in order to a publick service, when not alone my private fortunes, but the publick Patrimony of the Church was destroyed and dissipated. But afterwards being pressed unto it by some Members of Parliament, whom I found loath to be denyed, and by some others of great rank, but such different interesses, that I wondred how they could all center upon the same Proposall: I thought it at the last a more Christian duty to satisfie the honest desires of so many men, than to sacrifice any longer to my own privacy and retiredness, to which I had intended to devote my self. So I resolved to venture on it, though well I saw that my condition in so doing might be resembled unto that of the Israelites in the Land of Egypt: of whom the Task-masters did expect the full tale of Bricks, and yet denyed them their accustomed allowance of Straw and Stubble. My case in this not much unlike to that of the Duke of Alva. Who being under the displeasure of the King of Spain in quality of a prisoner, without the least assurance of recovering the Kings favour, or his own liberty, and yet employed in that Conjuncture, for the conquest of Portugal; was wont to say, That he was sent to conquer Kingdoms with his Fetters on.

And here I cannot but remember a pretty accident which befell me in the moneth of January, An. 1640. at what time it had been my ill fortune to suffer under some misapprehensions which had been entertain'd against me, and to be brought before the Committee for the Courts of Justice, on the complaint of Mr. Prynne, then newly return'd from his confinement, and in great credit with the Vulgar. Heard by them, I confess, I was, with a great deal of ingenuous patience; but most despightfully reviled and persecuted with excessive both noise and violence, by such as thronged about the doors of that Committee, to expect the issue: it being as naturall to many weak and inconsiderate men, as it is to Dogs, to bark at those they do not know, and to accompany each other in those kinds of clamors. And though I had the happinesse to come off clear, without any censure, and to recover by degrees amongst knowing men, that estimation which before had been much endangered, yet such as took up matters upon trust and hear-say, looked on me as a person forfeited, and marked out for ruin. Amongst others, I was then encountred in my passage from Westminster to White-hall, by a tall big Gentleman, who thrusting me rudely from the Wall, and looking over his shoulder on me in a scorning manner, said in an hoarse voice these words, Geographie is better than Divinity; and so passed along. Whether his meaning were, that I was a better Geographer than Divine; or that Geographie had been a Study of more credit and advantage to me in the eyes of men, than Divinity was like to prove, I am not able to determine. But sure I am, I have since thought very often of it, and that the thought thereof had its influence on me, in drawing me to look back on those younger studies, in which I was resolved to have dealt no more: and thereto, in the Preface to my Microcosm, had obliged my self.

And it is possible enough, that in respect of that generall promise, I may lie under the censure of inconstancy, and breach of Covenant, in that I had solemnly declared in the aforesaid Preface, that the Reader should not fear any further inlargements, which might make him repent his (then) present Markets; that it had received my last hand, and that from thenceforth, I would look upon it as a Stranger only. But it was meant withall, and expressed accordingly, unlesse it were for the amending of such Errors, of which by the strength of mine own judgement, or any ingenuous information, I should be convicted. And Errors I must needs say, I have found so many on this last perusall, and those not only verball, but materiall too; as did not only free me from that Obligation, but did oblige me to a further Review thereof. For being written in an age, on which the pride of youth and self-opinion might have some predominancies, I thought it freer from mistakes than I since have found it: And those mistakes, by running through eight Editions (six of them without my perusall or super-vising) so encreased and multiplyed, that I could no longer call it mine, or look upon it with any tolerable degree of patience. So that in case the importunity of friends had not enforced me, in a manner, upon this Employment, the necessity of consulting my own fame, and leaving the Work fair behind me to succeeding times, would have perswaded me in the end to do somewhat in it. Which though the last, was not the least of those inducements which inclined me to the undertaking of this present Work.

Having thus plainly and ingenuously laid down the reasons which did induce, though not not incourage me, unto this performance: It is now fit I ſhould declare what I have done in it, and what the Reader may expect from ſo great inlargements. And firſt the Reader is to know, that my deſign originally, was only to look over the former Book, to give it a Review, to purge it of the Errors which it had contracted, and not ſo much to make a new Book, as correct the old. But when I had more ſeriouſly conſidered of it, I found ſufficient reaſon to change that purpoſe, to make it new both in form and matter, and to preſent it to the world with all thoſe advantages which a new Book might carry with it. The greater pains I took about it, the greater I conceived would the benefit be which might from thence redound to thoſe who ſhould pleaſe to read it: And I would willingly ſo fain comply with all expectations, that the ſhort Taper of my life ſhould give light to others in the conſuming of it ſelf; Non nobis ſolùm nati ſumus, may well become a Chriſtians mouth, though an Heathen ſpake it. But if all expectations be not ſatisfied in the completeneſs of the work, as I fear they will not, I deſire it may not be aſcribed unto any neglect or fault of mine, but to the wants and difficulties with I was to ſtruggle with. Books I had few to help my ſelf with of mine own; nor live I near ſo rich a Clergie (moſt of the Benefices of theſe parts being poor and mean) as to ſupply my ſelf from them with ſuch commodities. The greateſt helps I had was from Oxford-Library, which though but nine or ten miles off from my preſent dwelling, yet the charge and trouble of the journey, with the loſs of time, made my viſits to that place leſs frequent, and conſequently the Neighbourhood thereof leſs uſefull to me, than the generality of the deſign might well comport with. So that when all things are conſidered as they ought to be, it rather may be wondred at by an equal Reader, how I could come to write ſo much, with ſo little helps, upon a ſubject of ſuch a large and diffuſed variety, than that in any part thereof I have writ too little. And to ſay truth, the work ſo proſpered in my hand, and ſwelled ſo much above my thought and expectation, that I hope I may with modeſty enough uſe thoſe words of Jacob, Voluntas Dei fuit, ut citò occurreret mihi quod volebam; The Lord God brought it to me, as the Engliſh reads it.

In the purſuance of this Work, as I have taken on my ſelf the parts of an Hiſtorian and Geographer; ſo have I not forgotten that I am an Engliſh-man, and which is ſomewhat more, a Church-man. As an Engliſh-man I have been mindfull upon all occaſions to commit to memory the noble actions of my Countrey; exploited both by Sea and Land, im moſt parts of the World, and repreſented on the ſame Theaters, upon which they were acted. And herein I have followed the example of the great Annaliſt, Baronius. Who pretending in that great and laborious Work, a ſincere Hiſtory of the Church, and no more than ſo; yet tels the Pope in his Epiſtle, that he principally did intend the ſame, pro Sacrarum Traditionum Antiquitate, & Autoritate Romanæ Eccleſiæ; to manifeſt therein the Antiquity of ſuch Traditions, and for defence of that Authority and Power, which at this day are taught and exerciſed in the Church of Rome. And ſo much I may alſo ſay of my ſelf in this performance, though without any by-deſign to abuſe the Reader, that though the Hiſtory and Chorography of the World be my principal buſineſs, yet I have apprehended every modeſt occaſion, of recording the heroick Acts of my native Soil, and filing on the Regiſters of perpetual Fame the Gallantry and brave atchievements of the People of England. Exemplified in their many victories, and ſignal ſervices in Italie, France, Spain, Scotland, Belgium, in Paleſtine, Cyprus, Africk and America, and indeed where not? Nor have I pretermitted their great zeal and piety in converting to the Faith ſo many of the German and Northern Nations; Francontans, Thuringians, Haſsians, Saxons, Danes, Friſons; as alſo amongſt the Scots and Picts, together with thoſe of Lituania and the people of Norwey: by that means more inlarging Chriſts Kingdom than they did their own. And as I have been zealous to record the Actions, ſo have I been as carefull to aſſert the Rights of the Engliſh Nation: inherent perſonally in their Kings, by way of publick intereſs in the Subject alſo; as the whole body doth partake of that ſenſe and motion, which is originally in the Head. And of this kind I reckon the true ſtating of the Title of the Kings of England to the Crown of France; demonſtrating the Vaſſallage of the Kingdom of Scotland to the Crown of England; vouching the legal Intereſs of the Engliſh Nation, in right of the firſt Diſcovery or Primier Seiſin, to Eſtotiland, Terra Corterialis, New-found-Land, Novum Belgium, Guiana, the Countreys neer the Cape of good Hope, and ſome other places, againſt all Pretenders: inſinuating the precedency of the Engliſh Kings before thoſe of Spain; their Soveraignty and Dominion in the Britiſh Ocean, with the great benefit which might from thence ariſe unto us, invaded and almoſt ingroſſed by the Hanſe and Hollanders. And yet there is another thing which ſpeaks me more an Engliſhman, than all theſe together; which I ſhall fall on ſoon enough, and indeed too ſoon, the ſadneſs of the ſubject being well conſidered.

Next, as a Church-man, I have taken more eſpecial notice of the ancient and preſent face of Chriſtianity, in all parts of the World; the planting and Government of Churches, the Heterodoxies and opinions of thoſe ſeveral Sects into which it now doth ſtand diſmembred. By which it will appear moſt clearly amongſt other things, that the Doctrine & Government of the Church were of equall ſtanding; that this government was no other than that of Biſhops; and that whereſoever Chriſtianity did finde any admittance, Epiſcopacy was admitted alſo as a part thereof: the Goſpel being in moſt places firſt preached by Biſhops, or growing to eſteem and ſtrength under their Authority. And it is found on theſe Recherches, that as Epiſcopacy was co-æval with the Church it ſelf: ſo the Subordination of Biſhops to their ſeveral Primates, and the Coordination of thoſe Primates among themſelves in the common Government thereof, was of ſuch antiquity (as being ſetled and confirmed in St. Cyprians time, who flouriſhed in the year 250.) that it is hard to trace the beginnings of it. Debere Epiſcopos in commune Eccleſiam regere, is a noted Maxime in St. Hierome; but practically true in the Communicatoriæ and Formatæ, of the elder Ages: Which happy courſe had it been preſerved, Epiſcopacy had been ſo far from being made a ſtirrup for Antichriſt to mount into his throne, as the Smectymnuans falſly charge it; that it had ſerved rather as a Martingall to have kept him down from lifting up his head too high above the reſt of his Brethren. And that this courſe was not preſerved, came not intentionally from the Popes (for that by Antichriſt they mean the Popes of Rome, is a thing paſt queſtion) but from the Inundation of the barbarous Nations: though I confeſs the Popes were apt enough to make the beſt advantage of thoſe various Accidents, which the diſtreſſes of the Church did preſent unto them. For by the overflowing of the barbarous Nations, Chriſtianity was either quite extinguiſhed, or the authority of the Primates trodden under foot; or that intelligence and commerce which had been anciently amongſt them, interdicted on good reaſons of State, by ſuch Heathen or Mahometan Princes, under whom they lived. And then how eaſie was it for the Pope, in the new planting of the Goſpel in theſe Weſtern parts, (done either by his Miniſters, or by his incouragement) to give unto the Biſhops of his own appointing ſuch a limited power, as might make them more and more obnoxious unto his commands, and afterwards to leſſen their Authority, as he ſaw occaſion, by granting large Exemptions to Monaſteries, Convents and Cathedrals; with Juriſdiction over the Parochial Churches which belong'd unto them? So that it is moſt evident in the courſe of Story, that the Popes never came unto their height, nor could obtrude their Superſtitions and Novations on the Church of CHRIST; till they had weakned, by degrees, the Epiſcopal power. Followed in that deſign, though on different ends, by Wicliff, and ſome others in the Ages ſince; who have driven on their private projects under the colour and pretence of a Reformation. Epiſcopacy as it was co-æval with the Church of CHRIST, ſo was it the beſt and ſtrongeſt Buttreſs in that ſacred building. The weakning or ſubverting of which Primitive Order, did either proſtitute the Church to the luſt and tyranny of that proud Uſurper, or expoſe the Patrimony thereof unto ſpoyl and rapine; or finally ſubject it to the Anarchy and licentiouſneſs of Heterodoxies and confuſed Opinions. But I fear I have digreſſed too far in this ſpeculation.

As a Geographer, I have been punctual and exact, in giving unto every Province its peculiar bounds, in laying out their ſeveral Land-marks, tracing the courſe of moſt of the principal Rivers, and ſetting forth the ſituation and eſtate of the chiefeſt Towns; and did once think of beautifying the Work with as many Maps as the ſeveral States & Kingdoms which are here deſcribed. But upon further conſideration, how much it would increaſe the Book both in bulk and price, and conſequently make it of leſs publick uſe than I did intend it; I laid by thoſe thoughts, and reſted ſatisfied with the adding of four Maps for the four parts of the World: by which the Reader may diſcern how each Countrey lies unto the other, though he find not each particular Province, and much leſs all the Towns and Cities which are here expreſſed; and on the other ſide may meet with many Towns of inferior note which are here omitted. And herein I have took ſome pains in ſearching out the firſt Inhabitants of each

ſeverall Countrey, as far as I could ſee by the light of Letters, or go by probable conjectures; in finding out the place of ſuch antient Cities as are now decayed, not eaſily viſible in their ruins; and adding to ſuch Cities as are now in being (if of any Antiquity) their Originall names. A thing as neceſſary to the underſtanding of the Hiſtories of thoſe elder times, as the knowledge of the preſent names is to the more delightfull reading of our modern Stories. And though I have not pretermitted any Town of note, fit to be ſpecified and inſiſted on in a work of this nature; yet would I not have the Reader look for ſuch a punctuall enumeration and deſcription of them, as he may meet withall in thoſe who have written the Chorography of ſome Countrey only; or think himſelf unſatisfied in his expectation if he find not here the ſituation and affairs of each Town of War, or the Quartering place of every Company or Troop of Souldiers, which are preſented to him in the Weekly News-books. In all Countreys there are many places which either by the advantage of their ſituation, or ſome preſent exigency of affairs, are fortified and made Towns of Warre; or otherwiſe remarkable for ſome ſignall battell, in theſe late buſtles and commotions of the Chriſtian World; of which no notice hath been taken in former times, and conſequently not within the compaſſe of this Diſcourſe: and yet perhaps may grow as famous and conſiderable in the times to come as many of the mightier Cities now decayed and ruined. He that ſhall think the work imperfect (though I confeſs it to be nothing but imperfections) for ſome deficiencies in this kind, may be likened to the Countrey-Fellow in Ariſtophanes (if my memory fail not) who picked a great quarrell with the Map, becauſe he could not find where his own Farm ſtood. And ſuch a Countrey-cuſtomer I did meet with one, a ſervant of my elder Brothers, ſent by him with ſome Horſes to Oxon, to bring me and a friend of mine unto his houſe. Who having loſt his way as we paſſed through the Forreſt of Whichwood, and not able to recover any beaten Track; did very earneſtly intreat me to lead the way, til I had brought him paſt the Woods to the open Fields. Which when I had refuſed to do, as I had good reaſon, alleadging that I never had been there before, and therefore that I could not tell which way to lead him: That's ſtrange, ſaid he, I have heard my old Maſter your Father ſay, that you made a Book of all the World, and cannot you find your way out of the Wood? Which being ſpoken out of an honeſt ſimplicity, not out of any pretence to wit, or the leaſt thought of putting a blunt jeſt upon me, occaſioned a great deal of merriment for a long time; but I hope to meet with no ſuch Readers. The greatneſs of the bulk, and conſequently of the price, makes me ſomewhat confident that none but men of judgement and underſtanding will peruſe theſe Papers: and ſuch as they will look for no more particulars, than the nature of a generall Diſcourſe will fitly bear. Perfection and exactneſſe is to be expected in each kind of Science, as is obſerved by Ariſtotle in the ſecond Book of his Ethicks, ἐφ' ὅσον ἡ τῷ πράγματι φύσις ἐπιδέχεται, as far forth, as the condition of the Argument may be capable of it. And ſo much if I have attained unto, it is all which can with reaſon be expected from me. To look for more were as improper and abſurd (in the words of Ariſtotle) as for an Artiſt to expect Tropes of Rhetorick from a Mathematician, or Demonſtrations from an Orator.

Laſtly, as an Hiſtorian, I have traced the affairs of each ſeverall Countrey from the firſt Inhabitants thereof, (ſuch as the Latines call Aborigines, and the Greeks Αὐτόχθονες) till theſe later times. Which that I might be ſure to do on a good foundation, I have took more than common care, to ſettle all the firſt Adventurers (after the proud attempt at Babel) in their right Plantations: and that too in the way of an Introduction, that I might the better know where I was to find them, and to go on with their Affairs with the leſſe diſturbance. The reſt of their Occurrences I have ſummed into ſo ſhort an Abſtract, as may be uſefull to the learned in the way of a Remembrancer; to the leſſe knowing man, in the way of a Tutor; Brevity in this kind, I have much endeavoured; but ſo as to avoid all obſcurity alſo. Nor have I only kept my ſelf to the ſtory of Kingdoms, or of the greater Signeuries, Eſtates, or Nations, which are or have been of the greateſt conſideration in the ſway of the world: but looked on the Eſtates of ſuch Dukes, Earls, and inferiour Princes, as in their times have had the Government of thoſe parts which gave Title to them; whoſe actions and ſucceſſions are diſtinctly ſpecified, and all ſuch alterations noted, as have hapned either in the ruin of ſuch Eſtates, or the tranſlating of them from one Houſe to another. The Catalogues and Succeſſions of which royall and illuſtrious Families, I have drawn down unto the yeer 1648. towards the expiring of which yeer, I began to ſet my ſelf upon this employment. And there I fix as on the top of ſome dreadfull Precipice, which one can neither venture down without danger, nor look down without horror. Some things there are of such a nature, that either to speak of them, or to hold our peace is alike unsafe. In such a case it is best keeping at a distance. For though truth be the best Mistress which a man can serve, (Magis amica Veritas, said the great Philosopher;) yet it is well observed withall, that if a man follow her too close at the heels, she may chance to kick out his teeth for his labour.

In this regard, as also out of that compassionate affection which a true Englishman ought to bear his native Countrey, although in my approaches towards these present times, I have took notice in some other places of such battels, sieges, and successes in the chances of War, as have hapned in these later dayes: I have forborn to take the least notice of those Tragedies of blood and death which have been lately acted on the Stage of England. I cannot but with grief confess, that I might find variety of this kind enough, in the late Wars amongst our selves: in which there have been more pitched fields, more strong pieces taken, more notable traverses of State, and exploits of war, than all the world can parallel in an equal time. But I have too much English bowels to please my self in the recitall, or to look back on those unfortunate Adventures which I should rather choose to cover with the Act of Oblivion, or bury in the grave of perpetuall silence. How gladly I could have recorded these exploits of war, had they been exercised on a subject more proper for them; my willingness to take notice upon all occasions, of the actions and atchievements of the English Nation, will bear witness for me. But the employing of that valour against our selves, as if not to be conquered but by one another, strikes such horror in me, that I cannot think thereof without much affrightment, nor intimate thus much of it without great reluctancies. I fear it may be said too truly of our late embroilments, as the Historian of the Civill Wars betwixt Cæsar and Pompey; Causa hujus Belli eadem quæ omnium, nimia felicitas; that they were principally occasioned by a surfet of too much felicity. But if we were grown weary of our own prosperities; and that that prayer and passage in the publick Liturgy (Give peace in our time O Lord) did not relish with us: how happy had it been if we had found some other field to have tryed our valour in? and made some forain Country that Aceldama, which so fatally was made at home? The dishonour which we suffered in the Isle of Re, when beat thence ingloriously by the French; the forcible and long detention of the Palatinate by the power of the Spaniard; the barbarous butchery at Amboyna, and the beating up of the Spanish Fleet within the protection of our Castles, by those of Holland; the insolencies of the Scots, and the rebellions of the Irish, might well have stirred some indignation in an English breast. And had we fought upon those scores, or on none but them, our victories had deserved the honour of a solemn triumph, denyed by the old Roman Laws to a Civill War: But our infelicity (as it seems) was like that of Rome, in following those unnaturall wars with such animosities; when the unrevenged death of Crassus, the blood of so many thousand of their slaughtered Citizens, and the shamefull loss of so many of the Roman Ensigns, should rather have invited them to the conquest of the Parthian Empire. Of which thus feelingly the Poet;

Bella geri placuit, nullos habitura Triumphos.

And when proud Babylon should have been constrain'd
To give us back our Ensigns lately gain'd;
We rather chose such Quarrells to pursue,
For which no Triumph could be justly due.

But such is the condition and vicissitude of humane affairs, that there is nothing permanent, and much less of certainty. The greatest Monarchies of the world, the Babylonian, Persian, Grecian, Roman, have all had their periods, nothing remaining of them now but the name and memory. And what is now become of those mighty Cities of the East, Ninive, Babylon, Ecbatana, Susa, with the rest mentioned in the Scriptures, and in Classicall Authors? are not their very ruins now become invisible? Where are the puissant Families of the Achæmenides of Persia, the Seleucidæ of Syria, the Pharaohs and Ptolemies of Egypt, the Cæsars of Italy, the Merovingians and Carolovingians of the Realm of France, and the Plantagenets of England? are they not all extinct and gone, not to be found but by the benefit of story, and some antient monuments? And if it be so, as it is, with the greatest Monarchies, the most mighty Cities of the world, we must not think that smaller Kingdoms and Estates can either be so evenly ballanced, or so surely founded, as not to be obnoxious also to the same vicissitudes. And being that saying of Optatus is most undoubtedly true, Ecclesia est in Republica, that the Church is but a part of the Common wealth, we must not hope to find it in a better posture than the Civil State in which it is, and under the protection whereof it subsists and flourisheth. The Church must needs miscarry in the ruin of the Civil State, and may miscarry many times, although the Civil State receive no such alterations. Compared for this reason to the Moon by the antient Fathers, who had observed her in her prime, in her Increases and her Full; and finally, had not only seen her in the Wane also, but sometimes too under some horrible Eclipses. Which various condition of the Militant Church, the Scriptures and succeeding Stories have set forth so fully, that there need no better nor no clearer demonstrations of it. The Ark of God taken by the Philistins, the Temple destroyed by the Chaldæans, and profaned by the Syrians, the Apostasie of ten Tribes at once from the Law of their God, and the extermination of the other two in a short time after, abundantly declare the frail condition and estate of the Jewish Church. And find we not the same for the Christian also, in the removing of the Candlestick from the Asian Churches; and making them, together with those of Greece and Egypt, and all the flourishing Churches in the East and South, to languish and decay remedilesly under the mercileſs incroachments of the Turks and Saracens? He must be more than blind that sees not, more savage than those mercileſs men that grieves not, at their sad condition: but a dead member, at the most of Christs mysticall Body, who feels not in himself the sufferings, of those wretched Christians.

If now we look into the causes of that desolation which hath hapned in the Civill State of those mighty Empires; to what can we impute it but their crying sins? the pride of the Babylonians, the effeminacy of the Persians, the luxury of the Greeks: and such an aggregation of vices amongst the Romans (or Western Christians) before the breaking in of the barbarous Nations, that they were grown a scandall unto Christianity. In nobis patitur Christus opprobrium, in nobis patitur lex Christiana maledictum, as the devout Salvian then complained. Thus also in reference to the Church, did not the Idolatries of the ten Tribes hasten in the Assyrians? the shedding of the blood of so many Prophets by the other two, as much accelerate the coming in of the Chaldæans first, and the Romans afterwards? Do we not find the Arianism of the Eastern Churches to usher in the inundation of the Saracens; the Donatism of the South to have set open a wide Door to let in the Vandals? Did not the Saxons follow on the heels of Pelagianism, as soon almost as entertained amongst the Britans? If so, as most undoubtedly it was in the dayes of old, why should we think but that the Superstitions and Corruptions of the Church of Rome, the sacrilege and faction of the Churches of the Reformation, shall at the last receive the like Retribution: Or that the Divine Justice is so fast asleep that our sins must crie as loud as the Priests of Baal did unto their God, before it be awakened by us? Assuredly we are no less sinners than any of those on whom the Tower of the Divine vengeance hath so heavily fallen, whose blood the Pilates of all Ages have mingled with their solemn and religious sacrifices: and therefore have no cause to hope, but that unless we do repent, we shall likewise perish.

The serious consideration of all these particulars hath made those alterations both in Church and State, which have hapned here amongst our selves, the less strange unto me. For is there any of these things, whereof it may be said, Ecce hoc est novum, Behold this is new? Eccl. 1.10. Have they not been already in the times before us? Do we not find it positively affirmed by the wisest man that ever was, That which hath been is now, and that which is to be hath already been; Nihil enim novum est sub sole, for there is no new thing under the Sun, Eccl. 3.15. & 1.11. And though I cannot tell what effect the reading of this following Book may produce in others, yet I can warrantably say thus much of my self, that the observation of the fall of so many great and puissant Empires, the Extirpation of so many mighty and renowned Families, the desolation of so many flourishing Christian Churches, as the composing of this Book did present me with, (though formerly no strangers to me in the course of my Studies) did more conduce to the full humbling of my soul under the mighty hand of God than either the sense of my misfortune, or any other morall consideration which had come before me. And I could wish the Reader may receive so much benefit by it (besides the profit and delight which Books of this nature carry with them) that the mighty man may learn hereby not to glory in his great strength, nor the wise to glory in his wisdom, or in the cunning carrying on of his great designs. Let the great Leaders of these times in the Art of War, consider the sad ends of Joab the Generall of David; and of Belisarius the Commander of Justinians Armies: whereof the one was slain ingloriously at the Horns of the Altar, after all his services; the other forced to beg his bread at the Gates of the Temple. Let the great Masters of Wit and State-craft have before their eyes, the unsuccessfull ends of Achitophel, the Oracle of the times he lived in; and of Cæsar Borgias, proposed by Machiavel for the pattern of a Politick Prince: of which, the one laid violent hands upon himself, because his Counsell was not followed; the other, after the defailment of all his projects, and a long imprisonment to boot, forced to flie his Countrey, and slain obscurely in an Ambush. Let all men lay unto their hearts the ebbes and floods, those alternations and vicissitudes, to which all humane power is subject; the slippery foundations of that might and greatnesse, which is not laid upon the Principles of Justice, and regulated by the Maximes of Christian Piety; and that even those which have dominion over others, have a God too above themselves, to whom they are to render an accompt of all their Actions. Not such a God as that of Lewis the 11th. of France. Of whom it is reported the he wore a Leaden Medail in his Bonnet in the form of a Crucifix: which, when he had caused any man to be killed whom he feared or hated, he would take into his hands and kiss it, desiring it to pardon him that one murther more, and it should be the last which he would commit. Such mockeries as these may be well put on a Leaden God, but the God of Heaven and Earth will not be so mocked: who being totus oculus and totum lumen, as the Father calleth him, can easily discern our intents and purposes, notwithstanding those disguises which are put upon them; and see the nakedness of sin in its ugliest shape, though apparelled with the Fig-leaves of the best pretences, which the self-deceiving wit of man can patch up together. God is the same God now as in former times, Primus ad extremum similis sibi, Yesterday, and to day, and the same for ever; and will not put up those affronts which the impieties of men do afflict him with: though in regard of his great patience and long suffering, they may flatter their poor souls, and say, Tush, God doth not see it.

Lastly, I am to tell the Reader, that I have now no other Patron than himself, to whom to dedicate this Work, and from whom to receive protection and incouragement in it. The time was when I might have said with Seneca, Unus mihi erat pro Populo, that one man was to me in stead of all men: the Powers of all the People being vertually united in hm. But now, as the case stands, I must be fain to invert those words, Populus mihi est pro uno; the Body of the Nation is to me, in this respect, as the Head before. Unto them therefore I present it, and that not improperly: A Generall survey of all the World, the Government, Affairs, and Successes of it requiring a more generall Patron than particular Tractates. But because all the People in the Body Collective have not abilities to read, and much lesse to judge; and that many of those who can do both, may neither have the list nor leisure to peruse these Papers: I look on the Nobility, Clergy, Gentrie, as their Representatives in this kind; to whose favourable and ingenuous acceptance I submit the same. Which if I can attain unto, it is all I aim at. And it will be no small comfort to me, in the middest of so many sorrows as are round about me, that I have been usefull to the publick; or added any thing by my Studies, unto the honour and content of the English Nation: whose peace and happinesse is heartily commended to Almighty God, by

A GENERAL INTRODUCTION to the following Work:

Containing the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantation of the ſame by the ſons of men; the neceſſary uſe of Hiſtory and Geography, as well for underſtanding the Affairs of the Ages paſt, as for converſe and correſpondence with the Nations preſent; together with a brief view of ſome General Præcognita which neceſſarily are required unto the knowledge of each.

With great both Piety and Prudence did the Apoſtles in their Summary of the Chriſtian faith, joyn our Belief in God the Father Almighty, with that clauſe or Article of making or Creating the Heaven and Earth. For as the name of Father doth imply a making (Is not he thy Father which hath made thee? ſaith the Prophet Moſes, Deut. 32. v. 6.) ſo who but an Almighty Father could by his meer word, without any preexiſtent matter, create that goodly edifice of Heaven and Earth, which we behold with ſo much wonder and applauſe? A work ſo full of wonder to the ancient Gentiles, that ſome of them made the world a God. Vis illum (i. e. Deum) mundum vocare? non falleris; as it is in Seneca: others more rationally conceiving God to be the Soul of the World, as giving animation or beginning to it. And though they erred, as well in making the World a God, as God to be the Soul of the World, yet might they very well have ſaid as one ſince hath done, That the World is nothing elſe but God unfolded, and manifeſted in the Creature. Nil aliud mundus univerſus quam Deus explicatus, as Cuſanus a late Cardinal hath it. For certainly the ſpecial motives which did induce God unto this great work, were a deſire and purpoſe to manifeſt his power, to exerciſe his providence, and declare his goodneſſe. Not that God needed to have made the World in regard of himſelf; for the World we know was made in the beginning of time, but God is infinite and eternal before all times: but that it ſeemed good to him to create it at laſt, as a thing moſt conducible to his praiſe and glory; the Heavens declaring the glory of God, and the Earth ſhewing his handy-work, ſaith the Royal Pſalmiſt. Some meaſuring the God of Heaven by their own affections, and finding nothing ſo agreeable to their own diſpoſitions as to be in company, conceive that God being at laſt weary of his own ſolitude, did create the World, that he might have the company of the Angels in Heaven, and make a ſtart into the Earth (when he ſaw occaſion) to recreate himſelf with the ſons of men. Quæ beata eſſe ſolitudo queat? What happineſſe (ſaid Hortenſius) can there be in ſolitude? To which Lactantius, Lib. 1. cap. 7. not being furniſhed with a better, doth return this Anſwer; That God cannot be ſaid to be alone; habet enim Miniſtros quos vocamus Nuntios, as having the ſociety of the Angels. But then Lactantius muſt ſuppoſe that the Angels were co-eternal with God himſelf, (which were to make all Gods, and no God at all;) or elſe his Anſwer is no Anſwer, as to that Objection. How much more appoſitely might he have thus replyed unto Hortenſius, That the ſupreme contentment poſſible to Almighty God is by reflecting on himſelf, and in himſelf contemplating his own infinite glories: which being co-eternal with himſelf, even from all Eternity, he needed no more company before the World was made, than he hath done ſince. Lactantius being himſelf a man of a very great reading, (though indeed a better Humanitian than Divine) could not but know thoſe ſweet delights which a man habited in learning takes in contemplation, and the good ſociety he hath of his own dear thoughts, when he is moſt retired from the ſight of men. And if the wiſe Gentile could affirm ſo ſadly, numquam minus ſolum quam cum ſolus eſſet, that he was never leſſe alone than when he was by himſelf, what need can any rational man ſuppoſe in Almighty God, of having more company than himſelf, to delight himſelf in? If this ſuffice not for an anſwer to that needleſſe queſtion,

What God did before he made the World; let him take that of Auguſtine on the like occaſion: who being troubled with the like curious and impertinent Caption, is ſaid to have returned this Anſwer; fabricaſſe inferos curioſis, that he made Hell for all ſuch troubleſome and idle Queſtioniſts. Which reſolution of that Father is by Sabinus, a late Dutch Poet, moulded into this handſom Epigram.

Dum Chriſtum Libycis Pater Auguſtinus in oris
Aſſerit, & peragit munus in ade ſuum;
Dum miranda refert populo primordia mundi,
Eſſe docens verbo cuncta creata Dei;
Impius aſſurgit, verbiſq; procacibus, Afer,
Ergo Opifex rerum quid faciebat, ait,
Aut quibus intentus fallebat tempora curis,
Mundus adhuc nondum cum fabricatus erat?
Praſul ad hæc Libycus, fabricavit tartara, dixit,
His quos ſcrutari talia mente juvat.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

When reverend Auſtin did in Africk preach,
And in Gods Houſe the ruder people teach,
As he the Worlds Creation prov'd, and taught
That God made all things by his Word, of nought:
A ſawcy Swain upſtarting needs would know,
How God before that did his time beſtow;
And what to ſpend his thoughts upon, he had,
When neither Heaven, nor Earth, nor Seas were made:
To which the Father tartly thus; He then Made Hell for thee, and ſuch audacious men.

But not to ſpend more time in anſwering ſo vain a caption, ſuffice it us to know, that it pleaſed God at laſt, when it ſeemed beſt unto his infinite and eternal Wiſdome, to create the World, and all things viſible and inviſible in the ſame contained. A time it had, in which it firſt began to be, which before was not; This Moſes cals Principium, a beginning ſimply. In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth, in the firſt words of the Book of Geneſis: which is all one as if he had ſaid, the Heaven and Earth had a beginning; or that this unformed Maſs or Chaos which he entituleth there by the name of heaven and earth, was the beginning or firſt draught of thoſe ſeveral things which after were created in their proper times; that is to ſay, the firſt in order of time, becauſe made before them, not in order of cauſality, as the cauſes of them. Cœlum & terra in principio, i. e. ante omnia facta ſunt, ſaith Simon Pottius in his Scholies on S. Johns Goſpel. So that whether we do expound thoſe words, that the Heaven and Earth had a beginning; or that Moſes by theſe words did mean, that out of that matter which he cals Heaven and Earth, as out of the beginning, or firſt matter, all things were created, it comes all to one: becauſe it is thereby acknowledged that the firſt matter was created by Almighty God, and therefore of neceſſity to have a beginning. And to this truth we have not only the authority and conſent of Scripture, but of the greateſt part of the old Philoſophers; guided thereto by this impoſſibility in nature, that any viſible work, whether it be natural or artificial, ſhould either give it ſelf a being, or have that being which it hath from no cauſe precedent. For from that Principle Tully argueth very rightly in his moſt excellent Book de Natura Deorum, that as a man coming into a goodly houſe, in which he found nothing but Rats and Mice; could not conceive that either the houſe had built it ſelf, or had no other maker but thoſe Rats and Mice which were neſted in it; ſo neither can it be imagined, that either this World ſhould be eternal, of a ſelf-exiſtency; or was compoſed by any natural Agent of what ſort ſoever. And this is that which is more briefly and expreſly ſaid by the Apoſtle, viz. that every houſe is built by ſome man, but he that built all things is God, Heb. 3. v. 4. It is true, that Ariſtotle being a very great enquirer into the works of Nature, conceived the world to be eternal; and yet not alwaies conſtant unto that opinion. But then it is as true withall, that there was ſomething elſe that inclined him to it, than a meer admiration of the works of Nature. Democritus and ſome others had been of opinion, that the World was made in the beginning, fortuitis atomorum concurſionibus, by the accidental union or conjunction of thoſe ſeveral parcels, of which the Univerſe conſiſted; and that man himſelf was but voluntaria elementorum concretio, a voluntary mixture of all the elements, as Minutius hath obſerved out of their writings. To which abſurd opinion (as it was no better) though it found a general imbracement amongſt many of the old Philoſophers, when Ariſtotle knew not how to ſubmit his moſt exquiſite judgement; and yet was deſtitute of ſuch further light, as might more fully have inſtructed him in its true Original: he rather choſe to grant the world to be eternal, than to be made of ſuch ridiculous, and unſound, though eternal Atoms. Et maluit hanc pulchram mundi faciem ab æterno eſſe, quam aliquando ex æterna deformitate emerſiſſe. Valeſius in his Book de Sacra Philoſophia ſo pleads the caſe in his behalf; and I thank him for it: who am (I muſt confeſs) a great friend of Ariſtotles, whom ſome account for the Præcurſor of our Saviour Chriſt in rebus naturalibus, as John the Baptiſt was in divinis.

Nor doth the Scripture and the light of Reaſon tell us only this, that the whole World had a beginning; but by the help of Scripture, and the works of ſome learned men, we are able to point out the time when it did begin; or to compute how many years it is preciſely from the firſt beginning, without any notable difference in the calculation. For though it be moſt truly ſaid, Citius inter Horologias quam Chronologias, that Clocks may ſooner be agreed than Chronologers, yet moſt Chronologers in this point come ſo near one another, that the difference is ſcarce obſervable. From the beginning of the World to the Birth of Chriſt, in the accompt of Beroaldus, are 3928 years; 3945 in the computation of the Genevians; 3960 in the eſteem of Luther; and 3963 in the calculation of Melanchthon: between whom and Beroaldus (being the leaſt and the greateſt) there is but 35 years difference, which in ſo long a courſe of time can be no great matter. Now if unto the calculation made by Beroaldus, which I conceive to be the trueſt, we add 1648 ſince the Birth of Chriſt, the total of the time ſince the worlds creation, will be 5576 years, neither more nor leſs. A thing which I the rather have inſiſted on, becauſe that from this Epoche or Æra of the Worlds creation, we ſhall compute the times of ſuch Kings and Princes, as reigned and flouriſhed in the world before the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour.

It being then reſolved as a thing undoubted, that God made the World, and that he made it in ſuch time as himſelf pleaſed; let us next look upon the matter and the method which it pleaſed the Divine Majeſty to make uſe of in this wondrous work.

Firſt, for the matter, out of which all things were created, I take it, as before was ſaid, to be that which Moſes in the firſt words of Geneſis cals the Heaven and the Earth, becauſe they were ſo in potentia; but after telleth us more explicitely, that that which he calleth Earth, was inanis & vacua, without form and void; and that which he called Heaven was but an overcaſt of darkneſſe, or tenebræ ſuper faciem Abyſſi, as the vulgar reads it. Of which Chaos or confuſed Maſs we thus read in Ovid, who queſtionleſs had herein conſulted with the works of Moſes, being before his time communicated to the learned Gentiles:

Ante mare & terras & quod tegit omnia Cœlum,
Unus erat toto naturæ vultus in Orbe,
Quem dixere Chaos, rudis indigeſtaq; moles,
Nec quicquam niſi pondus iners, congeſtaq; eodem
Non bene junctarum diſcordia ſemina rerum, &c.

Which I ſhall Engliſh from G. Sandys with ſome little change.

Before the Earth, the Sea, and Heaven were framed,
One face had nature, which they Chaos named;
An indigeſted lump, a barren load,
Where jarring ſeeds of things ill-joyn'd abode.
No Sun as yet with light the world adorns,
Nor new Moon had repair'd her waining horns;
Nor hung the ſelf poiz'd Earth in thin Air plac'd,
Nor had the Ocean the vaſt Shores imbrac'd.
Earth, Sea, and Air, all mixt; the Earth unſtable,
The Air was dark, the Sea unnavigable.
No certain form to any one aſſign'd,
This that reſiſts; for in one body joyn'd
The cold and heat, the dry and humid fight,
The ſoft and hard, the heavie with the light.

Out of this Chaos or firſt matter, did God raiſe the world, according to thoſe ſeveral parts and lineaments which we ſee it in, not as out of any pre-exiſtent matter which was made before, and had not God for the Author or firſt Maker of it; but as the firſt preparatory matter which himſelf had made, including in the ſame potentially both the form and matter of the whole Creation, except the Soul of man only, which God breathed into him. And therefore it is truly ſaid, that God made all things out of nothing; not out of nothing as the matter out of which it was made, for then that nothing muſt be ſomething; but as the terminus à quo, in giving them a real and corporal being which before they had not, and did then firſt begin to have by the meer force and efficacy of his powerful Word. And though it be a Maxim in the Schools of Philoſophy, Ex nihilo nil fit, that nothing can be made of nothing; that every thing which hath a being doth require ſome matter, which muſt be pre-exiſtent to it; yet this muſt either be condemned for erroneous Doctrine in the Chair of Divinity, or elſe be limited and reſtrained to Natural agents, which cannot go beyond the ſphere of their own activity. Inviſible and ſupernatural Agents are not tied to Rules, no not in the production of the works of Nature; though Nature conſtituted and eſtabliſhed in a certain courſe, work every thing by line and meaſure as a certain Rule. And ſo it was with God in the Worlds Creation; he did not only make the world, but he made it out of nothing, by his Word alone: Dixit & facta ſunt, he ſpake the word and they were made, ſaith the royal Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 33. v. 9. There went no greater pains nor matter to the whole Creation, but a Dixit Deus. And this not only ſaid by Moſes, but by David too, Verbo Domini firmati ſunt Cœli, & ſpiritu oris ejus omnis virtus eorum, v. 6. i. e. by the Word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the Hoſts thereof by the breath of his mouth. In which it is to be obſerved, that though the Creation of the World be generally aſcribed to God the Father, yet both the Son and the Holy Ghoſt had their parts therein; Verbo Domini, by the Word of the Lord were the Heavens made, ſaith the Prophet David: In the beginning was the Word; all things were made by him, and without him was nothing made, ſaith S. John the Apoſtle. The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, ſaith Moſes in the book of the Law: Et ſpiritu oris ejus, and by the breath (or Spirit) of his mouth were all the Hosts of Heaven created, saith David in the Book of Psalmes. Made by his Word, and yet not made together in one instant of time. In the first day he laid the foundation, and no more; in the five next he raised the building: and this he did, to teach us men deliberation, in our words and actions; and to set forth withall unto us both his Power and Wisdome. His Power he manifested in the Method of the whole Creation, in that he did produce what effects he pleased, without the help of natural causes: as giving Light unto the World before he had created either Sun or Moon; making the Earth fruitful, and to bring forth plants, without the influence or motion of the Heavenly bodies. And for his Wisdome he expressed it in as high a degree, in that he did not create the very Beasts of the field before he had provided them of fodder and sufficient herbage; nor made man after his own Image, before he had finished all the rest of his works, fitted his house, and furnished it with all things necessary both for life and pleasures.

But all things being fitted and prepared for him, at last comes Man into the world; and he doth make his entrance with a greater pomp, than any of the rest of the Creatures which were before him. They came in with no other Ceremony, than a Dixit Deus; but in the workmanship of Man, there was a Consultation held by the blessed Trinity. It is there, Faciamus Hominem, let us make man; each Person contributing somewhat (as it were) to his composition. For God the Father as the chief Workman, or principal Agent, gave him form and feature; in which he did imprint his own heavenly Image. The Son who is the living and eternal word, gave him voice or speech, that so he might be able to set forth Gods praises. The Holy Ghost, the Lord and giver of life, (as the Nicene Fathers truly call him) breathing into his nostrils the breath of life, whereby he became a living Spirit. In this one Creature was amassed whatever thing was excellent in the whole Creation; the quantity or substance of Inanimate creatures, the life of Plants, the sense of Beasts, and the understanding of Angels. In this one Creature did God shew the excellency of his power and wisdome, in printing on him his own Image, and giving him Dominion over all the works of his hands; which Image of God they look for in a very wrong place, who hope to finde it in mans Body, though of a gallant composition, and erected structure. The Heathen Oratour was able in this point to inform some erroneous Christians, Ad Divinam imaginem propius accedit humana virtus quàm figura, Man doth approach more near to the Image of God, in the endowments of his Minde, than in the structure of his body, as divinely Cicero. And as for that Dominion which God gave him over the works of his hands, the Patent is at large laid down in the first of Genesis. For God no sooner said, Faciamus Hominem, let us make man after our own Image, but presently he addes this Charter of Supreme Authority, And let him have dominion over the fish of the Sea, and over the fowles of the Air, and over the Cattel, and over all the Earth. A more particular explication of those several points, wherein that Image and this Power do consist especially, I shall not take upon me or endevour now; as being not of this place and purpose: Which only is to shew, that as man in the very act of his Creation participated more of the Divine Image, than all other Creatures; so was he by Gods special grant infeoffed with a larger power, than any of the rest could pretend unto. Man, though made lower than the Angels, is in this above them; that all the Creatures of the World were made to be his servants, and to attend upon his pleasure. And yet this great and mighty Prince, this general Lord of all the World, and the Creatures in it (setting aside the dignity of his first Creation) doth come into the world in a worse condition, than any of the Creatures which were made to serve him: naked, and impotent, and speechlesse, without use of reason; neither of power to help himself, or ask help of others. Whereof Lactantius in my minde gives a very good reason, who telleth us, that God sends man into the world, nudum & inermem, naked, and weak, and undefenced against all violences and dangers; whereas all Creatures else, munita indumentis naturalibus & armata sunt, are naturally both armed and cloathed, and able to relieve themselves. And this he doth unto this end, that man being naturally destitute of those outward helps, might make use of his inward faculties of judgement, wit and understanding, in furnishing himself with that which he wants by nature. For hereunto the first original of all Manufactures and mechanick Arts is to be referred, as is most plain and evident from the Book of God; in which we see, that presently upon the procreation of mankinde, Abel betook himself unto keeping sheep, and Cain to husbandry; Jubal to handle the Harp, Organ, and such Musical Instruments; and Tubal-Cain to work upon brass and iron, two metals very necessary to most kinde of Trades. The like may be supposed in all other Mysteries and Arts of living, though there be no expresse mention of them in those early daies; except it be the Art of building, or the Carpenters Trade, which no question is as old as any, as by the building of Cain's City, and Noah's Ark is most clearly evidenced. God made the world, and fitted it with all things necessary for the life of man, leaving man to provide himself of such Additions, as rather serve for comforts and conveniencies in the way of his living, than the necessities of his life.

Here then we have the works of God, and the works of men to be considered in pursuit of our present Argument. The works of God, in shadowing the Earth with Trees and Forrests, interlacing it with Crystall streams, and capacious Rivers; inriching it with fruitful and delicious Vales, adorning it with lofty Mountains, and stocking both the Hils and Vales with all sorts of Cattel. But nothing more sets forth the Power and Wisdome of Almighty God, as it relates to these particulars, than that most admirable intermixture of Want with Plenty, whereby he hath united all the parts of the World in a continual Traffique and Commerce with one amother: some Countreys being destitute of those Commodities, with which others abound; and being plentifull in those, which the others want. Insomuch that as in the Body of man, that Microcosm, or little World, the Head cannot say that it hath no need of the Foot, nor the Foot of the Hand, nor other members of the rest: so neither in the Body of the the World, can Europe say to Asia, or Spain to England, I have no need of your Commodities; or am not wanting in those things, whereof thou boastest an abundance. Something there is in every Countrey, which may be spared to supply the defect of others; and are accordingly vented in the way of Merchandise: Of which, thus Du-Bartas in his Colonies.

Hence come our Sugars from Canary Isles.

This, as Du-Bartas speaks of the present times, so questionless the same, or the like Commerce held good in the first Ages of the Worlds Creation; God furnishing all Countreys from the first beginning with some Staple-commodities, for the benefit of themselves and others; for the maintaining of that entercourse between Nation and Nation, which makes them link the closer in the bonds of Amity. And to this end also serve those several Manufactures wherewith some Countreys do abound in respect of others; but looked on in the present Book as the works of men. And of this kinde also are the several Polities and formes of Government. For though all Magistracy in it self be from God originally, and that the Monarchical form comes neareſt to the Government used by God himself: yet being that some Polities are meerly but humane inventions, and that to Monarchy it self, the consent of men is either explicitely or implicitely required; All Government or Magistracy is called an Ordinance of man in holy Scripture, 1 Pet. 11. v. 13. But those particular Works of men which are the most considerable part of our present subject, are Castles, Towns, and Cities of most eminent note; which thrive and prosper in the World, according as they do partake of those Conveniencies, which conduce most to their Magnificence and Greatness. Of these Boterus gives us many (relation being had to the time he lived in) but of those many we shall touch upon the principal only; passing by those of lesser note, as pleasantness of Sight, fruitfulness of Soyl, salubrity of Air, and such like obvious Observations. First then, there is required to the Magnificence and Splendour of Cities, a Navigable River, or some such easie passage by Sea, which will bring thither a continual concourse and trade of Merchants; as at Venice, London, Amsterdam. Secondly, some Staple-Manufactures or Commodities, which will draw the like resort of Merchants, though the conveniency of Sea or Rivers invite them not; as in Nurenberg in Germany, a dry Town, but mightily Traded. Thirdly, the Palace of the Prince; For ubi Imperator, ibi Roma, where the Court is, there will be a continual confluence of Nobles, Gentry, Merchants, and all sorts of Trades: And by this means Madrid, not long since a poor beggerly Village, is grown the most populous City in all Spain. Fourthly, the Residence of the Nobility, beautifieth a City with stately and magnificent Buildings; which makes the Cities of Italy so much excel ours in England, their Nobles dwelling in the Cities, and ours for the most part in their Countrey-houses. Fifthly, the Seats, or Tribunals of Justice, on which both Advocates and Clients are to give attendance; as in the Parliamentary Cities in France, and Spires in Germany. Sixthly, Universities and Schools of Learning to which the Youth from all parts are to make resort; which hath been long the chief cause of the flourishing of Oxford, Cambridge, Bononia in Italy, and other Cities of good note beyond the Seas. Seventhly, Immunity from Tolls and Taxes; most men being most desirous to inhabit there, where their In-come will be greatest, their Priviledges largest, and their Disbursements least: So Naples, Florence, Venice, having been desolated by Plagues, were again sodainly re-peopled, by granting large Immunities to all comers-in. And last of all, the opinion of Sanctity, either for the Reliques of Saints, or some noted Shrines, or the residence of some Famous man, or the Seat of Religion, is not the least Adamant which drawes people to it, to the great enriching of some Cities: And of this, Rome it self can give us two most pregnant evidences: the one in reference to the Popes, and these latter times, that famous Town not otherwise subsisting now, than by the constant residence of the Popes and Cardinals; whose absence while the Papal Sea was kept at Avignon, had made it over-grown with Briars and Brambles, and buried it almost in its own sad ruines. The other, in the person of Titus Livius the Historian, to see which man there came so many from the Coasts of France and Spain, that S. Hierome elegantly saith, Quos ad sui contemplationem Roma non traxerat, unius hujus hominis fama perduxit; qui jam urbem tantam ingressi, aliud extra Urbem quærerent.

Such are the causes of the Greatness and Magnificence of Cities, when they are once built; none of all which might possibly be looked at by the first builders of Cities, I mean by Cain before the Floud, and by Nimrod after it; who aimed more at the love of Empire, and self-preservation, than at the general good of Mankind, or the particular wealth of those amongst whom they lived. Of Cain it is affirmed expresly in the Book of God, That being possessed with this fear, that every one that found him would lay hands upon him and ſlay him, in revenge of the bloud of Abel; He builded a City and called it by the name of his ſon Enoch. Gen. 4.17. Builded a City? For what reaſon? To fortifie and ſecure himſelf againſt all revenge, as the Text doth intimate; or thereby to oppreſſe his Neighbours, as Joſephus witneſſeth. Neither was this the only City of the firſt Ages, though none but this be mentioned in the Book of God. That which the Scripture ſaith of Jubal, that he was the Father of ſuch as dwell in Tents, and of ſuch as have Cattel; that is to ſay, he was the firſt of thoſe which lived upon Paſturage, and followed their cattel up and down with their movable Tents, not having any certain home or habitations, as the wild Arabs now, and the ancient Nomades: is proof ſufficient, that the reſidue of all Mankinde lived a more civil kinde of life in their Towns and Villages. And if Pomponius Mela be of any credit (as in theſe things, I think, he is) he will inform us, that the City of Joppa was built before the Floud; that the King thereof was named Cepha; and that his name, and the name of his brother Phineas, together with the Grounds and Principles of their Religion, were found graven upon certain Altars of ſtone. But whether this be ſo, or not, certain it is, that as well Canaan in the Weſt, whereon Joppa ſtood, as the Land of Nod on the Eaſt ſide of Paradiſe, where Cain built his City, were peopled long before the Floud: and ſo were moſt of the other parts of the World beſides: And if well peopled in all, or moſt parts thereof, no doubt but they had Villages and Towns, yea and Cities too, as well for neceſſary habitation, as for ſtrength and ſafety. Now that the World was throughly peopled before the Floud, ſeems clear to me by that great and univerſal Deluge, which God was pleaſed to bring upon the Face of all the earth: For what need all the Earth be buried in that Sea of waters, if all the Earth had not been peopled, and all the people of it guilty of oppreſſion, in the ſight of God? Beſides, it is expreſly ſaid in the holy Scripture, that in the time of Abraham, who lived about 350 years after the Floud, in the largeſt accompt, and not 300 in the ſhorteſt; there were Kings of Egypt, and of the Philiſtims, Kings of the Canaanites, of Shinaar, Ellaſar, Ellan, and of the Nations, who queſtionleſs had their Lands well peopled: that both Chaldea, and Meſopotamia, in the time of Abraham, had their ſeveral Cities; as Ur in the one, and Haran, or Charan in the other; and that Damaſcus the chief City of Syria was then founded alſo: Not to ſay any thing of the building of Babel, Erech, Accad, and Chalneh in the land of Shinaar (or Babylonia) nor of the building of Ninive, Reſen, Rehoboth, and Chalah in the land of Aſſyria, mention whereof is made in the 10. of Geneſis. And it is found in good and credible Authors, that Ninus the third Aſſyrian Monarch (who lived before the birth of Abraham) having ſubdued the Kings of Media and Armenia, invaded Bactria with an Army of 1700000 Foot, and 200000 Horſe, and 10600 armed Chariots; and was encountred by Zoroaſter the King thereof with an Army of four hundred thouſand. The credibility whereof, if it were diſputed, might be affirmed by the like numerous Army brought by Xerxes againſt the Greeks, though in times long after following. And if we will give credit unto Diodorus Siculus, who voucheth Cteſias for his Author, Semiramis the Wife of Ninus invaded India with an Army of three Millions of men, and upwards; and yet was over-matched, and ſlain by an Indian King. If then within the ſpace of 400 years, we finde the Eaſtern parts to be ſo well planted, ſo many Kings poſſeſſed of their Regal Thrones, and many of them able to impreſs ſuch infinite Armies; why may we not conclude, that in the courſe of 1656 years (for ſo long it was from the Creation to the Floud) the whole World was inhabited and planted in all parts thereof; eſpecially conſidering the long lives of men, amounting to 800, or 900 years, and conſequently the long time they had to apply themſelves to the act of Generation. And though I have no certain ground for it in the Book of God, yet I am apt enough to be of Mercators opinion; who placing the 16 Dynaſty of the Kings of Egypt (where Euſebius begins to calculate the Egyptian times) at the firſt planting of that Countrey by the Sons of Noah; reckoneth the former fifteen to have been before the Floud, and to reach very near the times of the firſt Creation. That Miſraim the Son of Ham was poſſeſſed of Egypt within two hundred years after the Floud, is a truth undoubted. Nor ſee I any cauſe to doubt, but that in the like ſpace of time from the firſt Creation, it might be planted alſo by the ſons of Adam: conſidering, as we ought to do, that in the infancy of the World, when the bodies of men were moſt perfect, and of greateſt vigour, they obſerved no degree of Kindred or Conſanguinity; nor tied themſelves ſo ſtrictly to one woman, as they ſhould have done. And for the names of all the Kings of thoſe ſeveral Dynaſties, either they might be left engraven upon Pillars, ſuch as that of Seth; or upon Altars of ſtone, as in thoſe of Joppa; or Miſraim might have them by tradition, from the hands of Noah; and ſo deliver them by tale unto his poſterity: the Egyptians being generally very good Heralds, and ſtanding very much on their own Antiquity. And if this may be ſaid of Egypt (as for my part I ſee no reaſon but it may) then may the like be ſaid of all Countreys elſe, that they had their ſeveral Kings and Rulers, and ſet formes of Government: The Fathers of Families in thoſe times, having the command and ſoveraignty over all that deſcended of them. Nor make I any queſtion of it, but they had ſeveral Languages and formes of Speech, at leaſt as to the Dialect and pronunciation; although the Radicals of the Language might remain the ſame. But being there are no Remainders of this firſt Plantation, unleſs we will give credit to ſome Jewiſh Fablers, who tell us of ſome Giants who ſaved themſelves upon Mount Sion; or that of Maſius Damaſcenus, who ſpeaks of ſome that ſaved themſelves on an high Hill called Baris, in ſome part of Armenia) I ſhall the leſſe inſiſt upon it. Nor had I ſtood ſo long upon theſe firſt Ages, which Moſes paſſeth over with ſo ſhort a Narrative; but that it is affirmed by Pererius, a right learned Jeſuite, that neither Egypt nor Aſſyria, nor the reſt of the World was planted and inhabited before the Floud; and that upon no ſtronger reaſon, for ought I can finde, but that it is affirmed in the laſt words of the tenth of Geneſis, That, by theſe (that is to ſay, by the poſterity of the Sons of Noah) were the Nations divided in the Earth after the Floud. Out of which words he thus concludeth, Quo ſignificatur talem diviſionem non fuiſſe ante diluvium; By which it doth appear (ſaith he) that in the times before the Floud was no ſuch diviſion.

'Tis

'Tis true, that this division of the world by the Sons of Noah, hath the best evidence in Scripture; because there is expres Text for it, which is not for the first Plantations. But looking on the great increase of mankinde before the Flood, that saying of Berosus will prove tantamont to a Text of Scripture, Ad comparandas novas sedes necessitatem compulisse, that they were driven by necessity to seek new dwellings; the necessity of providing victuals for themselves and their families, being as strong a motive unto such dispersions, as the Confusion of Tongues was afterwards. The difference is, that that which such necessity would have done in long tract of time, the confusion of Tongues did in an instant: not only making those proud Builders to give over the finishing of the Tower which they had begun; but to unite themselves with such, whose language came most near to that which themselves were Masters of. It was high time, no question, to desist from this proud attempt, when the Labourer understood not what the Workman called for, but brought him things quite contrary to his exptctation. But because some Plantations had no reference to the Confusion of Tongues, but were made before it, or on the sending out of such Colonies as were neareſt to the place where the Ark did rest; I think it not amisse to resolve that question touching the resting of the Ark, on which the Plantations of the East have so great dependence. All that the Scripture telleth us of it, is, that the Ark rested on the Mountains of Ararat; but where those Mountains are, that it telleth us not. I know Josephus, and some other, of more eminent note, (but such as ground themselves upon his authority) affirm those Mountains of Ararat to be the hils of Armenia. Which they do chiefly on these Reasons: First, because Armenia is called Ararat in the Book of God, as it is confessedly; and secondly, because of an old Tradition, countenanced by Berosus, and some others of the ancient Writers, cited by Josephus, affirming, that on the Gordiæan Mountains in Armenia Major, some of the Reliques of the Ark were remaining in their times, and used as a preservative against inchantments. Which notwithstanding I incline rather to the opinion of Goropius Becanus, (who amongst many strange whimseys broached some notable truths) by whom the Ark is said to rest on the top of Mount Caucasus in the Confines of Tartarie, Persia, and India. His Arguments are many, but I look on two as of greatest consequence: the first whereof is grounded upon evident reason; the second on plain Text of Scripture. That which is grounded upon reason, is the exceeding populosity of those Eastern Countreys, into which none of those by whom the world was planted after the Confusion of Languages, are yet reported to have travelled with their several Colonies, by any who have took most pains in this discovery. Those infinite numbers which Staurobates, one (and but one of many) of the Kings of the Indians brought into the field against Semiramis; and the vast Army of Zoroaster the King of Bactria, conducted out of that one Province against Ninus; are proof enough, that those Countreys were of an elder Plantation, than to be a second or third Castling of some other Swarm setled in Persia, or Assyria, after the Confusion. For Ninus, who was the Husband of Semiramis, was but the Grandchilde of Nimrod; and I must needs look upon it, as a thing impossible, that those vast Armies which Semiramis was able to raise out of all her Dominions, should be encountred by one King with an equal force, and that of his own Subjects only; If that one King, and those his Subjects had been some late Colonie of those new Plantations, and not possessed of a Countrey peopled and inhabited before that Confusion. Nor was it but upon some good ground, that the Scythians (who inhabited on the North of Mount Caucasus) were generally esteemed the most ancient Nation in the World; and carried it away from the Egyptians, Phrygians, and all other Competitours, with this publick Verdict, Scytharum gens semper antiquissima: which ground could be no other, but the neighbourhood of the Ark unto them (though perhaps that ground long since forgotten, was not stood upon) and the dwelling of Noah and his children near the place of the Ark, till numbers, and necessity compelled them to inlarge their Borders. And in the inlarging of their Borders, I shal make no question, but that such parts as lay neareſt, were peopled & possessed before those which lay furtheſt off; according to the method of Plantations in all Ages since. This, though it be to me a convincing Argument, yet it fals short of that which comes from the Text it self, both in authority and weight; where it is said of the Heads of those several Families which afterwards joyned together in the building of Babel, that, As they went frō the East, they found a Plain in the land of Shinaar, & there they abode, Gen. 11. v. 2. If then they came from the East to the land of Shinaar, as the Text saith plainly that they did; it might well be that they came from those parts of Asia, on the South of Caucasus, which lie East of Shinaar, though somewhat bending to the North; impossible they should come from the Gordiæan Mountains in the greater Armenia (supposed to be the Hils which the Ark did rest on) which lie not only full North of Shinaar, but many degrees unto the West. For Babylonia, or Shinaar, is situate in the Latitude of 35, and the Longitude of 79, and 80. the Latitude of the Gordiæan Mountains in 41, and their Longitude in 75. By which accompt those Mountains are 6 Degrees more Northwards, and 5 Degrees more Westwards than the Land of Shinaar: by no means to be reckoned on the East of that Valley, except we make Moses (whose hand God guided in his Books) to speak God knowes what, or in plain terms, to speak plain non-sense. And though this Scripture be so clear, that it needs no Commentary, yet the perplexities I finde amongst those of the other opinion, in shifting out of the authority of so plain a Text, do adde in my conceit some moment and weight unto it. For some will have the Mountains of Ararat to be indeed on the North of the Land of Shinaar, but with some bending towards the East; which were it true, as nothing is more truly false, Moses had never told us that they came from the East, but from some Countreys of the North, which lay toward the East. Others will have a double progress of the Heads of their several Families: First, from the Mountains of Ararat, or the Plains of Armenia, to the Fields of Assyria, and Susiana; And secondly, from thence to the Land of Shinaar. But of this first journey, there is negry quidem, not so much as any one syllable in all the Scripture; besides the needlesness of making them go so far about, and to cross over the great Rivers Euphrates, and Tigris; whereas they had a ſhorter, and an eaſier paſſage. Capellus, ſingular by himſelf, quarrelleth with the Tranſlation (received without diſpute by all other Criticks) and will not have the Hebrew Kedem, to be rendred Eaſt, but to ſignifie that Region, whatſoever it was, which was inhabited by Kedem the ſon of Iſmael, of whom we finde mention Gen. 25. 15. But then beſides his quarrel with all other Tranſlations, he ſuppoſeth a former progreſs from the Mountains of Ararat to that land of Kedem; and conſequently falleth into a part of the Errour before refelled. Bochartus finding (if not fancying) that the Aſſyrians called all thoſe parts of their Empire beyond Tigris, the Eaſtern, and thoſe on this ſide of it, the Weſtern; would thence conclude, that theſe Heads may be ſaid by Moſes to have come from the Eaſt, becauſe they c me from one of the Eaſtern Provinces of the Aſſyrian Empire. Every way faulty in this point: For beſides that the greateſt part of Armenia lieth on the North of Tygris, and the leaſt part of it on the Weſt, and therefore not within the compaſs of the Eaſtern Provinces; and that Bochartus hath not proved (nor indeed can prove) that this diviſion was in uſe in the time of Moſes; we may as rationally conclude, and with leſs abſurdity, that the firſt Inhabitants of Britain, might have been ſaid by Ammianus Marcellinus, or any writer of that time, to come out of the Weſt (though he well knew they came from Gaul, which is plainly Eaſt of it) becauſe Gaul in his time was a Province of the Weſt parts of the Empire.

Having thus fortified our opinion both with Scripture and Reaſon, the Arguments produced againſt us will be eaſily anſwered. For though Armenia be granted to be the Countrey of Ararat; yet the Mountains of Ararat may extend beyond the Countrey. That mighty Ridge of Mountains which beginning in Aſia the leſs, run as far as India (by the Antients commonly called Mount Taurus) might very well be called by Moſes the Mountains of Ararat, becauſe that was the firſt Countrey of the greater Aſia by which they paſſed; and where they were of greater note than they had been formerly. Juſt as the Adriatick Sea took that name from Adria, then the chief Port of it; though it waſhed many Shores beſides: Or as ſome Hils with us are called Malvern Hils, becauſe they are higheſt near that Village, though they extend themſelves into other Lordſhips. And as as for the Authority of Tradition, and the Teſtimony of humane Writers, which (as before was ſaid) are brought in for an help, touching ſome Reliques of the Ark to be ſeen on the Gordiæan Mountains; I look upon it as an Argument of no weight at all. For firſt Beroſus (followed herein by all the reſt) reports it only on the ground of uncertain hear-ſay; which is a weak ſtaff for ſo heavie a cauſe to relie upon. Secondly, to balance the authority of Beroſus (if of any credit in this caſe) we have the teſtimony and authority of Portius Cato, as ancient almoſt as he, affirming poſitively, in Scythia Saga renatum eſſe mortale genus, that Mankinde was repaired in that part of Scythia which after was poſſeſſed by the Sacans: And they, we know, dwelt in thoſe parts of Scythia which lay next to Bactria, a Province of the Perſian Empire, and not far from the branches of Mount Caucaſus. And Thirdly, unto one Tradition to oppoſe another; thoſe of Mount Caucaſus do aver, that a large Vineyard in Margiana, near the foot of that Mountain, was of Noah's Plantation; Of which we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Tartarie.

It is now time I ſhould go forwards with the Builders of Babel, and their wide diſperſions; for whom it was high time to conſort themſelves with ſuch as they could underſtand; the neceſſity of diſcourſe and conference on that fatal Accident, making them lay aſide their old acquaintances, and joyn themſelves to others of their own new Language. I know that many learned men, according to the number of names laid down in the tenth of Gen. being 70, have made ſo many Languages to have been ſpoken upon that Confuſion: And that of thoſe, 26 being the Poſterity of Sem, diſperſed themſelves about Aſia the greater, 30 others of the loyns of Cham, peopled Africk, Arabia, and Syria; and that the 14 which remain, being the iſſue of Japhet, withdrew themſelves towards Europe, and the leſſer Aſia. But this, as to the number of Languages, I take to be but a conceit; though many, more improbable, have paſſed for currant. It being plain, that Canaan and his Sons, eleven in all, had but one Language amongſt them, which was the Hebrew, or the Language of the land of Canaan. And as for Joctan and his Sons, being 13 in number, conſidering that he was the younger brother of Phaleg, in whoſe time this Confuſion hapned; it is moſt probable, and avowed for a certain truth, that either none of them were born, or if they were, yet they were all of them too young to have an hand in the deſign for the building of the Tower of Babel; and conſequently could not be within the curſe of confounded Languages. So, here is near a third part of the 70 to be taken off; as poſſibly might all the Sons of Miſraim be, if it were worth the while to inſiſt upon it. This then I take but for a fancy. And as for that, of the diſperſion into the ſaid three parts of the (then) known World, I take it to be true enough in long tract of time; but falſe enough, if underſtood of any preſent ſeparation of the Sons of Noah into parts ſo far remote and diſtant from one another. For what needed any ſuch remote Plantations be, as long as they had room enough to live one near another, and ſo enjoy that civill entercourſe, and mutual ſociety which the nature of Mankinde doth moſt delight in? And therefore I conceive it to be far more probable, that they who met together for the building of Babel, joyning themſelves to men of the ſame Language with them, did firſt ſet down upon the places near the Valley of Shinaar: and from thence propagated and diſperſed themſelves into further Countreys, as either the neceſſity of providing of Victuals; or ſeeking better and more fruitful habitations for themſelves and theirs; or the deſire of being out of the reach of ſome potent Neighbours, whoſe yoke they found too heavie for their necks to bear; did enforce them to it. And being ſo ſetled to their mindes, the addition of a few more years brought the like neceſſity of ſending Colonies further off, as they grew more or leſſe populous in their generations: It being in Plantations of Men, as in that of Bees, amongſt whom one Swarm ſends out another, that begets a Caſtling, till the whole ground or Garden grow too ſmall to hold them. For thus (to ſeek no further for an inſtance of it) the Gauls firſt planted Britain, the Britains Ireland, the Iriſh Scotland, and the Iſles. Thus the Helvetians finding their old dwellings both too barren to ſuſtain, and too narrow to contain their multitudes, anguſtas ſe fines habere arbitrantes, as in Cæſars Commentaries; intended to plant themſelves in Gaul. And thus the Syrians and Phenicians flying the dreadful ſword of Joſuah the ſon of Nun, ſought them out dwellings further off from the preſent danger, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more in its proper place. On the like motives and inducements did the firſt people after the Floud diſtribute and diſperſe themſelves into ſeveral parts, as their poſterities have done ſince, and will do to the end of the World, in all probability: Giving their own names, or ſome names of their own impoſing, upon the Countreys planted or diſcovered by them. And though the length, and conſuming nature of time, hath either changed or worn out the names impoſed by the firſt Adventurers, I mean the firſt Planters after the Floud: yet all the Footſteps of Antiquity are not ſo defaced, but that ſome Nations and Cities have preſerved the memory of their firſt Founders and true Parents. In the diſcovery whereof, as Joſephus in his Book of Jewiſh Antiquities did firſt lead the way, and gave good light to thoſe who have travelled in it: So a more notable proficiency hath been made therein by Junius in his Notes on the tenth of Geneſis, Sir Walter Ralegh in his excellent Hiſtory, and lately by Bochartus a French Writer in his Book called Geographia Sacra. Out of whoſe learned labours, and ſome Animadverſions of mine own, I ſhall here ſay ſomewhat concerning the Plantation of the world by the Sons of Noah; leaving the more exact and punctual deſcription of it unto the Hiſtory of thoſe ſeveral Lands and Countreys which were planted by them.

Firſt therefore to begin with the poſterity of Sem, as thoſe who fixed themſelves in Aſia, without wandring further, we finde Sem to have had five ſons, that is to ſay, Elam, Aſſur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram, of whom there is no iſſue on Record in holy Scripture, but only of Arphaxad and Aram; and of theſe two there are but four Sons given to Aram, viz, Uz, Hul, Gether, and Meſech, and but one to Arphaxad, which was Selah. To Selah was born Heber; to Heber, Phaleg, the Anceſtor of Abraham, and Joktan the father of thoſe thirteen ſons, whoſe names we ſhall rehearſe hereafter, if occaſion be. From Elam, who is firſt named, did deſcend the Elamites, a people bordering on the Medes, and therefore oft-times joyned together in the Scriptures, as, Go up, O Elam; beſiege, O Media. Eſ. 21. v. 2. And all the Kings of Elam, all the Kings of the Medes. Jer. 25. v. 25. And in the ſecond of the Acts, Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, march in rank and file, as being Nations bordering upon one another. The principal City of this people was called Elymais, mention whereof is made in the ſecond of Maccab. cap. 6. v. 2. Sufficiently famous for the rich and magnificent Temple which was there conſecrated to Diana. A City ſeated on the banks of the River Eulæus, and neighbouring cloſe to Suſiana, which therefore is ſometimes included in the name of Elam, as Dan. 8. v. 2. I was (ſaith he) in the Palace of Suſa, in the Province of Elam; where Elam is not taken for the Province of the Elamites only, but as it gave denomination unto all thoſe Nations whom they after maſtered. The ſecond ſon of Sem is Aſſur, of whom there is no queſtion made amongſt the Learned, but that he was the Father of the Aſſyrians, called Aſſyres in ſome old Greek Writers: Not of the whole people of that great and unwieldy Empire, who ſometimes generally paſſe by the name of Aſſyrians; but of the people of Aſſyria ſtrictly and properly ſo called, as it denotes the Countrey about Ninive (the Regal City of that Empire) which after was called Adiabene. Juxta hunc circuitum Adiabene, Aſſyria priſcis temporibus vocata, as in Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. 33. Arphaxad comes next after Aſſur, and him Joſephus makes to be the Father of the Chaldæans, called anciently Arphaxadæi, if he tell us true. But others tell us, and that more probably perhaps, that he planted in that part the Aſſyria which was firſt called Arphaxitis, afterwards Arrapachitis; by which name it occurreth in the Tables of Ptolemie. Lud the fourth ſon is generally ſaid to be the Father of the Lydians, a people of Aſia no leſſe; the names of Lud, and Lydi (or Λυδοι, as the Grecians call them) being much alike. And it is poſſible enough that ſome of the poſterity of this Lud might afterwards ſettle in thoſe parts, and call the Countrey by the name of Lud their common Anceſtor; as the poſterity of Abraham took unto themſelves the name of Hebrewes from Heber, one of the Progenitors of their Father Abraham. But that Lud ſhould in perſon go ſo far from the reſt of the ſons of Sem, I cannot eaſily imagine. For Aram the fift and laſt (as they ſtand in order of the Text) ſets himſelf down cloſe by his Brethren, in the Land of Syria, which in the Hebrew is called Aram, and from thence the name of Aramites was given to the Inhabitants of it. Of which, and of the ſeveral Provinces which were hence denominated, we ſhall hereafter ſpeak more fully, when we come to Syria. Only take now this teſtimony and acknowledgement from the pen of Strabo, Quos nos Syros vocamus, ipſi Syri Aramenios & Arameos vocant. Thoſe (ſaith he) which we now call Syrians, do call themſelves Arameans, or Aramenians. In, and about the ſame parts, did the four ſons of Aram ſet themſelves and their Families; Uz in that part of Syria, which is called Syria Damaſcena, or Aram Dammeſek: the building of the great City of Damaſcus being generally aſcribed unto him: and the Land of Uz, bordering South upon Damaſcus, taking denomination from him. The like did Hul, or Chul, the next ſon of Aram, whom both Joſephus and St. Hierome ſettle in Armenia, or Aramenia, as in Strabo: And that not improbably, conſidering that there is a Region in Armenia, which Stephanus cals Cholobetene; and divers Cities in that tract, which ſtill preſerve the Radicals of Hul, or Chul, as Cholus, Cholnata, Cholimna, Colſa, and Colana, whereof mention is made in the Tables of Ptolemie. For Gether, the third ſon of Aram, it is not yet agreed on where to finde his dwelling. Joſephus, contrary to all reaſon, placeth him in Bactria; and Mercer with as little, in Caria, a Province of the leſſer Aſia, and Acarnania of Greece. Junius ſets him down in the Province of Caſſiotis, and Seleucis, near his Father Aram, where Ptolemie placeth Gindarus, and the Nation called by Plinie Gindareni: Bochartus on the banks of the River Centrites, which divides Armenia from the Carduchi, as it is in Xenophon. Which River, if it were called originally Getri, as he conjectureth it might be, the contro-verſie were at an end. But being that we finde in Ptolemie, a City of Albania (which bordereth on Armenia) called Getara, and a River of the ſame Countrey called Getras; I ſee no cauſe why we ſhould ſeek further for the ſeat of Gether; though the Greek Copies (more ſubject to corruption in the times of ignorance, than the Latin were) in ſtead of Getara read Gagara. But if this be too far to ſet him, we ſhall finde Mas or Meſch, the laſt Son, planted nearer hand, even in the Northern part of Syria, towards Meſopotamia, near the Hill called Maſius: at the foot whereof there is a people, which Stephanus cals Maſieni; and thereabouts a River, which in Xenophon is named Maſca. Both which do evidently declare from what root they come.

Come we next to the ſecond branch of the houſe of Sem, derived from Arphaxad; whom we left ſetled in the Region of Arrapachitis, in, or near Aſſyria. Not far from which in Suſiana, a Province of the Perſian Empire, there is a City of chief note called Sela; mention of which is made both in Ptolemies Tables; and the 23 Book of Ammianus Marcellinus. Adde unto this the authority of Euſtathius Antiochenus, who briefly thus, Σάλα ἀφ' ὃ Σουσανοὶ, The People of Suſiana came from Sala. But this, as I conceive, muſt be underſtood only of that part of this people, which lived in and about the City of Sala, and not of the whole Nation of the Suſians, or Suſiani, which borrowed their denomination from another root. To Sela was born Heber, from whom the people of the Hebræi, or Hebrewes do derive their name. And to him Phaleg his firſt-born, who in all probability gave name to the Town called Phalga, ſituate on the River Euphrates, not far from Seleucia: Mention whereof is made by Stephanus in his Book de Urbibus, and by Ptolemie in his Geography; where it is placed right on the banks of Euphrates, where the River Chuboras mingles waters with it; but there corruptly called Pharga, in ſtead of Phalga.

But the great increaſe of Sems poſterity came by Joktan, the ſecond Son of Eber, the Father of no fewer than thirteen Sons, whoſe names are on record in the tenth of Geneſis, where it is ſaid, that their dwelling was from Meſha, as thou goeſt to Sephar, a Mount in the Eaſt. And here I muſt crave leave to differ from Bochartus, who hath thronged Joktan and his Sons into a little corner of Arabia Felix, where I can finde no room for them, and leſs reaſon to place them. For being that Chus the ſon of Cham, and the Chiefs of his poſterity, eight in number, were planted in Arabia, as himſelf confeſſeth, it muſt needs be, that they had ſpread themſelves over all the Countrey before any of the ſons of Joktan were of age ſufficient to be the Fathers of Families, and lead Colonies thither. Joktan is credibly ſuppoſed not to have been born when ſuch of Noahs poſterity as are mentioned Gen. 10. diſperſed themſelves into new Plantations; but it is evident from the Text, that none of his children were then born, if their Father were. And this Bochartus doth acknowledge in two ſeveral places. Firſt, granting that neither Phaleg, nor Joktan were preſent at the building of Babel, multo minus Joktanis filii poſt aliquot annos geniti; much leſs the ſons of Joktan begot many years after; Lib. 1. cap. 16. And ſecondly, affirming that Joktan and his children came not within the curſe of Confounded Languages, quia nondum erant geniti, becauſe then unborn, Cap. 15. Hereupon I conclude it to be very improbable that Joktan and his children ſhould finde room in the beſt parts of Arabia Felix, which Chus and his poſterity had inhabited ſo long before. And as it is improbable that the ſons of Chus would plant themſelves in the worſt part of the Countrey for ſo many Ages; and leave the beſt and richeſt of it for ſome new Adventurers: So it is impoſſible that the ſons of Joktan ſhould either be removed ſo far from the reſt of the houſe of Arphaxad, who were all planted on the Eaſt of the River Tygris, as was before ſhewed; or that they ſhould be able, had they been ſo minded, to break through the whole Countreys of the Aſſyrians, Chuſites, and other Nations, to come unto the utmoſt corners of Arabia Felix. He that believes they did, or could, muſt have a ſtronger Faith than mine; but it ſhall never conduce any thing to his juſtification. Nor am I moved at all at that which ſeems to me to be his weightieſt Argument, namely, that the Arabians, particularly Joſeph Ben Abdallatif, and Mahomet Ben Jacob, two of their chief Writers affirm, that Jektan was the Founder of their Tongue and Nation; no more than I am moved to think that the Saracens are derived from Sara the Wife, and not from Hagar the Concubine and ſervant of Abraham; becauſe that people ſo report it for their greater glory.

And for the ſeveral Nations of Arabia Felix, whoſe original he aſcribes to the ſons of Joktan, I ſee ſo many tranſpoſitions of Syllables, alterations even of Radical Letters, ſuch and ſo many wreſted Originations, as by the like liberty of making quidlibet ex quolibet, it were no difficult matter to finde place for them in any Countrey whatſoever. For how extorted and unnatural are the derivations of the Allumæotæ from Almodad, of the Manitæ from Abimail, of the Jobaritæ from Jobab? How impoſſible is it that Jarech ſhould give name to the Iſle which Ptolemie calleth Νῆσος Ἱερέων, Inſula Jeracum, or Accipitrum, as the Latine hath it, that is to ſay, the Iſle of Hawks, from the abundance of Hawks which were therein bred: There being another Iſland of the ſame name near unto Sardinia (ſo called for the ſelf-ſame reaſon) and a Town called Jerax in Hammoniaca a Region of Egypt, to which Jarach might as well lay claim (if that would carry it) as to this Jeracum, or Accipitrum, in the Gulf of Arabia? How improbable that Ophir ſhould give name to Urphre, a poor Iſle of the Red Sea, Obal to Sinus Avalites in Æthiopia, on the other ſide of that Gulf? Or that Dicla muſt be fixed in Arabia, for no other reaſon, but becauſe the word ſignifieth a Palm-tree, of which that Countrey yeelds good plenty; as if ſome other Countreys did not yeeld as much? Theſe and ſome other reaſons hereafter following have made me bold to differ from that learned man in this particular, whoſe induſtry and abilities I do otherwiſe honour; and rather to look for Joktan and his ſons in the Eaſt part of the World, where the Scriptures place them; than in the South (with reference to the Wilderneſs, or land of Madian, in one of which the Book of Geneſis was written) where Bochartus placeth them. Yet ſo far I

muſt yeeld to that learned man, that ſome of the Deſcendants of Joktan in long tract of time, moved with the rarities of the place, might come from India, and plant themſelves upon the Sea-coaſts of Arabia Felix; as the Arabians at this day, moved with the wealth and trade of India, have poſſeſſed themſelves of many of the Ports and pieces on the Shores thereof.

Now the Text telleth us of the Sons of Joktan, that their dwelling was from Meſha, as thou goeſt to Sephar, a Mount of the Eaſt; ſo that by theſe two boundaries, Meſha and Sephar, their habitation muſt be found. I know Bochartus would have Meſha to be Muſa, a noted Port-town on the South-weſt of Arabia Felix; and Sephar to be the City of Sephar in the South-Eaſt of that Countrey; that City giving name to ſome Mount adjoyning. But being they both lie directly South of the place in which Moſes wrote, I cannot ſee how this poſition can agree with the word of Scripture; & therefore we muſt look for both in ſome other place. And firſt to find out Meſha, we need go no further than Bochartus himſelf, who maketh Meſh, the laſt of the Sons of Aram, the Son of Sem (according to the general opinion of moſt writers elſe) to be planted in the mountainous tracts of Meſopotamia, from him called Mons Maſius; more of which before. And then for Sephar, which the Text calleth a Mount of the Eaſt; if it be the Southern part of Mount Imaus, by Ptolemie named Bitigo, by the Moderns Gates, extending from Mount Caucaſus to the Cape Comari in the hither India, as Poſtellus a right learned man doth conceive it to be; We have without more difficulty found out the dwellings of the ſons of Joktan, according to the bounds laid down in holy Scripture. But for fear this may not ſatisfie, for want of ſome Seconds to Poſtellus (if Truth needs a Second) we have Siphare a City of Aria, directly Eaſt from Mons Maſius, or the dwellings of Meſh; both in the Eaſt parts of the World, with reference unto the place in which Moſes writ: Mons Maſius being placed by Ptolemie in the 74 degree of Longitude, and the 37 of Latitude; and Siphare 36 degrees more towards the Eaſt, but with no more than two degrees of Latitude ſuper-added to it. And this agreeth to the poſition aſſigned to the ſons of Joktan, by Joſephus, Euſebius, and S. Hierome; the emendation of Bochartus coming in to help. It is affirmed by Joſephus that the Joktanites poſſeſſed all that Tract, ἀπὸ Κωφῆνος ποταμοῦ τῆς Ἰνδικῆς, καὶ τῆς πρὸς ἀυτῷ Συρίας πολὺ, which lieth about Kophenus a River of India, together with ſuch parts of Syria as did border near it. Theſe words being borrowed from Joſephus both by Euſebius and S. Hierome; the firſt in ſtead of Syria reads Seria, and the other Jeria, but neither rightly: there being no ſuch place in the world as Jeria; and Syria and Seria (or the Countrey of the Seres) lying two far off to border on Cophenus a River of India. Bochartus therefore helps them out, conceiving (I think right enough) that for Syria we ſhould there read Aria; and withall granting, as he may, that Aria in the largeſt latitude and extent thereof, comprehending Paropamiſus and Arachoſia, extendeth as far Eaſtward as the Rover Cophenus. So that we have found out a dwelling for the Sons of Joktan, betwixt Mons Maſius and Siphare, a Town of Aria: wich probably might give name to ſome Mount adjoyning, as Saphar by Bochartus is ſuppoſed to do to ſome of the Arabian hils bordering near unto it. And as theſe ſituations do agree exactly with the meaning of thoſe Ancient Writers; ſo is it alſo very ſutable to the other Plantations of the Sons of Arphaxad. For this I look on as a matter out of all diſpute, that Phaleg and Joktan being both too young to go upon any new Adventures, when ſo many of the reſidue of Noah's poſterity removed toward Shinaar; kept themſelves under the tuition of their Grandfather Noah; or at leaſt wandred not from the Plantation of their Father Arphaxad: till Joktans Sons being grown to be Fathers of Families, were forced to caſt about for new habitations. And when neceſſity compelled them to ſeek new ſeats, I would fain know, why they ſhould think of making themſelves a way to Arabia Felix, through Countreys peopled and poſſeſſed a long time before; when they had Elbow-room enough on the Eaſt of Tigris, and the unpeopled Countreys of ſome parts of India lay ſo near at hand.

Nor want we as good evidence and as little forced for ſome of their Plantations in the Eaſtern parts, as Bochartus hath fancied for them in Arabia: For Almodad might probably be the Founder of Almodena, the Metropolis of Meſopotamia, not far from Meſha or Mons Maſius the Weſtern Boundary: and Jarach of the Nation of the Arachoſians inhabiting near Siphare the Eaſtern limit, aſſigned unto the Sons of Joktan. With what an eaſie change might Obal or Chobal be ſuppoſed to be the Father of the Cabolites of Paropamiſus? Hadoram of the Orites an Indian people near unto the other? But theſe North-eaſtern parts being peopled, or not very pleaſant, how many of the Sons of Joktan ſhall we finde in the Southern parts of India? Bochartus himſelf confeſſeth that the Land of Ophir (another of the Sons of Joktan) was a part of India, but whether Sumatra, Taprobane, or Aurea Cherſoneſus, I diſpute not here. Like evidence there is for Saba, remembrances of whoſe name are found in Sabalaſſa one of the mouthes of the River Indus, Sabana, a City of the Golden Cherſoneſe, a River in the ſame Tract named Sabanus, and a City called Sabe: beſides the whole Nation of the Sabæi mentioned by Dionyſius in his Periegeſis. And though ſome late Criticks read it Sibæ in ſtead of Sabæi, (as that there was an Indian Nation called Sibæ; is confeſſed on all ſides:) yet ſeeing Euſtathius findes the Sabæ in this Countrey alſo, I cannot ſee but that there ſhould be room enough in India for both people to dwell in. For Abimail another of the Sons of Joktan we finde more evident footſteps of him in the Mali or Malli an Indian people, in Maleta and Maliba two Towns of India, in Malæus an Indian Mountain, and finally in Malæi Colon a Promontory of Aurea Cherſoneſus, than in the Manitæ of Bochartus. For if Abimail ſignifie the Father of the Mali, as he ſaith it doth; he was more like to be the Father of the Mali, commonly and literally ſo called, whom we finde in India; than that we ſhould be forced to look for them in the Manitæ, or look for the Manitæ in the houſe of Abimail. If Dicla muſt be planted in Arabia Felix for no better reaſon, then becauſe the word ſignifieth a Palm, whereof there is plenty in that Countrey; I doubt not to finde as many Palms to plant by amongſt the Indians, as Bochartus doth among the Arabians. And finally, if Chatramis, or Chatramatitis an Arabian Region, have ſuch reſemblance to the name of Chatſarmaveth, as to take that Appellation from him, as Bochartus telleth us it did: we may conclude with equal, if not better reaſon, that the Chadramotitæ an Indian people, ſeated upon the mouth of the River Indus, upon whoſe ſtreams ſome of the reſidue of his Brethren had their habitations, had their firſt Original from that Chatſarmaveth. For Havilah or Chavilah the Ancients generally ſet him in the Indies alſo, not far from Saba and Ophir two of his Brethren: to whoſe authority I ſubmit, becauſe I finde a Province in the Golden Cherſoneſe, called the Kingdome of Ava, and thought to be ſo called from this very man. And I conceive the like alſo of the reſt of the Joktanites, whoſe habitations might be found in India, or near Meſh and Sephar, if one would take that liberty of Criticizing, altering and tranſpoſing letters, as Bochartus doth, only to fix them in a place where they never were. Suffice it that this ſhort Eſſay may inform the Reader, that Bochartus was too confident a lover of his own opinion, where he affirms, Nec locum alium Sephar nomine, nec ulla poſterorum Joktan in Aria aut India veſtigia jam ſupereſſe; that is to ſay, that there is no ſuch place as Sephar, nor any track or footſtep of the Sons of Joktan to be found in Aria, or the Indies. The contrary whereof is ſo clearly evidenced.

Theſe were the Generations and Diſperſions of the Sons of Sem, contracted in a narrower compaſs than either the Poſterity of Cham or Japhet: of whom the firſt, beſides the great footing which he had in Aſia, did poſſeſſe all Africk, and the other, beſides his ſhare in the greater Aſia, filled almoſt all the leſſer Aſia, and the whole Continent of Europe with the Iſles thereof, with his fruitful Progeny. And firſt beginning with Cham, we finde him the Father of four ſons, that is to ſay, Cuſh, Mizraim, Phut, and Canaan; of which only Phut the third ſon hath no iſſue aſſigned him. To Chuſh the eldeſt Son were born Seba and Havilah, and Sabtah, Nimrod, Sabtecha, and Raamah, who was the Father of Sheba and Dedan. And unto Mizraim the ſecond Son were born Ludim, and Amamim, Lehabim, Naphtuhim, Pathruſim, Caphtorim, and Caſluhim, who was the Father of Philiſtim. Of Canaan and his iſſue we ſhall ſpeak hereafter. In the mean time we will diſpoſe of theſe firſt branches of the ſtock of Cham, beginning firſt with Chus the eldeſt, and ſo deſcending to the reſt of this firſt Line. And firſt for Chuſh, though it be generally ſaid both by the Greek and Jewiſh Writers, that he was the Father of the Æthiopians in the heart of Africa; yet upon better ſearch he is found to have gone no further than Arabia, poſſeſſing himſelf of a good part of that which is called Petræa, and ſome part of Arabia Felix. For whereas Zippora the wife of Moſes, was daughter unto Iethro the Prieſt or Prince of Madian, Exod. 2. v. 16, &c. and yet is called an Æthiopian woman, in the 12. of Num. v. 1. it muſt needs be, that by Æthiopian in the laſt place, muſt be meant an Arabian: for Madian doubtleſs was a City of Arabia near unto the Red Sea, as is apparent by Joſephus for the Iewes, Ptolemie for the Grecians, and S. Hierome for the Latine Writers. But we ſhall canvaſs this more throughly in its proper place: the ſtrength of reaſon ſerving for a ſupplement of that one defect, which is, that there is no remainder of the name of Chus in any of the Cities, Promontories, Hils or Rivers of all that Countrey, by which his planting there might be made more evident. Seba, the eldeſt Son of Chus, ſets himſelf down on the ſhores of the Red Sea, as near his Father as he could; becoming the Original of the great and wealthy Nation of the Sabæans: the ſo much celebrated City of Saba, memorable for abundance of the beſt Frankincenſe, being their Metropolis or head City. A Nation ſeated in the moſt Southern part of this Peninſula, ſubject in Solomons time to that famous Lady, called in the old Teſtament from her Countrey, the Queen of Sheba; and in the new Teſtament from the ſituation of it, the Queen of the South: the holy Spirit in both places giving her an ample and remarkable teſtimony.

For Havilah or Chavilah the ſecond of the Sons of Chuſh, moſt probable it is that he poſſeſſed himſelf of that part of Arabia, which lay neareſt unto Babylonia, and that he gave name to that Land of Havilah, which the River Piſon is ſaid to incompaſs, Gen. 2. v. 21. Some footſteps of his name remain in the Chaulotæi of Eratoſthenes, the Chaulaſii of Feſtus Avienus, but more plainly in the Chavelei of Plinie; being all three but one people, though thus diverſly named; and all of them planted towards the Perſian Gulf, and ſo to Babylon. On the ſame ſhore of the Perſian Gulf, we are to look for Sabta the third ſon of Chus, where Ptolemie informes us of a City called Saphta, and of an Iſland in the ſame Gulf called Sophtha alſo. From whence in probability ſome of this people might paſſe over into Perſia, on the other ſide of the Gulf, and there give name to the Sabtæi, which by the tranſpoſition of the letter T. are by Ptolemie called the Stabæi. That Nimrod the fourth Son of Chus did firſt plant himſelf in Babylonia, the Scripture is ſo plain and poſitive, that nothing need be added to it. Of Sabteca the fifth ſon, I confeſſe I can finde no track in any of the ancient Authors. For why we ſhould admit of ſo great a change, as firſt, of B. into M. and then, of T. into D. (which could not eaſily be done by very careleſs Tranſcribers) and ſo finde Sabteca in Samidace, a City or Countrey of the Carmanians on the Perſian ſide of the Gulf, I can ſee no reaſon: And therefore rather chuſe to mingle him and his poſterity with the ſons of Sabta, and the children of his brother Regma, all planted on the ſame ſhore of the Perſian Gulf. For that Regma (our Engliſh Bibles call him Raama) was ſetled on the banks of the Bay of Perſia, hath ſo good authority, that there is no diſpute to be made of that: Ptolemie placing there the City of Regma (Regama it is called in the Latine Tranſlation) by which name it occurreth in Stephanus alſo in his Book De Urbibus, Καὶ Ῥῆγμα πρὸς τῷ Περσικῷ κόλπῳ. And Regma, on the Perſian Gulf, as his words there are. And not far thence we are to look for his ſon Sheba; both being joyned together in the Book of God; and both there ſaid to buſie and employ themſelves in the trade of Merchandizing; The Merchants of Shebah, and Raamah (ſaith the Text) they were thy Merchants; they occupied in thy Fairs with chief of all Spices, and with all precious Stones, and Gold, Ezek. 27. v. 22. So that the Nations of the Sabeans, though deſcended deſcended at the firſt from ſeverall parents, inhabited the lower parts of Arabia Felix from one Sea to the other; as evidently appeareth by thoſe words of Pliny; where he informeth us moſt truly, that the Sabæans, an Arabian people, well known for their abundance of Frankincenſe, ad utraque maria porrectis gentibus habitare, had ſpread themſelves over all the Countrey, even from the Red Sea to the Gulf of Perſia. Finally, in the ſame track we find Dedan the other ſonne of Regma, and the laſt of all the ſonnes of Chus: there being on the mouth of the Perſian Gulf (but on the Arabian coaſt thereof) not only a City, but a Province called by the name of Dedan, which both Ortelius, and ſome other late Geographers do take notice of. And more than ſo, the Prophet Ezekiel joyns him with his brother Sheba, and makes them both to follow the ſame trade of Merchandiſe; The men of Dedan were thy Merchants, chap. 27. 15. Sheba, and Dedan, and the Merchants of Tarſhiſh, chap. 38. 13. They brought thee horns of Ivory, and Ebony, ſaith the Prophet in the former Text.

The head of the next houſe of the race of Cham, was Miſraim, the ſecond ſonne, of whom it is generally affirmed, that leaving his elder brother Chus and his poſterity, in the rich and delectable Countreys of Arabia Felix, and the next parts to Babylonia, or the land of Shinaar, he went with his own ſons, and his Brother Phut, into Africa, and there planted Egypt. Of this there is no queſtion amongſt the Learned, though all the tracks and footſteps of Miſraim be quite worn out: unleſs any thing of it were preſerved in the word Meſori, by which the Egyptians antiently called the firſt Moneth in the year; or in that of Meſre, by which name the Arabians call Egypt, to this day: But being Egypt is called Miſraim in the Hebrew Bibles, that only is ſufficient without further evidence. And therefore leaving him in Egypt, let us look after his ſonne Ludim, whom he ſent out to people Æthiopia, the next Countrey to him. For that this Ludim was the Father of thoſe Æthiopians, many good reaſons are alleadged. Firſt, from the Texts of Eſaiah, chap. 66. 19. and Jer. 46. 9. where Lud is ſaid to be very skillfull in drawing the Bow; which agrees punctually with the Character given unto the Ethiopians by Strabo, Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and others of the antient Writers. Secondly, from the joyning of the children or people of Ludim with thoſe of Phul, in the place of Eſaiah before cited: which Phul may very probably be the City which the Græcians call Philæ, ſituate not far from Syene, on the very borders of Ethiopia, and antiently inhabited both by the Ethiopians and Egyptians, as Strabo, and ſome others of the Antients witneſſe. Thirdly, from the conjunction of the children of Lud or Ludim, with thoſe of Chus, on the Gulf of Arabia, and thoſe of Phut, or Lybians, on the other ſide of Mount Atlas, both next neighbours to them; as in Ezek. 30. ver. 5. and that of Jer. above mentioned; (where our Engliſh very ſtrangely rendereth Ludim by the name of Lydians) which dwell too farre off both from Chuſh and Phut, to be joyned together in one action. But of this, more than enough already, the Arguments being ſo ſtrong, and ſo moſt demonſtrative. I go on therefore to the next; only obſerving by the way, that the Ethiopians mentioned in the Texts of our Engliſh Bibles, are not theſe of Africa, but the Chuſites of Arabia Felix; our Tranſlators alwayes rendring Chus, by Ethiopia. The Anamim, who come next, I know not where to find, or in what place to look for them, unleſs they were the ſame with the Amantes of Solinus, and the Hammanientes of Plinie, a people ſeated on the ſea-ſide neer the greater Syrtis, to which the neighbourhood of the Lehabim may give ſome countenance; who ſeem to be the ſame with the people of Lybia, a Province ſeated betwixt Egypt and Cyrenaica, and were called Lybiægyptii by the old Geographers, to difference them from the Inhabitants of the greater Lybia, whereof more hereafter. For the Napthtuhim, I am alſo at a loſſe, unleſſe we find them ſomewhere in Cyrenaica; and that ſome remnant of the name be in Aptuchi fanum, which occurs in Ptolemie. But for the Pathruſin, I think no queſtion need be made, but that they were the people of that Province of Egypt, which in divers places of the Scripture is called Pathros, as Eſai. 11. 11. Jer. 44. 1. Ezek. 29. 14. and ſeems to be that part of Egypt, which is called Thebais, where Ptolemie placeth Pathyris, an In-land Town not far from Thebe. (And Pathuris the Greek or Septuagint term that, which in the Hebrew is called Pathros.)

Hitherto we have found the Nations which deſcended from the ſonnes of Miſraim, in Egypt, and the Countreys adjoyning to it. And there, or thereabouts, we are to look for Cophtorim, and Caſluhim, the two ſonnes remaining. I know there hath been great pains taken to find the Caſluhim in Colchis, and the Cophtorim in Cappadocia, or Pontus, not far from Trabezond; where notwithſtanding there is no track of the names remaining. But this being ſo far off from Egypt, in, and neer which, both Miſraim himſelf, and all the reſt of his ſonnes were planted; I can by no means yeeld to it, though to content ſuch learned men as would fain have it ſo, I think it poſſible enough that ſome of the Egyptians in ſucceeding times, moved with the fame of that great wealth which Colchis was ſuppoſed to yeeld to ſome Adventurers; might leave their native ſoyl to inhabit there. And therefore I think rather, with the learned Junius, that the Caſluhim were firſt planted in the Region of Caſſiotis (not far from Damiata, a chief town of Egypt) which retains ſomewhat of the name; and ſo doth Coptus, an old City of Egypt, of the name of Cophtorim. Or if it did not, as it doth, why the name of Cophti, which at this day is given to the Chriſtians of Egypt, may not be thought to have its firſt riſe from Cophtorim, rather than that they are ſo called quaſi Ægophti, corruptly for Ægyptii, I muſt needs ſay I am not ſatisfied. Beſides, it being cleer in Scripture, that the Caſluhim and Cophtorim dwelt neer together, and that the Philiſtims are ſaid to deſcend from Caſluhim; if Caſluhim ſhould go for Colchis, and Cophtorim for Cappadocia, we muſt firſt carry them I know not how far off from the reſt of their Brethren, againſt the method of all Plantations; and then bring the Philiſtims back again from Colchis, to find a dwelling on the borders of the land of Egypt, from whence their Anceſtors and Allies were ſo far remote. Whereas by ſetling theſe two Nations amongſt the reſt of their Brethren, the journey of the Philiſtims unto Canaan, and ſetling themſelves in the poſſeſſions of the Avim (a Canaa- nitiſh people) whom they had ſubdued, Deut 2. 25. is both eaſie and naturall. But before we follow theſe Philiſtims further in their new Plantation amongſt the Canaanites, we will firſt ſee what became of Phut, the third ſonne of Cham. And if we guide our ſelves in this Labyrinth by the clew of Antiquity, we ſhall find him ſetled Weſt of his Brother Miſraim, and ſo to the Atlantick Ocean, the Lake of Tritonis parting their dominions. Some Relicts of the name there were in the time of Joſephus, who telleth us of a River of Mauritania, which in his time retained the name of Phut: Plinie makes mention of it alſo. Ptolemie takes notice of a River in thoſe parts called Pthuth, which comes very neer it. And ſo doth Iſidore, Origin. l. 2. But St. Hierome in my mind puts it out of doubt, whoſe words I ſhall put down, and ſo leave Africa; Phut Lybiæ, à quo & Mauritaniæ fluvius uſque ad præſens Phut dicitur, omniſque circa eum Regio Phutenſis; cujus rei multi Scriptores tam Græci quam Latini teſtes ſunt. Where we have not only a River, but a Province of the name of Phut; and many antient Writers both Greek and Latin called to witneſſe to it.

And now we ſhould proceed to Canaan and his ſonnes (eleven in all) being the fourth and laſt branch of the houſe of Cham. But being they all kept together in or neer the land of Canaan, we ſhall find them there; or meet with them in ſuch Plantations and Colonies as they ſent abroad, under the title of Phœnicians. And therefore go we next to Japhet, whoſe Tents God promiſed to enlarge, as indeed he did; ſpreading his branches over Europe, the leſſer Aſia, and a great part of the greater alſo. To him were born ſeven ſonnes in all, that is to ſay, Gomer and Magog, Madai and Javan, Tubal, Meſech, and Thyras: Of which, the Iſſue of two only are upon record, viz. Aſchenaz, Riphath, and Togarma, the ſonnes of Gomer; Eliſha, Tarſhiſh, Kittim, and Dodanim, the ſonnes of Javan. And firſt for Gomer and his ſonnes, they firſt poſſeſſed themſelves of convenient dwellings in the greater, and the leſſer Aſia. Gomer himſelf firſt planting in the mountainous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Cimmerini long retained his name; and after changing that unpleaſant, and unfruitfull dwelling for the Plains of Phrygia, in which the City Cimmeris, in the dayes of Plinie, did preſerve his memory. For that the poſterity and people of Gomer, called at firſt Gomerians, came to take the name of Cimmerians, as of Cimbri afterwards, is generally agreed upon amongſt the Learned. Now then, as Gomer fixt himſelf in the Greater Phrygia, ſo did his eldeſt ſon Aſchenaz in Phrygia minor, and the Country of Troas, ſpreading himſelf along upon the Helleſpont, and thoſe Greekiſh Seas, as far as Bithynia. In all which places there were left ſome memory of this Plantation. For in Bithynia there is a Bay called Sinus Aſcanius, together with a River, and a Lake of the ſame name alſo. And in the Leſſer Phrygia, and the Countrey of Troas, there was both a City and a Province adjoyning, antiently known by the name of Aſcania; and the Aſcaniæ Inſulæ alſo on the coaſts thereof. Nor is it any thing unlikely, but that in honour of this Aſchenaz, the Kings and great men of thoſe parts, took the name of Aſcanius. Of which name, beſides Aſcanius the ſon of Æneas, we find a King mentioned in the ſecond of Homers Iliads, which came unto the aid of Priamus at the ſiege of Troy. In the ſame quarters of the World we find Riphath alſo, the founder of the Riphei, a people dwelling in the Eaſt parts of Bithynia, and ſpreading alſo over Paphlagonia: In both which Provinces there are ſome remnants of his name to be found amongſt the Antients. For beſides that Joſephus ſaith expreſly, that the Paphlagonians antiently were called Riphei; there is mention in Apollonius Argonauticks of the River Rhebæus, which riſing in Bithynia, emptieth it ſelf into the Pontus Euxinus, neer to Paphlagonia, of which River Plinie alſo doth inform us: and Stephanus doth not only acquaint us with the River it ſelf, but tells us alſo of a Region of the ſame name, and of a people thereabouts, which are called Rhebæi. Nor need we look much further to find out the ſeat of Togarma the third ſonne of Gomer, whom the Prophet Ezekiel not only joyneth with his Father as two neighbouring Nations, but makes both of them to lie Northwards of Judæa; Gomer and all his bands, the houſe of Togarma in the North quarters and all his bands, cap. 38. 6. So that they do not gueſſe amiſſe, who place Togarma and his Progeny in Cappadocia: a Countrey not only bordering neer to the Plantations of Gomer, and lying on the north of the land of Canaan, but very well ſtocked with an excellent breed of Mules and Horſes, as Strabo teſtifieth in the 11 Book of his Geography; with which commodities they traded at the Fairs of Tyre, as the ſame Prophet tells us of them, cap. 27. 14. But for a more evident proof of this, that Togarma's dwelling muſt be found in Cappadocia; we muſt firſt know that the Greek Tranſlators call him generally by the name of Torgama; and then, that antiently there was a people in Cappadocia and Galatia, whom Strabo calleth Trocmi, and Tully, Trogmi; by Stephanus they are named Trocmeni, and Trogmades in the Councell of Chalcedon, in which Cyriacus Biſhop of the Trogmades (Κυριακὸς Ἐπίσκοπος Τρομάδων) is often mentioned.

Having thus done with Gomer, and the ſonnes of Gomer, we will next purſue the reſt of the ſonnes of Japhet, except Javan only, whom with his four ſonnes we will keep together. And the next ſon of Japhet is Magog, concerning whom there hath been much diſpute and difference amongſt our Antiquaries; ſome making him the Father of the Scythians, ſome of the Goths, and others finally of the Tartars; all of them thinking that ſuch terrible names as Gog and Magog, could not belong to any but ſuch terrible Nations. And poſſible enough it is, that ſome of his poſterity in ſucceeding times, finding their own ſeats too narrow for them, might remove further Northwards, and be the founders of ſome Scythian and Tartarian Nations; but that Magog himſelf in his firſt Plantation, ſhould wander ſo farre out of the way from the reſt of his brethren, when he had elbow-room enough amongſt them, I cannot eaſily imagine. When therefore I find a Region in Stephanus called Gogareus, betwixt Iberia and Colchis; and read in Plinie, that the City of Cœle-Syria, which the Grecians call Hierapolis, was by the Syrians themſelves called Magog: I ſhall not trouble my ſelf to look for Magog any where elſe, than in thoſe Countreys where they have left ſuch evident Land-marks to diſcern themſelves by.

But

But this we ſhall the better ſee by looking out the dwellings of his two brethren, Meſech and Tubal, who being joyned together with Gog and Magog, Ezek. cap. 38. 2. and 39. 1. are very unlike to have their dwellings far aſunder: or that they could concur in any publick Action againſt the Jews, according to the ſcope and purpoſe of the holy Prophet. Now it is probable (if not more) that Meſech, whom the Antients named Moſoch, ſeated himſelf on the North and North-Eaſt of Syria, in the confines of Colchis and Armenia, and ſo unto the Caſpian, or Hyrcanian Sea. For all along that tract runs a ridge of Hills, which Plinie, Ptolemie, and Pomponius Mela call Montes Moſchici, diſterminating Colchis from Armenia, and both from Iberia; and moſt like to be the dwelling of Meſech or Moſoch, and to take denomination from him. And this I am the rather induced to think, becauſe Tubal, whom the Scriptures generally joyn together with Meſech, is by moſt Writers ſaid to have ſetled himſelf in Iberia, the next Province to it. Joſephus alſo telling us, that antiently the Iberi were called Thobeli, though called Iberians afterwards on ſome new occaſion. And hereunto the conſtant tradition of the Spaniards gives ſome good authority, who boaſt of their deſcent from Tubal: which can no otherwiſe be granted, then as they were a Colony of theſe Iberians, from whence the Continent of Spain was once called Iberia; and where one of the principall Rivers is ſtill called Iberus. For Madai, the third Sonne of Iaphet, it is moſt plain by the autority of Scripture (were there no proof elſe) that he was the Father of the Medes; who in the book of Daniel, and that of Heſter, are repreſented to us by no other name than that of Madai.

Thus having took a view of thoſe who fixt themſelves in either, or in both the Aſias; let us look on Thyras, Javan, and the ſonnes of Javan, who not contented with their dwellings in the leſſer Aſia, filled all Europe by degrees with their numerous progenies. And firſt beginning with Javan as the Elder brother, moſt Authors make him the Originall of thoſe Greek Nations which paſſe under the generall name of Iones; and there is very good ground for the aſſertion, conſidering that the Greek Tranſlators of the Bible, in ſtead of Javan, read Jovan, and that all thoſe who elſewhere ordinarily are called Iones, are by Homer, one of the antienteſt of the Greeks, named Iaones. Now Javan and Iaon ſound ſo like each other, that one may very well conclude, that they were the ſame. A name not only proper to the Athenians, and their Colonies, (though probable enough firſt belonging to them of Attica) but comprehending the Bœotians and Achæans alſo; yea, and extending alſo into Macedonia, as appears Dan. 8. 21. where Alexander the Great, in the Hebrew is called King of Javan, which we Engliſh Græcia. Nor do we much diſ-joyn Javan from the reſt of that ſtock, by carrying him croſs the ſeas into another part of the World; for he might go along with Gomer in his ſecond Plantation; And leaving him well ſetled in the greater Phrygia, and his ſon Askenaz in the leſſer; might then with very little trouble (and no improbability at all) paſſe over the Helleſpont, and plant himſelf in Attica, called at firſt Ionia, ſaith Plutarch in the life of Theſeus. Or if any one notwithſtanding conceive this for too great a leap, and will rather think with Hecataus, that the the Iones came out of Aſia into Greece (as Strabo cites him to that purpoſe) I ſhall not much contend againſt that opinion; ſo it be alſo granted on the other ſide, that Javan, not having room enough on the ſhores of Aſia, paſſed over into Greece, as a land unoccupied. With Javan went Eliſha his eldeſt ſonne, the Father of the Æoles, or Æolians, on the Aſian ſide, as Joſephus hath it; and the founder of Elis in Peloponneſus, and planter of the Grecian Illes, which by the Prophet Ezekiel, 27. 7. are called the Iſles of Eliſha. And it agrees exceeding well with the Iſles of Greece, which by the Prophet is affirmed of the Iſles of Eliſha; namely, that the inhabitants thereof did trade to Tyre with Blew and Purple: in which ſome of the Grecian Iſles were ſuch excellent Artizans, that Carpathus had the name of Porphyris, and Cithera was called Πορφυρῆσσα, only from the abundance of Purple, which they had amongſt them. Not to ſay any thing of Coos, Niſyrus and Gyarus, and ſome other of the Cyclades, renowned in good Authors for that commodity.

A ſhorter journey, but withall a far ſhorter Territory fell to the lot of Tarſhiſh the ſecond ſonne; whom Javan when he travelled further upon new diſcoveries, left ſetled in Cilicia, a Province of the leſſer Aſia; where either he, or ſome of his Poſterity, in honour of him, built the City of Tarſus, the principall City of that Province. For that Tarſhiſh in thoſe early dayes ſhould go into Spain, and there build Tarteſſus, I take to be a ſtrange (if not idle) Romance; that Town being built by the Phœnicians, many ages after, without relation unto Tarſhiſh, or his memory either. What Voyages or Plantations thoſe of Cilicia or Tarſus made in times ſucceeding, as I no where find, ſo is it not materiall to my preſent purpoſe; which principally is to ſettle the ſonnes of Noah in their firſt habitations. On therefore unto Cittim the third ſonne of Javan, whom Joſephus ſetleth firſt in the Iſle of Cyprus, where he finds a City called Citium, the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, thence ſurnamed Κιτιεύς. Joſephus is herein followed by St. Hierome in his Notes on Geneſis, in whoſe time (as Pintus telleth us in his Comment on Ezekiel) the Town of Citium was ſtill ſtanding; ſo do Euſtathius in his Hexameron, and divers others. The Author of the Book of Maccabees ſets him further off, giving the name of Cittim unto Macedonia. After that (ſaith the Author) Alexander the ſon of Philip, went forth of the land of Chethim, and ſlew Darius King of the Perſians and Medes, cap. 1. v. 1. And after in the 8 Chapter of the ſame Book, verſe 5. Perſeus King of Macedon is called King of the Cittims. But this doth no way contradict that of his firſt planting in Cyprus, where it is very probable that he made his dwelling for a time, by reaſon of the neighbourhood of his brother Tarſhiſh (Cilicia and the City of Tarſus lying neer unto it;) But finding in time that Iſland to be either too barren, or too ſmall for his people; and that the other parts both of Greece and Aſia were taken up already by the firſt Adventurers, he might finally fix himſelf, or ſome of his poſterity, in Macedonia, as a ſpare place which no body could lay claim unto. That either he or any of his ſonnes planted firſt in Italie, which I ſee Bochartus would fain have, were againſt the method of Plantations; and he muſt give them wings to fly that conveyeth them thither, when as yet Mankind was not taught the uſe of ſhipping, or not accuſtomed at leaſt to make long voyages. But that in courſe of time, as the World grew fuller, and that Greece was not able to contain its multitudes, ſome of the race of Cittim might paſſe over into Italy, the paſſage thither from ſome of the Ports of Greece being ſhort and eaſie, I am apt enough to beleeve, and in its proper place ſhall declare my ſelf for it. Nor can I otherwiſe agree with him, as concerning Dodanim, whom againſt all right and reaſon he hath placed in Gaul; making the River Rhodanus, one of the principal of that Countrey, to be named of him; whom the Grecks, miſtaking the letter Daleth for that of Reſh (as indeed the letters are ſo like, that one may very eaſily be miſtook for the other) moſt commonly preſent unto us by the name of Rhodanim. Admitting which, it is more proper, in my mind, to ſettle Rhodanim for a while in the Iſle of Rhodes, lying ſo neer the dwellings of his other brethren; till wanting room for the increaſe of his poſterity in ſo ſmall an Iſland, he might coaſt along the ſhores of Peloponneſus, and fix himſelf finally in Epirus by his brother Eliſha; where in the Province of the Moloſſians, we ſhall find a City called Dodona, without any ſuch miſtake or change of letters, as before is mentioned. For that the three furtheſt parts of Europe in reſpect of Aſia, ſhould be planted all at once by theſe ſonnes of Javan, is ſo incredible an imagination, that he muſt have a very ſtrong fancy, or be of very light belief, which can entertain it. Finally as for Thyras the laſt ſonne of Japhet, having accompanyed his brother Javan to the ſhores of Aſia, and ſeeing him paſſed over the ſeas to Greece, he took the opportunity of the next ſtraight or Fretum (ſince called Thracius Boſphorus) and fixed himſelf in Thrace, which countrey he gave name unto, as moſt Writers teſtifie. Nor want there ſuch apparent footſteps of the name of Thyras, beſides the name of Thracia (as ſome ſpell the word) which may adde good autority to this general teſtimony; there being both a River and an Haven-town not far from Bizantium, which Plinie, Ptolemie, and Mela call Athyras; a River and Town called Tyras in the Province of Mœſia, bordering next to Thrace, whereof moſt of all the old Geographers have taken notice; and finally the Thracians calling their God Mars, by the name of Thuras. Not to ſay any thing of Tereus, Therops, and ſome others of the Kings of Thrace; whoſe names come very neer unto that of Thyras, as the firſt founder of their Nation.

Thus have we ſeen the ſeverall Generations and Diſperſions of the Sonnes of Noah, ſo far forth as their names are regiſtred in holy Scripture: theſe being the Heads and Leaders of thoſe ſeveral Tribes which joyned together in the project of the building of Babel, and afterwards diſperſed themſelves, as before was ſhewn. But that no more than theſe (I mean Heads of Families) deſcended in ſo long a time from the loyns of Noah; that they ſhould have towards the new peopling of the world, in an hundred years (for ſo long it muſt be at leaſt from the Flood to the building of Babel) no more than ſixteen ſonnes in all; and ten of thoſe ſixteen go childleſſe alſo to the grave, is not a thing to be imagined. Nor is it to be thought, that all the people which were born ſince the Flood till then, could meet together at one place as by inſpiration; or being met, would joyn together in a work of ſo little profit; or that if Noah or Sem had been there amongſt them, they would not have diſſwaded them from that fooliſh enterpriſe. And therefore I ſhould rather be of their opinion, which think that Noah fixed himſelf in thoſe parts, which lay neereſt to the place where the Ark took land: and having planted as far Eaſtward as he thought convenient, ſent out the ſurpluſage of his people under the Conduct of one or more of theſe Undertakers; directing them perhaps to the land of Shinaar, where himſelf had dwelt before the Flood. Where being come, and deſtitute of graver and more ſober counſells, they fell upon that vain attempt which became their ruine; and made them ſcatter and diſperſe themſelves into ſo many Companies. For in my mind Sir Walt. Raleigh pleads the point exceeding ſtrongly, that it muſt needs be that Noah was ſetled in the Eaſt, and had well peopled all thoſe parts which lay neereſt to him, before he ſent this Troop abroad upon new diſcoveries. For being it is expreſly ſaid in holy Scripture, that as they went from the Eaſt, they found a plain in the Land of Shinaar; it muſt needs follow without controverſie, that they came from the Eaſt Countreys into Shinaar or Babylonia, and not from any part of Armenia (as the Vulgar opinion is) which lay North thereof. Now that the Countreys whence they came were not left utterly deſolate upon this remove, but very ſufficiently provided both of men and Cities, appeareth by thoſe huge Armies which Zoroaſter the King of Bactria, and Staurobates a King of the Indians, were able to bring into the field. Of whom the firſt being invaded by Ninus the Aſſyrian Monarch, encountred him with an Army of 400000. fighting men; the other on the like occaſion out-vied Semiramis for numbers: and yet her Army did conſiſt, as we read in Diodorus Siculus, of three millions and an half of men, beſides 10000. armed Waggons; whereof if we believe but the third part, it may ſerve to prove that the Eaſt muſt needs be planted before this Expedition towards Babylonia. For conſidering that Ninus the husband of Semiramis was but the third in deſcent from Nimrod, (that is to ſay, the ſonne of Belus, the ſonne of Nimrod) it had been a moſt impoſſible thing that ſuch a vaſt increaſe ſhould be made only out of Colonies in ſo ſhort a time, as needs muſt be between the planting of the Countreys before ſpecified, and theſe two great actions, unleſſe God raiſed them out of ſtones, or by ſome ſuch miracle, to abate the pride of theſe Uſurpers over other Nations. Without a miracle of this nature (which I conceive no wiſe man would expect to find) it is I ſay, a thing impoſſible that Staurobates ſhould exceed Semiramis in number of men, as Diodorus ſaith he did; he being but a Caſtling of a ſecond Swarm, and ſhe the great Commandreſſe of that part of the world from whence he came upon a ſecond or a third Plantation. Adde unto this, that thoſe who have recorded the Acts of Alexander the great, aſſure us that he found more Cities, and ſumptuoſities in that little Kingdome of Porus, which lay ſide by ſide to the Eaſt of the River Indus, than in all his other travells and undertakings: And this may ſerve inſtead of a further evidence, that the Eaſt Countreys were not planted after this diſperſion, but built, and peopled, and reduced under forms of Government, as ſoon as any in the World. Nor know I elſe where to find either Noah himſelf, or Sem and Iaphet, unleſſe they ſtayd behind with their Father Noah, or were diſpoſed of by themſelves in their ſeverall quarters: there being none of thoſe, though moſt diligent men, who have writ of the Plantations of the World upon this diſperſion, that either ſpeak of any Nations planted by them, or of their ſetling in the Colonies of any one of their deſcendants. Which is to me a very ſtrong Argument that they came not with the reſt to the plains of Shinaar, but tarryed ſtill in thoſe habitations wherein God had placed them.

Againſt this I can ſee but two Objections of any moment; one from the Text, the other from an old Tradition amongſt the Jews. That from the Text is gathered from thoſe words of Moſes, where having made his Catalogue of the Families of the Sonnes of Noah, he adds, And by theſe were the Nations divided in the Earth after the Flood, Gen. 10. v. ult. But theſe words, as I take it, do relate only unto that diviſion which was made upon occaſion of the confuſion of Languages, when they were forced to give over their work, and ſort themſelves into ſeverall Companies; and not to ſuch Plantations as were made before: who being all of one tongue, though in divers dwellings, could not be looked upon as ſeverall and divided Nations. For the Tradition of the Iews, 'tis this, that from the beginning of the world to the building of Babel, that language which in after-times was called the Hebrew, was the common language of Mankind; and that it did continue uncorrupt in the houſe of Eber, (whence it had the name) becauſe he joyned not with the reſt in that proud and ungodly undertaking. Hence it may poſſibly be objected, that if there were any others of the off-ſpring of Noah which came not with the reſt to the Plains of Shinaar, and conſequently had no hand in that vain attempt, they could not come within the curſe of confounded Languages; but muſt needs ſpeak the Hebrew Tongue, as well as thoſe deſcended of the loyns of Heber. But againſt this Tradition, and the conſequents of it, there are ſome things to be objected. For firſt it is but a Tradition, and therefore of no ſure foundation to build upon. And ſecondly it is ſuch a Tradition as holds no good coherence with the truth of Story; it being a moſt clear and demonſtrative truth, that the Hebrew Tongue was not the Language which Abraham brought with him out of Chaldea and Meſopotamia, but that which he found ſpoken in the land of Canaan at his coming thither, to which both he and his Poſterity did conform themſelves. Or had it been the Language of Heber, as they ſay it was, (but moſt undoubtedly was not) yet, thirdly, had this been a priviledge conferred on Heber, that he and his Poſterity ſhould ſpeak the Originall Language without alteration or corruption, it muſt have been extended to all thoſe of the houſe of Jcktan which deſcended from him; as alſo to the houſe of Laban in Padan Aram, and to the Moabites and the Ammonites as the ſeed of Lot; and finally to the Iſhmaelites and Idumæans, deſcended of Abraham and Eſau; and not be limited and confined only to the houſe of Iacob. Either all theſe muſt be partakers of ſo great a priviledge, becauſe their Father Heber had obtained it for himſelf and his; or elſe it was not ſuch a priviledge, or given ſo univerſally and incommunicably to the houſe of Heber, as they ſay it was. So the Tradition falls to ground as to this particular. And then admitting it for true, that thoſe who ſtaid behind with Noah ſpake the ſame Language which was common to the Fathers before the Flood, (be it the Hebrew, or what elſe ſoever it was) I ſee no reaſon to the contrary, but that it might in time be branched into ſeverall Languages or Dialects of the ſame one Language, by the commerce and intercourſe which they had with Nations of a different ſpeech; as well as thoſe of Iudah in ſo ſhort a time as the Captivity of Babylon, had loſt the purity of that Language which they ſo much brag of; and could not underſtand their own Bibles at their coming home, but by an Interpreter. Of which ſee Nehem. c. 8. v. 7, 8.

But to proceed: On this diſperſion of the Families of the ſonnes of Noah, it came to paſſe, that though they all deſcended from one common Root, yet by the ſituations of their ſeverall dwellings, they came to be of ſeverall tempers and affections; in which they were ſo different from one another, that it might ſeem they had been made at firſt out of ſeverall Principles, and not at all derived from one common Parent. Of which thus Du Bartas.

O ſee how full of wonders ſtrange is Nature,
Sith in each Climate, not alone in ſtature,
Strength, colour, hair; but that men differ do
Both in their humours, and their manners too.
The Northern man is fair, the Southern foul;
That's white, this black, that ſmiles, and this doth ſcowl.
Th' one's blithe and frolick, the other dull and froward;
Th' one's full of courage, th' other a fearfull coward, &c.

The ground or reaſon of which difference is to be attributed to the different tempers of thoſe Countries in which they live, and to the different influences of the Heavenly Bodies on thoſe ſeverall Countries: which do continue ſtill the ſame, though many times the Countries do ſhift and change their old Inhabitants. Hinc illa ab antiquo vitia, & patriâ ſorte durantia, quæ totas in hiſtoriis gentes aut commendant aut notant, ſaith a Modern, but judicious Author. Two or three evidences of this truth will make it cleer and evident to a practicall judgement, which otherwiſe might appear obſcure in the ſearch of cauſes. Florus hath told us of the Gauls, Primum eorum impetum eſſe majorem quam virorum, ſecundum minorem quam feminarum. Which is the ſame which Rob. Dallington hath told us of the Modern French, That he begins an action like thunder, and ends it in a ſmoak. Ut ſunt Gallorum ſubita ingenia, ingenia, ſaith Cæſar of the antient Gauls: and I believe the preſent French are altogether as raſh and harebraind, as the other were. Gallia fœcunda Cauſidicorum, was part of the Character of the Gauls in the time of Juvenal; and it is told us of the French by ſome late Obſervers, that there are commonly more Law-tryals amongſt them in one year, than have been in England ſince the Conqueſt. And yet the old Gauls in a manner are wholly rooted out of the Country, the ſeverall Nations of Franks, Burgundians, Britons, Normans, and Goths being in poſſeſſion of their ſeverall dwellings. Thus alſo it is ſaid by Tacitus of the antient Germans, Diem noctemque continuare potando, nulli opprobrium; that it was no diſgrace to any, to ſpend the whole day and night in drinking: and more than ſo, De jungendis affinitatibus, de bello denique & pace in conviviis conſultare, that they conſulted over their Cups of their weightyeſt buſineſſes. Since which time though all Germany hath ſhifted almoſt all her old inhabitants, and taken in new Colonies of Suedes, Avares, Thuringians, Danes, Sclaves, Hunnes, Saxons, and other Nations; yet ſtill thoſe ill cuſtomes are as much in uſe amongſt them, as ever formerly. To go a little further off; the old Philoſopher Anacharſis tells us of the antient Grecians, that at the beginning of their Feaſts they uſed little Goblets, πινοντες δε εν μεγαλοις πινοσι, and greater towards the end, when they were almoſt drunken: which cuſtome ſtill remains amongſt them, as G. Sandys obſerveth, notwithſtanding the great length of time, and all the other changes of ſtate and people, which have hapned ſince. I ſhall not ſpeak here of the effeminateneſſe of the Aſiaticks, or the cruelty or implacableneſſe of the African Nations, being as great now as in any of the former times, notwithſtanding the great and numerous Plantations of the Greeks, Romans, Vandals, Saracens, Turks, and Tartars, ſucceſſively, and reſpectively, in theſe ſeverall Countreys. And therefore I conconclude this point in theſe words of Barclay, Hæret itaque in omni gente vis quædam inconcuſſa, quæ hominibus pro conditione terrarum in quibus naſci contigerit, ſua fata diviſerit.

Nor is this all the conſequent of this diſperſion of the Families of the ſonnes of Noah; the ſeparation of their perſons producing, firſt, an alteration of affections, and that engendring naturall Animoſities: which ſeconded by their ſeverall intereſſes and Reaſons of State, hath left almoſt no people without ſome ſuch enemy which doth particularly and perverſly croſſe them in all their Counſels. Concerning which, take here the Obſervation of that notable Stateſman and Hiſtorian, Philip de Comines; which though it be with reference to the Meridian of his own time only, yet it may be accommodated generally to all States and Ages, "In rebus humanis ita comparatum eſt, ut nullus fere ſit populus "quem non æmulus aliquis exerceat, &c. It is (ſaith he) ſo ordered in the ſtate of humane affairs, that "there is almoſt no Nation without a more particular Enemy. The Engliſh are enemies to the French, "the Scots to the Engliſh; the Portugueze have the like inveterate hatred againſt the Spaniards. The "Princes of Italy enjoy great poſſeſſions without any good title; but are continually oppoſed by the "more potent Cities of Venice, Florence, Genoa, and Luca. The Arragonian Kings of Naples, have "found perpetuall Enemies of the Dukes of Anjou; as have the Dukes of Millain, of the houſe of Or-"leans. The Princes of Italy, and the Florentines, have a ſtitch at Venice; as the States of Genoa, and "Sienna, have againſt the Florentines. In Germany the animoſities have been great and of long con-"tinuance, between the houſes of Auſtria, and Bavaria; the hatred grown beyond all hopes of recon-"ciliation which is between the Switzers, and the Auſtrian Family. The Dukes of Cleve, and Gulick, "are alwayes upon ill terms with their neighbours of Gelderland: And in the North, the Cities on the "Baltick Seas have their continuall quarrels with the Kings of Denmark. Nor are the enmities any "thing leſſe, if they be not greater, which are diſcernible amongſt the people of Aſia and Africk, than "thoſe that are above remembred. So far and to this purpoſe ſaith that notable and judicious Writer.

The conſideration of which points, if there were no other, were of it ſelf ſufficient to ſhew the neceſſary uſe of Hiſtory and Geography, as well for the underſtanding the affairs of the Ages paſt, as for commerce and correſpondency with the Nations preſent. For had no Hiſtories been written in the former times, in what a dull ignorance had we lived of all thoſe occurrences which do ſo much concern the whole ſtate of Mankind, and are our principall directors in life and action? in which reſpect the Orator moſt truly calleth it, Magiſtram vitæ. For upon the credit of this Hiſtory, the examples of our Anceſtors, the grounds of civil prudence, and the fames of men do moſt eſpecially depend, And certainly to draw back the mind to the contemplation of matters long ago paſſed; to ſearch out with diligence, and to deliver with faith, freedome, and the life of expreſſion, ſuch things as are found out on a diligent ſearch; to repreſent unto our eyes the changes of Times, the characters of Perſons, the uncertainties of Counſels, and the conveyances of Actions, the ſubtilties of Pretenſions, and the ſecrets of State; muſt of neceſſity be a work of as publique uſe, as it is of great both pains and judgement. Beſides, it gives a kind of eternity to all ſuch men, who by their Counſels or Atchievements have deſerved nobly of thoſe Kingdoms, and Common-wealths, wherein they lived. And thereupon the Orator doth not only call it Magiſtram vitæ, but Lucem veritatis, Teſtem temporis, Nuntiam vetuſtatis, & Vitæ memoriam. According to which character, I find theſe Verſes ſet before a Chronicle of ſome Kings of England (more worth than all the Book beſides.)

For though in theſe dayes Miracles be fled,
Yet this ſhall of good Hiſtories be ſed,
They call back time that's paſt, and give life to the dead.

Nor want there other motives to endear unto us the uſe of Hiſtory, beſides the light it gives unto all the remarkable Actions of preceding times; and the eternity (if I may ſay ſo) which it conferreth on the Actors themſelves, by the preſervation of their names from the ruines of Time, and the pit of Oblivion. For firſt, it ſtirreth men to Vertue, and deters them from Vice, by ſhewing forth the glorious memories of vertuous men, and the ill ſavour which is left behinde men of ungodly life; and eſpecially keeps perſons of moſt eminent place from letting looſe the reins unto all licentiouſneſs, by repreſenting this to their conſideration, that all their actions ſhall be laid open one day to the view of the Vulgar. Secondly, it hath been a principal Conſerver of moſt Arts and Sciences, by keeping on Record the Dictates and Opinions of ſo many of the old Philoſophers; out of which a perfect body of Philoſophy, and others of the Liberal Arts hath been collected and digeſted. Thirdly, it is the beſt School-maſter in the Art of War, and teacher of Stratagems; and in that can practically afford more punctual directions, than can be otherwiſe obtained; and is withall the beſt Aſſiſtant to the Stateſman or Politician, who from hence draw their Obſervations and Concluſions; and become thereby ſerviceable to their Prince and Countrey, though never travelled more than amongſt their Books. So Archimedes in his ſtudy, and Demoſthenes in his Orators Gown, endangered more the enemies of their ſeveral Countreys; than the Athenians, or Syracuſans, did by dint of ſword. And laſt of all, beſides theſe civil benefits and conſiderations, and the great help which it affords in the way of diſcourſe; there is no particular branch of knowledge more uſeful for the true and perfect underſtanding of holy Scripture, than that of Eccleſiaſtical and Profane Hiſtory; or which gives clearer light to many dark paſſages thereof, eſpecially in the Prophetical writings of either Teſtament.

This, as it ſhewes the neceſſary uſe and benefit which redounds from Hiſtory, ſo doth it ſerve to uſher in that commendation which belongs to the ſtudy of Geography alſo; without ſome knowledge wherein, the ſtudy of Hiſtory is neither ſo pleaſant, nor ſo profitable, as a judicious Reader would deſire to have it. 'Tis true, Geography without Hiſtory hath life and motion, but very unſtable and at random; but Hiſtory without Geography, like a dead carkaſſe, hath neither life, nor motion at all, or moves at leaſt but ſlowly on the underſtanding. For what delight or ſatisfaction can any man receive from the reading of Story, without he know ſomewhat of the places, and the conditions of the people, which are therein mentioned. In which regard Ammianus Marcellinus the Hiſtorian, hath deſerved very well of all his Readers; premiſing to the Actions of every Countrey, ſome brief deſcription of the place, and chief Towns therein. For though the greatneſſe of the Action doth ennoble and adorn the place; yet it is the knowledge of the place, which adds delight and ſatisfaction unto the reading of the ſtory, which conveighs it to us. Hiſtory therefore and Geography, like the two Fires or Meteors which Philoſophers call Caſtor and Pollux, if joyned together, crown our reading with delight and profit; if parted, threaten both with a certain ſhipwrack: and are like two Siſters dearly loving, not without pity (I had almoſt ſaid impiety) to be kept aſunder. So as that which Sir Phil. Sidney ſaid of Argalus and Parthenia,

Her being was in him alone,
And ſhe not being, he was none;

may be as juſtly ſaid of Hiſtory and Geography, as of thoſe two Lovers. And yet this is not all the benefit which redounds from the ſtudy of Geography, which is exceeding uſeful to the reading of the holy Scriptures, as in diſcovering the ſituation of Paradiſe, the bounds and borders of thoſe Countreys which are therein mentioned; eſpecially with relation to the travels of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Evangeliſts and Apoſtles, yea of Chriſt himſelf; not otherwiſe to be comprehended and underſtood, but by the help of Geographical Tables and deſcriptions. Beſides this, it is uſefull to moſt ſorts of men, as to Aſtronomers, who are hereby informed of the different appearances of Stars in ſeveral Countreys; their ſeveral influences and aſpects, their riſing and ſetting, according to different Horizons. Secondly, to Phyſicians, who are hereby acquainted with the different temper of mens bodies, according to the Climes they live in; the nature and growth of many Simples and Medicinal Drugs, whereof every Countrey under Heaven hath ſome more natural and proper to it ſelf, then to any others. Thirdly, to States-men, who from hence draw their knowledge of the nature and diſpoſition of thoſe people with whom they are to negotiate; the bounds and borders both of their own Kingdoms, and the Neighbouring Countreys, with the extent of their reſpective Dominions both by Sea and Land; without the exact knowledge of which, there would be a perpetual Seminary of wars and diſcord. Fourthly, to Merchants, Mariners and Souldiers, the ſeveral Profeſſors of which kinds of life, finde nothing more neceſſary for them in their ſeveral callings, than a competent knowledge in Geography, which preſents to them many notable advantages, both for their profit and contentment. Finally, by the ſtudy of Geography, a man that hath not opportunity nor means of travelling, may with as much benefit, but far leſs danger and expence, acquaint himſelf with the particular deſcriptions of Kingdomes, Provinces, Cities, Towns and Caſtles, with all things conſiderable in the ſame, together with the cuſtomes, manners, and diſpoſitions of all Forain Nations: and that too in as full a manner, as if he had ſurvey'd the one, and obſerved the other, by a perſonal viſit of the places repreſented to him.

Such is the neceſſary uſe which men of ingenuous Studies, and Profeſſions do and may make of Hiſtory and Geography, in the courſe of their callings and imployments. And there are ſome things alſo neceſſary to the knowledge of each, that we may ſtudy them with the greater benefit and contentation. To Hiſtory it is only requiſite that it be defined, diſtinguiſhed from ſuch writings as do ſeem to challenge the name of Hiſtories; and that ſomewhat be premiſed of thoſe ſeverall Epoches, from which all people do begin their computations. But to Geography it is needful not only that we do define it, but that we explicate thoſe Terms, or ſecond Notions, which are not obvious to the underunderſtanding of every Reader. Firſt then for Hiſtory, if we conſult the name or Quid nominis of it, it is derived ἀπὸ τῦ ἱςορεῖν, i. e. videre; and therefore properly doth ſignifie a Relation of ſuch remarkable actions at which the Author was an Eye-witneſs, if not an Agent. Apud veteres enim (ſaith Iſidore) nemo ſcribebat Hiſtoriam, niſi is qui interfuiſſet, & ea quæ ſcribenda eſſent vidiſſet. But now the cuſtomary uſe of the Word hath taught it a more ample ſignification. Hiſtory being defined to be a Perfect Relation of all Occurrents obſervable happning in the State whereof it is written, deſcribed by the Motives, Pretexts, Conſultations, Speeches and Events, a ſpecial care being had both of time and place.

As for the writings which do challenge the name of Hiſtory, but indeed are really diſtinguiſhed from it, they are Commentaries, Annals, Diaries, or Journals, and Chronologies. Firſt Commentaries ſet down only a naked continuance of Events and Actions, without the Motives and deſigns, the Counſels, Speeches, Occaſions and Pretexts of buſineſſes. So that Cæſar with more modeſty than true propriety of ſpeech, applyed the name of Commentaries to the beſt Hiſtory in the World. A Hiſtory commended by King James to his Son Prince Henry, above all other profane Authors, both for the ſweet flowing of the ſtyle, and the worthineſs of the matter ſelf. " For I have ever (ſaith he) been of this opinion, that " of all Ethnick Emperors, or great Captains, he hath fartheſt exceeded both in his practiſe and in his " precepts, for martial affairs. Which makes me the more wonder at the ſtrange and unjuſt Cenſure of Juſtus Lipſius, who cals them Nudam & ſimplicem narrationem; for being entituled Commentaries, they do (ſaith he) nil polliceri præter nomen; with pride and arrogance enough. 2. For Annals next, they are a bare recital only of the Actions happening every year, without regard had to the cauſes and pretexts, or any of the chief Ingredients required in Hiſtory. So that Tacitus had no other Reaſon to give the name of Annals to his excellent Work, than that it is diſtinguiſhed by the years of the Conſuls. Otherwiſe there is no great difference as unto the matter betwixt an Hiſtory and an Annal, the ſubject of them both being matter of State; and not ſuch trivial things as Triumphs, Pageants, and ſuch like, which ſtand not with the gravity and authority of Hiſtorical Annals: betwixt which and a Diary the ſame Tacitus (ſpeaking of ſome magnificent Structures which were built that year) doth make this difference; Res illuſtres Annalibus, talia diurnis Urbis actis mandari, that matters of the greater moment were committed to Annals, and unto Diaries the Acts and Accidents of a meaner nature. 3. But Diaries, beſides this difference in point of matter, are diſtinguiſhed from Annals alſo in point of time; a Diary or Journal, as the name imports, containing the Actions of each day; of which kinde was the Chronicle called for by Ahaſuerus, in which the Actions of his Court were referred to Journals, and in the which he found the relation of the treaſon intended againſt him by his Eunuchs. And of this kinde was that of King Edward the ſixth, mentioned in the Hiſtory of his life, by Sir John Hayward. 4. Laſt of all, for Chronologies they are only bare ſupputations of times, with ſome brief touch upon the Actions therein hapning, ſuch as are thoſe of Euſebius, Funcius, Calviſius, and Helvicus; of which laſt I dare give that teſtimony which Paterculus affords to Ovid, viz. that he is perfectiſſimus in forma operis ſui; though he and all the reſt are debtors to Euſebius for the incredible pains taken by him in his excellent Chronicon. Out of theſe four, as out of the four Elements, the Quinteſſence of Hiſtory is extracted: borrowing from Annals time, from Diaries and Commentaries matter, from Chronologies conſent of time and co-etanity of Princes; and thereto adding of her own all ſuch other Ornaments in which theſe four are found defective.

That which remains is to premiſe ſomewhat of theſe ſeveral Epoches, from whence particular States, Nations and People, make their computations. Theſe have been very different in former times, according to the ſeveral occaſions took in ſeveral Countreys. The Jewes had ſeveral Epoches peculiar to themſelves alone, and one in common with their Neighbours. Thoſe which they had amongſt themſelves were firſt from the Creation of the World, or the beginning of time; Secondly, from the univerſall Deluge, which hapned A. M. 1656. Thirdly, from the Confuſion of Tongues, A. M. 1786. Fourthly, from Abrahams journey out of Chaldæa into Canaan, A. M. 2021. Fifthly, from their deliverance out of Egypt, A. M. 2453. Sixthly, from the firſt year of Jubilee, A. M. 2499. Seventhly, from the building of Solomons Temple, An. 2932. And laſtly, from the Captivity of Babylon, An. 3368. That which they had common with other Nations, was the Æra or Epoche of the Victory of the Greeks, which took beginning on the firſt Victory which Seleucus had againſt Antigonus, which was in A. M. 3637. an Accompt much uſed by the Jewes, Chaldæans, Syrians, and other Nations of the Eaſt. But the Chaldæans alſo had their own Epoche or Accompt apart, reckoning their time from the firſt year of Nabonaſſar (Salmanaſſar he is called in Scripture) which being 438. years before this of Seleucus, muſt fall in A. M. 3201. Next for the Grecians, they reckoned a long while by Olympiades, the firſt of which is placed in the year of the World, 3174. (of which more hereafter.) But this Accompt periſhing under the Conſtantinopolitans, they reckoned after by Indictions (an Accompt deviſed by Juſtinian:) every Indiction containing 15. years, the firſt beginning A. Ch. 513. which amongſt Chronologers is ſtill uſed. The Romans reckoned firſt from the foundation of their City, which was A. M. 3213. and afterwards from the ſixteenth year of Auguſtus his Empire, (being that which properly is called the Roman Æra) A. M. 3936. An Accompt uſed by the Spaniards (where it firſt began) till the reign of Pedro the fourth of Aragon, who abrogated it in his Dominions, A. Ch. 1350. followed therein by John the firſt of Caſtile; An. 1383. and then at laſt by the King of Portugal alſo, 1415. The Chriſtians generally do reckon from the Birth of CHRIST, but this they did not uſe till the year 600. following in the mean time the Accompt of the Empire, And finally the Mahometans begin their Hegira (for ſo they call the time of their Computation) from the flight of their Prophet Mahomet from Mecca, when he was driven thence by the Phylarchæ; which hapned A. Ch. 617. Of theſe we ſhall make uſe generally but of two alone, thoſe namely of the Worlds Creation, and our Saviours viours Birth; and of the building of Rome, and the flight of Mahomet, in things that do relate to those several States.

Next for Geography we will first define it, and after explicate such terms or second notions, as are not obvious to the understanding of every Reader. First for the definition of it, it is said by Ptolemie to be a description of the whole Earth, or the whole Earth imitated by writing and delineation, with all other things generally annexed unto it. Ἡ Γεωγραφία μίμησίς ἐστι διὰ γραφῆς (and not διαγραφῆς, as it is commonly, but corruply read) τοῦ καθολικοῦ μέρους τῆς γῆς μετὰ τῶν ὡς ἐπίπαν αὐτῷ συνημμένων, as his own words are. In which we look not on the Earth simply as it is an Element, for so it belongeth to Philosophy; but as it is a Spherical body proportionably composed of Earth and Water, and so it is the subject of Geography.

First for the Earth, which is the first part of this body, it is affirmed by the best Writers to be 21600. miles in compasse; which is demonstrable enough For being there are in every of the greater Circles 360. degrees, every degree being reckoned at 60. miles: let 360. be multiplied by 60. and the Product will be 21600. as before is said. So that if it were possible to make a path round about the Earth, an able Footman going constantly 24. miles a day, would compass it in 900. daies.

The Earth is divided { In respect of men, into the right hand and the left. / In respect of it self, into parts Real and Imaginary.

To Poets which turn their Faces towards the Fortunate Islands (so memorized and chanted by them) which are situated in the West; the North is the right hand, and the South the left.

To the Augures of old, and in our daies to Priests and men in holy Orders, who usually in their Sacrifices and divine Oblations, convert themselves unto the East; the South is the right hand, and the North the left.

To Astronomers, who turn their faces towards the South, because that way the motions of the Planets may be best observed; the West is the right hand, and the East the left.

Finally, to Geographers, who by reason they have so much to do with the Elevation of the Pole, do turn their faces towards the North; the East is the right hand, and the West the left.

The Real parts of the Earth are divided commonly into { Continents; / Islands.

A Continent is a great quantity of Land, not separated by any Sea from the rest of the World; as the whole Continent of Europe, Asia, Africa; or the Continents of France, Spain, Germany.

An Island is a part of Earth environed round about with some Sea or other; as the Isle of Britain, with the Ocean; the Isle of Sicilie, with the Mediterranean: and therefore in Latine it is called Insula, because it is situate in salo, as some derive it.

Touching the Continent I have nothing in general to inlarge, till we come to the particular Chorography and description of them. But for Islands (leaving the disquisition of their being, or not being before the Floud) there are four causes to which they may be thought to owe their Original. 1. An Earthquake, which works two waies towards their production: First, when by it one part of a Countrey is forcibly torn away from the other; and so Eubœa was divided from the rest of Attica; And secondly, when some vehement winde or vapour being shut up in such parts of the Earth as be under the Sea, raiseth the Earth above the Water; whereunto the Original of most of those Islands, which are far remote from any part of the continent, is probably to be referred. 2. Great Rivers at their entry into the Sea carry with them abundance of gravel, dirt, and weeds; which, if the Sea be not the more working, will in time settle to an Island. So the Corn which Tarquinius sowed in the Campus Martius, being cut down by the people, and cast into Tiber, setled together, and made the Holy Island. So the River Achelous caused the Echinades, as we shall more at large declare; and so the Island of Loanda in the Kingdome of Congo, is said to have been made out of the Sands of the Ocean, and the Mire of the great River Laanza, cast into an heap, and at last formed into an Island. 3. The Sea violently beating on some small Isthmus, weareth it through, and turneth the Peninsula into a compleat Isle. Thus was Sicilie divided from Italie, Cyprus from Syria, England from France, and Wight from the rest of England. And 4. sometimes as it eateth and worketh on some places, so it voluntarily leaveth and abandoneth others, which in some time grow to be Islands, and firm land under foot. So it is thought the Isles of Zealand have been once part of the main Sea: and Verstegan proveth it, because that the Husbandmen in tilling and manuring the ground, finde sometimes Anchors here and there fixt, but very often the bones of huge and great fishes, which could by no other accident come thither. To these kinde of Islands Pythagoras in Ovid alluding, saith,

——Vidi factas ex æquore terras,
Et procul à pelago conchæ jacuere marinæ,
Et vetus inventa est in montibus anchora summis.

Oft have I seen that earth, which once I knew
Part of the Sea; so that a man might view
Huge shels of fishes in the upland ground;
And on the Mountain tops old Anchors found.

As

As concerning the ſituation of Iſlands, whether commodious or not, this is my judgement. I finde in Machiavel, that for a City whoſe people covet no Empire but their own Towns, a barren place is better than a fruitful; becauſe in ſuch ſeats they are compelled to work and labour, by which they are freed from idleneſs, and by conſequence from riotouſneſs: But for a City whoſe inhabitants deſire to enlarge their confines, a fertile place was rather to be choſen than a ſteril, as being more able to nouriſh multitudes of people. The like I ſay of Iſlands. If a Prince deſire rather to keep than augment his Dominions, no place fitter for his abode than an Iſland; as being by it ſelf and nature ſufficiently defenſible. But if a King be minded to add continually to his Empire, an Iſland is no fit ſeat for him; becauſe partly by the uncertainty of Winds and Seas, partly by the longſomneſs of the waies, he is not ſo well able to ſupply and keep ſuch forces as he hath on the Continent. An example hereof is England, which hath even to admiration repelled the moſt puiſſant Monarch of Europe; but for the cauſes above mentioned, cannot ſhew any of her winnings on the firm land, though ſhe hath attempted and atchieved as many glorious exploits, as any Countrey in the World.

The Continent and Iſland are ſub-divided into { Peninſula. / Iſthmus. / Promontorium.

Peninſula, quaſi pene Inſula, is a tract of land, which being almoſt encompaſſed round by water, is joyned to the firm land by ſome little Iſthmus; as Peloponneſus, Taurica, and Peruana.

Iſtmus is that little narrow neck of land, which joyneth the Peninſula to the Continent; as the Straights of Dariene, in America, and of Corinth, in Greece.

Promontorium, is a high Mountain which ſhooteth it ſelf into the Sea, the outmoſt end of which is called a Foreland, or Cape; as the Cape of Good Hope in Africk, Cape Comari in India, &c.

The Imaginary parts of the Earth are ſuch which not being at all in the Earth, muſt yet be ſuppoſed to be ſo, for the better teaching and learning this Science; and are certain Circles going about the Earth, anſwerable to them in Heaven, in name.

Theſe Circles are either the { Greater, / Leſſer, } in both which there are 360 Degrees, which in the greater Circles are greater than thoſe in the leſſer; and every Degree in the greater is 60 miles.

The greater Circles are either { Immutable, as the Æquator. / Mutable, as the { Horizon. / Meridian. }

The Æquator is a great Circle going round about the Terreſtrial Globe from Eaſt to Weſt. It paſſeth through Habaſſia, Sumatra, Guiana, &c. The uſe of it is to ſhew the Latitude of any Town, Promontory, &c. Now the Latitude is the diſtance of a place South or North from the Æquator, or middle of the World; and muſt be meaſured on the Globe by the Degrees in the Meridian.

The Meridian is a great Circle rounding the earth from Pole to Pole. There are many Meridians, according to the divers places in which a man liveth; but the chief and firſt Meridian paſſeth through the Iſland St. Michael, one of the Azores. The uſe of it is to ſhew the Longitude of any place. Now the Longitude of a City, Cape, &c. is the Diſtance of it Eaſt and Weſt from the firſt Meridian, and is uſually meaſured on the Globe by the Degrees of the Æquator.

The Horizon is a great Circle, deſigning ſo great a ſpace of the earth, as a quick ſight can ken in an open field. The uſe of it is to diſcern the divers riſings and ſettings of the Stars.

The leſſer Circles either are { Noted with ſome name, as { Tropicall of { Cancer. / Capricorn. } / Polar, either { Artick. / Antartick. } } / Noted with no diſtinct name, and are the Parallels. }

The Tropick of Cancer (ſo called of the celeſtial ſign Cancer) is diſtant from the Equinoctial 23 Degrees Northward, and paſſeth through Barbary, India, China, and Nova Hiſpania.

The Tropick of Capricorn, equally diſtant from the Æquator Southward, paſſeth through Ethiopia inferior, and the midſt of Peruana. And this is to be obſerved in theſe Tropicks, that when the Sun is in the Tropick of Cancer, our daies are at the longeſt; and when he is gone back to the Tropick of Capricorn, the daies are at the ſhorteſt. The firſt they call the Summer, the laſt they call the Winter Solſtice; the firſt hapning on, or about St. Barnabies day in June; the laſt on, or about St. Lucies day in December.

The Artick Circle (ſo called for that it is correſpondent to the Conſtellation in Heaven called the Bear, in Greek Arctos) is diſtant from the Tropick of Cancer 45 Degrees, and paſſeth through Norway, Muſcovy, Tartary, &c.

The Antartick (ſo called becauſe oppoſite to the other) is as much diſtant from the Tropick of Capricorn, and paſſeth through Terra Auſtrialis Incognita. The uſe of theſe four Circles is to deſcribe the Zones.

The

The Zones are ſpaces of earth included betwixt two of the leſſer nominate Circles. They are in number five, one over-hot, two over-cold, and two temperate.

The over-hot, or Torrid Zone, is betwixt the two Tropicks, continually ſcorched with the preſence of the Sun.

The two over-cold, or Frigid Zones, are ſituate between the two Polar Circles, and the very Poles, continually wanting the neighbourhood of the Sun.

The two temperate Zones, are betwixt the Tropick of Cancer, and the Artick; and 'twixt the Tropick of Capricorn, and the Antartick Circles; enjoying an indifferency between heat and cold; ſo that the parts next the Torrid Zone are the hotter, and the parts next the Frigid Zone are the colder.

Theſe five Zones are diſpoſed according to the order of the Zones in heaven; of which thus Ovid Metamorph. 1.

Utque duæ dextra cœlum, totidemq; ſiniſtra
Parte ſecant Zonæ, quinta eſt ardentior illis;
Sic onus incluſum numero diſtinxit eodem
Cura dei, totidemq; plagæ tellure premuntur.
Quarum quæ media eſt, non eſt habitalis æſtu;
Nix tegit alta duas: totidem inter utramq; locavit,
Temperiemq; dedit, miſta cum Frigore Flamma.

And as two Zones do cut the Heavens right-ſide,
And likewiſe other two the left divide,
The midſt in heat excelling all the reſt;
Even ſo it ſeem'd to the Creator beſt,
That this our World ſhould ſo divided be,
That with the Heavens in Zones it might agree.
The midſt in heat; the outwardmoſt excell
In Snow and Ice, ſcarce fit for men to dwell.
Betwixt theſe two extremes, two more are fixt,
Where heat with cold indifferently is mixt.

Parallels, called alſo Æquidiſtants, circle the Earth from Eaſt to Weſt, aud are commonly ten Degrees aſunder: Such are the Parallels which are ſet down in our Maps and Globes. But there are another ſort of Parallels, two of which go to a Clime. Theſe are called Artificial Parallels, becauſe they ſhew the difference of the Artificial daies; and are of an unequal breadth, as we ſhall ſee in the Table following. The uſe of theſe leſſer Parallels is to ſhew the Climates.

Now a Clime, or Climate, is a ſpace of the Earth contained betwixt three Parallells, the middlemoſt whereof divideth it into two equal parts; ſerving for ſetting out the length and ſhortneſs of the daies in every Countrey. For under the Æquator the daies are of the juſt length of 12 hours; but afterwards they increaſe the length of half an hour for every Clime, till they come to the length of 24 hours, without night at all; which length attained, they increaſe no more by hours, but by weeks and moneths, till they come to the length of half a year. So that we are to reckon 24 Climes Northward, and as many Southward: Thoſe Northward known by the proper name of the place or City over which the middle Parallel of the Clime doth paſs; as Dia Meroes, Dia Syenes, &c. Thoſe on the South by the ſame names, with the condition of Anti, as Anti-Dia-Syenes, Anti-Dia-Meroes, &c. 'Tis true, the ancient Coſmographers made but ſeven Climes in all; at the moſt but nine; Nor needed they to add more, as the caſe ſtood with them; the extent of the habitable World towards each of the Poles, not being ſo fully known to them, as it is to us.

And here, becauſe thoſe Climes are not of equal breadth or extent of Latitude, but grow narrower and narrower towards each Pole; in which regard it is impoſſible to deſcribe them under any Rule; I have thought fit to add this enſuing Table, partly framed out of the Commentaries of Clavius on the works of John de Sacro Boſco, and partly out of Hues his Book, Of the uſe of the Globes. The whole divided into 7 Columns. In the firſt whereof is ſhewed what Climes are inhabited by the Amphiſcii, Periſcii, and Heteroſcii, which termes we ſhall anon expound; In the ſecond is ſet down the number of the Climes themſelves; In the third the number of the Parallels; In the fourth the length of the daies in Summer; In the fifth the diſtance of every Clime and Parallel from the Æquator; in the ſeventh the name of the Town or place, through which the middlemoſt of the three Parallels doth paſs in this manner following.

Here followeth the Table of the Climes.

A ſecond uſe of theſe Parallels and other Circles, is for diſtinction of men in their ſeveral dwellings, who are (according as they are treated of in Geography) divided in reſpect of their ſhadows into Amphiſcii, Periſcii, Heteroſcii; and in reſpect of their ſite and poſition, into Antœci, Periœci, and Antipodes.

1. Amphiſcii are ſuch as dwel between the two Tropicks; ſo called, becauſe their ſhadows are both waies: ſometimes (when the Sun is North) to the South; ſometimes (when the Sun is South) to the North.

2. Periſcii are ſuch as dwell beyond the Polar circles; ſo called, becauſe their ſhadowes are on all ſides of them.

3. Heteroſcii are ſuch as dwell in either of the two temperate Zones; ſo called, becauſe their ſhadows reach but one way; viz. in our Zone, to the North only; as in the other, to the South only.

4. Antœci are ſuch as dwell under the ſame Meridian, and the ſame Latitude or Parallel, equally diſtant from the Æquator; the one Northward, the other Southward: the daies in both places being of a length; but the Summer of the one, being the others Winter.

5. Periœci are ſuch as dwell in the ſame Parallel, on the ſame ſide of the Æquator, how diſtant ſoever they be Eaſt and Weſt: the ſeaſon of the year, and the length of daies being to both alike; but the ones midnight, being the others noon.

6. Antipodes are ſuch as dwell feet to feet, ſo as a right line drawn from the one unto the other, paſſeth from North to South, through the center of the World. Theſe are diſtant 180 degrees, which is half the compaſs of the Earth. They differ in all things, as ſeaſons of the year, length of daies, riſing and ſetting of the Sun, with the like. A matter reckoned ſo ridiculous, and impoſſible (if not ſomewhat worſe) in the former times, that Boniface Archbiſhop of Mentz hapning to ſee a Tractate written by Virgilius Biſhop of Saltzburg, touching the Antipodes; and not knowing what damnable Doctrine might be couched under that ſtrange name, made complaint firſt to the Duke of Bohemia, and after to Pope Zachary, An. 745. by whom the poor Biſhop (unfortunate only in being learned in ſuch a time of ignorance) was condemned of Hereſie. But Boniface might the rather be excuſed, in regard that many of his betters fell alſo on the ſelf-ſame error. For venerable Bede, a man whoſe books Archb. Boniface was not worthy to carry, eſteemeth the opinion touching the Antipodes, to be no better than a Fable; Neq; enim Antipodarum ullatenus eſt fabulis accommodandus aſſenſus, in his Book de Ratione temporum, cap. 32. And yet the marvel is the leſs, conſidering that he lived in the darker times of the Church, when the ſtate of learning was in its declination; when S. Auguſtine and Lactantius, and ſome others of the Ancient Writers, who lived when learning was at the very height, condemn this point of the Antipodes for an incredible ridiculous Fable: whoſe words I could put down at large, did I think it neceſſary. So that we of theſe Ages have very good cauſe (to uſe the words of the late L. Verulam) to congratulate the preſent times, in that the World in theſe our daies, have through-lights made in it after a wonderful manner; whereby we clearly ſee thoſe things, which either were unknown, or but blindly gueſſed at by the Antients.

But to proceed, the ſecond part of the Terreſtrial Globe is the Water, which making but one Globe with the Earth, is yet higher than it. This appears, firſt, becauſe it is a body not ſo heavie; Secondly, it is obſerved by Saylors that their ſhips move faſter to the ſhore than from it; whereof no reaſon can be given but the height of the water above the land. Thirdly, to ſuch as ſtand on the ſhore, the Sea ſeems to ſwell into the form of a round hill, till it puts a bound upon our ſight. Now that the Sea hovering thus over and above the Earth, doth not over-whelm it, muſt be aſcribed only to his Power and Providence, who hath made the Waters to ſtand on an heap, who hath ſet them a bound that they ſhould not paſs, nor turn again to cover the Earth. The other affections and properties of the Sea, as motion, ſaltneſs, and the like, I willingly omit, as belonging rather to Philoſophers, than this preſent Argument.

The Sea or Water is divided into { 1. Oceanus. 2. Mare. 3. Fretum. / 4. Sinus. 5. Lacus. 6. Flumina.

Of which and other Waters thus ſaid Ovid in his Metamorphoſis:

Juſſit, & ambita circundare littora terra.
Addidit & Fontes, & Stagna immenſa, Lacuſq;
Fluminaq; obliquis cinxit declivia ripis, &c.

Which may be Engliſhed to this purpoſe:

He ſpread the Seas, which then he did command
To ſwell with winds, and compaſs round the Land:
To thoſe he adds Springs, Ponds, and Lakes immenſe,
And Rivers which their winding Borders fence.
Of theſe not few Earth's thirſty jaws devour,
The reſt their ſtreams into the Ocean pour;
When in that liquid Plain with freer Wave,
The foamie Cliffs in ſtead of Banks they lave.

And first Oceanus, the Ocean, is that general Collection of all waters, which encompasseth the Earth on every side. A point which Ovid hath determined right enough, but laugh't at by Herodotus in the former times; who counted it a grosse absurdity for any man to relate or write, that the Earth was round, or encompassed about with the main Ocean. But modern Navigations have found that to be true, which he held ridiculous; and which the most learned in those times knew rather by conjecture, than by demonstration. Nor were those Ages so acquainted with those ebbs and flowings of the Ocean, and all those other Seas and Rivers which have intercourse with it, as the meanest Saylor at the present. The natural causes of the which seeming so full of difficulty to the best of the Antients, Experience hath taught us to ascribe wholly to the Moon; at whose Full and Prime the Tides are ever highest, and the Sea most furious. For as soon as the Moon cometh forth from under our Horizon, the Sea beginneth to swell, and floweth towards the East, (as it were to wait upon her, or bear her company) till she come unto the height of our Meridian: after which till her setting or Western fall, the Sea abateth or decreaseth; which we call the Ebb. And when she passeth out of our Horizon towards the Antipodes, the Ocean begins to swell till the height of Midnight, and coming towards our Hemisphere doth again abate. In brief, from the New Moon till the first quarter the Sea decreaseth, from the first quarter to the full it is said to spring: from the full to the last quarter it is said to nepe; and from the last quarter to the prime it springs again. As for the uncertainty of the Tides, varying every day, it is not so perplexed and intricate, but that they which live on the Banks or Shores thereof, know well when to look for it; the next daies Tide coming for the most part, one hour 10 minutes after the time it hapned on the day fore-going.

2. Mare, the Sea, is a part of the main Ocean, to which we cannot come but through some Fretum or Straight; as Mare Mediterraneum. And it takes name, First, either from the adjacent shore, as Mare Adriaticum, from the City of Adria; Mare Tyrrhenum, from the Coast of Tuscanie; Or, Secondly, from the first Discoverer, as Mare Magellanicum, from Magellanus who first found it; Or, Thirdly, from some remarkable Accident, as Mare Icarium, from the drowning of Icarus, the son of Dædalus.

3. Fretum, a Straight, is a part of the Ocean, penned within narrow bounds, and opening a way into some Sea, or out of some Sea into the Ocean; as the Straight of Hellespont, Gibralter, Fretum Davies, &c.

4. Sinus, a Creek or Bay, is a Sea contained within a crooked or circling shore, wherewith it is almost environed; as Sinus Persicus, Corinthiacus, &c. and this is sometimes called a Gulf, as the Gulf of Lepanto.

5. Lacus, a Lake, is a great body or collection of waters, which hath no visible inrercourse with the Sea, or influx into it; as the Lake of Thrasymene in Italy, the Lacus Asphaltites, or the Dead Sea in the Land of Canaan. And of this kinde properly is the Mare Caspium, though by reason of the greatness of it, it is called a Sea.

6. Flumina, or Fluvius, is a watercourse continually running, whereby it differeth from Stagnum, or a standing Pool, issuing from some Spring or Lake, and emptying it self into some part of the Sea, or some other great River; the mouth or out-let of which is called Ostium: Tiberinaq; longe Ostia, as the Poet hath it. These are conceived in the Earth, and derive both their birth and continual sustenance from the Air; which piercing the open chinks or Chasma's of the Earth, and congealed by the extreme cold of that Element, dissolves into water (as we see the Air in winter-nights to be melted into a pearly dew, sticking on our glasse-windowes): and being grown to some quantity, will (like Annibal in the Alpes) either finde a way, or make a way, to vent its superfluity. Which beginning is seconded by the Ocean, which running through the hidden passages of the Earth, joyneth it self with this aerial vapour, and continueth the begun current. This Sea-water (though in it self of a salt and brackish savour, yet) passing through divers windings and turnings of the Earth, is deprived of all unpleasantness; and by how much the spring-heads of Rivers are remote from the Sea, by so much usually are their waters affected with a delightful relish. Rivers having thus entred themselves into a good course, are never without the assistance of neighbouring springs and waters; by whose addition they augment their streams, till they dischannel themselves into the Sea. Now there is of Rivers a treble use. First, that out of them drink may be afforded to man and beast; Secondly, that running through the Earth, as bloud through the body, by interlacing it, and sometimes overwhelming it, it might make the Earth able to produce those fruits which are necessary for the life of man. The last use of Rivers is, easiness and speediness of conduct; and hereto are required four conditions. First the depth, because deep waters sustain the bigger burdens, and on them navigation is more safe. Secondly, pleasantness, whereby the passage is easie both with the stream and against it: whereas in Rivers of a violent current, or such as fall down by great locks or Cataracts, the sayling or rowing up the water is as dangerous, as laborious. Thirdly, the thickness of the water; for by how much the more slimy and gross a water is, by so much can it carry the heavier burdens. So Tiber, a River of more fame than depth, or breadth, is better for navigation, by reason of its fatness, than the pure and thin waters of the large and excellent River Nilus. Fourthly, the broadness of the channel, that ships and other vessels may conveniently winde and turn, and give way to each other. Some of the old Philosophers reputed this conduct so dangerous, that one of them being asked whether he thought the living or the dead were the greater number, would not declare himself, because he knew not in which rank to place such as were at Sea. And Cato Major thought that men never committed greater folly in their lives, than in venturing to go by water, when they might have gone by land. I am none of that Sect, yet I cannot but hold with him that said, Dulcissima est ambulatio prope aquas, navigatio juxta terram.

The chief Rivers of Europe, are Danubius and the Rhene; of Africa, Nilus, and Niger; of Asia, Ganges, and Euphrates; of America, Orenoque, and Maragnan. Of which and others, more in its proper place.

Thus have we gone over these particulars both of Earth and Water, which are considerable in Geographie, and come within the compass of those Annexaries of each, which Ptolemy calleth τὰ συνημμένα: And having so done, may discover where the difference lieth between Geographie and Chorographie, which to some men, not rightly looking into the nature of both, seem to be the same. For howsoever a Chorographer doth describe a Countrey by the bounds, rivers, hils, and most notable Cities; yet it is still but the description of some place or Countrey, and not of the whole Earth universally, which is the proper work of a Geographer. So that Chorographie differeth from Geographie as a part from the whole: that being as Ptolemy doth very handsomely expres it, like the painting of an eye or an ear, or some other member; this, as the picturing of the head, or whole body of Man. But Geographie in its full latitude comprehendeth not Chorographie only, but Topographie and Hydrographie also. Of these the last is the delineation of the Sea by its several names, Ports, Promontories, Creeks and other affections; as also of great Lakes and Rivers: which is most necessary for the use of Mariners, and is best done by Petrus de Medina, Peter Nonnius in his Regulæ Artis Navigandi, and Johannes Aurigarius in his Speculum Nauticum; the chief writers in the Art of Pilotism.

2. Topographie is the description of some particular place or City; of which kinde was the Book of Stephanus περὶ πόλεων, or De Urbibus, among the Antients; and the Theatrum Urbium written by Bruinus in these later times; Stowes Book of the Survey of London, the French Antiquities de Paris, and such as these. And of this kinde is the description of the Vale of Tempe, in the greater Ortelius; and those of the Elysian fields, the gardens of Alcinous, and the Hesperides in the antient Poets.

3. Chorographie (as before was said) is the exact description of some Kingdome, Countrey, or particular Province of the same; unless this last may fall more properly under the notion of Topographie. Of this kinde the description of the several estates of Greece written by by Pausanias, is of most use and reputation of all the Ancients: as that of Camden Clarenceux, for the Isle of Britain; of Lewis Guicciardine, for the Low Countreys; Leander for Italie, &c. are amongst the Moderns.

4. Geographie finally is an aggregate of all these together, borrowing from Hydrographie the description of Seas and Waters; From Topographie, that of Towns, Cities, and particular places; and from Chorographie, the delineations of Regions, Provinces, and Kingdomes: which brought into a body, make up that portraiture or Picture of the whole Earth, and every considerable part thereof, in writing; which, according to Ptolemies definition before mentioned, is properly and truly called Geographie. In the advancement of which studies, those which have took most pains, with the greatest benefit to Posterity, are the said Ptolemie, Plinie, and Strabo for the elder times; Mercator, Maginus, and Ortelius for the later Ages. Of which the two first lived in the times of Antonius Pius, the Roman Emperour, Anno Chr. 141. or hereabouts; the other in the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, the unworthy Successor of Augustus: the three last flourishing in the daies of our Fathers, about some 80 years ago.

Thus have I briefly summed up those general Præcognita, which I conceive are necessary to the knowledge and understanding as well of Historie as of Geographie. Out of which two compounded and intermixt, ariseth that universal Comprehension of Natural and Civil story, which by a proper and distinct name may be termed Cosmographie. And this may well be reckoned amongst mixed stories; for it hath from Natural History or Geographie, the Regions themselves, together with their Sites, and several Commodities; from Civil History, Habitations, Governments, and Manners; and from the Mathematicks, the Climates and Configurations of the Heavens, under which the Coasts and Quarters of the World do lie. Of the Utility and excellency of which study I need say no more, than what hath been already spoken of the several parts, whereof this is only the Result: desiring pardon of the Reader, that I have christened these imperfect and unworthy Papers by so noble a name; which I desire they may deserve, though I fear they will not. However I will give the venture, and make as speedy and as profitable a discovery, as the times enable me, of the whole World, and the most observable things therein; according to the best light which the reading of Histories and Geographical discourses hath supplied me with; beseeching him who made the World, and ordereth all the Governments and Affairs thereof as to him seems best, to bless me in the undertaking; and furnish me with fit Abilities both of strength and judgement to go through with it. Ipse enim est qui operatur in nobis & velle & perficere; as the Scripture hath it: And so on in Gods name.

OF THE WORLD,

EUROPE.

OF the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantations of the ſame by the ſons of Men, ſufficient hath been ſpoken already. We are to look upon it now, as perfected and peopled in all parts thereof, but all thoſe parts united into one Compoſitum; called therefore by the Grecians Τὰ Πᾶν, & Τὸ Ὅλον, becauſe the Summa totalis, and general comprehenſion of all things exiſtent. In which reſpect called by the Latins Univerſum, a name of multitude, but of a multitude united, (Univerſi qui in uno loco verſi, ſay the old Grammarians.) The great body of the World, like the body of Man, though it have many parts and members, is but one body only. A body of ſo perfect and exact a form, of ſo compleat a Symmetrie in reſpect of the particular parts, and all thoſe parts ſo beautified and adorned by the God of Nature; that from the elegancy and beauties of it, it was called Κόσμος by the Grecians, and Mundus by the Latins; both names declaring the Compoſure of it to be full of Ornament; and all thoſe Ornaments conducting mankinde to the knowledge of God. For (as the Chriſtian Advocate reaſoneth very ſtrongly,) As he which comes into an houſe, and ſeeth all things in it ordered in a beautiful and comely order, utriſq; præeſſe crederet Dominum, &c. muſt needs conceive, both that the houſe had ſome wiſe Lord and Maſter who had ſo contrived it, and that ſuch Lord and Maſter of it was of more worth and excellency than the houſe and furniture: So (ſaith he) whoſoever doth obſerve the moſt eminent beauties of the Heaven and Earth, muſt needs conceive there is ſome great and more glorious power who did firſt create it; diſpoſing of all things therein in ſuch excellent manner.

This contemplation, together with the notions of a Deity, which naturally are ingraffed in the ſoul of man; hath trained up all men in the practiſe of ſome Religion, though few (comparatively) ſo happy as to be practiſed in the true. For though the knowledge and worſhip of the true God, by reaſon of ſome acceſſions in America, and the Indies, be more generally diffuſed than in former times; yet is the leaſt part of the World poſſeſſed by them who make profeſſion of that Worſhip. For dividing the whole World into 30 parts, it hath been found by ſuch as have laboured in this ſearch, that 19 of them are inhabited by Idolaters, who either know no God at all, or worſhip ſtocks and ſtones for Gods, even the work of mens hands. Of the 11 parts which are remaining, ſix are poſſeſſed by Jews, Turks, and Saracens; who though they have the knowledge of the God that made them, yet abnegating, or not worſhipping the Lord that bought them, they have no part nor portion in the true Religion. Then for the five which are behind, two are conceived to be of the Greek Communion; the other three being being divided betwixt those of the Church of Rome; and such as otherwise differing in some opinions, pass generally by the name of Protestant, or reformed Churches. Which as it sheweth how small a portion of the World is possessed by Christians, who only (though not all of them) have reason to pretend to the true Religion: So doth it shew (I note this only by the way) how falsly those of Rome make Multitude of Professors to be a sign of the True Church; and then conceive themselves to be such a multitude, as corresponds unto that sign. Faulty alike both in the Position and the Application. For if the multitude of Professors be a sign of the Church, the true Church should be found rather amongst the Heathens or Mahumetans, than amongst the Christians: or if they do restrain their meaning (as I hope they do) to those who make profession of the Christian faith; those of the Greek Communion, possessing two whole parts of five, will be found more numerous than the members of the Church of Rome, though possibly of less esteem in the eye of the World. So infinitely vain was that Brag of Bellarmine (though otherwise more modest than the rest the Jesuits) affirming positively and expresly, Romanam Ecclesiam universum plane orbem possidere; i. e. That the Church of Rome is fully of as large a latitude as the World it self. This I have noted by the way, intending to take a more special notice of the state of Religion in the several provinces of the World, to which now I hasten; premising first this scheme of those several parts, into which it doth now stand divided.

The World is divided into two parts.
- Unknown, or not fully discovered; and is divided commonly into Borealis and Australis: the last taking up the whole Southern Continent; the other lying on the North of Europe and America; whereof we shall say somewhat at the end of this Work.
- Known, either
  - Anciently, as
    - Europe.
    - Asia.
    - Africa.
  - Lately, as America.

Europe is joyned to Asia, by that space of earth which is between the heads of Tanais and Duina; Asia is joyned to Africk, by the Egyptian Isthmus; America is divided (as most conjecture) from all of them. Europe is separated from Asia, by a line drawn from the Bay of St. Nicolas, to the head of Tanais, from thence by that River it self all the length of his course; then by Palus Mæotis, the Euxine Sea, the Thracian Bosphorus, the Propontis, the Hellespont, and the Ægean. Asia is parted from Africk by the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia: and Africa from Europe by the Mediterranean. Africa is greater than Europe, Asia than Africk, and America than Asia.

They which have entertained a fancy of resembling every Countrey to things more obvious to the sight and understanding, have likened Europe to a Dragon; the head of which they make to be Spain; the two wings Italy, and Denmark. In like manner they have been curiously impertinent, in resembling France, to a Lozenge or Rhomboides; Belgium, to a Lion; Britain, to an Ax; Ireland, to an Egge; Peloponnesus, to a Plantane leaf; Spain, to an Oxe hide spread on the ground; Italy (which indeed holdeth best proportion) to a mans Leg; with divers the like Phantasms of a capricious brain: these Countreys no more resembling them, than pictures made when painting was in her infancy; under which they were fain to write, This is a Lion, and this is a Whale, for fear the spectators might have taken one for a Cock, and the other for a Cat.

EUROPE, though the least (as being in length but 2800, in breadth but 1200 miles) is yet of most renown amongst us. First, because of the temperature of the Air, and fertility of the soyl; Secondly, from the study of Arts, both ingenuous and mechanical; Thirdly, because of the Roman and Greek Monarchies; Fourthly, from the purity and sincerity of the Christian Faith; Fifthly, because we dwell in it, and so first place it.

EUROPE is generally said to be so called from Europa, the daughter of Agenor, King of the Phœnicians, brought thence by Jupiter (as the Poets feign) in the shape of a Bull; or as some Histories say, by a Cretan Captain named Taurus: as others, in a ship whose beak had the portraiture of a Bull upon it. But why the bringing of that Lady into the Isle of Crete, should give denomination to the whole Continent of Europe, whereof that Island is so inconsiderable and so small a part, I must confess I see no reason. Goropius Becanus, who holds the high Dutch to be the primitive language, which was spoke in Paradise, and loves to fetch all names from thence; not thinking it convenient, that Europe being first inhabited by Gomerians or Cimbrians, should be beholding to the Grecians for its name: will have it called Europe, quasi Ver-hop, by the transposition of the two last letters; Ver signifying excellent, and Hop a multitude (whence we use to say, as thick as Hops) because Europe contains a multitude of excellent people. And on the other side, Bochartus, a French Writer, loving as much to bring all names from the Phœnician or Punick tongue; will have it called Europe, from Ur-appa, which signifieth in that language, a beautiful Countenance; because the Europæans much excell'd the Africans in whiteness of skin, and clearness of complexion. But in my minde Herodotus hath best determined of the controversie, who telleth us plainly, Ὁκόθεν τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, ὅτι ἔσῃς ἦν ὁ δίμενος, &c. That it is utterly unknown, both whence it had the name of Europe, and who first called it so. And yet considering there is a Province in Thrace called Europe, (whereof more hereafter) why might not the Asiaticks give the name of Europe to this part of the World, according to the name of that Province which lay neerest to them; as the Romans did the name of Africk to the other part of the World, after the name of that particular Province or part thereof, which they first brought under their obedience?

Or

Or as the Europæans gave the name of Asia, to the greatest of the three known parts of the World; which properly and originally belonged unto Asia Minor (as it since was called;) or rather to those parts thereof which lay next to Greece; as shall be shewn hereafter in convenient place.

The first inhabitants of Europe, as hath been shewn in part already, and shall be shewn more fully in its proper place, were the sons of Japhet; amongst whom, as the Scripture telleth us, the Isles of the Gentiles were divided, Gen. 10. v. 5. which includes all the Continent of Europe and the Isles adjoyning. For besides that it is compassed about with the Cyclades and other Isles in the Seas of Greece, together with the Isles of Candie, Sicilie, Sardinia, Corsica, the Isles of Britain and Zealand, with their young ones adjacent; Europe it self was formerly taken for an Island, as being invironed round with water, saving where it is joyned on the North-East to Asia the great, which very few of the Ancients were acquainted with. And what are the great Countreys of Anatolia, Greece, Spain, and Italy, all which did fall to the posterity of Japhet, but so many Peninsula's or Demy-Islands invironed almost round with one Sea or other? Nor was the name and memory of Japhet so much forgotten by the Children which descended of him; but that the Greeks, who were the first of their Europæan Plantations, retained it a long time in their Iapetus, whom they make to be the son of Cœlum and Terra, and the father of the wise Prometheus, whom Ovid therefore calleth satus Iapeto, in the first Book of his Metamorphosis. So that we see how punctually the first part of Gods blessing was fulfilled upon him; which was, that he would inlarge the borders of Japhet, Gen. 9. 27. The second part thereof, that he should dwell in the Tents of Sem, though it was long before it came to the accomplishment, yet it came at last; and that both in the literal and mystical sense. First in the literal, when the posterity of Japhet, both Greeks and Romans, made themselves Masters of Judæa or the Land of Canaan, and the Eastern parts, promised to and possessed by the seed of Sem: Next in the mystical, when God was pleased to break down the partition-wall, and to incorporate the Gentiles of the house of Japhet, into the body of the Church; which for a long time was restrained to the Line of Sem.

Europe may be considered as it stands divided into the Continent and the Islands: the Continent lying all together; the Islands as they are dispersed in the Greek, Ægean, Cretan and Ionian Seas, the Adriatick and the Mediterranean, and in the British and Northern Ocean. But in this work we shall discover them, and discourse of them in this following order, dividing Europe into 1. Italy, 2. the Alpes, 3. France, 4. Spain, 5. Britain, 6. Belgium, 7. Germany, 8. Denmark, 9. Swethland, 10. Russia, 11. Poland, 12. Hungary, 13. Sclavonia, 14. Dacia, and 15. Greece; and speaking of the several Islands, as they relate to some or other of these greater Countreys.

In all which Countreys and Islands belonging to them, besides the Latine Tongue which is now rather Scholastical, than National; and besides the Italian, French, and Spanish, being but as so many corruptions of the Latine: and besides the English which is a Compound of Dutch, Latine, and French; there are in all 14 Mother-Tongues, which owe nothing at all to the Roman; that is to say, 1. Irish, spoken in Ireland, and the West of Scotland; 2. British, or Welch, in Wales, and some parts of Cornwall; 3. Cantabrian, or Basquish, in Bascay, about the Pyrenæan Hils, and near to the Cantabrian Ocean; 4. Arabick, in the Mountains of Granada, called Alpuxarras; 5. Finniek, in Finland and Lapland, Provinces of the Crown of Sweden; 6. Dutch, (though with different Dialects) in Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, Swethland; 7. Cauchian, which the East Friezlanders (or Cauchi) speak amongst themselves, though to strangers they speak the Common Dutch; 8. Sclavonish, in Sclavonia, Poland, Hungary, and almost all the parts of the Turkish Empire; 9. Illyrian, on the East side of Istria, and the Isle of Veggia; 10. Greek, in most provinces and Isles of Greece, by the Greeks themselves; 11. Hungarian, and 12. Epirotique, in the mountainous places of those Countreys; 13. Jazygian, on the North side of Hungary, betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus; and 14. Tartarian, in the Taurica Chersonesus, and other Europæan parts of that barbarous people. And this shall serve for Europe in the general notion. Descend we now to the particular Kingdomes, Regions, and Islands of it; beginning first of all with Italie, contrary to the usage of most Geographers; who commonly begin with Spain, or Ireland, as being the furthest Countreys Westward, and consequently neerest to the first Meridian, from whence the Longitude was reckoned. Which we shall do by reason of that great influence which the Romans had in most parts of Europe, and many parts of the World besides, in matters as well Civil as Ecclesiastical; which much depended on the power of that Empire formerly, and on the usurpations of that Church in the later dayes.

ITALIE once the Empreſſe of the greateſt part of the (then known) World, is compaſſed with the Adriatick, Ionian, and Tyrrhenian Seas, except it be towards France and Germany, from which it is parted by the Alpes; ſo that it is in a manner a Peninſula, or Demy-Iſland. But more particularly, it hath on the Eaſt, the lower part of the Adriatick, and the Ionian Sea, by which it is divided from Greece; on the Weſt the River Varus, and ſome part of the Alpes, by which it is parted from France; on the North, in ſome parts the Alpes which divide it from Germany; and on the other parts the Adriatick, which divides it from Dalmatia; and on the South the Tyrrhenian or Tuſcan Seas, by which it is ſeparated from the main land of Africa.

It containeth in length from Auguſta Prætoria (now called Aoſt) at the foot of the Alpes, unto Otranto in the moſt Eaſtern point of the Kingdome of Naples, 1020. miles: in breadth from the River Varo, which parts it from Province, to the mouth of the River Arſia in Friuli, where it is broadeſt, 410. miles; about Otranto where it is narroweſt, not above 25. miles; and in the middle parts from the mouth of Peſcara in the Adriatick or Upper Sea, to the mouth of Tiber in the Tuſcan or Lower Sea, 126. miles. The whole compaſſe by Sea, reckoning in the windings and turnings of the ſhore, comes to 3038. miles; which added to the 410. miles which it hath by Land, make up in all 3448. miles. But if the coaſt on each ſide be reckoned by a ſtraight Line, then it falls very ſhort of this proportion, amounting in the totall, as Caſtaldo computes it, to no more then 2550. miles. The whole Countrey lyeth under the fifth and ſixth Climates of the Northern temperate Zone, which it wholly taketh up: ſo that the longeſt day in the moſt Northern parts is 15. hours, and three fift parts of an hour; the longeſt in the Southern parts, falling ſhort a full hour and no more of that length.

But theſe dimenſions muſt be underſtood of Italy in the preſent latitude, and extent thereof, and not as it was called and counted of in the times of the Romans, neither in the growth nor flouriſhing fortunes of that State: the bounds of Italy on the Weſt, and North-weſtern parts being then the River Rubicon, which runneth into the Adriatick, not far from Ravenna, and the River Arno, which runneth into the Tyrrhenian Seas, by the Port of Ligorn. All that lay Weſt-wards towards the Alpes, as it was poſſeſſed by the Gauls, ſo had it alſo the name of Gallia, and for diſtinctions ſake, of Gallia Ciſ-Alpina, and Togata, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Lombardy. And it continued, (though a Province of the Roman Empire) diſtinct from Italie, untill the Empire of Auguſtus; who dividing Italie for the better Government thereof into eleven Provinces or Regions, divided Gallia Ciſalpina into ſeverall parts, (whereof more anon) and reckoned them as Provinces or Members of the body of Italie.

The names hereof ſo bounded as before, are ſaid to have been very many, according to the ſeverall Nations which were antiently of moſt power and autority in it; or to the ſeverall fancies of the Name-giver: whereof ſome being the names only of particular Provinces, were by a Metonymie, taken for and applyed to the whole. Of this laſt ſort, to omit others of leſſe note, were Latium, and Auſonia; the Auſones being a people dwelling about Cales, a town of Campania; and Latium, that particular Province which lyeth on the Eaſt of Tiber, ſo called, as moſt Writers are of opinion, à latendo, from hiding, becauſe Saturn being driven from Crete by Jupiter, hic latebat abditus, did here live concealed;

Malnit, his quoniam latuiſſet tutus in oris, as the Poet hath it.

Nor was this Virgils fancy only, but a Tradition generally followed and allowed of by the greateſt Writers, as by Eutropius, and Herodian, and by Minutius Felix alſo: though Varro pretending to more than ordinary knowledge in Antiquity, would have it called Latium, quod lateat inter præcipitia Alpium & Apennini, as Servius in his notes on Virgil, becauſe it lyeth hidden (as it were) under the præcipices of the Alpes and Apeninne hills; which cannot poſſibly be ſaid of Italy properly and antiently ſo called, no part whereof came neer the Alpes. The more generall names of the whole Countrey, were, 1. Heſperia, from Heſperus the ſonne of Atlas, as the Poets ſay, or rather as Macrobius is of opinion, from Heſperus the Evening Starre, as being ſeated Weſtward in regard of Greece. 2. Oenotria, either from the abundance and excellency of the wines, wine being called οἶνος by the Grecians; or as moſt think, from Oenotrius an Arcadian King, one of the firſt planters of the Countrey: And 3. Italia, the name at firſt of that part of this Continent which was after called Calabria; ſhut up firſt between Golfo de Chilaci (called antiently Sinus Scylleticus) on the South; and Sinus Lameticus part of the Bay or Golf of Tarentum, on the ſouth ſide of it. For ſo ſaith Ariſtotle in the ſeventh Book of his Politicks, cap. 10. Τὴν ἀκτὴν ταύτην τῆς Εὐρώπης Ιταλίαν τὔνομα λαβεῖν, &c. That is to ſay, That part of Europe which lyeth between the Bay Scylleticus and the Bay Lameticus, took the name of Italie, the Golfs being diſtant from each other about half a dayes journey. And this Tradition he received (as he there affirmeth) from the beſt Antiquaries of that Countrey. The like occurres in Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, out of Antiochus Syracuſanus a more antient Author: the like in Strabo, lib. 6. So named from Italus a chief Commander of ſome Nations who firſt ſetled here, and by degrees communicated to the reſt of this Continent. Of theſe three laſt, thus the Poet Virgil.

Eſt locus, Heſperiam Graii cognomine dicunt,
Terra antiqua, potens armis, atq; ubere glebæ,
Oenotrii coluere viri; nunc Fama, minores
Italiam dixiſſe, ducis de nomine, Gentem.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words.

That which the Greeks Heſperia call'd, a place Great both in Arms and Wealth, firſt planted was
By the Oenotrians: ſince, if Fame not lie,
Was from their Chieftains name call'd Italie.

Who and from whence this Italus was, we ſhall ſee ere long. Mean time we will take notice of the concent or harmony, which is betwixt Ariſtotle and this Poet: it being ſaid by Ariſtotle in the ſeventh of his Politicks, cap. 10. that Italus having taught the Oenotrians the arts of Husbandry, who before were wandring Shepheards, only he cauſed them by his own name to be called Italians. Let us next take a view of thoſe honourary Attributes which have been given unto this Countrey, ſo denominated from him: by Æthicus called Regina Mundi, the Queen or Empreſſe of the World; By Mamertinus one of the old Panegyriſts, Gentium Dominam, the Miſtreſſe of the Nations; by others, Paradiſus Mundi, the terreſtriall Paradiſe. But what need more be ſaid than is ſpoken by Pliny, who hath adorned Italy with this following Panegyrick? Italia terrarum omnium alumna, eadem & parens, numine Deûm electa quæ Cœlum ipſum clarius faceret, ſparſa congregaret imperia, ritus molliret, tot populorum diſcordes linguas ſermonis commercio ad colloquia diſtraheret, & humanitati hominem daret. Italy (ſaith he) the Parent, and withall the Foſter-child of all other Nations, was elected by the Providence of the Gods, to make (if poſſible) the very Heavens themſelves more famous; to gather the ſcattered Empires of the World into one body, to temper the barbarous Rites of uncivilized people, to unite the diſagreeing languages of ſo many men by the benefit of one common tongue; and in a word, to reſtore man to his humanity. A very high Encomion doubtleſſe, and yet not much more than the place deſerves, with reference to the times when the Author lived.

The people antiently, (and to this day they ſtill partake ſomewhat of thoſe qualities) were wary of behaviour, ſparing of expence, and moſt greedy of glory, according unto that of Tully, Semper appetentes gloriæ præter cæteras nationes ſunt Romani: by which he doth not mean thoſe only who lived within the walls of the City of Rome, but alſo their Italian neighbours and aſſociates, Romans by priviledge and freedome, though not by birth. They have twice given the Law to the faireſt, and moſt puiſſant parts of the World; once by their Valour, when the greateſt part of the (then known) World was brought under the obedience of the State of Rome, the ſtanding body of whoſe Armies was principally compounded of Italian bands: And ſecondly, by their Wit, by which they have ſubdued a great part of Chriſtendome, to the obedience of the Pope and Court of Rome, the ſtanding body of whoſe Counſell (though he have Miniſters of all tempers and nations) do ſpecially conſiſt of Italian Heads. In former times here lived the renowned Captains, Camillus the Sword, and Fabius Maximus the Buckler of Rome; the two Scipioes, one of which ſubdued Africk, and the other Aſia; Pompey the great, who extended the Roman Empire Eaſtwards to the banks of Euphrates; Cæſar, the greater of the two enlarging it Weſtward to the Britiſh, and the Belgick Ocean; beſides infinite others of leſſe note in reſpect of theſe, though moſt deſerving in themſelves. Here flouriſhed alſo the famous Orators, Cicero, Hortenſius, and Antonius; the renowned Hiſtorians, Livy, Tacitus, and Saluſtius; the memorable Poets, Virgil, Ovid, Catullus, Tibullus, and Propertius; Plautus and Terence the Comedians; the Satyriſts, Horace, Juvenal, and Perſius. So equally were they favoured both by Mars and the Muſes, that it is not eaſie to determine whether they were moſt eminent in Arts or Arms. What men of ſpeciall eminence it hath ſince produced, we ſhall ſee hereafter, when we are come to take a view of Italy as it ſtands at preſent; and to that place we ſhall defer our Obſervations of the Air, and diſpoſition of the ſoyl, with ſuch other particulars as have received little or no alteration in the change of times.

Ita-

Italy was antiently divided, as moſt Countreys elſe, into Tribes and Nations, as the Latines, Sabines, Tuſcans, Samnites, Campans, Picentini, Piceni, Ligures, Tarentini, Lucani, and others of inferior note; whom we ſhall meet with in the deſcription of thoſe ſeverall States, into which it doth now ſtand divided. But all thoſe Nations being ſeverally vanquiſhed by the Roman puiſſance, and made up into one body, whereof Rome was the head; it pleaſed Auguſtus to divide it into eleven Regions, as before was ſaid, that is to ſay, Liguria, Hetruria, Latium, Campania, Umbria, Samnium, Picenum, Gallia, Italia Tranſpadana, Venetia, and Hiſtria. In the time of the Emperor Antoninus, the Provinces of Italy were encreaſed to ſixteen, the bounds of the former Regions being ſomewhat altered; and the three Iſles of Sicily, Corſica, and Sardinia, with the two Rhætias, firſt and ſecond, added to the number. But this diſtribution alſo received ſome change in the time of Conſtantine the Great; who altering both the names and bounds of the former Provinces, and adding one more to them, made ſeventeen in all, that is to ſay, Tuſcia and Umbria, 2 Picenum Suburbicarium, 3 Campania, 4 Apulia and Calabria, 5 Valeria, 6 Samnium, 7. Lucania and the Brutii, 8. Sicily, 9. Corſica, and 10. Sardinia, which made up the præfecture of the City of Rome. 11. Flaminia and Picenum Annonarium, 12. Venetiæ, 13. Æmylia, 14. Liguria, 15. Alpes Cottiæ, 16. Rhætia prima, and 17. Rhætia ſecunda, which made up the Dioceſe of Italy, properly and eſpecially ſo called, whereof Millain was firſt the Metropolitan City, Aquileia afterwards.

The Language heretofore was divers, according to the ſeverall Provinces and people of it. In Apulia, they uſed the Meſſapian tongue; in that which is now called Calabria, they ſpake the Greek; in Hetruria, they uſed the Tuſcan; and the Latin in Latium: which laſt ſo altered in ſhort time, by reaſon of the commerce they had with the conquered Nations, that the Articles of the Peace made between the Romans and Carthaginians, at the expulſion of the Tarquins, could not be underſtood (as Polybius ſaith) by the beſt Antiquaries of his time. And yet the time between the making of thoſe Articles, and the time of Polybius, who was contemporary with Scipio Africanus, paſſed not above 300 years. That the Latin tongue was afterwards at any time ſpoke generally in all parts of the Roman Empire, or of Italy it ſelf, as I ſee ſome hold, I can by no means be perſwaded; it being by ſpeciall favour granted to the Cumans, dwelling but an hundred miles from the walls of Rome, that they ſhould uſe the Roman language: which had been a meer mockery, and no mark of favour at all, if the Italian people dwelling out of Latium had uſed it formerly. And yet this hapned not above 140 years before the times of the Emperors, at what time the Romans were Lords of Italy, Sicily, Sardinia, Corſica, and great part of Spain. It's true, the Latin tongue in ſucceeding times came to be underſtood in moſt parts of Italy, by reaſon of the Roman Colonies which were planted amongſt them (being in all no fewer than 150) and their continuall reſort to Rome on their ſeverall buſineſſes: it being a great point of the Roman State, not only to have their Laws written, and judgement pronounced by the Prætors for the ſeverall Provinces, in the Latin only; but to give audience in the open Senate to none who came thither from the ſubject Nations, ſave only in the Latin tongue, their own proper language. Yet for all this, it never grew to ſuch extent to be the Language of the whole Empire, no nor of Italy it ſelf; no more than the Engliſh tongue is naturall or nationall to the Welch, or Iriſh, though it be generally underſtood (for the very ſame reaſons) by all of the better ſort both in Wales and Ireland. In which regard I am not of their opinion, who think that the Italian (as the French, and Spaniſh) are nothing but corruptions of the Latin tongues, occaſioned by the inundations of the barbarous Nations: But rather that the Latin words which occur therein, proceeded from that weak impreſſion which the Latin tongue had made amongſt them, whilſt they were under the obedience of that puiſſant Empire; and that the Italian tongue, as it is now ſpoken, could not receive ſo great a change from the barbarous Nations, none of which tarryed long amongſt them, but the Goths, and Lombards; nor they ſo long (the Lombards not at all in the Eaſtern parts) as to be either the occaſions or authors of the alteration. So that the preſent language of Italy is a decompound, made up eſpecially of Latin and the old Italian: ſome notions of the Lombard being mixt with it in the North, and Weſt, ſome of the Gothiſh, in the middeſt, about Rome it ſelf; and not a little of the Greek, in the Eaſt of Naples.

And as the Language, ſo the Religion of the Countrey hath received ſome change. The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached in Rome it ſelf, and in Rome firſt preached by Saint Peter who came thither in or about the beginning of the Empire of Claudius. The two Apoſtles Peter and Paul, are generally ſaid by the antient Writers, to be the firſt who preached the Goſpel in that City. A duobus Apoſtolis Petro & Paulo, Romæ fundata & conſtituta eſt Eccleſia, ſaith the old Father Irenæus, Lib. 4. cap. 3. To one of theſe the firſt preaching of the Goſpel there is to be referred; both being Biſhops of that City: That is to ſay, St. Peter of the Churches of the Circumciſion; St. Paul of thoſe which conſiſted ſpecially of the Gentiles. Now that the Goſpel was preached there before Pauls coming, is evident by his Epiſtle written to the Romans, at Cenchrea the Port Town of Corinth, ſix years at leaſt before his being brought to Rome; in which he teſtifieth that their Faith was famous over all the World; and therefore could not count him who had never been there, for the planter of it: And as St. Peter was the firſt Preacher of the Goſpel at Rome, ſo ſent he his Diſciples to promulgate it in moſt parts of Italy. The Roman Martyrologies reckon up eight Biſhops of St. Peters making, for ſo many of the principall Cities of this Countrey: that is to ſay, Epaphroditus (not he whom St. Paul ſpeaks of in his Epiſtle to the Philippians) for Terracina, of old called Anxur, Hermagoras for Aquilia, Paulinus for Luca, Apollinaris for Ravenna, Marcus for Atina, Proſdocimus for Padua, Marcianus for Syracuſe, and Pancratius for Tauromenium in the Iſle of Sicily. But whether St. Peter planted it, or St. Paul watered it, certain I am that GOD only gave it the increaſe. It could not elſe have proſpered under ſuch a tyranny, as many, if not moſt of the Roman Emperours, did earneſtly endeavour to ſuppreſſe it with. But Sanguis Martyrum ſemen Eccleſiæ; the watering of it by the blood of ſo many Martyrs, made it grow the faſter. And this ſmall grain of Muſtard-ſeed waxed ſo great a tree, as over-ſhadowed all the Provinces of that mighty Empire; and did not only ſtand it out againſt all Tempeſts, but in concluſion did ſuppreſſe that Superſtition and Idolatry, for whoſe ſake all thoſe Princes till the time of Conſtantine, did, more or leſſe, labour to deſtroy it. How much it hath receded ſince thoſe times from its primitive purity; and how it did degenerate into Worldly pomp, and Secular policy, by the deſign and arts of thoſe who boaſt themſelves to be Succeſſors to that great Apoſtle; ſhall be a little touched at in the ſtory of the Roman Papacy. Suffice it in this place to ſay, that all the people of this Countrey, partly in reference to the Pope, partly for fear of the Inquiſition, and partly by being kept in ignorance of the Proteſtant Doctrine (of which they are taught to believe many monſtrous things) are all of the Religion of the Church of Rome.

But though the Fountains of the waters of Eternall life, have either been ſtopped, or elſe corrupted by the Popes of Rome; the Rivers which do water this moſt flouriſhing Garden, ſtill preſerve their beds, and run unmixed and uncorrupted in the ſame channels, as before they did. And of theſe Italy hath as many as any one Countrey, but none of any long courſe, by reaſon that all parts of it are ſo neer ſome Sea; moſt of which riſing from the Alpes, or the Apennine Hills, by melting of the ſnows in Winter, and caſuality of Land-floods at other times of the year, do often over-flow the Countrey, and for the moſt part leave an ill Air behind them. Thoſe of chief note are, 1. The River Po, or Padus (the Greeks call it Eridanus) into which Phaeton is ſaid to have been drenched, when he fell from heaven. It riſeth in the Alpes, runneth through Lombardy, which it divideth into Ciſpadanam and Tranſpadanam; and having taken in 30 leſſer ſtreams, falls with ſeven mouths into the Adriatick Sea, not far from Venice. 2. Rubicon, now called Piſſutello, antiently the North-bound of Italy; Hic fluvius quondam Italiæ finis, as it is in Pliny. It runneth into the Adriatick Sea not far from Rimini, or Ariminum, now the Port-town to Ravenna, the Haven of Ravenna being long ſince choaked; but of this River more in another place. 3. Arnus, which riſing in the Apennine falleth into the Tuſcan Sea, and antiently divided Italy on that ſide from the Ciſalpine Galls; on the banks hereof ſtandeth the fair City of Florence. 4. Ticinus, which gave name to the City of Pavy, called of old Ticinum; it riſeth in the Alpes, and emptieth it ſelf into the Lake called Lacus Verbanus. 5. Liris, now called Gariglia, ſtained with the blood of French and Spaniards, in their quarrels for the Realm of Naples; and no leſs unfortunately memorable for the drowning of Peter de Medices. 6. Cuique fuit rerum promiſſa potentia, Tibris;

And Tiber, unto which was given
The power of all things under Heaven.

It riſeth from the Apennine Hills, not far from Aretium (now Arezzo) a Town of Tuſcany (which it parted from the Roman Latium, and the Land of the Sabines) and gliding gently neer Cita de Caſtello, Perugia and the old Ocriculum, paſſeth by Rome, and falleth into the Tuſcan, or lower Sea, at Oſtia. Here is alſo the Lake of Thraſymene, neer which Annibal defeated Flaminius the Conſul, and his whole Army, opening thereby his paſſage to the gates of Rome: and the famous River of 7. Metaurus, where the Romans overcame Aſdrubal the Brother of Annibal; and thereby made a way to the ruine of Carthage. Others of leſs note ſhall be mentioned in their proper places.

As for the Mountains of this Countrey, thoſe of moſt note are the Alpes, and the Apennine, of which the reſidue in a manner are but ſpurs and branches. Of theſe, the Alpes being alſo apperraining to France, and Germany; or rather containing many large and entire Provinces, which belong to neither; deſerves a Tractate by by it ſelf. The Apennine, being proper only to this Countrey, but ſo that it relates to many and particular Provinces of it, ſhall be ſpoken of here. A ledge of hills which take beginning neer Savona, a Town of the Commonwealth and Countrey of Genoa, ſituate on the Mediterranean, and fetching a little compaſſe Northwards, extend to the furtheſt parts of Italy, dividing it almoſt in the very middeſt: that part thereof which lyeth towards the Tyrrhenian, or Tuſcan Sea, being called Ciſapennina; Tranſapennina, that which lay towards the Adriatick. Paſſing in one entire body as far as Aſcoli, a Town of Marca Anconitana (a Province belonging to the Pope) where they are at the higheſt; it is there parted into two horns or branches, whereof one runs out to the Mount of Gargano, and ſo unto the land of Otranto; the other ſpreadeth it ſelf as far as Calabria, thoſe being the moſt Eaſtern Provinces of this noble Continent. Called the Apennine, as ſome ſay, à Penna, by which word the Latins uſed to ſignifie the top or ſummit of an Hill; by reaſon of the height and ſharp points thereof: as others ſay, quaſi Alpes Pœninæ, becauſe firſt overcome by Annibal and his Carthaginians, whom the Roman Writers call by the name of Pœni. The Inhabitants hereof, by Virgil named Apenninicolæ; but otherwiſe reducible to ſome of the neighbouring Provinces. Of this large Mountain moſt of the Hills of Italy from Savona Eaſtwards, are but the excurſions; which being of leſs note, ſhall be ſpoken of as they lie before us in the way.

To proceed now to ſo much of the Hiſtory of Italy as concerns the generalls; we are to know that the firſt Inhabitants of it (not to ſay any thing of the fiction of Hyer Annius under the name of Beroſus, who will needs have Noah himſelf come hither ſhortly after the Flood) were doubtleſſe of the race of Cittim or Kittim the fourth ſonne of Javan, one of the ſonnes of Japhet. Who being planted by their Father in that part of Greece, which was ſince called Macedon, and after ſpreading themſelves further as their numbers increased, peopled Ætolia and the Countreys adjoyning to it: From whence desirous of a warmer and more fertile soil, they came in tract of time to the Coasts of Dalmatia; and thence to this Countrey since called Italy. That they did spring originally from the seed of Cittim (or Kittim, as the Greek pronounce it) wants not very good Authors. For thus Eusebius, Κίνοι ἐξ ὧν Λατῖνοι καὶ οἱ Ῥωμαῖοι; that is to say, from the Kitians, or children of Kittim, descended the Latins and the Romans. The same occurs also in the Chronicon of Alexandria. So also saith Cedrenus in his Annals, but with more punctuality. Telephus (saith he) the sonne of Hercules, reigned in Italy, and after him his sonne Latinus, ὃς τὰς Κιτταίους ἐπωνύμους Λατίνους, from whom the Keteans were named Latins. The same in other words saith Suidas. Nor want there some remainders of this name in approved Writers, besides these autorities; there being a Town in Latium called Ketea, mentioned in Dionysius Halicarnasseus; and a River named Ketus not far from Cumæ, whereof Aristotle speaketh in his book de Mirabilibus. And that they came immediately from the Ætolians, besides the other Arguments which Reineccius useth in this point, the neerness, or identity rather of the names doth seem to intimate. For Ætolia being written in the Greek Aitolia; and the letter O being changed into A according to the Æolick Dialect, which was that used by the Ætolians: the alteration of the name from Aitolia and Aitolians, to Italia and Italians, will be thought very easie, if not naturall; the rather, in regard there is an Island neer Italy, in the Tuscan Sea, peopled originally by these very Ætolians, which in antient times was called Æthalia. And if by such an easie alteration of one Letter only, Italy may derive its first plantation from the Ætolians, as no doubt it may; then may that Italus the Chieftain of whom Virgil speaks, be no other than Ætolus, some man of principall mark, and eminency, amongst that people, who had the conduct of this Colony when they came for Italy. And this I should believe much rather, than that this Italus was the name of a King of Sicily: It being more probable, that Sicily should borrow its first planters out of Italy, than Italy should borrow either name or people from so small a Kingdome: especially considering that the name of Aitolus was famous in those parts of Greece, ever since Aitolus the sonne of a King of Elis, was founder of the Ætolian Kingdome. The way thus shewn, and the passages into Italy laid open, it was not long before the Pelasgi, another Greek Nation, found the way into it; after whom Saturn out of Crete, and Evander out of Arcadia, with their severall followers, came and setled there. Not to say any thing of those severall Colonies, which coming out of Peloponnesus, and the parts of Achaia, planted themselves so thick in the East of Italy now called Calabria, that of long time it had the name of Magna Grecia. So that the Grecians made the main grosse or body of the Italian people; to which the coming of some Tuscans under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, a Prince of Lydia, in Asia minor, served but as an Accessary, and altered nothing of the Principall. The last that setled here, were some of the Relicts of Troy, under the conduct of Æneas, who flying from their native Countrey, and enraged Enemies, were first cast upon the coasts of Africk; where having staid a while to refresh his Companyes (we shall hereafter take occasion to consider of the Fable of his loves with Dido) he set sail for Italy, being the place assigned him by the Gods for his seat and Empire; whither he came with fifteen Ships, which might contain, according to the rate which Thucydides alloweth to the Vessels then used, to the number of 1200 men. And there he landed, as it proved in an happy hour: For he was no sooner arrived, but he was lovingly cherished, and entertained by Latinus King of the Latins, or of Latium; whose chief City or Seat Royall was then called Laurentum; who mu[illegible]ming of this Stranger, as a man whose fame had been his Harbinger, thought he could neither m[illegible] his love sufficiently, nor bind him fast enough unto him, but by betrothing him unto Lavinia, his [illegible] daughter. Hence grew the Wars betwixt Æneas, and Turnus King of the Rutili, a former Suter; which being ended in the death of the Rutilian Rivall, confirmed Æneas and his Trojans, in a sure possession. For now growing with the Latins, or Laurentini, into a more constant bond of Friendship, by many inter-marriages, and mutuall kindnesses, they built the Town of Lavinium, called so in honour of their Queen, intending it for the Seat Royall of the Princes of the Trojan line. But long it did not hold that state. For Ascanius the sonne of Æneas by his former Wife, to avoyd all occasions of contention with his Mother in Law, left her (Æneas being dead) in possession of Lavinium, and built Longa Alba: which being surrendred by Iulus the sonne of Ascanius to his half-brother Silvius, became the constant habitation of the Silvian Kings, till the building of Rome, and finall ending of the race of the Latin Kings. The names of whom (for there occurs little of their actions) we are next to shew; taking along with us those few Kings which reigned in those parts of Italy, before the coming of Æneas.

The Kings of Italy of the Aborigines.

A. M.

2637. 1. Janus, the first King of the Aborigines, who lived in the same time with Boaz and Ruth. He received Saturn flying out of Crete from Jupiter, and left him his Kingdome at his death. He is sayd to be the founder of the City of Genoa, and to have given name to the Hill in Rome called Janiculus, on which it was supposed that he had his dwelling.

2. Saturn, who taught the people the use of dunging of their lands, and for that cause was honoured by them as a God, under the name of Stercutius, as St. Austin hath it. He reigned first together with Janus, and afterwards by himself alone: the whole time of both their reigns was 33 years.

3. Picus,

2670. 3. Picus, well skilled in divination by the flight and chattering of Birds, and therefore feigned by the Poets to be turned into a Pye. He entertained Evander and his Arcadians, giving them the Hill (called after Aventine) to build upon. 37.

2707. 4. Faunus, the ſonne of Picus, and the husband of Fatua, in whoſe time Hercules came into Italy, vanquiſhed the Giants of Cremona, and killed the Giant Cacus, who had fled from him out of Spain. 44.

2751. 5. Latinus, the ſonne of Faunus, who entertained Æneas coming from the wars and deſtruction of Troy, and gave him his daughter Lavinia to wife, with his Kingdome after him in Dower. 36.

2787. 6. Lavinia, daughter to Latinus, and Queen of the Latins, marryed to Æneas, whom ſhe out-lived, he being ſlain in his Wars againſt Mezentius, the King of Tuſcany; the ſonne or ſucceſſor of that Mezentius (an ungodly Tyrant) whom Æneas had before ſlain, in his war with Turnus, and the Latins. 7.

Kings of the Latins, of the Trojan or Silvian Race.

A. M.

1787. 1. Æneas, the ſonne of Anchiſes, and Husband of Lavinia, ſlain in his wars againſt Mezentius King of the Tuſcans or Hetrurians, as before is ſaid. 3.

2790. 2. Aſcanius, the ſonne of Æneas by Creuſa his former Wife, for fear of whom, Lavinia being great with child, fled into a Wood, and was there delivered of a ſonne called Silvius. He removed the Seat Royall from Lavinium, to Longa Alba, a City of his own building. 38.

2828. 3. Silvius Poſthumus, the ſonne of Æneas by Lavinia, preferred unto the Kingdome by the love of the people, before Iulus the ſonne of Aſcanius (the founder of the Julian family) from whom all the Kings of this Race had the name of Silvii; Iulus being honoured with the chief Prieſthood (an office next in dignity to that of the King) which he tranſlated afterwards unto his Poſterity. 29.

2857. 4. Æneas Silvius. 31.

2888. 5. Latinus Silvius. 50.

2938. 6. Alba Silvius, ſo called becauſe of his beautifying and repairing the City Alba, then in ſome decay: Or probably becauſe there he had his birth. 39.

2977. 7. Capetus Silvius. 24.

3001. 8. Capys Silvius, ſaid to be the founder of the City of Capua; which ſhews that he extended his dominion further than the Province of Latium. 28.

3029. 9. Capetus Silvius. 13.

3050. 11. Agrippa Silvius. 40.

3090. 12. Alladius Silvius, who to make himſelf the more terrible to his Subjects, ſtudyed a way to imitate the Thunder, but was killed at laſt by a reall Thunder-clap from Heaven. 19.

3109. 13. Aventinus Silvius, who gave name to the Hill Aventine. 37.

3146. 14. Procas Silvius. 23.

3169. 15. Amulius Silvius, the younger ſonne of Procas, ſetting aſide his Brother Numitor, obtained the Kingdome for himſelf; ſlain at laſt by Romulus, and Numitor ſetled in the Throne. 42.

3211. 16. Numitor, the 21 King from Janus, and the laſt King of the Latins, reſtored by Romulus to the Throne; and after the ſhort reign of one year only, deprived by him both of life and Kingdome. After whoſe death the Latins, or Albans, had no more Kings, but kept themſelves as a Free eſtate till ſubdued to Rome. 1.

Concerning this it is to be underſtood, that Amulius having chaſed his eldeſt brother Numitor out of the Countrey, and poſſeſſed himſelf of the Throne, cauſed his brothers daughter Rhea (for preventing any iſſue by her) to be ſhut up in the Temple of Veſta. Where ſhe proving the mother of two ſonnes, was according to the Law buryed quick, and her children by the cruel Tyrant caſt out, to be devoured of wild Beaſts. They were found by Fauſtulus the Kings Shepheard, nurſt by his Wife, for her infamous life called Lupa (whence came the Fable, that they were ſuckled by a Wolf) and being grown to mans eſtate, ſlew the Tyrant Amulius, placing their Grandfather Numitor in the Royall Throne; whom not long after they deprived both of life and kingdome. Of theſe the eldeſt was named Romulus, and the younger Rhemus, who leaving Alba to the ſhort poſſeſſion of their Grandfather Numitor, laid the foundation of the moſt famous City of Rome; which Romulus firſt hanſelled with the blood of his Brother Rhemus, who had diſdainfully leapt over the walls of his new City. This City he made an Aſylum or place of Refuge for all comers, of what deſperate eſtate ſoever, and having ranked them into order, made himſelf their King. A people of ſo baſe a nature, that their neighbours refuſed to give them any of their daughters in marriage: So they were deſtitute of Wives, and conſequently not like to continue a people long; till on a proclamation made of ſome playes and paſtimes, many of the Sabine women flocked thither to behold the ſports, whom the Romans ſeiſed on, and forced an unwilling conſent from them, to become their Wives. From ſuch a baſe and low beginning did this City riſe, to be the Empreſſe of the World.

The Kings of Rome.

A. M.

3213. 1. Romulus the founder of Rome: he made peace with Tatius King of the Sabines, coming againſt him to revenge the raviſhment of their women; incorporating him and his into his new City, and by that means adding thereto a fair and goodly Territory. 37.

3251. 2. Numa, the firſt Author of the Roman Ceremonies. 43.

3294. 3. Tullus Hoſtilius, who enlarged the borders of Rome by the conqueſt of Alba, the mother-City of the Latins, and vanquiſhed the Fidenates. 32.

3326. 4. Ancus Martius, who built Oſtia on the mouth of Tiber, to be an Haven to the City. 24.

3350. 5. Tarquinius Priſcus, who ſubdued many of the Tuſcan Nations, encreaſed the number of the Tribes and Senators, and added the triumphall ornaments. 38.

3388. 6. Servius Tullus, who firſt cauſed the people to be inrolled, and brought into cenſe. 44.

3432. 7. Tarquinius Superbus, ſonne to the former Tarquinius. He vanquiſhed the Gabii, and took the Towns of Ardea, Ocriculum, and Sueſſa Pometia; but for his own inſolent behaviour, and a Rape committed on Lucretia the Wife of Collatine by his ſonne Sextus, he and his whole Race were driven out of the Town, Anno Mund. 3457. V. C. 268.

After this, the Romans loathing the name of King, cauſed two Officers to be choſen out of the Patricii, or chief Citizens, to whom they gave the name of Conſuls, à conſulendo, from counſelling of, and conſulting the good of the Common-wealth, ut conſulere ſe ſuis civibus meminerint, ſaith the Hiſtorian, their name being a Memento of their charge or duty. And in this office they reſolved to have alwayes two, and thoſe but only for a year, Ne vel ſolitudine vel morâ poteſtas corrumperetur. And though ſome had the fortune to be Conſuls two or three years together, yet every new year they were anew choſen, and ſo their Offices reckoned as ſeverall; neither do we find any to have been elected for leſſe than a year, unleſs upon the death or depoſition of a former, untill the Civil wars. But then, cùm belli civilis præmia feſtinari cœperunt, when the ſervices done in the Civil wars required a quicker turn in requitall, the Conſulſhip was given only for ſome part of the year, and ordinarily for two Moneths: the firſt Conſuls being named Ordinarii, in whoſe names the writings made for the whole year were dated; the other Minores, or Honorarii, which only ſerved to make up a number. For ſo ambitious were the Romans of this honour, that when Maximus dyed in the laſt day of his Conſulſhip, Caninius Rebilus petitioned Cæſar for that part of the day that remained: whence that ſo memorated jeſt of Tully, O vigilantem Conſulem, qui toto conſulatûs ſui tempore ſomnum oculis non vidit! And when Cecina was by the Senate degraded from this honour on the day in which he was to have reſigned it, one Roſcius Regulus obtained the office from Vitellius, for the day remaining: but as the Hiſtorian noteth, magno cum irriſu accipientis, tribuentiſq;. Now as the Romans did thus exceed the firſt number of Conſuls, ſo ſometimes fell they ſhort of it. The firſt that was ſole Conſul was Pompey, in the beginning of the Civil Wars, viz. A.V.C. 703. The next, one Varanes, A. C. 410. This Office, from the firſt inſtitution to the finall period of it, continued at the leaſt in name (for the Emperors had of long time aſſumed the Power and Prerogatives appertaining to it) the ſpace of 1084. yeers, though not without many intermiſſions of the name and Title, by the ſeverall interpoſings of the Decemviri, the Dictators, and the Conſular Tribunes, of which more anon. The laſt Conſul was one Baſilius, in the time of Juſtinian, A. Ch. 542. The two firſt, Collatinus the husband of Lucretia, and Junius Brutus, by whoſe inſtigation the people had took Arms againſt the houſe of the Tarquins. A man ſo zealous in defence of the common liberty, ſo reſolutely bent to make good what he had begun, and ſo extremely oppoſite to the Royal Race, that he not only cauſed Collatine to reſign his Office within the year, becauſe he was of the blood of the Tarquins, but executed his own ſonnes, for holding correſpondence and intelligence with them. But though the Government were changed, the old deſign was followed, which the Kings had laid for the enlarging of their Empire; but followed with ſo ſlow a pace, by reaſon of their factions and diviſions, that it was full 500. yeers before they could be Maſters of Italy. A matter not unworthy of our conſideration, that the Italians ſhould hold out ſo long a time againſt the puiſſance of the Romans; when in leſs then half that time enſuing, they did poſſeſſe themſelves of almoſt all Europe, and many goodly Kingdomes and Provinces both in Aſia and Africk. So difficult a thing it was (as is ſaid by Florus) dare caput Italiæ, to contract the many limbs of Italy into one body, and unite them under one head.

But to proceed, after Italy was fully conquered by them, they fell upon the Carthaginians, as their neereſt Neighbours; whoſe overthrow, in the end of the firſt Punick War, A. V. C. 512. gave them the full poſſeſſion of Sicily, (except the State of Syracuſa) and the Iſle of Sardinia. After that being moleſted in their Trade by the Illyrian Pirates, and finding them countenanced therein by the Queen of that Nation, they made a fortunate War againſt her, and brought that puiſſant people to become their Tributaries, A. V. C. 525. The ſecond Carthaginian war, managed by Annibal in the bowels of Italy, had almoſt put a period to the glories of their Common-wealth. But that being alſo ended to their advantage by the conqueſt of Spain, they quarrelled Philip King of Macedon, who had aided Annibal, compelled him to accept of peace on their own terms, and after outed his ſonne Perſeus of all his Dominions, making Macedon a Province of Rome, and all the reſt of Greece but their Tenants at will. Nor was it long before they picked a quarrel with Antiochus the great King of Syria, made him abandon his poſſeſſion of the Leſſer Aſia; and finally prevailed ſo ſucceſſefully in all their actions, that there was neither King nor Common-wealth that could ſtand in their way, untill the State being burdened with its too much greatneſs, began to totter of it ſelf.

Two

Two things there were, which much conduced to the advancement of the Romans to their power and greatneſſe, beſides the Providence of God which had ſo diſpoſed it: which were the great encouragments which they gave their Souldiers, and the Triumphant manner of reception which they uſed to beſtow upon their Generals, when they returned home with honour and victory. For when any of their Generals did ſo return, he was permitted to enter ſitting on a glorious Chariot, the ſpoils which he had got in war being carryed before, the priſoners he had taken following bound at the heels of his Chariot; his Souldiers compaſſing him about with their ſeverall Crowns, according to the quality of their well-deſervings; and all the Fathers of the City, attended by the Prieſts, and principall Ladies, going out to meet him. The firſt beginning of which cuſtome is aſcribed to Romulus; who in the war with Acron King of the Ceninenſes made againſt him in revenge of the rape committed by the Romans on the Sabine women, ſeeing his people give ground, called for help to Jupiter, and vowed if he overcame King Acron, to offer up his Armour to him. Acron being vanquiſhed, the Conquerer cutteth down a fair young Oak, and hangeth on it all the Armour of the vanquiſhed King: then girding his Gown cloſe unto him, and putting on his head a Garland of Lawrel, he laid the Oak upon his ſhoulders, and marched towards the City, his Army following him, and ſinging an Epinicion or ſong of victory. To this we muſt refer the originall and beginning of Triumphs. But nihil eſt inventum & perfectum eodem tempore, as the ſaying is. Tarquinius Priſcus long after Romulus, added hereunto the Purple Robe, and the Triumphant Chariot drawn with four Horſes. The other pomps came afterwards, as they grew both in power and pride. Now of theſe Triumphs there were two ſorts, the Greater, which was properly called a Triumph; and the Leſſer, vulgarly called the Ovation, which differed from one another in many circumſtances. For, 1. The Triumpher made his entrance in a Royall Chariot, and was met by the Senators in their Robes; but the Ovator made his entrance on foot, and was met only by the Knights and Gentlemen of Rome. 2. The Triumpher had a Lawrel Crown, and entred with the noiſe of Drums and Trumpets; but the Ovator had only a Garland of Fir, with Flutes and Haultboyes playing before him. 3. The Triumpher was attyred in a Garment of State, which they called Veſtis Trabeata; but the Ovator in a plain Purple Gown only. 4. In a Triumph the Souldiers cryed out, Io Triumphe; but in an Ovation they ingeminated only O, O, O, from the often doubling of which word, it had (as ſome think) the name of an Ovation. 5. And laſtly, the Triumpher uſed to ſacrifice a certain number of Oxen; but the Ovator a Sheep only, from whence the name is properly to be derived.

Now there were three caſes in which the Conquerer was to be content with this leſſer Triumph. 1. If the number of the enemies whom he ſlew in battell exceeded not 5000. men; or that he had not ſo much overcome them by force, as perſwaſion, or ſubtilty: 2. If the War had been ſlight, curſory, or not lawfully managed: And 3. If it were againſt an ignoble Enemy. And of this laſt we have a fair inſtance in P. Rupilius, who having got the victory in the Servile War, (a victory of great importance to the State of Rome) was yet content with an Ovation; nè Triumphi dignitatem Servili inſcriptione violaret, as it is in Florus. As for the greater Triumphs they were indeed very full of magnificence; the pomp whereof, who liſt to ſee may find it in the Triumph of Paulus Aemilius deſcribed by Plutarch; though by that which hath before been ſaid, we may conjecture ſomewhat at the glories of it.

And yet this honour was not always vouchſafed to thoſe who had beſt deſerved it, there being many ways whereby it might be forfeited or denyed in a factious State, and jealous of the over-greatneſs of the Men of War. For, 1. Sometimes it was denyed a victorious Generall, by the ſtrength of a contrary Faction; and ſo Pompey denyed Metellus the honour of a Triumph for the conqueſt of Crete: 2. Sometimes the Conquerer himſelf was willing to decline it, for fear of envy: And ſo Marcellus in Plutarch, after his conqueſt of Sicily, having triumphed twice before, refuſed that honour, his reaſon was, καὶ φθόνον ἄχει ὁ τεῖτος θρίαμβος, for fear his third Triumph might become a matter of envy. 3. Sometimes the Souldiers having been ill paid, or otherwiſe not well treated by their Commanders, oppoſed them in their ſuit for it: and this was the caſe of Paulus Aemilius, who queſtionleſs had miſſed this honour, for not dividing amongſt them the Spoils of Greece, as he once had promiſed, if Servilius and others of the Senate, making it their own caſe, had not ſtickled hard for him with the Souldiers. 4. It was ſometimes denyed, becauſe the Generall had born no publick Office in the Common-wealth: For ſo in Livy, when Lentulus coming Proconſul out of Spain required a Triumph, the Fathers anſwered, that he had indeed done things worthy of that honour, but that they had no precedent for it, ut qui neq; Conſul, neq; Dictator, neq; Prætor res geſſiſſet Triumpharet. 5. Sometimes the Generalls themſelves omitted it for the furtherance of ſome of their other purpoſes. And ſo Cæſar coming towards Rome, a Victor, at the ſame time the Conſuls were to be choſen, laid aſide his demand of the Triumph, to ſue for the Conſulſhip; it being the cuſtome, that ſuch as demanded the Triumph, ſhould abide without the City; and ſuch as ſued for the Conſulſhip, muſt of neceſſity be within. 6. Sometimes it was denyed, when the War had been undertaken without the Command of the Senate: in which reſpect the Triumph was denyed unto Manlius on the conqueſt of Galatia by him, to the great enlargement of their Empire; quia cauſam Belli Senatus non approbavit, becauſe he had no Commiſſion from the Senate for it. 7. There was no Triumph granted if the War had been Civil, becauſe in all ſuch Wars whoſoever was Conquerer, the Common-wealth was a loſer by it. And therefore Pompey and Metellus having vanquiſhed Sertorius and his party in Spain, would have it called a Forain, not a Civil War, becauſe they would not loſe their Triumph. Externum magis id bellum quàm Civile videri voluerunt, ut Triumpharent. 8. If the victory had not been obtained without great loſſe on the Romans ſide; in which regard Valerius after his conqueſt of the Galls was denyed this honour; quia magis dolor civibus amiſſis, quàm gaudium fuſis hoſtibus prævaluit, ſaith Alexander ab Alexandro. 9. And laſtly the Trimph was denyed a Generall, if the ſervice had not been performed in his own Province: And ſo we finde that when Livius, and Nero, being Conſuls had vanquiſhed Aſdrubal, Livius only had the Triumph, though Nero was the man that had won the day; becauſe the field was fought in the Province of Livius, to which Nero came but as an Acceſſary, or aſſiſtant to him.

And theſe are all, or at the leaſt the principal cauſes, of hindering or omitting this great honour, indeed the greateſt that the Free-State could be capable of. But after when the Common-wealth was changed into a Monarchy, it began to be laid aſide for altogether, as too great for Subjects; and was firſt purpoſely neglected by Vipſanius Agrippa, the Eſtabliſher of Auguſtus in the Roman Empire; who when he had a Triumph decreed unto him, for quenching certain Rebellions in Aſia, and his quiet ſetling of that Countrey; to give Poſterity an example, refuſed to accept it. And this example being (as it were) a rule to others, occaſioned that this cuſtome was in ſhort time quite laid aſide; and that no man under the degree of an Emperor Triumphed ſolemnly; all others from thence-forth, being content with the Triumphal Ornaments, μόναις ταῖς ἐπινικίοις τιμαῖς, in the words of Dion. And though Beliſarius having ſubdued the Kingdome of the Vandals in Africk, is ſaid (600 years after the death of Agrippa) to have had the honour of a Triumph; yet in propriety of ſpeech, it was nothing but an honourable preſenting of himſelf and his priſoners before the Emperour; and was ſo far from the magnificence of a Roman Triumph, that it wanted many of the ſolemnities uſed in an Ovation. Nor did the Emperors themſelves much affect this honour, either becauſe too popular, or too chargeable, or that they thought it was beneath the Imperial Majeſty; the laſt (as I remember) that made uſe thereof to ſet forth his glories, being Valerius Probus, after his victories over the Germans, and the Blemyæ, a people of Africk, in or about the year 284 of our Saviours birth.

In the next place look we on the incouragements and rewards of the common Souldiers: For beſides the ſetting out of Lands and dwellings for the poorer ſort, in which they might reſt themſelves when they were paſt ſervice; and beſides the large donatives which the General in his Triumph did beſtow upon them; they had their mural Crown, for him that firſt ſcaled the Wals; a naval Crown, for him that firſt boarded the Enemies Ships; a Camp Crown, or Corona Caſtrenſis, for him that had forced a way into the Tents or Camp of the Enemy; a City Crown, or Corona Civica, for him that had preſerved the life of a Roman Citizen. Not to ſay any thing of thoſe Chains, and Bracelets, which Souldiers of inferiour merit were adorned withall. By which encouragements, and the good conduct of their Counſels in the Senate, the Roman affairs ſucceeded ſo proſperouſly, and their Dominions were enlarged ſo immenſly, that never any Common-wealth had ſo large a growth.

And yet the greatneſs of this ſtate is neither totally, nor only, to be attributed to the Conſular Government. For though the wals of this great building were raiſed by the Conſuls, yet the foundation of the ſame was laid by the Kings, and the roof thereof laid on by the Emperors. Nay, be it ſpoken to the honour of Monarchical Government, whenſoever any great and imminent danger did ſeem to threaten them, they were fain to lay aſide their confidence in the rule of their Conſuls, and betake themſelves to the command of one Soveraign Officer, whom they called Dictator. Of which, and other the changes hapning in the State of Rome, take this ſhort abſtract from Corn. Tacitus. "Urbem Romam "à principio Reges habuere, &c. The City of Rome was in the beginning governed by Kings. Liberty and "the Conſulſhip L. Brutus brought in. The Dictators were choſe but for a time; The Decemviri "paſſed not two years, neither had the Conſular autority of the Tribunes of the Souldiers any long "continuance, nor Cinnas nor Syllas dominion. Pompey and Craſſus quickly yeelded to Cæſars forces; "Lepidus and Antony to Auguſtus. So Tacitus in brief of theſe publick changes: Of which, as to the Decemviri, which were inſtituted only on a particular occaſion for the reforming of the Lawes by thoſe of Athens; and the Military Tribunes of Conſular Autority ordained to divert common people from ſeeking after the Conſulſhip; I ſhall here ſay nothing. But as for the Dictators, being Officers of a Supreme power, and ſuch as made way for the Emperors in the cloſe of all; I ſhall inlarge a little further. They were called Dictators à Dictando, becauſe they preſcribed what they pleaſed unto the people; which they were bound to execute and not diſpute. Hence that memorable jeſt of Julius Cæſar, who being told that Sylla had reſigned his Dictatorſhip, though by decree of Senate made perpetual to him; returned this Anſwer, that Sylla was an unlearned man, dictare neſciit, and therefore knew not how to dictate, or to play the Dictator. They were alſo called Populi Magiſtri, or the peoples Maſters, becauſe from them lay no Appeal unto the people (as did from all the reſt of the Roman Magiſtrates) during the whole time of their command; which ordinarily continued for ſix moneths; yet ſo, that if they did in the mean time ſettle the affairs of the Common-wealth, they reſigned it ſooner; if the neceſſities of the State required a longer continuance in it, they were choſen again. The names of as many of them as I have met withall, I have here ſub-joyned, together with the ſervices they did the publick, in the time of their Office.

The Dictators of Rome.

A.V.C.
253.	1	Titus Largius, choſen upon occaſion of a general War, made by the Latins upon Rome; the firſt that ever had this Office.
257.	2	Aulus Poſthumius, choſen to purſue that war, which he ended with the ſlaughter of 30000 of the Latins.
295.	3	L. Quinctius Cincinnatus, choſen to this office from the Plough, overcame the Volſci; choſen again An. V. C. 314. to ſuppreſs the ſedition raiſed by Sp. Melius.
318.	4	Æmilius Mamercus, overcame che Veientes and the Fidenates, and was thrice in eleven years called unto this Office.

338. 5 Pub. Servilius, who finally vanquiſhed the Fidenates, and the Lavicani.
354. 6 Furius Camillus, who finally deſtroyed the City of the Veii, and being choſen a ſecond time, A. V. C. 362. preſerved his Countrey from the Galls: thrice choſen after this upon new occaſions.
375. 7 Tit. Quinctius Cincinnatus, choſen in the War againſt the Latins.
385. 8 L. Manlius, elected in the time of a grievous peſtilence, to finde a way for the appeaſing of the gods.
396. 9 C. Sulpitius.
418. 10 Martius Rutilius, the firſt Dictator choſen out of the Commons.
11 L. Papyrius ſubdued the Samnites.
438. 12 Coſſus, by whom the Samnites were again vanquiſhed.
13 Æmilius, who alſo overcame the Samnites.
14 Lentulus, who triumphed alſo over the Samnites.
451. 15 I. Bubulcus, who finally ſubdued the Æqui and the Volſci.
16 Corn. Rufinus.
467. 17 Q. Hortenſius, choſen for appeaſing a difference betwixt the Senate and the Commons, who had fortified themſelves in Janiculus, one of the Hils whereon Rome ſtood.
505. 18 Cl Glizias, forced to reſign his office to 19 Atilius Colatinus, the firſt that exerciſed his office out of Italy: he was choſen in the firſt Punick War.
536. 20 Fabius Maximus, choſen in the war againſt Annibal.
537. 21 M. Junius, choſen upon the great defeat which the Roman Forces had at the battel of Cannæ.
545. 23 L. Manlius Torquatus, choſen upon the death of Marcellus the Conſul ſlain by Annibal.
672. 24 L. Sylla (deſcended from that Corn. Rufinus, who had been formerly in this office) having by force of Arms ſuppreſſed the faction of Marius and Cinna, made himſelf Maſter of the City, and cauſed himſelf to be choſen Perpetual Dictator, after the Office had been intermitted, for the ſpace of 127 years: which office having exerciſed with a great deal of cruelty, he reſigned with as great a confidence.
707. 25 C. Julius Cæſar, deſcended from Iulus the ſon of Aſcanius, who was the ſecond King of the Trojan Race, having conquered Britain, and added all Gaule Tranſalpine to the Roman Empire; and finding himſelf unworthily requited by the faction of Pompey, paſſed with his Army after him into Greece; and having vanquiſhed him in the fields of Pharſalia, and made himſelf abſolutely maſter of the Roman Empire; took to himſelf the ſupreme Government thereof under the title of Dictator; which having managed for the ſpace of five years, he was murthered in the Senate houſe by Brutus and Caſſius.

Before the time of theſe perpetual Dictators, the Romans having ſome enemies or other that oppoſed the progreſs of their fortunes, had not the leiſure to contend with one another, in a publick way; or if they did, their differences and ſeditions were ſoon compoſed. But being grown ſo great as to fear no Enemy; and the Eſtate ſo vaſt, that it was grown too mighty for a popular Government; then they began to practiſe on the peoples patience, and to project the ſharing of the Empire amongſt the great ones. Concerning which, take here this ſhort Epitome, which I finde in Tacitus. "Rebus modicis æqua-
"litas facilè habebatur, &c. While (ſaith he) our Dominions were but ſmal, Equality was eaſily main"tained among us. But after we had ſubdued the World, and deſtroyed all Kings and Cities that ſtood
"in our way, or might work our annoyance; when we had leiſure to ſeek after Wealth without peril,
"there aroſe hot contentions betwixt the Nobility and the Commons. Sometimes the factious Tribunes
"carried it away; ſometimes the Conſuls had the better: and in the City and common Forum, ſome "little skirmiſhes (the beginning of our Civil Wars) were ſometimes ſeen. Afterwards C. Marius
"one of the meaneſt of the Commonalty, and L. Sylla the moſt cruel of all the Nobility, by force of "Arms overthrowing the Free-State, reduced all to an abſolute Government. To them ſucceeded
"Cn. Pompeius, a little cloſer in his projects, but nothing better minded to the Common-wealth: Et
"nunquam poſtea niſi de Principatu quæſitum, and never after that was any other point debated, than who
"ſhould get the Soveraignty unto himſelf. So Tacitus, and he ſtateth it rightly. For after Pompey had revived the controverſie, and had found Cæſar a better diſputant than himſelf; Auguſtus, Antony, and Lepidus (on the death of Cæſar) made good the Argument, attracting all power unto themſelves by the name of Triumviri: till Auguſtus having out-witted Lepidus, and vanquiſhed M. Antony at the battel of Actium, became ſole Soveraign of the State, by the name of Prince; Et cuncta bellis civilibus feſſa, nomine Principis ſub imperium accepit, as that Author hath it.

But touching thoſe great alterations in the State of Rome, the contentions for the chief command, and the Reduction of it to a Monarchy by Auguſtus Cæſar; I publiſhed a Diſcourſe in the year 1631. (but written many years before) under the title of AUGUSTUS, or an Eſſay of thoſe Means and Counſels whereby the Common-wealth of Rome was altered, and reduced to a Monarchy. Which being but ſhort, ſo pertinent to the Preſent buſineſs, and ſo well entertained when it came abroad; I hope it will not be improper or unprofitable to ſubjoyn it here. The Reader may either peruſe it, or prætermit it, as his fancy guides him. And here it followeth in theſe words.

They

Auguſtus. THey which have heretofore written of Common-wealths, have divided them into three Species: The Government of the King; ſecondly, of the Nobles; and thirdly, of the People. Either of theſe is again ſubdivided into good and evil: The evil form being only the good corrupted; the bad nothing elſe but the good refined. So is the Government of a King divided into a Monarchy, and a Tyranny; Of the Nobles, into an Ariſtocraty, and an Oligarchy; Of the People, into a Republick and Democraty. All theſe, as well in general, as in the ſeveral couplets, have a ſecret inclination to change the one into the other; and to make a Pythagorical tranſmigration (as it were) into each others being. I need not ſtand on many inſtances. The Common-wealth of Rome (into whoſe ſtories whoſoever looketh, will judge them rather to contain the acts of the whole World, than a particular Nation) will ſerve for all. Romulus at the foundation of his City, reſerved unto himſelf the chief Soveraignty, leaving it entire to his Succeſſors. Numa, Ancus Tullus, Tarquin the Elder, and Servius, governed themſelves ſo moderately, and the people ſo juſtly, that they affected not Tyranny; nor the Commons Liberty. They appeared more deſirous to fill the Coffers of their Subjects, than their own Treaſuries: And when neceſſity compelled them to a Tax, they rather ſeemed to ſheer their ſheep than fleece them. But Tarquin the ſecond, commonly called Superbus, a man of inſupportable Vices, having by violence enthronized himſelf in that Chair of State, which (had not his ambitious ſpirit been impatient of delay) would have been his rightful Inheritance; made his government anſwerable to his entrance, cruel and bloudy. How many men, eminent as well by their own vertue, as their Parents Nobility, did he cut off? How many did he for no cauſe promote, to make their fall the more remarkable? What part of the Senate was free from ſlaughter? What corner of the City from lamentations? Yet this was not all. The miſerable Romans were viſited with three Plagues at once; Pride in the Father, Cruelty in the Mother, and Luſt exorbitant in their ſon Sextus, a true Copy of the old Originals. Either of theſe had been more than enough to exerciſe the peoples patience. But meeting all at one time, it ſeemed that nothing could now be added to the wretchedneſs of the one, and the wickedneſs of the other. Brutus (a name fatal to Tyrants) did eaſily perſwade the Commons to ſhake off this yoke. For they, as well deſirous of Novelties, as ſenſible of Oppreſſions, had long ſince murmured at the preſent State; and wanted nothing but a head to break out into actual Rebellion. So
*A.V.C.*244. the People got the Freedome, and the Kings loſt the Soveraignty of the City.

2. Brutus, although he wanted no fair title to the Crown, yet either perceiving how odious the name of King was grown; or perhaps willing to be rather the firſt Conſul than the laſt Prince; inſtituted a new form of Government: Wherein the ſway of all was referred to the Fathers of the City; out of whom two were annually choſen as chief of the reſt. And herein certainly he dealt very adviſedly. For had he ſought to confirm himſelf in the Kingdome, what could men judge, but that, not love to his Countrey was the cauſe that ſtirred him to take Armes, but deſire of Rule? Again, beſides that ſecure Privacy is to be preferred before hazardous Royalty; what hope had he to keep the ſeat long, having by his own example taught the people both the Theory and Practiſe of Rebellion? Under this new Ariſtocraty the Roman affairs ſucceeded ſo proſperouſly, their dominions were inlarged ſo immenſly, that it may well be queſtioned, whether the Roman fortune cauſed their greatneſs, or their valour commanded their fortune. For the Governors not ſeeking wealth but honour, or not their own wealth, but the publick, did ſo demean themſelves both in Peace and War, that there was between all, a vertuous emulation, who ſhould moſt benefit his Countrey. An happineſs which was too great to continue long. The people had as yet no written Lawes: Cuſtome bearing moſt ſway, the reſt of the Law locked up in the breaſt of the Judges. To avoid ſuch inconveniencies as might hence enſue, there were ſome men, conceived to be as ſound in judgement, as honeſt in their actions, deputed by a general Commiſſion, to take an abſtract of the Grecian Lawes; according to the tenor whereof, the People were to frame their lives, the Judges their ſentences. Here followed the Obligarchy or Decemvirate
*A.V.C.*304. State of Rome, but long it laſted not. For theſe new Lords joyning forces together, made themſelves rich with the ſpoil of the people, not caring by what unlawful means they could purchaſe either profit or pleaſure. Appius Claudius, one of the Decemviri, was the break-neck of this Government. He unmindful of Lucretia and the Tarquins, luſted after Virginia, a woman though of low condition, yet ſuch a woman in whom beauty and vertue ſtrove for the preheminence. The iſſue was, that ſhe (to ſave her honour) was ſlain by her own Father in an open Aſſembly of the people; Appius forced to make away himſelf in priſon; and the reſt of that Magiſtracy abdicating their Offices, the Conſuls were for a time reſtored.

3. The people fleſhed with this victory, and calling to minde how their Anceſtors had in like manner baniſhed the Kings, began to know their own ſtrength, and ſtomached it exceedingly, that they on whoſe ſhoulders the frame of the State was ſupported, ſhould be ſo much under the Command of others; that they who were Lords abroad, ſhould be below the condition of Slaves at home. Hereupon they raiſe a tumult under the Conduct of their Tribune Canuleius. Nor could they by any perſwaſions be induced to lay down Armes, till they had obtained a decree, That from thenceforth, the
*A.V.C.*308. Nobles and the Commons might promiſcuouſly be married. And this was the firſt ſtep to the Republick. The gaining this new Priviledge, put them in poſſibility of obtaining greater. They now ſue to be capable of the Conſulſhip. The Fathers conſulting of this demand, wiſely fore-ſaw, that to grant their Petition, or to deny it was alike dangerous. For were it utterly daſhed, it was to be feared the People would again forſake the City; and yet make their ſtay more inſolent and inſupportable, if it were granted. C. Claudius, one who by his honourable behaviour, was by both parties had in an equal degree of reverence, quickly propoſed a middle courſe, whereby the fury of the multitude might be appeaſed peaſed, without blemiſh to the Conſular dignity. He conſtituted ſix Annual Officers, equally choſen out of the People and the Nobles, calling them Tribuni Militum Conſularis poteſtatis. This Office continued, but not without many Interſtitiums, the ſpace of 78. years. Which time expired, and ſome experience being had of the peoples Government; the Lords of the Senate did decree, That one of the Conſuls ſhould from thenceforth be choſen by, and out of the Commons; that they ſhould be capable of all Magiſtracies; yea, even of the Dictatorſhip. So that now Vertue was as ſpeedy a Ladder to climb unto Honours, as Nobility of Birth; and a Good man as much reſpected as a Great. A rare felicity of the times. Auguſtus. *A.V.C.*310. *A.V.C.*388

4. The People being thus mixt with the Nobles, as well in Marriages, as Honours; one would have thought that this Common-wealth, being thus equally poiſed, had been immortal. But as in the Natural Body, there can be no exact and Arithmetical proportion of the humours and elements, without ſome predominancy: ſo in the Body Politick, can there be no equal mixture of Plebeians and Patricians, without the ſupremacy of the one or the other. The people had preſently after the inſtitution of the Conſuls, raiſed a Commotion, and withdrew themſelves into Mount Aventine. Nor could they be intreated to return into the City, till there were granted unto them peculiar Officers called Tribuni Plebis; or Protectors of the Commons. Theſe being not long after by the Common Councel pronounced to be Sacroſancti, and inviolable, began to heave the Popular State too high, and thruſt the Ariſtocratical too low, not regarding to loſe the love of the one, ſo they might get the applauſe of the other. Inſomuch, that matters of judgement were devolved from the Fathers to the Commons; and the authority of the Senate trod under foot by the people. Nay, they proceeded ſo far, that Marius being Tribune, threatned to ſend Cotta the Conſul unto Priſon. And Sulpitius in the ſame Office, made the Conſuls forſake the Senate-houſe, and ſlew one of their ſons, whoſe heels were not nimble enough to flie away. And now were the Romans governed by that form of rule, than which there is no lower. So that as well by an inevitable neceſſity in Nature, as the ordinary courſe of Polities, there muſt be a reverting to the firſt, and Monarchical Authority. For queſtionleſs it fareth many times with a Common-wealth, as with the Sun, which runneth through all the ſigns of the Zodiack, till it return to the place where its motion firſt began. And the Platonick year of reducing all things to the ſame beginning, continuance and period, how falſe ſoever in the Books of Nature, is in ſome ſort true in the change of Government. *A.V.C.*26.

5. The way down-hill is eaſie and ordinary, but to aſcend unto the top requireth both wit to frame the ſteps, and courage to give the attempt. So was it here alſo with the Romans. They had naturally, and almoſt inſenſibly faln from a Monarchy to a Populacy, or Democracy: But to aſcend from a Populacy to a Monarchy, required many ſteps and degrees in many, much induſtry in all. Marius and Sylla, well skilled in feeding the humours of the People, were the firſt that attempted, and ſeverally mounted to ſuch a height of command, as never durſt any promiſe to them, nor they hope for themſelves. Marius was of an harſh and ſtern nature, equally cruel to the Enemies in war, and the people in peace; one whoſe birth the Romans might have had juſt cauſe to curſe, had he not ſaved them from the Cimbri. Sylla was one whoſe carriage none could enough commend before, or ſufficiently condemn after his proſperity. A man whoſe Peace was far more bloudy than his Wars; a better Subject than a Prince.

Theſe two gave way each to other, and both to death. Next theſe, as well in faction and deſigns, as bloud and alliance, ſucceeded Cæſar and Pompey: Two men never truly paralleld ſince their own times. Cæſar had a wit to invent ſo pregnant, a heart to execute ſo ſtout, and to both a Fortune ſo favourable, that he durſt undertake what no man dared; and his performances commonly were anſwerable to his undertakings. Pompey, a man greater than his own or his friends wiſhes, had triumphed over all the parts of the known World; and could he but have brooked an Equal, he had never met Superiour. Had theſe two lived in divers Ages, or exerciſed their valour on the common Enemy, the World had been too little to yeeld them imployments. But turning their forces one againſt the other, Pompey overthrown in the Field, was baſely murthered in Egypt: and Cæſar victoriouſly Conquerour in Theſſalie, was barbarouſly maſſacred in the Capitol. And though none of theſe four Worthies could ſettle the Monarchy in himſelf; yet this ſhall be to their eternal memory recorded, that they firſt opened the paſſage to others, and firſt moved the ſtone, which rowling along tumbled the People out of the Government.

6. After the overthrow of Pompey, and death of Cæſar, the Common-wealth might have recovered Liberty, if either Cæſar had left no heir, and Pompey no children; or rather, if Antonius, a man of an unquiet and turbulent ſpirit, had not begun new troubles. For he, knowing the affection of the common people unto young Octavius, Cæſars heir; and hearing the continual report of his approach to Rome for his Inheritance; did by Decree of the Senate reſtore Sextus the ſon of Pompey to his bloud and honours; Hoping that they two, inheriting their Fathers hatreds, would like Pellets in a Boyes Pot-gun, drive out each other; and ſo he might remain Lord of the whole. But young Octavius was too old to be ſo fetcht over; and had moreover more deſire to revenge his Fathers death on Brutus and Caſſius, than turn himſelf upon an enemy, that neither had done, nor could do him any hurt. At his firſt entrance into Rome, he declared himſelf Cæſars heir; though ſome regarding more his welfare than honour, diſſwaded him from it. His retinue at his entrance was but ſmal, his behaviour gentle and courteous; ſo that all had cauſe to love him, none to fear him. His firſt buſineſs was to Antonius, then poſſeſſed of all Cæſars eſtate. His words as modeſt, as his Petition juſt. Antonies anſwer ſomewhat churliſh, forbidding him to meddle in matters of State, adding that he was too young to take upon him the Name of Cæſar; and ſo diſmiſſed him unſatisfied, and with diſcontentments. AUGUSTUS (for by that name we mean to call him, though he was not yet ſo called) perceiving that

An-

Auguſtus. Antonies anſwer, though it ſhew but a delay, was in effect a denial; inſinuated into the acquaintance of Cicero, then potent among the Senators, and a capital Enemy of Antony; by whoſe means the Lords of the Senate began to caſt great affection towards him. Next in a ſolemn Oration to the People, he let them know, how he intended to have diſtributed his Fathers wealth among them; and how Antonius did unjuſtly detain it from them both. Certainly there is not any thing prevaileth ſooner with the ignoble many than hope of gain. No ſooner had he finiſhed his ſpeech, and given away that to them, which he thought impoſſible to get for himſelf, but all was in a tumult. None was ſo ſparing of his words, but he had ſome curſe in ſtore for Antonius: every one vowing the deſtruction of that man, whom they ſuppoſed to deprive them of AUGUSTUS Donative.

7. In this hurly burly Antony quits the Town, and is by the general voice of both houſes declared an Enemy to the State. An Army is given to Hircius, and Panſa, then Conſuls: AUGUSTUS, aged but 18. years, being proclaimed Imperator, and made head of the League againſt the common Foe. AUGUSTUS, as he loved not to be abſent from a neceſſary war, ſo he alwaies uſed to reſerve himſelf from the dangers of it; and therefore he committed the whole enterpriſe unto the Conſuls: well knowing that though the Officers and Souldiers took moſt pains to get the Victory, yet would the honour of it be referred to him, as Imperator; Whereas, if any thing fell out to the Army, not well, his being a Non-agent in the buſineſs, would bring his honour off without ſtain. The Conſuls therefore proceeded in the War againſt Antony: who ſeeing little poſſibility of prevailing, reſolved to ſell the loſs of his own liberty, and his Souldiers lives, at a dear rate. And indeed the fortune of the day was ſo equally ſhared, that as the Conſuls might boaſt of the vanquiſhment of Antony, ſo Antony might triumph in the death of the Conſuls.

AUGUSTUS had now as much as he could deſire, more than he expected; a victorious Army at his ſervice. He therefore applies himſelf ſo to them, that giving that among them which he had in preſent; and promiſing them greater favours, according as his fortune and their valour ſhould advance him, he bound them unto him in an eternal bond of allegiance, and made them the firſt ſtep by which he aſcended the Royalty. The Lords of the Senate hearing of the young mans fortune, thought it beſt to ſtrangle theſe hopes even in their Cradles; and to that end, decree the honour of overcoming Antony, not to belong to AUGUSTUS, but to Decius Brutus; for whoſe defence (being beſieged by Antony in Mutina), their Army had been levied. Nor did they think this froſt of unexpected unkindneſſe, ſufficient to nip the bloſſome of his hopes; but they denied him the Conſulſhip. Theſe harſh proceedings compelled AUGUSTUS (his honour now lying at ſtake) to enter Rome as Conqueror; and force the Fathers to grant him his deſires. Having thus gotten what for the time he aimed at; he generally ſhewed himſelf grateful to all, and particularly to ſome of the Souldiers; paying them what was behinde by promiſe, and openly proteſting that without their aid he durſt not have adventured into the Capitol. So by keeping his day with the Military men, and ſhewing his noble and generous nature in a thankful commemoration of their ſervice; he added ſtronger bonds to ſuch as were already his own; and won many daily to his ſide, which before were either neutral, or adverſaries.

8. Antony in the mean time was not idle, but knowing that Lepidus was beyond the Mountains with a puiſſant Army, he poſted thither; and ſo far prevailed with the Souldiers, that he was admitted into the Camp; where the General entertained him with all expreſſions of love and welcome. Antony perceiving the facile nature of Lepidus, ſoon perſwaded him to lead his Forces into Italie; promiſing him no leſs than the Lordſhip of the world, if he durſt but ſhew his face to the Romans. AUGUSTUS having continual newes of this combination, and fearing much the proweſſe of Antony, now ſtrengthned; conceived no courſe ſo fitting and convenient to his ends, as to joyn friendſhip, and to enter into confederacy with them. And this he did, not for any good will to either; but becauſe being deſtitute of means to reſiſt them, and alſo to revenge the death of his Father Julius, which he much laboured; he might with their forces oppreſs Caſſius and M. Brutus, and after as occaſion fell out, deal with them being ſevered. This League was ſolemnly confirmed by a bloudy Proſcription immediately following. Wherein to be revenged on their enemies, they betrayed their friends. A lamentable and ruthfull time, good and bad, rich and poor, being alike ſubject to the ſlaughter. Now was the time of Julius Ceſars Government thought to be the Golden Age; and every one began to curſe Brutus and Caſſius as the Autors of theſe preſent miſeries; whom they but lately honoured as the Reſtorers of the Common liberty. Nay the very Kings were deemed tolerable, and ſuch as lived in their daies, happy. The poor Romans had not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrants. Yea, they had three for one into the bargain. Such is the condition of us men, that we know not our own happineſs in the fruition, but the want. Two of theſe Triumviri glutted themſelves with bloud, taking pride in hearing the lamentable cries and groans of the people. Auguſtus on the contrary, ſhewed himſelf much grieved at this barbarous cruelty; ſo that his conſent ſeemed rather forced then voluntary. But this Proſcription, though in it ſelf cruel and tyrannical, produced ſome good and profitable effects in the Republick. For when by this Proſcription, and the enſuing Civil war, the ſtouteſt of the Nobles and Commons were made away, few being left which durſt endevour to recover the old Liberty; Auguſtus did the more eaſily eſtabliſh his Monarchy, and reſtore peace to the City. Moreover the proſecution of this cruelty ſo incenſed the people againſt Antony and Lepidus; that Auguſtus, whom moſt held excuſable, found them alwaies his faſt friends, if not for love to him, yet in ſpight to them.

9. But to proceed; Antony and Auguſtus leaving the guard of the City to Lepidus, with joynt forces march againſt Brutus and Caſſius, both overthrown by Antony; whom AUGUSTUS did therefore put upon that ſervice, as well to diminiſh Antonies forces, as to keep his own entire. As for him-himself, either he in policy suffered himself to be driven out of the field by Brutus, to make Antony more work; or else indeed durst not abide the battel. Such end had Brutus and Cassius, two men whom fortune seemed to be in love with on the sudden, and did as suddenly forsake them. Brutus the more accomplished man; Cassius the more expert souldier. I pass over AUGUSTUS wars in Italie, Antonies in Asia; the discontents between them, and their reconciliation by the means of Octavia, sister to the one, and wife to the other Emperor. As also how joyning forces together to oppress Sextus, then Lording it over the Sea, and proud with the conquest of Sicilia; they received him into the Confederacy, and joyned the Island of Sardinia to his other Conquests. To recompense which kindness, Sextus invited the two Generals aboard his Admiral Galley: and after a bountiful entertainment, return'd them safe to their Camps. I scarce have ever heard of so great an over-sight, among so many able Politicians. And much I marvel with my self, upon what confidence AUGUSTUS and Antony durst so far trust their persons to a reconciled Enemy: or on what reason Sextus having both of them in his power, would let slip so slightly that advantage; greater than which was never offered to a discontented and ambitious person. This I am sure of, that he afterward repented it, and could have wished that he had hearkned to the voice of Menas his old servant, who had perswaded him to make his best of that opportunity. The Kings of France and Aragon, of old enemies made new friends, had the like enterview at Savonæ: which that notable Historiographer and States-man Guicciardine, describeth with much wonder and commendation. Yet in the like case, have many, and as I think, worthily condemned Lewis the 11. of France, and Charles of Burgundie, the Arch-politicians of those daies; in that Lewis at Peronne put himself into the hands of Charles his Enemy, who also after a short restraint, dismissed him. Augustus. A.V.C.711.

10. These solemn expressions of amity between the three Generals, being thus ended, and Antony gone for Egypt; AUGUSTUS then began to contrive his establishment in the State, though with the ruine of his Colleagues. He beginneth first with Sextus, having by gifts and promises drawn Menas unto his side; who by reason of his inwardness with his Master, knew most of his designs. By the directions of this Menas, and the assistance of Lepidus, he quickly overthrew Sextus; who flying death in Europe, by the hand of AUGUSTUS, found it in Asia, by the command of Antony. After this victory, AUGUSTUS, either having, or pretending a quarrel against Lepidus, entreth into his Camp, seizeth his person, and depriving him of all honors, confineth him to Rome. A man that half against his will, stumbling upon the Government, had beyond any desert of his, enjoyed ten years continuance of Empire and prosperity. An action of a very high nature, and such as AUGUSTUS durst not have ventured on, if Antony had been in Italie. He therefore advisedly removed him out of his way, before he would attempt the same. It hath been ever a chief Maxim in Court-policy, to remove that man out of the way, under pretence of some honourable charge, whom we intend either to cast from his present honors; or else to make less potent with Prince and People. For which cause also AUGUSTUS perswaded Antonies absence from the City, to bring him at the last into discredit and contempt. For well he knew that his dotage on Cleopatra, could not but draw him into many inconveniencies: neither could his neglecting the State, to riot with his Lemman, be other than dastastful to the Lords and People. Next, he commanded his Sister Octavia to leave her husband Antonies house; yet privately he perswaded her to live there still, and bring up his children; that so the Romans seeing her noble demeanor and love to her husband, might the more heartily detest him, who so ignobly and unkindly had rejected her. To add more fuel to this flame of hatred, he readeth Antonies will unto the people; in which many of the Roman Provinces were bequeathed to Cleopatra's children, and other things ordained to the common prejudice. Antony likewise preferred many Bils against AUGUSTUS, as that he had deposed Lepidus from the Triumvirate; that he had divided Italie amongst his own Souldiers only; that he had not restored the ships borrowed to make war against Sextus.

11. These discontents seconded with an ambitious hope of prevailing, made them both resolute to refer all to the decision of a Battel. Antony had a Fleet consisting of 500 ships, high-built, and trimmed up rather for a Triumph, than a fight. His Land Forces consisted of 100000 Foot, and 12000 Horse. AUGUSTUS had the like number of Horsemen, 80000 Foot, and 250 good Men of War, snug and close, built more for use then ostentation. The Randezvouz is Actium, a place seeming to be marked out for notable designs: here being fought also in our Fathers daies, that famous battel, wherein the Venetians gave the world to understand, that the Turks Forces by Sea were not invincible. Antony was on the offensive side, and therefore much doubted whether it were better to give the Onset by Sea or by Land. Cleopatra, whose words were Oracles, perswaded him to the Sea-fight; not that she thought it more safe, but that if Antony lost the day, she might with more facility escape. To this resolution, when most of the Captains had for fear agreed; one of the old Souldiers thus bluntly gain-said it. "What a miserable security art thou possessed with, most noble Emperor? Where "is that ancient fore-sight, wherewith thou hast formerly prevented all dysasters, and turned the "Enemies devices on their own heads? Consider with thy self, most noble General, what uncertain "friends the Winde and Sea are? To how fickle an Element thou dost trust thy fortunes? Let the "Egyptians and Phœnicians, old Mermaids, born and nurst up in the Sea, follow this kinde of warfare. "But let us thy true Roman spirits, try our valour on the firm Land, and there fight for thy Empire, "and our own lives. Perhaps thou dost mistrust our faith, look here Antony (with that he opened his "bosome) and thou shalt see many an honourable scar got in thy service. We are now too old to "learn new Treasons: Alter therefore thy resolution, and to please a woman cast not away so many "of thy faithful Followers. Certainly the unresistible powers of heaven when they decree a mans

Auguſtus. deſtruction, overthrow thoſe counſels by which he ſhould eſcape it. Antony turneth a deaf ear to this Souldiers wholeſome advice; and borrowing from Cleopatra two or three kiſſes (as if from the fountain of her lips he had derived all his courage) without any more ceremony prepareth himſelf unto the battel.

12. AUGUSTUS on the other ſide, ſeeing a neceſſity of a Sea-fight, was yet in this comforted, that his Veſſels were more uſeful and better manned, though fewer than his enemies: that his men to him were faithful, and by reaſon of their many Victories, in good heart; From Antony were daily revolted ſome Kings and Captains of note, to the great incouragement of the one ſide, and diſheartning of the other. The whole charge of the war he committed to M. Vipſanius Agrippa; who failing in no duty of a good Captain, took from his Galleys whatſoever might be impediments to the valiant, or ſhelter for the cowardly; all that was comberſome to his own men, or advantagious to the Enemy. Things thus ordered, and the battels ready to joyn, Auguſtus Cæſar ſtanding where he might ſee and be ſeen of all, is ſaid to make this or the like Oration. "Fellowes and Companions in Arms, I ſuppoſe it needleſs to hearten you, which never were acquainted with fear; or bid you overcome, which never yet knew what it was not to vanquiſh. Conqueſt hath alwaies ſat upon the edges of your ſwords, and victory been written in your foreheads. Be not now backward to add this one to your other Triumphs. When after the death of my father Julius of famous memory, I firſt dealt in matters of War, I rather found, than made you good Souldiers. And during this twelve year ſervice under me, neither have you been wanting in the duty of faithful followers; nor I (I hope) of a vigilant and grateful Leader. Sure I am, I expreſſed my ſelf as far as I could, and more I would, had I been able. Let not the number, nor the greatneſs of the adverſe Galleys any waies affright you. The hugeneſs of their Bulks maketh them unapt for imployment; and the multitude, one clogging and hindring the others, may as much further our Victory as theirs. They exceed us in multitudes of Men, we them in number of Souldiers. The meaning of the word Pilot is unknown among them. And for their Mariners, the beſt of them are but Carters, Reapers, and Harveſtmen, raked out of the field; the reſt the excrement of common priſons, wherewith their Veſſels are loaded, not manned. The General is indeed a fit Captain for ſuch a ſelected company. It is the ſame Antony, whom you once drave out of the Field, before Mutina. I verily perſwade my ſelf, that neither he dares think of recovering, or you of loſing your former glories. It is the ſame Antony, who being ſhamefully chaſed out of Parthia; only in that he was not vanquiſhed, proclaimed himſelf Victor. It is the ſame Antony, who intended to make Rome ſubject to the Egyptians; and to diſtribute the Provinces, purchaſed with the bloud and vertue of our Anceſtors, amongſt Iras and her fellow Chamber-maids. Nay indeed, it is not Antony at all, but the ſhadow only of that ſubſtance, which now is hid in Cleopatra's Cabbin. Courage then brave men of Arms; be, as you have ſtill been, Conquerors. To ſpeak more, were to detain you from Victory. Only this, call to minde your ancient valour. Remember that I am Cæſar, you Romans.

13. This ſpeech animated the new Souldiers, and confirmed the old; So that with a general acclamation they give the aſſault. Death, wounds, and blowes, diſhed in divers faſhions, and ſerved in by ſeveral men; were the beſt delicates prepared for theſe unwelcome viſitants. Cleopatra beholding the Battel, and doubting the ſucceſs; through the thickeſt of Antonies Fleet, made away with the 60 Galleys appointed for her Guard. This diſorder made the breach, at which the Victory entred. Antony ſeeing her flight, left his Squadron alſo; and being taken into her Galley, hoyſed ſail for Egypt: Herein playing the part of a cowardly Souldier, whileſt each of his Souldiers executed the office of a couragious General. For they ſo abſolutely perſiſted in the Fight, that AVGVSTVS was fain to offer them mercy ſooner than they would demand it; and divers times before they would accept it. At A.V.C.713. laſt they all ſware Allegiance unto him. The Victory being thus gotten, AVGVSTVS (no loſer of advantages) ſpeedeth into Egypt, which he reduceth into the form of a Province; making the people pay for fine twenty millions of Gold. By receiving this money, he ſo weakned them that they had no ability to raiſe an after-war; and by diſtributing part of it among his Souldiers, he confirmed them in obedience. As for Antony, he ſeeing his fortunes deſperate, redeemed the honour loſt in his life, by a noble and heroick death. And Cleopatra ended her life not long after alſo. A Woman more wel-favoured, than fair; wel-ſpoken, rather then either. Antonies Courtiers had ſeen many Ladies more lovely, none more prevailing; men being chained to her by the ears, rather than the eyes.

14. I willingly omit AVGVSTVS entry into Rome; as alſo the ſtate and magnificence of his Triumph. His Victory he uſed ſo juſtly, that none felt the fury of the War, but ſuch as were ſlain in the Battel. To aſſure himſelf of Antonies adherents, was his firſt care: to which end he burnt in the Common Forum, the Coffers of Antony, unopened; wherein all his Letters from his friends in Rome had been incloſed: well knowing, that as long as any thought themſelves ſuſpected Adverſaries, they would never ſhew themſelves true friends. To the Senators and Magiſtrates he made ſumptuous Feaſts; to the Common people he exhibited magnificent and pleaſing Stage-playes; and with all variety of pleaſure, baniſhed from both, as well ſorrow for the old Proſcription, as fear of a new. But this was only as a preparation to his main deſign. There were two men moſt dear unto him, and privie to his Counſels, Mecenas and Agrippa: which in the object of their love differed only in this; Mecenas was a lover of AVGVSTVS; Agrippa of the Emperour. Mecenas was of the rank of Knights, a man of good and bad parts equally compounded. When his buſineſs required care, vigilant and circumſpect; at leiſure time, exceſſively riotous. Agrippa was the firſt of his houſe; a man alike fit for Camp and Counſel; one neither careleſs of a good name, nor covetous of a great.

For

For although he only was the man which vanquiſhed Sextus, and Antony; yet well skilled in the humours of Princes, he gave Auguſtus the honour of all his Conqueſts; making the vertue, not the reward, the end of his actions. So by doing nobly, and ſpeaking modeſtly of it, he was without envie; but not without glory. With theſe two AUGUSTUS withdrew into a private Cloſet, and then brake unto them in this ſort. He made firſt unto them a long diſcourſe of the Civil Wars; Then added; "That having by his fortune, and the valour of his Souldiers, put an end to the troubles; he was "unreſolved what to do; Whether to reſign the Empire to the People, or retain it ſtill in his "own hands: That in a buſineſs of ſuch importance, he durſt not relie altogether on his own wiſ-"dome; That he had made them his Judges, as men that could ſpeak ſoundly, and durſt ſpeak freely: "That he knew them to have more care of his honour, than profit; but of the Common-wealth, more "than both: That his Counſels, which courſe ſoever he took, would not be by them eliminated. "He therefore intreated them to conſider what was to be done, and to give up their opinions in it.

15. Agrippa after a ſhort ſilence thus began. "I know, thou canſt not but marvel, O Cæſar, that "I, who under thine Empire, am ſure to be beyond precedent exalted; ſhould perſwade thee to live "private. But I eſteem more thy honour, than my profit; the publick good, than my particular pre-"ferment. And yet perhaps my Counſel ſhall be as profitable, if not as plauſible as the contrary. "I know thee to be no way delighted with lies and flattery; and will therefore deal with thee freely "and plainly. Thou haſt indeed put a period to the Civil Wars; but to what end, unleſs thou doſt "reſtore unto the Common-wealth that Liberty for which the Wars were raiſed? What benefit can the "people reap from thy Victory, if thou doſt uſe it only as an inſtrument, for their greater bondage? "Doſt thou think that the Romans having ſo many hundred years maintained their liberty, will now "be willing to forgo it? No, Cæſar, no; Flatter not thy ſelf with theſe hopes. Marius the yonger, "and Sertorius, were quickly cut off, when their ends were once known; and Julius thy Father of "happy memory, did not long live, after his actions ſeemed to bring the Common liberty in hazard. "And ſhall we think that there is no true Roman ſpirit ſurviving; No Brutus living to attempt the "like againſt thee? Believe me Cæſar, believe me, it is far better not to meddle with the Empire at "all, than to be forced to abandon it. But ſay Divine Providence will ſo protect thee, that thou "maieſt out-live ſuch practiſes; and ſhalt thou alſo not out-live thy glories? This preſent age perchance "will not cenſure thine actions, becauſe it dares not: But Poſterity, free from all reſpects of love or "hatred, cannot but call them into queſtion, and brand thy enterpriſe with Ambition, and perhaps "Tyranny. If thy deſigns proſper, they will judge thee to have riſen unjuſtly; if otherwiſe, to have "fallen deſervedly. How much better then were it, now when thine honour is without blemiſh, "and thy reputation unſtained, to reſign thy authority. Indeed when Sextus lorded it over the Sea, "and Antony over Egypt, it might have been thought want of ſpirit, to have depoſed thy ſelf from the "Government. But now to do it, when thou art without Rival in the Empire; now, when thou art "ſole Commander of the Worlds Forces; now when the People and Senate lie proſtrate at the feet of "thy mercy; were to ſtrike dumb detraction, and to make the World admire thy Temper. Thou "art at this preſent the joy and comfort of the World; there is wanting to thee neither Wealth "nor Fame. Here then fix thy foot. For go but one ſtep beyond this Non ultra, and thou "wilt run into a boundleſs Ocean of perils, which have no end, but the end of thy life and repu-"tation.

16. "Not ſo, excellent Agrippa, replyed Mecenas. I never heard good Pilot finde fault with Sea-"room; or of more veſſels caſt away in the Ocean, than in the Straights, and narrow paſſages. Our "Republick is a Ship fraught with divers Nations. She hath been long toſſed on the waves of Civil "diſſenſions, long driven up and down with the Wind of ambition; and there is now no place ſo fit "for her ſafety, as the unlimited Ocean of one mans power. This Empire at firſt riſing, ſeemed not to "require a Monarch; but it is now grown too unwieldy, to be without one. Take then upon thee, "O Cæſar, this Empire; or to ſay better, do not forſake it. I ſhould never thus adviſe thee, did I con-"ceive any poſſible inconveniences. The Senate doth allow thee a competent guard of valiant and "faithful Souldiers; whom then ſhouldeſt thou fear? Nay, ill may I proſper, if I ſee any cauſe of fear, "were thy Guard caſhiered. Enemies thou haſt none. For ſuch as were, are either already ſlain by thy "valour, or made thy faſt friends, by thy bounty and clemency. To omit Marius and Sertorius, I will "a little touch at thy Father Julius. He too good a Souldier to be a Statiſt, was too heady and "violent in eſtabliſhing his Government. Nor could he cunningly temporize, and ſuffer the people in-"ſenſibly, and by degrees, to drop into bondage; but oppreſs them all at once. Again, he committed "a great Soleciſm in State, when diſcharging his Guard, he ſought to retain that Empire by fair means, "which he had gotten by violence. I know thee, O Cæſar, to be of a more wary and cunning beha-"viour. Learn alſo to work out thine own ſafety, by Pompeys misfortunes. He after the finiſhing of "the Pontick War, at Brunduſium, disbanded his Army; and thereby merited to be accounted "an honeſt and moderate man. Certainly, he ſhewed himſelf in the courſe of this action, rather "vertuous than fortunate or politick. For preſently he began to be contemned, and by his impro-"vident weakning of himſelf, made an open paſſage to his own ruine. I commend his modeſty, more "than his brain; neither did he himſelf, on better conſiderations, approve his own doings: and "therefore he reſolved, had he been Victor in Pharſalia, never to have committed the like over-"ſight. So it is, and ſo it will fall out with thee, O Cæſar, if in this action thou propoſe him "to be thy pattern. It is not ſafe, Agrippa ſaith, to take the Empire; leſs ſafe it is to refuſe it.

Auguſtus. "A ſetled and innative vice it is in man, never to endure that any not above our own rank ſhould "over-top us. Romes ſecond founder Camillus; Scipio, that ſcourge of Carthage, were diſgraced; and "M. Coriolanus baniſhed by our Anceſtors: only becauſe their worth had lifted them above the or-"dinary pitch of Subjects. Do not thou hope to fare better than thy Predeceſſors. Heretofore, per-"chance, thou mighteſt have ſought the Empire, to ſatisfie thy ambition. The Empire muſt now be "thy refuge and Aſylum. Credit me, the Lords of the Senate, after ſo many years of Obedience, know "not how to Govern; neither canſt thou having ſo long been a Governor, learn Obedience. True it is, "that in matters of domeſtical buſineſs, a man may ſtop and deſiſt where he will: But in the getting "of an Empire, there is no mean between the death of an Enemy, and the life of a Prince. Thou haſt "already gone too far to retire. Now thou muſt reſolve to be Cæſar or nothing. To ſay more were ſu-"perfluous. Thine own diſcretion will ſuggeſt unto thee better Arguments. Only this, I know that "thou haſt in thee too much Julius, not to be an Emperor.

17. AUGUSTUS ſeemed to incline to this latter opinion, whether moved with Mecenas Oration, eſpecially his inſtance in Pompey; or that he was before reſolved to follow that courſe, is uncertain. Howſoever, ſeeming with great attention to obſerve their ſpeeches, and gathering their ſeveral rea-ſons and motives together; he made this reply. "A moſt hard thing it is, for a divided minde, to "make a well-joyn'd Anſwer. Divided I am, and troubled between your two opinions; loath to fol-"low either, ſithence in ſo doing I muſt offend one. Yet ſithence there is a neceſſity of Reſolution, "I intend, though I like well of thy advice, Agrippa; to follow thine, Mecenas. In doing which, I am "but an inſtrument of the Deſtinies, to put their wils in execution. Often have I heard my Father Octa-"vius report, how Nigidius, famous for his skill in Judiciary Aſtrologie, told him once in open Senate, "That he had gotten an Emperor for the Romans. As alſo, how M. Cicero, ſo renowned for Wit and "Eloquence, dreamed that he ſaw Jupiter place me on the top of the Capitol, with a Whip in mine "hand. Certainly, if the powers of Heaven promiſe me ſo great an Empire; I will not be wanting to my "ſelf; but will add by my induſtry, to their influence. To further my deſigns, I do deſire you, nay I "conjure you both, that as you have been ever ready in your Counſels; ſo you would not now be "backward in any neceſſary aſſiſtance. This ſaid, they preſently enter into a new conference, how to manage a buſineſs of this weight; what Senators to acquaint with their intent; how to diſpoſe of the Army, not yet caſhiered: with what Plummet it were beſt to ſound the minds of the common peo-ple, and to oblige all ſorts unto him. This Conſultation ended, AUGUSTUS continued his affabi-lity to the People, and reſpect to the Nobles. An opportunity he had to expreſs himſelf to both. There was at that time a Famine, which ſhrewdly raged among the Commons. To the poorer ſort, he diſtri-buted Corn, gratis; to others at a mean price. Riches and honours he communicated to both ſorts; the better to wipe out of their memories, the ancient freedome. Such parts of the City as were de-ſtroyed by caſualty of fire, ruined by length of time, or defaced during the Civil Wars, he re-edified. Houſes of Common-aſſemblies he repaired; Temples, conſecrated to the gods, he ſpared no coſt to adorn and beautifie. And finally, ſo freely diffuſed his bounty, that there was no part or member of the City which had not ſome taſte of it. Next, he diſmiſſed his Souldiers, aſſigning them Lands and habitations in divers parts of Italy: That ſo the People might conceive his Reſignation to be reall; and yet, if need were, his forces might be quickly re-aſſembled. Nor were Agrippa and Mecenas wanting for their parts, to promote the cauſe: but carefully acquainted ſome of the Senate with it, who ſtood well affected to them; and cunningly prepared others, who had ſtood indif-ferent.

18. The foundation thus laid, and the Senate ſate, AUGUSTUS roſe from his ſeat, and ſpake to this, or the like effect. "When I conſider with my ſelf the infinite extent of the Roman Empire; I "proteſt I ſtand at a maze: marvelling how ſuch, as heretofore have raiſed combuſtions in the State, "durſt undertake the ſole adminiſtration of it. What Nation in the World, hath not either begged their "Peace at our Gates; or felt the fury of our Wars at their own? What Countreys have we not harri-"ed with Fire and Sword; making the riſing and ſetting of the Sun the bounds of our Dominions? It "muſt queſtionleſs proceed from an over-weaning conceit in them, of their own abilities; who thought "themſelves ſo fit to undergo that burden, which none but the immortal gods can carry. Of my "ſelf I will not ſay much. Only, I hope I may ſay with modeſty, that I am not inferior to Cinna, nor "it may be to Sylla: Yet have I found in my ſelf, by late experience, how unable I was to manage the "affairs of State, even then when I had two Coadjutors. There is no Atlas of ſtrength ſufficient, to "bear up this Heaven; No Star of influence ſufficient, to animate this Sphere; No one form of vertue "ſufficient, to actuate this matter. Neither indeed is it fit, that the Republick which ought to be im-"mortal, ſhould depend only on the life and wel-fare of one man. There never was, ſince the begin-"ning of time, a City repleniſhed with greater ſtore of worthy and able men, either to conſult or exer-"ciſe. Never was there ſeen ſo grave and diſcreet a Conſiſtory; Never ſo many of both ſorts, ſo fit to "govern. I have by your Directions, and the Valour of your Souldiers, put an end to all homebred "quarrels. I have been your inſtrument to reduce Peace internal and external, to your City; and de-"ſire now no other Guerdon or recompence for any former ſervices, than a quiet and a private life; "free from all ſuch dangers and inconveniences, as are inſeparably annexed to the Soveraignty. "Now therefore, and may my action be auſpicious and fortunate to my Countrey, do I reſign my "authority; committing my ſelf, and the Common-wealth into the hands of the Senate and People of Rome.

19. This Oration ended, there followed a ſoft and ſilent buzzing in the houſe. Some ſuppoſed this ſpeech ſpeech not to have ſo much truth, as art and cunning: yet ſmothered their conceits for fear of after-claps. Others were Creatures of his own making; and they hoping to riſe in the fall of their Countrey, would not hear of a Reſignation. Some few of the wiſer ſort thought it not expedient, to put the Reigns again into the hands of the Multitude. The reſt out of a ſluggiſh and phlegmatick Conſtitution, choſe rather the preſent eſtate with ſecurity, than to ſtrive to recover the old with danger. All therefore with a joynt-conſent proclaim him ſole Emperor; and ſolemnly entreat him to ſave the Common-wealth, otherwiſe running to inevitable ruine. He for a while, as vainly denied to accept the Government, as they vainly perſiſted to deſire him. At laſt, wearied with the clamours of all in general, and importunity of ſome in particular; he by little and little yeelded to their requeſts, taking upon him the Empire for ten years, with this Proviſo; that if before that time expired, he could fully ſettle and order the preſent State, he would give up his charge. This he gave out, not with a purpoſe of performance; (for at the end of every Decennium he renewed his Leaſe of the Government;) But that the people ſeeing ſo nigh a poſſibility of regaining their Liberties, might not practiſe againſt him. Whereas, had he for term of life received the ſupreme Authority, he had no doubt haſtned his own overthrow. For well he knew, that not the Title of Dictator, but the Epithite Perpetual, was the deſtruction of CÆSAR: And yet a great reſpect was had alſo in the choice of the Title. The name of King he refuſed, as being odious unto the Citizens. Neither would he be called Romulus, though he much deſired it; leſt they ſhould ſuppoſe that he did affect the Tyranny. When the people called him Dictator, he rent his Garments; deſiring them to diſcharge him of a name ſo hated; and being once called Lord, (Dominus) he forbad alſo that Title by publick Edict. Princeps Senatus was the only Title he admitted: well knowing, that the like glorious attributes were heaped on his Father Julius by them which leaſt loved him, only to this end, that growing more and more into hatred, he might the ſooner be diſpatched. Nor was he ignorant that the Common people led more by appearances, than truth; diſcerned names more plainly than executions: and that the only courſe to make greatneſs ſtand firmly, was to receive extraordinary power under a Title not offenſive. The name alſo of AUGUSTUS conferred upon him by the Senate, (as if there had been ſomething in him more than mortal) he refuſed not; as a Title expreſſing more dignity and reverence than authority. And having pleaſed himſelf in the choiſe of his Title, he next proceeded to the eſtabliſhment of his power, which he thus purſued.

A.V.C.725.

20. When firſt at the hands of the Lords of the Senate, he had for ten years received the Government; there was appointed unto him two Cohorts of Prætorian ſouldiers for the guard of his perſon; to whom the Senate allowed the double wages of a Legionary ſouldier, to make them the more vigilant and heedful in their charge. Over theſe he appointed two Prefects or Governors, (Captains of the Guard we may beſt term them.) To commit the charge to one only, might breed danger; to more, confuſion. Agrippina, to ſettle Nero in the Empire, prevailed with Claudius, to make Burrus, whom ſhe had at her devotion, the ſole Captain: and Nimphidius, fallen from his hopes of ſetting Galba beſides the quiſhon; deſired the command of the Guard, as the next ſtep to the Soveraignty. In choice of theſe Captains, he obſerved two Rules. Firſt, he ever choſe them, ex ordine Equeſtri, not Senatorio; leſt that ſo high a dignity joyned to ſo high a birth, might ſtartle their reſolutions to ſome deſigns againſt his quiet. Secondly, he made choice of two ſuch, as were of contrary humours, and ſomewhat at odds; that ſo the ill intents of the one (if they ſhould harbour any) might be thwarted and revealed by the other; and both, in a noble emulation, ſhould contend to be moſt forward in his ſervice. The next courſe which he took for his own ſecurity, was a law he made to curbe the wils and attempts of the great ones. For whereas it had been formerly unlawful to queſtion a Bondman, in matters concerning the life and death of his Lord; AUGUSTUS paſſed an Act, that all ſuch Bondmen ſhould be firſt ſold to him, or the Common-wealth. By means whereof he kept the Lords, before preſuming on the ſecreſie of their ſlaves, from all cloſe and private Conſpiracies againſt him. Having thus ſtrengthned his perſon, he aſſumed to himſelf the Imperial, Cenſorial, and Tribunitian authority, together with the Sacerdotal dignity. As Emperor and General of the Men of War, he could preſs Souldiers, raiſe Taxes, proclaim Wars, make Peace; yea, and put to death the very beſt and ſtouteſt of the Senators. As Cenſor, it was in his power to reform corrupt manners, enquire after mens carriages, to take in and put out of the Senate whom he liſted; to place and diſplace the people from an honourable Tribe, to a leſs honourable. Yet would he not be called Cenſor, as a name too inferior; but accepted the Prerogatives of it, after the ſurrendry of Manutius, and his aſſociate; two men ſo unfit for that Magiſtracy, that they could object no crime to old or young, of which themſelves were not guilty. The Tribunitian authority enabled him to hinder any thing attempted ag inſt his liking. It preſerved his perſon from all contumely and injury; giving him power to puniſh, as an execrable perſon, (yea, and without any formality of the Law) whoſoever had offended him either in word or deed. As for the Pontifical Dignity, it made him a little more reverenced, not more potent. Only it added to his title the ſtile of Pontifex Maximus, or Chief Biſhop; and made him of authority amongſt the Prieſts, and in ſacred matters, things that concerned Religion. The light of Reaſon taught him, that it was convenient for him, being a Prince, to have command on all his people; He had been elſe but half a Monarch, ſuch as ſome Princes are with us; who quit their Clergy to be governed by a Forein Head.

21. Theſe ſeveral Prerogatives annexed together, ſeemed not yet ſufficient: and therefore he ſo cunningly dealt with the Senators, that they gave him a general Exemption from the Coactive power of the Law. Which once obtained, he ſeriouſly bends his thoughts to ſettle the Common-wealth; and ſo to ſettle it, that by uniting all parties, and giving ſatisfaction to all Intereſſes, it might not be obnoxious to ſuch frequent and tumultuous alterations, as it had been formerly. But herein, when he Auguſtus. had conſulted the ancient Platforms, he found no ſmall difficulty. The Form deſcribed by Plato, ſhewed rather how a City ought to be governed, than how it may be. Ariſtotle, though bred in the Free States of Greece, was a friend to Monarchie; but his diſcourſes dark, and ſpeculative, and not eaſily reduced to practiſe. Solon afforded the People too much Authority, the Nobles too little, the King none. The old Carthaginian Legiſlator attributed too much to Riches, too little to Vertue. The Perſian Law-makers indulged the King too much, to the Subject nothing. And on the other ſide, Licurgus in his modelling of the State of Sparta, aſcribed too little to the King, and too much to the Senate. Zaleucus was rather the Author of ſome particular Lawes, than the Framer of a Commonwealth. Phaleas, and Hippodamus, as unimitable altogether as Plato. Seeing therefore that none of the old Patterns did come home to his purpoſe; and withall conſidering with himſelf, that the unmixt Formes of Rule were not equally ballanced, and by conſequence ſubject unto change: he reſolved to frame his Common-wealth out of the perfections of the three good Formes, their imperfection being rejected, reſerving to himſelf the Supreme Majeſty, to the Senate eminent Authority, to the People convenient Liberty, all in a juſt and fit proportion. And to ſay truth, he did ſo mix the Soveraignty of one, with the Liberty of all; that both the Lords and People, without fear of bondage or ſedition, injoyed their accuſtomed Freedoms. The Conſuls and Nobles of the City aſſembled as formerly they uſed; matters of State they handled by themſelves; Ambaſſadors of forein Nations they heard, and diſpatched. The Commons aſſembled in the Comitia, to enact Laws and elect Magiſtrates, as in the free Commonwealth. Yet ſo that nothing was done without the conſent and privity of the Prince, who for the moſt part, nominated the ſucceſſive Magiſtrate, leaving the confirmation of him to the people. So that the change, as he contrived it, was not violent and at once, but by degrees, and by the ſilent approbation of both Eſtates, as ſeeming to conſiſt more in the alteration of the Magiſtrate, than of the Lawes.

22. But (to proceed more particularly) the firſt care he took, was to confirm Religion in the ſame ſtate in which he found it. I mean Religion, as the Romans uſed the word, for thoſe particular, though idolatrous Forms of Worſhip, which to their ſeveral gods had been uſed among them. This, though he might have changed, as the Pontifex Maximus, or chief Biſhop of the City; yet very wiſely he forbare it. It is not ſafe for Princes that are ſetled in a long deſcent of Government, to be too active in ſuch changes: But it is dangerous to attempt it in a green State, and in an Empire not well quieted, and inured to bondage. Men are more ſenſible of the ſmalleſt alterations in the Church, than greater changes in the State, and raiſe more frequent broils about it. The Romans ſpecially were exceeding tender in this point. The ancient Ædiles formerly received it into their charge, that they permitted no external either gods or Ceremonies, to be introduced into the City. And by Æmilius it was enacted for a Law, That none ſhould offer ſacrifice in any publick place, after a new and Forein faſhion. Excellent therefore was the counſel which Mecenas gave him, when he firſt undertook the Empire, viz. "That "he ſhould follow conſtantly the Religion which he found eſtabliſhed, and compell others alſo to do "the like. For Forein and ſtrange Rites (ſaith he) will offend the people, work many inconvenient "alterations in the Civil State; yea and moſt likely will occaſion many both ſeditions and conſpira-"cies. Words which he ſpake not to the air, but to a Prince exceeding apprehenſive of the beſt advice. Nor did AUGUSTUS ever ſhew himſelf more careful in any one Art of Empire, than he did in this. That which Mecenas noted, we finde true in theſe later Ages; in times more skilful of obedience, than the moſt quiet hour of AUGUSTUS Government. No one thing more hath cauſed ſo frequent and ſo general Rebellions in the States of Chriſtendome, than alterations of this nature. I cannot therefore but commend it, as a pious reſolution in a late mighty Monarch: Better ſome few corruptions ſhould be ſuffered in a Church, than ſtill a change.

23. Religion thus eſtabliſhed, in the next place the welfare of the whole Empire conſiſted chiefly in reforming of the City; from which, as from the heart, life was conveyed to all the Provinces abroad. And in the City the corruption was moſt apparent in the Senate it ſelf. With them therefore he beginneth, well knowing that crimes in men of eminent place end not in themſelves; but by degrees become diffuſed among their Clients and Followers. Now in the Senate were many and deſertleſs men, who had been taken into it during the Civil Wars; as they could court the People, and humour ſuch as were moſt potent. Of theſe he expelled none by his own power; but making a ſpeech to them in the Senate, of the antient order and preſent confuſion of the houſe, he firſt exhorted them to look back on their former lives, and to judge of their own abilities and merits, for ſo honourable a room. Then he deſired ſome of them to pick out ſuch among them, as were in diſpoſition factious, and in life faulty, but loath to conceive ſo ill of their own actions; which they did accordingly. Yet as it often happeneth, that the great Thief leadeth the leſſe to the Gallows; and as Commines obſerveth, that after the Battel of Monliherry, Offices were taken from many for flying away, and conferred on ſuch as ran ten miles beyond them: So remained many in the the Senate, neither leſs vicious, nor leſs violent; only more potent to maintain their doings, than ſome others whom they had removed. AUGUSTUS therefore joyning to him Agrippa, proceedeth to a new review: And certainly it much concerned him in the ſetling of his affairs, that none ſhould have a voice in that famous Councel, but ſuch as were of able judgements, honeſt repute, and wel-affected to his Service and the Commonwealth. An enterpriſe which he eſteemed ſo dangerous, that he permitted entrance to no Senator till he were ſearched: himſelf wearing a Brigandine under his Gown; and being invironed with ten of the moſt couragious and beſt beloved of the whole company. Such as he found in either kinde inexcuſable, he diſcharged from their attendance; electing ſuch in their places, which were either ennobled for their wiſdome, of noted moderation, or otherwiſe ſtrong in their de-dependants. Yet ſo that greatneſs of Revenue was eſteemed neither a fit Patronage for any, if they were offenſive; nor a juſt cauſe to challenge intereſt in the houſe. Such of them as were rich rather in the gifts of the minde, than thoſe of fortune, he relieved with honourable Penſions: and finally he beſtirred himſelf ſo reſolutely, that all confeſſed that they had need of ſuch a wiſe Phyſician, to cure that dull Conſumption, whereinto the Common-wealth was fallen. Auguſtus.

24. In other things he ſeldome did proceed againſt them as of himſelf; but when that any of them had conſpired his ruine, he referred them to the judgement of their fellowes. And this he did partly to reſerve unto the Court the ancient Prerogative; partly, not to be Judge and party in his own cauſe: but principally following the example of his Father Julius, who counterfeiting a wretchleſs contempt of his adverſaries; uſed when he was leaſt ſuſpected, under hand, and by publick Officers, to work their deſtruction. Many alſo of them whom the Senate had condemned, he would freely pardon: Conceiving truly, that the queſtioning of men of high calling, would produce as much terror, though it argued not ſo much rigor, as the puniſhment. Yet if extremity of law was uſed towards ſome few, it was to ſettle quietneſs in the whole; and as it were a particular bloud-letting for the general health. Thoſe who had followed the factions of Brutus and Antony, he forgave freely. And not ſo only, but by manifeſting his words by his deeds, and adding truſts and honours to his pardons; he made his Chair of State more ſetled, and immovable. So Cæſar by erecting the faln and broken Images of Pompey, made his own ſtatues ſtand more firmly. But the chief Act by which he bridled the Nobles, was an Edict by him promulgated, forbidding any of them, his leave not granted, to travel out of Italie. For well he knew, that in an Empire unſetled, and Provinces not quieted; the preſence and authority of men of that rank, might raiſe greater troubles, than could be eaſily ſuppreſſed. Examples he wanted not, that eſpecially of Cato; who after the overthrow of Pompey, ſtirred ſuch a war againſt Cæſar in Africk, that he never bought Victory at a dearer rate. Yet not altogether to impriſon them, he licenſed them at their pleaſure, to viſit Sicilia, and Gaul Narbonoyſe; Provinces cloſe to the continent of Italie, altogether unfurniſhed for Wars; and indeed ſuch, as by reaſon of the variety of pleaſures in them uſed, were more likely to weaken their mindes, than to arm their bodies.

25. Now to give the Senate ſome ſweet meat to their ſowre ſawce; he as much honoured and reverenced that Order, as ever it was in the Free-ſtate: ſubmitting himſelf to their Judgements, and appearing of his own accord, at moſt of their daies of Seſſion. Out of thoſe he choſe 15 alterable every half year, to be of his Privy Councel; but then changing them for others: that ſo all of them might participate that honour; and yet none of them be acquainted with too many of his ſecrets. At his entrance into the Senate, he uſed courteouſly to ſalute the Lords; and ſo likewiſe at his departure. He knew full well that it was noted for great pride in his Father Julius, ſo much to ſleight the Lords of that Houſe, as he alwaies did: never making to them any obeyſance, no not then, when they came to tell him what honours were decreed unto him. This Reformation of the great Ones, ſoon made the lower ſort more careful; both to obſerve good order, and to learn obedience. Yet did not AUGUSTUS refer all to Preſident, but ſomewhat to Precept. The Roman Knights he enforced to yeeld an account of their lives; an Orders full of health and wiſdome: Idleneſs being the root of all private vices, and publick diſorders. To the Commons in their Comitia and other meetings, he preſcribeth Lawes and Orders as himſelf liſted. The old authority of the Tribunes, daſhed in the Dictatorſhip of Sylla, he would not reſtore. He ſuffered them to intercede for the People, but not to prefer or hinder any Bill, to the advancement or the prejudice of their Eſtate. Without this Curb, the Common ſort would never have ſuffered him to ſit faſt in the ſaddle. For had the people had their Tribunes, and had the Tribunes had their ancient dignity and power, which they had uſurped: there had been little or no hope of altering the form of Government. So different are the ends of the Common-people, eſpecially if nuzled in a factious Liberty, from the deſigns of Soveraign Princes.

26. The City thus reformed in the principal errors and defects of it; he again exhibiteth unto them divers pleaſures; as ſhewes of Fencers, Stage-plaies, Combats of wild beaſts, publick Dancings, with variety of other delightful ſpectacles. And this as well to breed in them a good conceit of the change; as fearing leſt their cogitations, for want of other objects, would fix themſelves upon his actions, and the old freedome. And therefore when ſome of his more ſevere and rigid Counſellors adviſed him to interdict all ſuch publick paſtimes, alledging that the meetings of the people at thoſe ſports, and in ſo great numbers might at laſt end in ſome great tumult and ſedition to the endangering of his perſon, and deſtruction of his whole eſtate; it was thus over-ruled by Mecenas (his moſt truſty Favourite) Expedit tibi, O Cæſar, plebem ſic occupatam eſſe, that it beſt agreed with his affairs, to have the minds of the people taken up with theſe ſports and paſtimes, by which being ſweetned and appeaſed they were the leſs ſenſible of the yoke he had put upon them. But as for Horſe-races, Tilts, and Tornaments, as he gladly cheriſhed them, ſo he permitted them only to the Inhabitants of Rome: That ſo that City being the Seat-Town of his Empire, might be ſtored with good Horſes, and expert Riders. Such of the Commons as were behinde hand, he relieved: and when that many of them had made him Heir to their goods; he well knowing that no good Father did appoint to his Heir any Prince but a Tyrant, preſently reſtored to the Children of the deceaſed the whole Patrimony. An action truly worthy of AUGUSTUS; as true a Guardian of Orphans, as a Father of his Countrey. Such Princes as gape covetouſly after other mens poſſeſſions, ſeldome enjoy the benefit of their own. The Treaſures of Kings are then greateſt, not when their own Coffers are full only, but their Subjects rich. Yet one thing more he ſeemed to leave unto the people, which they thought moſt pleaſing; Liberty of Speech;

Auguſtus. Wherein ſometimes they were ſo licentious, that they ſpared not Agrippa himſelf, ſo potent with the Emperor. But he, good man, never uſing the Princes favour to the prejudice of any, ſeemed not to mark their taunts and ſlanders; whether with greater moderation or wiſdome, I cannot tell. Neither did AVGVSTVS ſcape their fooliſh Paſquils and infamous Libels. All which he winked at, knowing that contumelies of that nature ſlighted and contemned, ſoon vaniſh of themſelves; but if repined and ſtormed at, ſeem to be acknowledged. A temper which he learnt of his Father Julius, who was perfect at it. And certainly it was a notable point of wiſdome in both of them. It is the miſery of the beſt Princes, even when they do well, to be ill ſpoken of. And therefore many times ſuch follies are with more policy diſſembled then obſerved, by the greateſt Kings.

27. As for this Laviſhneſs of the tongue, it is a humour that ſpringeth for the moſt part, rather from a delight in pratling, than any malice of the heart: and they which uſe it are more troubleſome, than dangerous. Julius feared not the fat men, but the lean and ſpare. And ſo AVGVSTVS thought, that not men liberal of ſpeech, but ſilent, cloſe, and ſparing of their words, were moſt likely to raiſe tumults. Moreover, as long as the Common People retained this Liberty of ſpeech, they were the leſs ſenſible of the loſs of Liberty in State. Whereas in the daies of Domitian, when not only they were prohibited to commune together, but even their ſecret ſighs and tears were regiſtred: then began they to look back with a ſerious eye on the old & Common Liberty. Neglect is the beſt remedy for this Talking vein. When the humour is ſpent, the People will ceaſe on their own accords: till then, no forces can compel them. Tacitus taxeth Vitellius of great folly, for hoping by force to hinder the continual reports of Veſpaſians revolt; that being the only way to increaſe, not diminiſh the rumour. And as much he extolleth (I will not ſay how fitly) the Reign of Prince Nerva; wherein it was lawful for the ſubject to think what he would, and ſpeak what he thought.

28. Theſe courſes though he took to rectifie the Senate, and content the people, yet he ſtayed not here. There were too many of both ſorts, dangerous and unquiet ſpirits, who ſtomached his proceedings; and under pretence of the ancient Liberty, were apt to any bold attempt, and ſudden alteration. Theſe as he winked at for the preſent, ſo he employed them (as occaſion ſerved) in his forein Wars. Wherein he followed the example of his Father Julius, who when his Souldiers had diſpleaſed him, in their Mutinies and Tumults, would lead them preſently unto ſome deſperate and dangerous ſervice: So weakning both his Foes which lay next unto him, and puniſhing thoſe Souldiers which had diſobeyed him. For though AVGVSTVS had thrice ſhut the Temple of Janus, and cheriſhed Peace, no Emperor more, of ſo large a Territory: yet when he ſaw his times, and that mens mindes were active, and their thoughts diſquieted; he could find preſently occaſion for ſome new imployment. In this a Body Politick may be compared moſt fitly to the Body Natural. When we are full of bloud, and our ſpirits boyling, there is not any Phyſick better then Phlebotomy. But if a vein be broken in us, and we bleed inwardly, our eſtate commonly is dangerous, and almoſt incurable. So Princes, when their people are tumultuous and apt to miſchief; or that their thoughts are working, and hearkning after action: do commonly imploy them in ſome ſervice far from home; that there they may both vent their Anger, and employ their Courage. For let them ſtay at home to confirm their practiſes, and grow at laſt into a Faction; the State will ſuffer in it, if it be not ruined. We cannot have a fairer inſtance of this truth, than the proceeding of our fifth Henry, and the times next following: Whoſe forein Wars kept us all quiet here at home, waſted thoſe humours, and conſumed thoſe fiery ſpirits; which afterwards, the wars being ended, inflamed the Kingdome.

29. But his main work was to content the Souldiers, and to make them ſure. Some of which he diſperſed as before I ſaid, all about Italie, in 32 Colonies; as well for the defence of the Countrey, as for their more ſpeedy reaſſembly, if need ſhould require. Abroad amongſt the Provinces, were maintained upon the common charge 23 Legions with their aids; beſides 10000 of his Guard, and thoſe which were appointed for the bridling and ſafety of the City. As to all of them he ſhewed an excellent thankfulneſs, for their faithful ſervices; ſo in particular to Agrippa, and to one other, whoſe name the Hiſtories of that Age have not remembred. This latter had valiantly behaved himſelf at the battel of Actium: and being ſummoned to appear before the Lords of the Senate, in a matter which concerned his life, cryed to AVGVSTVS for ſuccour; who aſſigned him an Advocate. The poor fellow not contented with this favour, baring his breaſt, and ſhewing him the marks of many wounds; Theſe (quoth he) have I received AUGUSTUS in thy ſervice, never ſupplying my place by a Deputy. Which ſaid, the Emperor deſcending to the Bar, pleaded the Souldiers cauſe, and won it. Never did Soveraign Prince, or any that command in Chief, loſe any thing by being bountiful of favours to their men of War. For this act quickly ſpreading it ſelf over all the Provinces, did ſo indeer him to the Military men, that they all thought their ſervices well recompenſed, in his graciouſneſs to that one man. And now were they ſo far given over to him, that the honours conferred on Agrippa, could not increaſe their love; well it might their admiration. Agrippa was of a mean and common Parentage. But ſupplying the defects of his Birth, with the perfections of his Mind; he became very potent with AVGVSTVS; who not only made him Conſul, but his companion in the Tribunitian authority, and Provoſt of the City. So many titles were now heaped on him, that Mecenas perſwaded the Prince, to give him his Daughter Julia to Wife: affirming it impoſſible for Agrippa to live ſafe, conſidering how open new Creatures lie to the attempts of malicious men, unleſs he were ingraffed into the Royal Stem of the Cæſars. On which cauſe queſtionleſs, for the ſtronger eſtabliſhment of his new honours; Sejanus afterward attempted, but not with the like ſucceſs, the like match with Livia, Tiberius Daughter-in-Law.

30. The Senate, People, and Men of War, thus ſeverally reduced to a Mediocrity of power and content; the next labour is to alter the old, and eſtabliſh a new Government of the City it ſelf. To effect which, he daſhed all former Laws, by which the Allies and Confederates of the State were made free Denizens of the Town. That he conceived to be a way to draw the whole Empire into one City; and by the monſtrous growth and increaſe of that, to make poor the reſt. Therefore this priviledge he communicated unto a few only: partly that in the times of dearth, the City might not ſo much feel the want of ſuſtenance; and partly that ſo antient an honour might not be diſeſteemed; but principally leſt Rome repleniſhed with ſo huge a multitude of ſtirring and unruly ſpirits, ſhould grow too headſtrong to be governed in due order. The greateſt and moſt populous Cities, as they are proneſt unto faction and ſedition; ſo is the danger greateſt, both in it ſelf, and the example, if they ſhould revolt. This provident courſe notwithſtanding, there were in Rome men more than enough; and among them not a few malecontents and murmurers at the preſent ſtate, ſuch as contemned the Conſuls, and hated the Prince. To keep theſe in compaſſe, AVGVSTVS (it being impoſſible for him to be ſtill reſident at Rome, and dangerous to be abſent) conſtituted a Provoſt of the City, for the moſt part choſen out of the Senators: aſſigning him a ſtrength of 6000 men, called Milites Vrbani, or the City-ſouldiers. To him he gave abſolute and Royal authority, both in the Town and Territory neer adjoyning, during his own abſence. To him were appeals brought from the other Magiſtrates; and finally to his Tribunall were referred all cauſes of importance, not in Rome only, but the greateſt part of Italy. Meſalla was the firſt Provoſt, but proof being had of his inſufficiency, the charge was committed to Agrippa: who did not only ſettle and confirm the City, but did the beſt he could to free the adjoyning parts of Italy from Theeves and Robbers; and ſtopped the courſes of many other troublers of the preſent State. And yet he could not with that power either ſo ſpeedily, or ſo throughly reform all thoſe miſchiefs; which in the late unſetled times were become predominant, as he did deſire. Auguſtus.

31. It is recorded that in the Civil wars of Marius and Sylla, one Pontius Teleſinus of the Marian Faction, told his Generall, that he did well to ſcour the Countrey; but Italy would never want Wolves as long as Rome was ſo fit a Forreſt, and ſo neer to retire unto. The like might have been ſpoken to Agrippa; That he did well to cleer the common Rodes and Paſſages, but Italy would never want Theeves, whilſt Rome was ſo good a place of Refuge. For though he did, as far as humane induſtry could extend, endeavour a generall Reformation both within the City and without; yet neither could he remedy, nor foreſee all miſchiefs. Still were there many, and thoſe great diſorders committed in the night ſeaſon; when as no eye, but that to which no darkneſſe is an obſtacle, could diſcern the Malefactors. For in the firſt Proſcription, many men uſed to walk the ſtreets well weaponed; pretending only their own ſafety, but indeed it was to make their beſt advantage of ſuch men, as they met either in unfrequented Lanes and Paſſages, or travelling as their occaſions did direct them, in the Night. To repreſſe therefore the foul inſolencies of theſe Sword-men, AVGVSTVS did ordain a Watch, conſiſting of 7000 Free-men, their Captain being a Gentleman of Rome. In the day time, the Guard of the Town was committed to the Provoſt, and his City Souldiers; Theſe Vigils reſting in their ſtanding Camps. In the night ſeaſon, one part took their ſtations in the moſt ſuſpicious places of the City; another, in perpetuall motion traverſed the ſtreets: the reſt lying in the Corps du Guarde, to relieve their Companions. By which means he not only remedied the preſent diſorders, but preſerved the City from danger of Fire alſo: Yea and ſecured himſelf from all night-tumults, which carry with them (though but ſmall) more terror and affrightment, than greater Commotions in the day. Never till now were the common people Maſters of their own, both lives and ſubſtance. And now was travel in the Night, as ſafe, though not ſo pleaſant, as at Noon.

32 The People and City thus ſetled, his next ſtudy is to keep the Provinces in a liking of the Change. But little Rhetorique needed to win their liking, who had long deſired the preſent form of Government: miſtruſting the Peoples Regiment, by reaſon of Noblemens factions, covetouſneſſe of Magiſtrates, the Laws affording no ſecurity, being ſwayed hither and thither by ambition and corruption. Theſe Provinces when he firſt took the Government, he thus divided. Aſia, Africa, Numidia, Betica, Narbonenſis, Sicilia, Corſica, Sardinia, all Greece, Crete, Cyprus, Pontus, and Bithynia, being quiet and peaceable Provinces, of known and faithfull obedience, he aſſigned unto the Senate. But the new conquered Regions, ſuch as had not digeſted their loſſe of liberty, with whom any Rebellion or War was to be feared; he retained under his own command. Such were Tarraconenſis, Luſitanica, Lugdunenſis, Germany, Belgica, Aquitanica, Syria, Silicia, Egypt, Dalmatia, Myſia, Pannonia, &c. And this he did, as he gave out, to ſuſtain the danger himſelf alone, leaving unto the Senate all the ſweets of eaſe: but the truth was, to keep them without Arms, himſelf always ſtrong and in a readyneſſe. The notable effects of which Counſell did not diſcover themſelves only, by the eſtabliſhment of the Empire in his own perſon during life, and the continuance of it in the houſe of the Cæſars (though men of moſt prodigious Vices) after his deceaſe: but in ſome of the Ages following alſo. For when the Family of the Cæſars was extinct in Nero, the Imperiall Provinces being ſo ſtrong, and perceiving the Conſular ſo weak; aſſumed to themſelves the creating, and eſtabliſhing of the following Princes. Thus Galba was made Emperour by the Spaniſh and French Legions, Vitellius by the German, Veſpaſian by the Syrian and Pannonian: The Conſular Provinces never ſtirring, either to prevent their attempts, or to revenge them. And when they adventured once to advance Gordian to the Throne, all they could do, was but to betray the poor old man and all his Family to a tragick end. And yet he did not ſo appropriate thoſe Provinces to the Senate, but that they alſo (as well as thoſe which her eſerved unto himſelf) were ſpecified particularly in his private Regiſter. In which (the better to manage the affairs of the Empire) he had ſet down what Tributes every of them payed, what Preſents they

Auguſtus. ſent in, what Cuſtoms in them were levyed. That book alſo comprehended the wealth of the publique Treaſury, and neceſſary charge iſſuing out of it: What number of Citizens and Allies there were in Arms; what ſtrength there was by Sea: with all other circumſtances, the extent, ſtrength, riches, and particulars of his eſtate. William of Normandy did the like at his firſt entrance into England, when he compoſed that Cenſuall Roll of all this Kingdome, which we call Dooms-day Book, or the Roll of Winton; according unto which, Taxations were impoſed, and Aids exacted. The greateſt Princes have not thought it a diſparagement to be good Husbands; to know the riches of their Crowns, and have an eye to their Intrado.

32. Britain was left out of this Bead-Roll, either becauſe from hence there neither was much hope of profit, nor much fear of hurt; or elſe becauſe being more deſirous to keep than inlarge the Monarchy, he thought it moſt expedient to confine it within the bounds appointed by Nature. Danubius on the North, Mount Atlas on the South, Euphrates on the Eaſt, and the main Ocean on the Weſt, did both bound his Empire and defend it. Some Kingdomes have their limits laid out by Nature, and thoſe which have adventured to extend them further have found it fatall. The Perſians ſeldome did attempt to ſtretch their Territory beyond Oxus, but they miſcarryed in the action. And what was that poor River, if compared unto the Ocean? Many who loved action, or expected preferment by the Wars, incited him unto the conqueſt and plantation of theſe Countreys. Affirming, "That "the barbarous people were naturally bad Neighbours; and though for the preſent not very ſtrong, "nor well skilled in Arms, yet might a weak Enemy in time gather great ſtrength. That he ought to "purſue the War for his Father Julius ſake, who firſt ſhewed that Iſland to the Romans: that it yeelded "both refuge and ſupply to Malecontents of Gaul, and Enemies in Germany: That he would loſe the "benefit of a wealthy Countrey, ſtored with all manner of proviſion; and the command of a valiant "Nation, born (as it were) unto the Wars. That it was an Apoſtaſie from honour, to lie ſtill and adde "nothing to the conqueſt of his Anceſtors: That he was in all equity bound as far as in him was, to re-"duce to Civility from Barbariſm, ſo many proper and able men. But to theſe motives he replyed, "That he had already refuſed to wage War with the Parthian, a more dangerous neighbour, and "far worſe enemy than the Britains: That he had waſt and deſert ground enough in his own Domi-"nions, for many a large Plantation, when he ſaw it needfull: That he had conſtantly refuſed, though "with great facility he might, to conquer any more of the barbarous Nations: That as in the Natu-"rall body, a ſurfet is more dangerous than faſting; ſo in the Body Politick, too much is more trou-"bleſome than too little: That the Roman Monarchy had already exceeded the Perſian, and Mace-"donian; and to extend it further, was the next way to make it totter and fall by its own weight. "That he had learned in the Fable not to loſe the ſubſtance, by catching at the ſhadow. And finally, "that many puiſſant Nations lay in and about Britany, againſt whom Garriſons muſt be kept; and "he feared the Revennes would not quit the Coſt. And ſo the enterpriſe of Britain was quite laid aſide.

33. For the aſſurance of the Provinces already conquered, he diſperſed into them 23 Legions, with their Aids; whoſe pay only, beſides proviſion of Corn, and Officers wages, amounting to five Millions and an half of our Engliſh pounds, and ſomewhat more, were ſo duly paid unto the Armies, that we read ſeldome in the Hiſtories of that Empire, of any Mutiny among the Souldiers, for want of pay. An happineſſe whereof theſe ages have been little guilty. For the amaſſing of this treaſure, and defraying of this charge, AVGVSTVS made not uſe only of his own revenue. Wars which are undertaken, and Souldiers that are levyed for the common ſafety, ought in all reaſon to be maintained on the Common purſe. The Grandour and ſecurity of an Empire, concerns in all reſpects, as much the People as the Prince. For which cauſe he erected an Exchequer in the City, which was called Ærarium militare, or the Souldiers Treaſury; whereto the the twentieth part of every mans eſtate was brought, according to the true and perfect valuation. This was eſteemed an heavy burden at the firſt, and indeed it was, but that the people felt the ſweetneſſe and effects of it in the Common ſafety. In that reſpect, the intereſt was greater then the principall. Subjects that have a care either of the common peace or honour, will not repine at payments and taxations, though more then ordinary. It is a poor conceit to think that Princes either are able or obliged, to maintain the wars without aſſiſtance from their people: or that the treaſures which in theſe reſpects they give the King, they do not give unto themſelves. I may perhaps repute him for a cunning Sophiſter, but never for a faithfull Subject, which coyns diſtinctions betwixt the welfare of the King, and the weal of the Kingdome. Theſe Legions he employed as occaſion was, either to curb the Natives, or ſecure the Borders. The Roman Empire ſeldome had ſuch perfect peace, but that there were employments alwayes for the Souldiers. If that they had in any place a ſhort ceſſation from the wars, yet they were not idle. Idleneſſe doubtleſſe is the greateſt enemy to Martiall Diſcipline. Therefore he kept them at ſuch times perpetually buſied, either in paving Bogs, or in draining Mariſhes. By means whereof, he made not only many of the barbarous Countries, both fruitfull in themſelves, and profitable to the Chequer: but thereby alſo he ſecured his own affairs, and diſarmed his enemies. For many times the barbarous people truſting to ſuch advantages, were apt too often to rebell; and having got themſelves within thoſe Myres and Faſtneſſes, ſtood on their Guard, as in ſome faſhionable or defenſible Fortreſs. The ſureſt means to keep a conquered people from all occaſion of revolting, is to lay waſte their Wood-lands, and make all parts paſſable. The opportunity of a ſafe retreat, makes not more Theeves than Rebels.

35. Thoſe whom he placed over his Provinces and Armies, he neither would remove under three years Government, nor yet continue after five. A longer ſtay might teach them too much cunning, in practising on the dispositions of the people, and perhaps prompt them to work into the favour of the Natives, and the Men of War; and so at last to establish in themselves a Soveraignty. Cæsars long stay in Gaul, (a second five years being added unto that which was first allowed him) made him so potent with the People, and gracious with the Souldiers, that in the end he brought the Roman Empire under his subjection. And on the other side, to take them from their charges under three years continuance, were to have called them home, before they were well learned in the Customes and the nature of the Provinces; so making them unable to instruct their Successors. As for the men whom he employed in those Commands, he culled them always out of the most valiant and upright in the Camp and Senate. A Prince more willing and desirous not to employ men likely to offend, than after the offence to punish and chastise them for it. Augustus.

36. Besides his forces by Land, he also maintained at Sea two invincible Armadoes. The one lay at Anchor neer Ravenna, in the upper Sea, to awe and defend Dalmatia, Crete, Greece, Cyprus, Asia, &c. The other at Misenum in the lower Sea, to protect and keep under Gaul, Spain, Africa, Egypt, Syria, &c. Neither was this the only use of two such puissant Fleets, but in all probability they were to cleanse the Sea of Pirates; to have a care to the conducting of the Tributes and Customes into the Exchequer; and served also for transporting Corn, and other necessary provisions, for the sustenance and relief of the City. In the ensuing Civil Wars, these two Navies proved to be of great importance: The revolt of them giving as great a blow to the one side, as a comfort to the other. The principal assurance of Otho in his Wars, was the immoveable fidelity of the Misenian Fleet; and the siding of the other with Vespasian, brake the hearts of Vitellius best followers.

37. Now as he thus strengthened the Provinces in generall, so did he cast an especiall eye on three particulars, viz. Italy, Gaul, and Egypt. Italy rounded Rome the Metropolis of the Empire; and therefore he ought to be well assured of its good faith and allegiance to him. Nor was he ignorant, that the Bellum Sociale raised by the people of that Countrey, in the Free State, more shook and endangered the Empire, than the Invasions of Pyrrhus or Annibal. Therefore as formerly he planted in it two and thirty Colonies, of old and trusty Souldiers, to keep it sure unto himself; so now he did divide it into eleven Regions, each having peculiar Magistrates and Under-officers. This not so much to ease the City Prætor, although he had employment enough at Rome; but because it was thick set, and as it were overlaid with People, whose rising might endanger the Common-wealth. So by his Colonies he kept a Garrison upon them, as it were, that they could not revolt: and by his Officers and Justiciers (as I may call them) he set so strait a Watch about them, that they durst not practise.

38. Gaul, now called France, was both a large and fertile Countrey, stored with a people, valiant in all attempts, and in many desperate. A people with which the old Romans fought rather to maintain their own liberty, than to encrease their Dominions; a Tribe or Colony of which had sacked the City of Rome, and endangered the Capitol. A people finally with whom the Romans durst not make war, till they had almost all the residue of the world in subjection. Remembrance of their antient Reputation, and store of money, might occasion many desperate practises against the quiet of the Empire. The readyest way to keep them in obedience, was to keep them poor: for without wealth high stomacks may well feed on the hope of Liberty, but digest it never. Licinius his freedman, was the fittest fellow for such an Office, who is presently made the Task-master of the Province. The Galls used to pay a Monethly Tribute, which he much inhaunced (besides private and petty means of proling) by making fourteen Moneths in a year. The Solicitors of that people at Rome make complaint to AVGVSTVS. He sometimes yeelded unto them, sometimes excused his Freed-man; some things he would not know, many he would not believe, others he dissembled. Licinius to make up his peace, sent to the Emperor all his treasure, and that huge Masse of Gold and Silver by those unlawfull means heaped up together: which he not only willingly received, but his turn being served, and the French not a little impoverished; he recalled Licinius, and sent Tiberius to settle the Province. So old and common a thing it is with great Princes, to suffer their Vice-Roys, and Under-Officers, to suck like Spunges, the Wealth of the Subject, till they are quite full; and then to squeeze them into their own Coffers.

39. But the Province whose tuition and defence he principally regarded, was Egypt; not so much for the valour and courage of the Inhabitants, as the naturall strength and situation of the place. Alexander of Macedon having annexed it to his Empire, never committed the entire Government and Jurisdiction thereof, to one man; fearing lest he presuming on the wealth of the People, and site of the Countrey, would settle the possession in himself. And so AVGVSTVS calling to mind as well the multitude, as the levity and inconstancy of the Natives; that it was very rich in coyn, and the Roman Granary (as serving the City four Moneths yearly with Corn) not only trusted not the rule thereof into the hands of any of the Senators, but expresly forbad any of that Order (without his speciall permission) to sojourn there. It is a principle in State, never to licence men of great houses, and credit among the people, to have free accesse into that Countrey, whose revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Wherefore it was a weakness doubtlesse in the Councell of King Henry the sixth, to suffer Richard Duke of York, to passe at pleasure into Ireland; where he had harbour and relief, and whence he brought supply both of Men and Mony. But to return to Egypt, Germanicus entring once into Alexandria, only to see the Antiquities of it, and return; stirred such suspicions, and distractions in the jealous head of Tiberius, that he spared not sharply to rebuke him for it. Vespasian also being by the Syrian Legions chosen Emperour, first assured himself of Egypt, as the Key of the Sea and Land; with a small power, against a strong host easily defended This place he resolved to make his Sanctuary, if his designs succeeded not luckily. And to this place he hastened, after the defeat

Auguſtus. deleat of the Vitellian Army; that ſo detaining the ordinary proviſion of Victuals, he might by Famine compell the City of Rome to ſtand at his devotion. The Government of this Province was by AVGVSTVS always committed to ſome one of the Roman Gentry, as leſſe able, by reaſon of his low condition, to work againſt the Princes ſafety. Neither would he allow his Deputy the glorious attributes of Lievtenant, Legatus, Proconſul, or Prætor. Captain or Preſident of Egypt was their higheſt Title; there being even in Titles no ſmall motives to Ambition.

40. AVGVSTVS having by theſe meanſ reduced both the City and Provinces under his abſolute command, and being now declining in ſtrength, by reaſon of a ſudden and violent ſickneſſe; began to call his wits to Counſell, how to diſpoſe of the Eſtate after his deceaſe. Male-child he never had any. His Daughter Julia, a woman of immodeſt carriage, never made further uſe of her fathers greatneſſe, than that ſhe ſatisfied her Luſts with the greater inſolence. Marcellus, his Sſters ſonne, and Julias husband, was a young man of an ingenious diſpoſition, and ſeemingly capable of the fortunes which attended for him. Him, being yet young, AVGVSTVS preferred to the Pontificall dignity, and Ædileſhip: Yet once upon his ſickneſſe, he privately determined to chooſe a Succeſſor in the Common-wealth, rather than his own Family; and not to leave the Empire to Marcellus, whom he held unable to undergo it, but to his companion in Arms, Agrippa; a man daunted neither with adverſe, nor altered with proſperous fortunes. This Marcellus afterwards ſo ſtomacked, that he began to grutch at Agrippas greatneſſe, and to bear a vigilant eye on his plots and actions. Contrarily, Agrippa unwilling to offend him, under whoſe future Government he was in all likelyhood to end the reſt of his dayes, with much ado obtained leave to retire unto Lesbos: that ſo his abſence either might allay, or remove the diſpleaſure, conceived againſt him by the young Prince. An action full of wiſdome, and magnanimity. For though AVGVSTVS chief end was, to diſcountenance the popular dependencies of his ſonne, by the favours heaped on his ſervant: yet did Agrippa know, that a Favourite ought to have ſo much in him of the Perſian Religion, as to worſhip the Riſing Sun alſo; and that he ſhould reſemble old Janus with the two faces, with th'one looking on the King regnant, with th'other on the Prince ſucceſſive.

41. Marcellus being dead, Agrippa returning, marryed his Widow, and on her begat two ſonnes, Caius and Lucius; whoſe actions afterward afforded ſuch variety for cenſure, that there was wanting neither much reaſon to commend, nor little to condemn them. On theſe two, or at the leaſt one of them, AVGVSTVS now grown aged, reſolves to ſettle the Eſtate; and if they failed, upon ſuch others, as by the liberty of the Laws, he might adopt: Adoption, in the eſtimation of the Roman Laws, being indeed another Nature. Poſterity, whether it be naturall, or only legall, is the beſt ſupporter of the Arms Imperiall. Such as both fortifies the Prince, and aſſures the Subject. Yet this he did not without much reluctancy, and a great conflict in his mind. "Sometimes his thoughts ſuggeſted "to him, that the deſigned Succeſſors draw to them all the attendance and reſpect, from the Prince "in poſſeſſion; That they have alwayes a lingring deſire to be actually ſeated in the Throne; That "they ſuppoſe the life of the preſent Prince too tedious, not caring by what means it were ſhort-"ned; That ſometime it is pernicious, yea even to the appointed Succeſſor himſelf alſo. On the "other ſide, his better thoughts prompted him to conſider, in what a miſerable diſtraction he ſhould "leave the Empire, if ſudden death ſhould take from him an ability to nominate his heir; The fear "conceived in the whole City, at his laſt ſickneſſe; That Pyrrhus of Epirus, was of all hands con-"demned, for leaving his Kingdome to the ſharpeſt ſword; That the Common-wealth faln into diſ-"ſenſions, could not be ſetled again without a lamentable War, and a bloudy Victory; That the "people ſeeing him childleſſe, would not only contemn him, but perhaps endeavour to recover the "old liberty, though with the ruin of the State; That it was the cuſtome of Tyrants, to deſire the "eternizing of their deaths, by the downfall of their Countreys. His mind thus diſtracted and perplexed, at laſt he brake in this manner. "Thou haſt, Octavian, a Wolf by the ears, which to hold ſtill, "or to let go, is alike dangerous. Many inconveniences may enſue, if thou doſt not declare thy "Succeſſor; more, if thou doſt. The good of the Republique conſiſteth in knowing the future "Prince; Thine own welfare dependeth on the concealment. The Common good is to be preferred be-"fore any private; Yet ought Charity to begin at home. No, Octavian, no; As thou haſt receiv'd, ſo "ſhew thy ſelf worthy of the title of Pater Patriæ. Yea, and perhaps this deſignation may ſecure "thine own Eſtate. For what will it profit the people to conſpire againſt thee; when they ſhall ſee "a Succeſſor at hand, either of thine own body, or thine own appointment, ready to take thy place, "and revenge thy wrongs?

40. Thus reſolved, he adopteth Caius and Lucius; deſiring, though he made ſhew to the contrary, they ſhould be Conſuls Elect, and called Princes of the Youth. Yet wiſely forecaſting the dangers incident to himſelf, if they ſhould make their abode in Rome; he ſendeth them with honourable charge into the Provinces abroad: as well to exerciſe them in feats of War, as to take away all cauſe of faction in the Court, and ſedition in the City. Which myſtery of State as it was antiently practiſed by moſt Princes, ſo at this day by the Grand Seignieur: who alwayes ſendeth his eldeſt ſon unto Amaſia, as Governour thereof; from whence till the death of his Father, he never returneth. In theſe journeys dyed the two young Princes; a misfortune which AVGVSTVS bare nobly; neither baniſhing grief, with a Stoicall Apathy; nor ſpending the time in womaniſh lamentations. Having performed due rites to the dead, he adopted his Wives ſonne Tiberius. A man for the conveniency and ripeneſſe of his age, not unfit, in feats of Arms, not unexpert, in humane learning, not ignorant; but withall ſuſpected to be cruelly given, and poſſeſſed with the hereditary pride of the Claudian Family. A ſtrange medley of vertuous and vitious qualities. Tiberius, ſuch was the will of his Father, to eſtabliſh the ſucceſſion, with more ſtayes than one, adopted Germanicus, his Brother Druſus ſonne; then commanding over eight Legions in Germany: which done, he ſpeedeth to his charge in Illyricum. This man AVGVSTVS appointed to be his Heir, as it was afterwards (and not improbably) conjectured, neither in care to the State, nor in love to the party; but to win honour to himſelf: and to make the Roman people again wiſh for him; when they ſhould ſee that infinite diſproportion in all Royall and Kingly qualities, between the old and new Emperors. A fetch after imitated by Tiberius, in the the adoption of Caius Caligula. Auguſtus.

43. The laſt (though not the leaſt) help of the Empires eſtabliſhment, was the long life and reign of our AVGVSTVS: as having ruled the State 16 years before, and 34 years after his confirmation in the Soveraignty, by the Senate and people. All the young men in the City were born after the firſt Decennium of the Monarchy. Moſt of the old men during the Civil Wars. Few had ſeen what was the antient form of Government in the Common-wealth; many did not deſire it. For at the preſent, enjoying Peace both at home and abroad; and hearing what ſad and tragicall reports their Fathers made of the former troubles and proſcriptions: they contented themſelves with the new Government; as more eſteeming a ſecure and happy ſubjection, than a dangerous and factious liberty. By which long time of Empire, and the policies already recited, beſides many others, which I can neither learn by relation, nor gather by preſumptions; did AVGVSTVS ſo firmly ſettle the Roman Monarchy, that it continued ſome hundred of years without alteration: though all his immediate Succeſſors were in a manner Monſters, incarnate Devils, and indeed any thing rather then men. Tiberius, Caius, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, both by their own Tyrannies, and their Bondmens Extortions; would have ruined any Monarchy not founded by AVGVSTVS.

44. To ſpeak concerning the domeſtical affairs of this Emperor, is beyond my Theme. As either how far he ſuffered himſelf to be ordered by his Wife Livia; or whether he uſed variety of women, not ſo much to ſatisfie a diſordinate appetite, as by ſo many women to fiſh out the ſecret deſigns of many men. He was too exact a Stateſman to be perfect in Souldiery; and in all his Wars was proſperous by Fortune rather than by Valour, or his Captains Valour than his own. The Common-wealth which he found weak and in Rubbiſh, he left Adamantine, and invincible. In behaviour he was affable and gracious; in his diſcourſe, ſententious; to the good, of a moſt ſweet diſpoſition; to the lewd and diſhoneſt, harſh and unpleaſant. Friendſhip he contracted with few, and that ſlowly; but to them, whom he once loved, conſtant and bountifull to the laſt. Finally, ſuch a one he was, of whom I will only ſay what I find ſpoken of Severus; It had been an ineffable benefit to the Common-wealth of Rome, if either he had never dyed, or never been born.

Thus having drawn the Picture of this puiſſant and prudent Prince (though I confeſſe with too much ſhadow) I now proceed unto the Catalogue of the Roman Emperours: in which I ſhall take notice of ſuch of their Actions only as had relation to the Publick, either in the improvement or decreaſe of their Power and Empire; or point to any ſignall matter which concerns the Church.

The Roman Emperours.

A. M.

3918. 1. Julius Cæſar the laſt of the Dictators, and the firſt of the Emperours, in memory of whom the following Emperours were called Cæſars, till the time of Adrian; when it became the title of the heir apparent, or deſigned Succeſſor; the firſt who had it in that ſenſe being Ælius Verus, though he lived not to enjoy the Empire.

3923. 2. C. Octavianus Cæſar, to whom the Senate gave the name of Auguſtus; who added unto the Roman Empire the Provinces of Noricum, Pannonia, Rhætia, a great part of Spain, and the whole Kingdome of Egypt. In his time the Lord CHRIST was born. 56.

A. C.

17. 3. Tiberius Nero, the ſonne in Law of Auguſtus, ſubdued many of the German Nations; and added Galatia and Cappadocia to the Empire. In his time CHRIST ſuffered. 23.

39. 4. Caius Caligula, the ſonne of Germanicus (ſonne of Druſus, the brother of Tiberius) and of Agrippina Neece to Auguſtus Cæſar, by his daughter Julia. 3.

43. 5. Claudius Cæſar, Uncle to Caligula, brother of Germanicus, and ſonne of Druſus by Antonia Neece to Auguſtus by his Siſter Octavia; added Britain, and Mauritania, to the Roman Empire. 13.

57. 6. Domitius Nero, ſon of Ænobarbus, and Agrippina daughter to Germanicus; the laſt of the Cæſars. He made the Cottian Alpes a Province of the Empire, and brought the Armenians to receive their Kings from the Roman Emperours; and was the firſt that raiſed any publick perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. An. 67. 13.

70. 7. Sergius Galba, choſen by the French and Spaniſh Legions.
8. Salvius Otho, made Emperour by the Prætorian Souldiers.
9. Aul. Vitellius, elected by the German Legions.

71. 10. Flavius Veſpaſianus, choſen by the Syrian and Judæan Armies, ſubverted utterly the Common-wealth of the Jews, by the valour and proweſſe of his ſon Titus; and brought Achaia, Lycia, Rhodes, Samos, Thrace, and Syria Comagene, under the form of Roman Provinces. 9.

80. 11. Titus Veſpaſianus, the fortunate Conquerer of the Jews.

82. 12. Fl Domitianus, who raiſed the ſecond perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. An. 96. 15.

97. 13. Nerva Cocceius, a noble Senator, but no Roman born; as all the reſt had been before him, but not many after him.

14. Ulpius

99. 14. Ulpius Trajanus, by birth a Spaniard, adopted by Nerva: he made Dacia a Province of the Empire, carryed the Roman Armies over Euphrates, ſubduing Armenia, Meſopotamia, and Aſſyria; and raiſed the third Perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. An. 110. 19.

118. 15. Ælius Adrianus, who utrerly exterminated the Jewiſh Nation, and continued the Perſecution begun by Trajan. 20.

138. 16. Antoninus Pius, whoſe friendſhip was ſought by the very Indians. 24.

162. 17. Marcus Antonius, ſurnamed the Philoſopher, aſſociated L. Verus in the Government, by whoſe valour he ſubdued the Parthians. He raiſed the fourth Perſecution againſt the Church. An. 167. 19.

181. 18. L. Antonius Commodus, ſonne to Marcus, the firſt Emperour that had been hitherto born in the time of his Fathers Empire. 13.

194. 19. Ælius Pertinax, made Emperour againſt his will.

20. Didius Iulianus, who bought the Empire of the Souldiers.

195. 21. Septimius Severus, took Cteſiphon from the Parthians, ſubdued the Province of Oſroene; and raiſed the fifth Perſecution. An. 195. 18.

213. 22. Baſſianus Caracalla, ſonne to Severus.

220. 23. Opilius Macrinus, made Emperour by the men of War.

221. 24. Varius Heliogabalus, the ſuppoſed ſonne of Caracalla.

225. 25. Alexander Severus, Couſen of Varius.

238. 26. Maximinus, a fellow of obſcure birth; who being advanced to the Empire, raiſed the ſixth perſecution. An. 237.

241. 27. Gordian, elected by the Senate againſt Maximinus. 6.

247. 28. Philip, an Arabian, ſuppoſed by ſome to be a Chriſtian. 5.

252. 29. Decius, ſlain in war againſt the Gothes; the Author of the ſeventh Perſecution raiſed againſt the Church. An. 250. 2.

254. 30. Gallus Hoſtilianus. 2.

256. 31. Æmilianus, the Moor.

256. 32. Valerianus, the Author of the eighth Perſecution. An. 259. He was taken priſoner by Sapores, King of Perſia, and made to ſerve him for a footſtool.

33. Gallienus, ſonne to Valerianus, in whoſe time the 30 Tyrants ingroſſed unto themſelves ſeverall parts of the Empire.

271. 34. Claudius II. who after a ſhort and troubleſome time, left it to

272. 35. Quintillus his Brother, who enjoyed the ſame but 17 dayes.

273. 36. Valer. Aurelianus, reſtored again the antient diſcipline, ſuppreſſed all the Invaders of the Empire, and vanquiſhed the Gothes; but was a great perſecutor of the Church. An. 278. 6.

279. 37. Annius Tacitus, deſcended from Tacitus the Hiſtorian.

38. Florianus, an Emperour of two moneths only.

280. 39. Valerius Probus. 6.

286. 40. Aurelius Carus, together with his two ſonnes Carinus and Numerianus.

288. 41. Diocletian, firſt aſſociated Maximianus by the name of Emperour, or Auguſtus; and afterwards Galerius of Dacia, and Conſtantius Chlorus, by the name of Cæſars. He had continuall Wars againſt the Perſians, and raiſed the tenth Perſecution againſt the Church, An. 295. Which held ſo long, and was ſo vehement withall, that as St. Hierome writes, there were 5000 ſlain for every day in the year, ſave the firſt of January. He afterwards reſigned the Empire, and lived in private at Calona. 20.

308. 41. Conſtantius Chlorus, a friend to Chriſtians. 2.

310. 42. Conſtantine, ſonne of Chlorus, ſurnamed Magnus, or the great, the firſt Emperour that countenanced the Goſpel, and embraced it publickly; which he is ſaid to have done on this occaſion. At the ſame time that he was ſaluted Emperour in Britain, Maxentius was choſen at Rome by the Prætorian Souldiers; and Licinius named Succeſſor by Maximinus, the aſſociate of his Father Chlorus. Being penſive and ſolicitous upon theſe diſtractions, he caſt his eyes up towards Heaven, where he ſaw in the Air a lightſome Pillar in the form of a Croſſe, wherein he read theſe words, ἐν τούτῳ νίκα, in hoc vince; and the next night our Saviour appearing to him in a Viſion, commanded him to bear that figure in his Standard, and he ſhould overcome all his Enemies. This he performed, and was accordingly victorious, from which time he not only favoured the Chriſtians, but became a very zealous profeſſor of the Faith and Goſpel. I know Zoſimus an Heathen Hiſtorian, partly out of malice to the Chriſtians in generall, and partly a particular grudge to the Emperour Conſtantine; reporteth otherwiſe of the cauſes of his Converſion: But the authority and conſent of all Chriſtian Writers, who deliver it as before is told; is far to be preferred before the teſtimony of one ſingle Heathen, had he not been biaſſed (as he was) by his diſaffections.

Before this time it is obſerved, that few (if at all any) of the Roman Emperours dyed a naturall death, as after they generally did. From Julius Cæſar unto Conſtantine there were 40 in all. Of which Julius was openly murdered in the Senate; Auguſtus made away by his wife Livia; as Tiberius afterwards by Macro; Caligula was ſlain by Caſſius Chereas; Claudius poyſoned by his wife Agrippina; Nero, Nero, and Otho, laid violent hands upon themſelves; Galba, and Vitellius, maſſacred by the Souldiers; Domitian by Stephanus, Commodus by Letus and Electus, Pertinax and Julianus by the Souldiers of their Guard; Caracalla by the command of Macrinus; Macrinus, Heliogabalus, Alexander, Maximinus, Maximus, and Balbinus, ſucceſſively by the men of War; Gordianus by Philip, Philip by the Souldiers; Hoſtilianus by Gallus, and Æmilianus; and they by the Souldiers; Valerianus dyed a Priſoner in Parthia, Florianus was the Author of his own end; Aurelianus murdered by his houſhold ſervants; Gallienus, Quintillus, Tacitus, and Probus, by the fury of the military men. And yet I have omitted out of this Accompt ſuch of the Emperours as were tumultuouſly made by the Army, without the approbation of the Senate; as alſo the Cæſars, or deſigned Succeſſors of the Empire; moſt of which got nothing by their deſignation and adoption, but ut citius interficerentur. Some of theſe were cut off for their midemeanours; ſome, for ſeeking to revive again the antient Diſcipline; and ſome, that others might enjoy their places. The chief cauſe of theſe continual maſſacres, proceeded originally from the Senate, and Emperours themſelves. For when the Senators had once permitted the Souldiers to elect Galba, and had confirmed that election; Evulgato (ſaith Tacitus) imperii arcano, principem alibi quàm Romæ fieri poſſe: more Emperours were made abroad in the field by the Legions, than at home by the Senators. Secondly from the Emperours alone, who by an unſeaſonable love to their Guard-Souldiers, ſo ſtrengthned them with priviledges, and nuſled them in their licentious courſes; that on the ſmalleſt rebuke, they which were appointed for the ſafety of the Princes, proved the Authors of their ruin: ſo truly was it ſaid by Auguſtus in Dion, Metuendum eſt eſſe ſine cuſtode, ſed multò magis à cuſtode metuendum eſt. The laſt cauſe (be it cauſa per accidens, or per ſe) was the largeſs which the new Emperours uſed to give unto the men of ſervice; a cuſtome begun by Claudius Cæſar, and continued by all his Succeſſors: inſomuch that the Empire became ſaleable, and many times he which bad moſt had it. As we ſee in Dion, when Sulpitianus offering twenty Seſtertiums to each ſouldier, was (as if they had been buying of a ſtock at Gleek) out-bidden by Julianus, who promiſed them five and twenty Seſtertiums a man. So that Herodian juſtly complaineth of this Donative. Id initium cauſaq; militibus fuit, ut etiam in poſterum turpiſſimi contumaciſſimique evaderent, ſic ut avaritia indies, ac principum contemptus, etiam ad ſanguinem uſq; proveherent. That is to ſay; From this occaſion and beginning, the Souldiers every day grew more ſhameleſſe, and leſs regardfull of their Prince: ſo that their covetouſneſſe encreaſing, and the contempt they had of their Emperours waxing more and more, ended at laſt in the frequent ſhedding of their bloods, in hope to have a better Market of the next Succeſſor: So as the Emperour Conſtantine wanted not good reaſon, beſides their fiding againſt him for Maxentius, to caſhier theſe Guards, as grown more dangerous than uſefull to Imperial Majeſty. And ſo accordingly he did, levelling their ſtanding Camp to the very ground, disbanding the whole company, or putting them under other Officers and to other Services; by means whereof they were not able to create the like diſturbances, or diſpoſe of the Empire as before. And for the Captains of theſe Guards which before were two (Præfecti Prætorio in the Latine) he encreaſed their number unto four (one for each quarter of the Empire) giving them a Civil Juriſdiction in exchange for the Military Command which they had before; and caſting them behind in place after the Patricii, an Order of his own deviſing.

As for the extent and latitude of the Roman Empire, whilſt it remained one entire Body (as it was before the time of Conſtantine, who at his death divided it among his ſonnes) it was in length about three thouſand miles; namely, from the Iriſh Ocean Weſt, to the River Euphrates on the Eaſt; and in breadth, it reached from the Danubius Northward, to Mount Atlas on the South, about two thouſand miles. And though the Romans had extended their Dominions ſometimes farther Eaſt, and North; yet could they never quietly ſetle themſelves in thoſe conqueſts. Nature (it ſeemeth) had appointed them theſe bounds, not ſo much to limit their Empire, as to defend it. For the enemies found thoſe Rivers, by reaſon of the depth of the Channell, and violent current of the ſtream, as a couple of impregnable Fortreſſes; purpoſely (as it were) erected to hinder them from harraſing the Roman Countreys.

The Revenues of it Lipſius in his Tract de Magnitudine Romana, eſteemeth to be about one hundred and fifty millions of Crowns; and that they were no leſſe, may be made more than probable by theſe reaſons. 1. It is affirmed by divers, and among others by Boterus, that the yearly Revenues of the King of China amount unto one hundred and twenty millions of Crowns. And if this be true (as few queſtion it) we cannot in proportion gueſs the whole Empire of the Romans to yeeld leſſe than one hundred and fifty millions; eſpecially conſidering what Arts-Maſters the Romans were, in levying and raiſing their Taxes and cuſtomary Tributes. 2. The Legionary Souldiers which were diſperſed over the Provinces, received in ordinary pay, (beſides proviſion of corn, apparel, and Officers wages) five millions, 516062. pounds and ten ſhillings of our money; which amounteth unto ſixteen millions of Crowns or thereabout. In the City it ſelf, were kept in continuall pay, ſeven thouſand Souldiers of the Watch, four thouſand or ſix thouſand for the defence of the City; and ten thouſand for the Guard of the Emperours perſon. The two firſt had the ſame wages, the laſt the double wages of a Legionary Souldier. Adde hereto the expences of the Palace, and other means of diſburſals, and I think nothing of the ſum can be abated. 3. We read that C. Caligula ſpent in one year two millions and ſeven hundred thouſand of Seſtertiums; how Nero moſt laviſhly gave away two millions and one hundred thouſand of Seſtertiums; and how Vitellius in few moneths, was nine hundred thouſand of Seſtertiums in Arrearages; every Seſtertium being valued at ſeven pound ſixteen ſhillings three pence: all of them huge and infinite ſums. 4. When Veſpaſian came to the Empire, the Exchequer was ſo impoveriſhed, that he profeſſed in open Senate, that he wanted to ſettle the Common-wealth forty millions of Seſtertiums, amounting to three hundred and twelve millions of our Engliſh money: which Proteſtation (ſaith Sueton) ſeemed probable, quia & malè partis optimè uſus eſt. Now unleſſe the ordinary Revenues came to as much, or more than we have ſpoken; by what means could this extraordinary ſum be raiſed? 5. We may gueſſe at the generall Revenue by the moneys iſſuing out of particular Provinces; and it is certain, that Egypt afforded to the Ptolemies twelve thouſand talents yeerly: neither had the Romans leſſe, they being more perfect in inhancing, than in abating their Intrado. France was by Cæsar sessed at the yeerly tribute of twenty millions of Crowns. And no doubt the rest of the Provinces were rated accordingly. 6. And lastly the infinite sums of money given by the Emperours in way of largess, are proofs sufficient for the greatnesse of the in-come. I will instance in Augustus only, and in him, omitting his Donatives at the victory of Actium, and the rest, I will specifie his Legacy at his death: He bequeathed (by his Testament, as we read in Tacitus) to the common sort, and the rest of the people, three pound eight shillings a man; to every souldier of the Prætorian bands, seven pound sixteen shillings three pence; and to every Legionary souldier, of the Roman Citizens, four pound ten shillings six pence: which amounted to a mighty mass of money.

The Arms or Ensign of this Empire when it was up and in the flourish, was the Eagle: not born, as now, in colours, and a banner; but in an Image or Portraicture on the top of a Spear, or other long piece of wood, to be fixed in the earth at pleasure. This Ensign, Spear and Eagle together, they called the Labarum: Quæ signa, quòd quasi labantia hastis appenderentur labara dixerunt, saith Lipsius, Epist. Quæst. Ep. 5. The use as of this, so of other standards, Lyra giveth us in his Notes on the second of Numb. namely, ut ad eorum aspectũ, bellatores dividantur & uniantur, to call together, and distribute the souldiers according to occasions. And certainly for this end and purpose were those Ensigns first invented. Afterwards they were applyed to the distinguishing of Tribes and Families; and at last bestowed by Kings and Princes as the honorary marks of well-deserving: those which had been the Ensigns of War, so becoming the Ornaments of Peace. At what time the form of this Labarum was altered, and began to be born in colours, I have not yet read. It is now an Eagle Saturn, in a Field Sol; which kind of bearing the Heralds call most rich. It was first born by Ca. Marius in his second Consulship, and in his Wars against the Cimbri; from him conveyed to J. Cæsar, who was allied to him in design and person, and so derived unto the Emperours, his Successors.

But to proceed, Constantine having setled his affairs in peace, and cashiered the Prætorian Guards, fell to new modelling of the Empire; which he conceived to be too cumbersome and unwieldy to be governed by the former Polity, as indeed it was. And first of all he augmented the Roman Provinces to the number of one hundred and twenty, or thereabouts; over every one of which he ordained a particular President, that had his residence in the chief City of that Province. Then he reduced these Provinces under fourteen Dioceses, (for so he called the greater distributions of his Empire) seven of which were in the East parts thereof, that is to say, the Diocese of Egypt, of the Orient, of Asia, of Pontus, Thrace, Dacia, and Macedon: and as many also in the West, viz. the Præfecture of the City of Rome, (which I count for one) the Diocese of Italy, Africk, and Illyricum, of France, Spain, and Britain. Finally in stead of the two Præfecti Prætorio which had the command of the Prætorians, he ordained four for the quarters of the Empire: that is to say, the Præfectus Prætorio Italiæ, under whom were the Dioceses of Italy, Africk, and Illyricum; 2. Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum, who had under him the Dioceses of France, Spain, and Britain; 3. The Præfectus Prætorio Orientis, who had command over the Dioceses of Egypt, the Orient, the Asian, the Pontick and Thracian Dioceses; And 4. the Præfectus Prætorio Illyrici, under whose super-intendence, besides Illyricum it self, were the Dioceses of Macedon and Dacia only; each of these Præfects having a Vicarius, or Lievtenant in the several Dioceses under his authority, who fixed their residence in the head City of the Diocese. And this I have the rather noted, because of the relation which the Polity of the Christian Church had to this Division: it being so ordered in the best and purest times thereof, that in every City where the Emperours had an Officer, whom they called Defensor Civitatis, the Christians should have a Bishop; in every chief City of the Province a Metropolitan; and over every Diocese an Arch-bishop, or Primate, from whom lay no Appeal unto any other. And so far Constantine did well; if at the least the casting of the Empire into so many Dioceses was of his devising. But I have reason to believe that it was more antient: the Patriarchs or Primates of Rome, Carthage, Alexandria, Antioch, and others of the greater Churches, being setled in a preheminence of jurisdiction over the Provinces, and Metropolitans assigned to them long time before the Councel of Nice, and consequently before the Empire (nay the birth) of Constantine; who possibly might act no more in this great business, than the assigning of a Præfectus Prætorio to each several quarter, and the allotting of the Dioceses unto each Præfectus. But whether it were so or not, certain it is, that he committed divers errors, which did more prejudice the Empire, than any thing that had been done by his Predecessors. First in translating the Imperial Seat from Rome to Byzantium; by which transplantation the Empire lost much of its naturall vigour: as we see by the experience of Plants and Flowers, which being removed from the place of their naturall growth, lose much of their vertue which was formerly in them. On which reason, Camillus would not suffer the Romans to remove their Seat unto the City of the Veii, newly conquered by him: but to prevent them in it, set fire on the Town, and so consumed it, ut nunc Veios fuisse laboret Annalium fides, as my Author hath it. A second fault of this Constantine, was the dividing of the Empire amongst his sonnes, which only concerned himself. For though it was quickly reunited in the person of Constantius (his brethren dying without issue) yet his example being followed by others; the Empire was after torn into many pieces, to the destruction of the whole. 'Tis true, the former Emperours used sometimes to associate some partner with them; but so that they did manage it as one sole Estate: Constantine (if I remember rightly) being the first which parcelled it into severall Soveraignties, each independent of the other, allotting to Constantius, Greece, Thrace, and all the Provinces of the East; to Constans, Italy, Illyricum, Africk; to Constantine, Gaul, Spain, & Britain. The third fault of this Emperour was his removing the Legion, and Colonies which lay before on the Northern Marches, into the Eastern parts of his dominions; pretending to use them as a Bulwark against the Persians; laying thereby those passages open, at which not long after the barbarous Nations entred, and subdued the West. For though in stead of these Colonies he planted Garrisons and Forts in convenient places; yet these being filled with Souldiers, for the most part out of other Countreys, fought not as in defence of their native Soyl, (as the Colonies would and must have done) but on the first onset of those Barbarians, abandoned them to the will of the enemy. So that Zosimus (though in other of his reports about this Prince he he bewrayeth much malice) doth call him, not untruly, the first Subverter of that flourishing Monarchy. To these three we may adde a fourth, which concerns the Emperours in generall; namely their stupid negligence and degenerate spirits, which shewed it self most visibly in the last of

The Western Emperours.

341 1 Constans, the youngest sonne of Constantinus Magnus, his brother Constantine being dead, in the third year of his reign, remained sole Emperour of the West. 13.

354 2 Constantius, the other of Constantines sonnes, succeeded Constans in his part, after his decease, uniting the divided Empire into one Estate.

3 Valentinian Emperour of the West, his brother Valens ruling in Constantinople, and the Eastern parts.

4 Valentinian II. youngest sonne of the former Valentinian.

399 5 Honorius the second sonne of Theodosius the Emperour, in whose time Alarick with the Gothes invaded Italy, sacked Rome, and made themselves Masters of the Countrey, which afterwards they left in exchange for Spain. 26.

425 6 Valentinian III. during whose time Attila and the Hunnes made foul work in Italy, and the Vandals seized upon Africk, as they did on Italy and Rome also after his decease: Murdered by Maximus a Roman (whose wife he had trained into the Court, and ravished) as shall be shewn hereafter on another occasion. He was sonne unto Constantius Cæsar by Placidia Sister to Honorius, and Widow of Authaulfus King of the Gothes.

455 7 Maximus having slain Valentinian the third, succeeded in the Empire; but on the coming of the Vandals, whom Eudoxia the wife of Valentinian (who had some inkling of the manner of her husbands death) had drawn into Italy, he was stoned to death by his own souldiers. 1.

456 8 Avitus, chosen Emperour in a military tumult.

457 9 Majoranus. 4.

461 10 Severus. 6.

467 11 Anthemius, who at the end of five years was slain (as were the three before him) by Recimer (a Suevian born) the chief Commander of the Armies; who had an aim to get the Empire for himself, but dyed as soon as he had vanquished and slain Anthemius.

471 12 Olybrius, an Emperour of four moneths only.

472 13 Glycerius, another of as little note: As also was 14 Julius Nepos, deposed by Orestes a noble Roman, who gave the Empire to his son called at first Momillus, but after his assuming the Imperial title he was called as in contempt Augustulus.

473 15 Augustulus, the last of the Emperours who resided in Italy, vanquished by Odoacer King of the Heruli and Turingians. An ominous thing, that as Augustus raised this Empire, so an Augustulus should ruin it.

But though Augustulus lost the Empire, yet Odoacer was not suffered to enjoy it long: Zeno the Emperour of the East sending Theodorick King of the Gothes, to expell him thence; and to possess himself of Italy, the reward of his valour. And this the Emperour did the rather, partly because the Gothes were Christians, and in good terms of correspondency with him: but principally to remove that active Nation somewhat further off, who lay before too near the borders of his own Dominions. And that he might dismis them with the greater content and honour, he made Theodorick a Patrician of the Roman Empire; an honour first devised by the Emperour Constantine; and of so high esteem from the first Institution, that they who were dignified therewith, were to have precedency of the Prætorio Præfecti, who before took place next to the Emperour himself. Nor did the famous Charlemain set upon it any lower estimate, in case he did not adde much unto it; when to the Title of Emperour of the Romans he added that of a Patrician in the style Imperiall. Theodorick thus authorized and encouraged, marches toward Italy; and having vanquished Odoacer, secures himself in his new Conquests by divers politick proceedings; first by Alliances abroad, and then by Fortresses at home. To fortifie himself abroad, he took to Wife Adelheida, daughter to Clodoveus (or Clovis) King of the French; marrying his sister Hemelfride to Thorismund, King of the Vandals in Africk; Amalasunta a second daughter to Eutharicus a Prince of the Gothes in Spain; and Ammelberge his Neece, to Hermandfridus King of the Turingians. Being thus backed with these Alliances with his Neighbour Princes, (all equally concerned in the subverting of the Roman Empire) he built Towns and Forts along the Alpes, and the shores of the Adriatick, to impeach the passage of the barbarous Nations into Italy. His Souldiers and Commanders he dispersed into most parts of the Countrey; partly to keep under the Italians, of whose wavering and unconstant nature he was somewhat doubtfull; partly to unite both people in a mixture of Language, Marriages, and Customes; and partly that he might more easily in War command them, and in Peace correct them. Italy, which before was made a thorow-fare to the barbarous Nations, and quite disordered by the frequent inundations of Lust and Rapine; he reduced to such a peaceable and setled Government, that before his death they had quite lost the memory of their former miseries: in stead whereof a generall felicity had diffused it self over all the Countrey. Such Cities as had been formerly defaced, he repaired, strengthned, and beautified. In his wars he was victorious, temperate in his times of peace, and in his private carriage discreet and affable. Finally (as Velleius saith of Morobodnus) he was Natione magis quàm ratione Barbarus: And went the most judicious way to establish his dominion in Italy, of any of the Barbarous Princes that ever had invaded the Roman Provinces; which he left thus confirmed and setled unto his Successors.

A. C. The Kings of the Gothes in Italy.

495 1 Theodorick of whom before; who to his conquest of Italy added that of Illyricum, as also the appendant Islands to both those Countries; and wrested Provence in France, from the Gothes of Spain.

527 2 Athalaricus, Nephew to Theodorick by his daughter Amalaſunta, who in the minority of her ſonne managed the affairs of the Goths in Italy. Fearing ſome danger out of Greece, ſhe reſtored Provence to the French, and by their aid drove the Burgundians out of Liguria. A Lady skilful in the Languages of all thoſe Nations which had any commerce with the Roman Empire; inſomuch, that pro miraculo fuerit ipſam audire loquentem, ſaith Procopius of her.

534 3 Theodatus, the ſonne of Hammelfride, the Siſter of Theodorick, ſucceeded on the untimely death of Athalaricus. Who being in War with the Romans, (or rather with the Greek Emperours, endeavouring to recover Italy from the hands of the Gothes) and deſiring beforehand to know his ſucceſſe; was willed by a Jew to ſhut up a certain number of Swine, and to give to ſome of them the names of Gothes, and unto others the names of Romans. Which done, and going to the ſtyes not long after, they found the Hogs of the Gothiſh faction all ſlain, and thoſe of the Roman half unbriſtled: and thereupon the Jew foretold, that the Gothes ſhould be diſcomfited, and the Romans loſe a great part of their ſtrength; and it proved accordingly. Which kind of Divination is called Οιωνία, and hath been prohibited by a Generall Councell. The loſſe of this battell (wonne by Beliſarius Commander of the Armies of the Emperour Juſtinian) drew on the loſſe of Rome, and the Eaſt parts of Italy, (with the Realm of Naples) and occaſioned the death of Theodatus, ſlain ſhortly after theſe great loſſes by the Gothes themſelves. 3.

537 4 Vitiges, choſen by the Gothes, beſieged and taken in Ravenna by the ſaid Beliſarius. 3.

541 6 Ardaricus, of whom nothing memorable. 1.

542 7 Totilas, a right valiant Prince, recovered all which had been got from his Predeceſſors, and ſacked Rome in the ſight of Beliſarius, then returned into Italy, and not able to hinder him. Vanquiſhed and killed in fight by Narſes, in the 11 of his reign. 11.

553 8 Teyas, the laſt King of the Gothes in Italy, who being vanquiſhed by Narſes in the fourteenth year of his Reign, ſubmitted himſelf to the Eaſtern Emperours: but after breaking out again, he was finally diſcomfited, and ſlain by Narſes not far from the City of Nocera, An. 567. After which time the Gothes and the Italians mingled in blood and language, became one Nation.

But the miſeries of Italy, and thoſe Weſtern parts were not ſo to end. No ſooner had God freed them from the rod of his viſitations, which he had laid upon them in the times of Perſecution, formerly remembred, and given them peace within their dwellings; but they became divided into ſchiſms and factions: and after wallowed in thoſe ſins, which a continuall ſurfeit of proſperity hath commonly attending on it. Inſomuch that devout Salvian, who lived much about theſe times, complains of that high hand of wickedneſſe, wherewith they did provoke the patience of Almighty God; the lives of Chriſtians being grown ſo deplorably wicked, that they became a ſcandall to the Faith and Goſpel. In nobis patitur Chriſtus opprobrium, in nobis patitur lex Chriſtiana maledictum, ſaith that godly Biſhop. So that their ſins being ripe for vengeance, God ſent the barbarous Nations as his Executioners, to execute his divine juſtice on impenitent men; and made them ſenſible though Heathens, that it was Gods work they did, and not their own, in laying ſuch afflictions on theſe Weſtern parts. Ipſi fatebantur non ſuum eſſe quod facerent, agi enim ſe & perurgeri divino juſſu, as the ſaid godly Biſhop doth inform us of them. On this impulſion the Vandals did acknowledge that they firſt waſted Spain, and then harried Africk: And on the ſame did Attila the Hun inſert into his Royall Titles the ſtile of Malleus Orbis, and Flagellum Dei; acknowledging thereby his own apprehenſion of ſome ſpeciall and extraordinary calling to this publick ſervice. Nay, as Jornandes doth report, ſome of theſe barbarous people did not ſtick to ſay, that they were put on this employment by ſome Heavenly viſions, which did direct them to the work which they were to do. In proſecution of the which, in leſs time than the compaſs of 80 years, this very Italy (though antiently the ſtrength and ſeat of that Empire) was ſeven times brought almoſt unto deſolation, by the Fire and Sword of the Barbarians, viz. Firſt by Alarick, King of the Gothes, who ſacked Rome, Naples, &c. 2. By Attila King of the Hunnes, who razed Florence, waſted Lombardy, & not without much difficulty was diverted from the ſpoil of Rome, by the interceſſion of Pope Leo: 3. By Genſericus King of the Vandals, who alſo had the ſackage of Rome it ſelf: 4. By Biorgus King of the Alani, in the time of the Emperour Majoranus: 5. By Odoacer King of the Heruli, who drove Auguſtulus the laſt Weſtern Emperour out of his eſtate; & twice in thirteen years laid the Countrey deſolate: 6. By Theodorick King of the Gothes, called in by Zeno Emperour of Conſtantinople, to expel Odoacer and the Heruli: And 7 by Gundebald King of the Burgundians, who having ranſacked all Lombardy, returned home again, leaving poſſeſſion to the Gothes. As for theſe Gothes, being the firſt and laſt of thoſe barbarous Nations who had any thing to do in the ſpoil of Italy, after they had reigned here under eight of their Kings, for the ſpace of 72 years, they were at laſt ſubdued by Beliſarius and Narſes, two of the braveſt Souldiers that had ever ſerved the Eaſtern Emperours; and Italy united once more to the Empire, in the time of Juſtinian. But Narſes having governed Italy about 17 years, and being after ſuch good ſervice moſt deſpightfully uſed by Sophia (never the wiſer for her name) the wife of the Emperor Juſtinus, abandoned the Countrey to the Lombards. For the Empreſs envying his glories, not only did procure to have him recalled from his Government; but ſent him word, That ſhe would make the Eunuch (for ſuch he was) come home & ſpin among her maids. To which the diſcontented man returned this anſwer, That he would ſpin her ſuch a Web, as neither ſhe nor any of her maids ſhould ever be able to unweave. And therupon he opened the paſſages of the Countrey to Alboinus King of the Lombards, then poſſeſſed of Pannonia; who coming into Italy with their Wives and Children, poſſeſſed themſelves of all that Countrey which antiently was inhabited by the Ciſalpine Galls, calling it by their own names Longobardia, now corruptly Lombardy. Nor ſtaid he there, but made himſelf maſter of the Countreys lying on the Adriatick, as far as to the borders of Apulia: and for the better Government of his new Dominions, erected the four famous Dukedomes, 1 of Friuli at the entrance of Italy, for the admiſſion of more aids if occaſion were, or the keeping out of new Invaders: 2 Of Turin, at the foot of the Alpes againſt the French: 3. Of Benevent, in Abruzzo, a Province of the Realm of Naples, againſt the incurſions of the Greeks, then poſſeſſed of Apulia, and the other Eaſtern parts of that Kingdome: And 4 of Spoleto in the midſt of Italy, to ſuppreſs the Natives; leaving the whole, and hopes of more unto his ſucceſſors.

The Lombardian Kings of Italy.

756. 23 Deſiderius, the laſt of the Lombards, of whom more anon. In the mean time we will look into the ſtory of ſome of the former Kings, in which we find ſome things deſerving our conſideration. And firſt beginning with Alboinus, the firſt of this Catalogue, before his coming into Italy he had waged war with Cunimundus, a King of the Gepidæ; whom he overthrew, and made a drinking Cup of his Skull. Roſumund daughter of this King he took to Wife; and being one day merry at Verona, forced her to drink out of that deteſted Cup; which ſhe ſo ſtomacked, that ſhe promiſed one Helmichild, if he would aid her in killing the King, to give him both her ſelf and the Kingdome of Lombardy. This when he had conſented to, and performed accordingly, they were both ſo extremely hated for it, that they were fain to fly to Ravenna, and put themſelves into the protection of Longinus the Exarch. Who partly out of a deſire to enjoy the Lady; partly to be poſſeſſed of that maſſe of Treaſure which ſhe was ſaid to bring with her; but principally hoping by her power and party there, to raiſe a beneficiall War againſt the Lombards; perſwaded her to diſpatch Helmichild out of the way, and take him for her husband; to which ſhe willingly agreed. Helmichild coming out of a Bath called for drink, and ſhe gives him a ſtrong poyſon; half of which when he had drunk, and found by the ſtrange operation of it how the matter went, he compelled her to drink the reſt: ſo both dyed together. 2. Clephes the ſecond King extended the Kingdome of the Lombards to the Gates of Rome: but was ſo tyrannical withall, that after his death, they reſolved to admit of no more Kings, diſtributing the Government among 30 Dukes. Which diviſion, though it held not above 12 years, was the chief cauſe that the Lombards failed of being the abſolute Lords of all Italy. For the people having once caſt off the yoak of obedience, and taſted ſomewhat of the ſweetneſſe of licentious Freedome; were never after ſo reduced to their former duty, as to be aiding to their Kings in ſuch Atchievments as tended more unto the greatneſſe of the King, than the gain of the ſubject. 3. Cunibert the 14 King was a great lover of the Clergy, and by them as lovingly requited. For being to encounter with Alachis the Duke of Trent, who rebelled againſt him; one of the Clergy knowing that the Kings life was chiefly aimed at by the Rebels, put on the Royal Robe, and thruſt himſelf into the head of the Enemy, where he loſt his own life, but ſaved the Kings. 4. Aribert the 17 King, gave the Coltian Alpes containing Piemont, and ſome part of the Dutchy of Millain to the Church of Rome: which is obſerved to be the firſt Temporall Eſtate, that ever was conferred upon the Popes, and the foundation of that greatneſſe which they after came to. 5 The 19 King was Luitprandus, who added to the Church the Cities of Ancona, Narnia, and Humana, belonging to the Exarchate; having firſt won Ravenna, and the whole Exarchy thereof. An. 741. the laſt Exarch being called Eutichus. But the Lombards long enjoyed not his Conqueſts. For Pepin King of France, being by Pope Stephen the third, ſolicited to come into Italy; overthrew Aſtulphus, and gave Ravenna to the Church. The laſt King was Deſiderius, who falling at oddes with Adrian the firſt, and beſieging him in Rome; was by Charles the great, Succeſſor to Pepin, beſieged in Pavy, and himſelf with all his children taken priſoners, An. 774. And ſo ended the Kingdome of the Lombards, having endured in Italy 206 years. Lombardy was then made a Province of the French, and after of the German Empire: many of whoſe Emperours uſed to be crowned Kings of Lombardy, by the Biſhops of Millain, with an Iron Crown; which was kept at Modoecum, now called Monza, a ſmall Village. This Charles confirmed his Fathers former donations to the Church; and added of his own accord, Marca Anconitana, and the Dukedome of Spoleto. For theſe and other kindneſſes, Charles was by Pope Leo the fourth, on Chriſtmas day crowned Emperour of the Weſt, An. 801. whoſe Succeſſors ſhall be reckoned when we come to the ſtory of Germany. At this diviſion of the Empire, Irene was Empreſſe of the Eaſt; to whom and her Succeſſors was no more allotted than the Provinces of Apulia, and Calabria, (the Eaſt parts of the Realm of Naples) being then in poſſeſſion of the Greeks. To the Popes were confirmed or given by this Emperour and his father, almoſt all the Lands which they poſſeſſe at this day; though afterwards extorted from them by the following Emperors, or under colour of their Title: by many ſeveral waies and means brought again unto them, as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter in convenient place. The Venetians, in that little they then had, remained ſui juris. The reſt of Italie, containing all the other Provinces of the Kingdome of Naples, together with Tuſcanie, Friuli, Treviginna, and whatſoever is at this day in the poſſeſſion of the Dukes of Millaine, Mantua, Modena, Parma, Montferrat, and the Duke of Savoy as Prince of Piemont, together with Liguria, or the State of Genoa; was reſerved by Charles unto himſelf, and in his life-time given by him to Pepin his ſecond ſon, with the ſtyle or title of King of Italie. But long it did not reſt in the houſe of France; the Princes of the Lombards wreſting it from the line of Charles, and after weakning and dividing it by their ſeveral factions; till in the end in ſtead of an united Kingdome, there roſe up many ſcattered Principalities, as ſhall hereafter be declared. But firſt we muſt proceed to the Kings of Italie, of which we ſhall endevour as exact a Catalogue, as the confuſions of that State can be capable of.

The Kings of Italie, of the French, Italian, and German Lines.

1 Pepin, ſon of Carolus Magnus, died before his Father.
2 Barnard, ſon of Pepin.
3 Ludovicus Pius, Emperor, and King of France.
841 4 Lotharius, Emperor, eldeſt ſon of Ludovicus. 15.
856 5 Ludovicus II. Emperor, eldeſt ſon to Lotharius. 20.
876 6 Carolus Calvus, Emperor, the yongeſt ſon of Ludovicus Pius. 2.
7 Caroloman, nephew to Ludovicus Pius, by Ludovicus his ſecond ſon, ſurnamed the Antient.
8 Carolus Craſſus, or the Fat, Emperor, brother of Caroloman, the laſt King of Italie of the houſe of Charles, he died Anno 888.
888 9 Guy, Duke of Spoleto, contends with Berengarius Duke of Friuli, both of the Longobardian Race, for the Kingdome of Italie; and in fine carrieth it againſt him.
894 10 Lambert, the ſon of Guy, crowned by Pope Formoſus.
11 Ludovick, ſon of Boſon of Ardennes, King of Arles and Burgundy, by ſome Writers called only Earl of Provence; upon the death of Lambert invadeth Italie, and is made King.
917 12 Berengarius, Duke of Friuli, vanquiſheth Ludovicus, is made King of Italie; and at laſt overcome by the Hungarians; who having waſted the Countrey returned back again.
13 Rodolph Duke of Burgundy Tranſ-jurane, called into Italie againſt Berengarius, reſigned it in exchange for the Kingdome of Arles and Burgundy to his Couſen, 926 14 Hugh D' Arles, King of Arles and Burgundy, who held the Kingdome of Italie upon this reſignation; but after many troubles, was at laſt outed of it by Berengarius, and returned into France.
946 15 Berengarius II. ſon of of the former Berengarius, on the retreat of Hugh, received by the Italians as Protector to Lotharius the ſon of Hugh; beſieging Adelhais the next heir of Italie (on the death of Lotharius) was taken priſoner by the Emperor Otho.
16 Otho, called into Italie by Adelhais, daughter to Rodolph King of Burgundy and Italie; marrieth the Lady, and in her right is King of Italie.
974 17 Otho II. ſon of the former Otho, marrieth Theophania neece to Nicephorus Phocas, Emperor of Conſtantinople, and hath Calabria for her Dower. 20.
984 18 Otho III. Emperor, and King of Italie, in whoſe minority the Kingdome was uſurped by 19 Hardnicus, a man of great power in Italie, who kept it all the time of Otho; till being broken with long wars by Henry the ſucceeding Emperor, he was forced to quit it.
20 Henry, the ſecond Emperor of that name, having thrice vanquiſhed Harduicus, got the Kingdome of Italie, and left the ſame unto the Emperors his Succeſſors: the Title of Italie after this time being drowned in that of the Empire; and the Countrey governed as a part and Member of the Empire, by ſuch Commanders and other Officers as the Emperors from time to time ſent thither. But long it ſtaid not in that ſtate. For the Popes of Rome knowing how much it did concern them in point of Polity, to weaken the Imperial Power in Italie, without which their own Grandour could not be maintained; ſtirred up continual factions and wars againſt them; and by that means, and by the Cenſures of the Church which they denounced according as they ſaw occaſion, did ſo aſtoniſh and diſtract them; that in the end the Emperors began to lay aſide the affairs of Italie, by which they reaped more trouble than the profit came to. Inſomuch that Rodolfus Habſpurgenſis, a valiant and a politick Prince, finding the ill ſucceſs which Henry the fourth and fifth, and Frederick the firſt and ſecond, Emperors of more puiſſance than himſelf, had found in their Italian actions and pretenſions; reſolved to rid his hands of that troubleſome and fruitleſs Province; and to that end made as much money as he could of that commodity, which he ſaw he was not like to keep. And yet he ſold good penny-worths too, to them that bought them; the Florentines paying for their Liberties but ſix thouſand Crowns, the Citizens of Luca ten thouſand; others as they could make their Markets. And being once required the reaſon, why he went not into Italie to look to the affairs thereof, as his Predeceſſors had done before him: he is ſaid to have returned for anſwer that conceit of the Fox, for his not going to attend (as the other beaſts did) at the Lions Den.

—Quia

——— Quia me veſtigia terrent
Omnia me adverſum ſpectantia, nulla retrorſum.

That is to ſay,

I dare not go, becauſe no track I ſee
Of any beaſt returning towards me.

Which faulty and improvident reſolution being followed by too many of his Succeſſors, not only gave the Popes the opportunity they looked for, of making themſelves the great diſpoſers of the affairs of Italie; but many petit Princes thereby took occaſion of getting all they could lay hold on for themſelves, and others. For by this means, the Scaligers made themſelves Maſters of Verona, the Paſſarines of Mantua, the Carrarians of Padua, the Baillons of Bononia; and by the ſame the Florentines got Piſtoia, and Ferrara was poſſeſſed by the Venetians. And although Henry the 7. provoked by theſe indignities, made a journey thither, reduced many of the revolted Cities to their former obedience, and was crowned King at Millain with the Iron Crown; as were alſo Ludovicus Bavarus, and Charles the 4. two of his Succeſſors: yet found they in concluſion ſuch ſmall benefit by the enterpriſe, as did not quit the charge and trouble which it put them to. So in the end Italie was left wholly in a manner to the Popes diſpoſing, who gave away to others what they could not manage; or otherwiſe confirmed thoſe men in their uſurpations, whom they found already poſſeſſed of the Emperors Countreys: and bound them by that means the faſter to the See of Rome, of which they were to hold their eſtates in fee; the Emperors having nothing left them but the empty Title, nor exerciſing the Imperial Power there any other way, than by changing Earldoms into Marquiſates, Marquiſates to Dukedoms, which they often did either for ready money, or reward of Service, or to preſerve ſome ſhadow of their ancient Intereſt.

And now we are to look on Italie as under a new face of things, not only in regard of ſeveral Principalities and forms of Government; but as repleniſhed with new Colonies or ſets of people, differing from the old in manners as well as language. And though the Soyl be now as it was before, yet hath that alſo found ſome change in the different production of the natural Fruits, as well as in the Manufactures and works of Art. For now beſides their Corn and Wine, which anciently were the ſtaple Commodities of this Countrey; they ſupply the reſt of Chriſtendome with Rice, Silks, Velvets, Taffaties, Sattans, Grograins, Raſh, Fuſtians, Goldwire, Allom, Armour, Glaſſes, and ſuch like commodities, which make their Merchants very wealthy; who being for the moſt part, Gentlemen of noble houſes, not only loſe not the eſteem of their Nobility by following the Trade of Merchandiſe (as in other places;) but by reaſon that they are poſſeſſed of eſtates in land, which they manage by their Bayliffs and other Servants, they are become the wealthieſt Merchants in all Chriſtendom.

Nor do the Gentry come behinde them in all manner of affluence, which can be poſſibly enjoyed in ſo rich a Soyl. Their Lands they ſet not at a rent, but at thirds or halfs, according as the Soyl is more or leſs fruitful; ſeldome abiding in the Countrey, but only for a moneth or two in the Summer times; but then they entertain themſelves with their Muſick and Miſtreſſes under the fragrant hedges and ſhady bowers, in as much ſolace and delight as may be deſired. The reſidue of the year they ſpend in Cities, and places of the moſt reſort, for change of company. But on the other ſide the Countrey Farmer lives a drudging and laborious life, liable to all the Taxes and Impoſitions which are laid on the Land; the Landlords part coming in clearly without any diſburſements or defalcations; inſomuch that it is proverbially, but moſt truly ſaid, that the rich men in Italie are the richeſt, and the poor men the pooreſt, in all the world.

The people generally are grave, reſpective, and ingenious Excellent men (ſaid once an Hiſpanioliſed Italian) but for theſe three things; that is to ſay, in their luſts they are unnatural, in their malice unappeaſable, in their actions deceitful. To which might be added, that they will blaſpheme rather than ſwear, and murder a man ſooner then ſlander him. But this perhaps may be the fault but of ſome particulars: it being obſerved by moderate and impartial men, that they are obedient to their Superiors, to Inferiors courteous, to their Equals full of all Civilities, to Strangers affable, and moſt deſirous by all fair and friendly offices to win their loves. In apparel they are ſaid to be very modeſt, in the furniture of their houſes ſumptuous, at their Tables neat, ſober of ſpeech, enemies of all ill reports of others; and of their own reputation ſo exceeding tender, that whoſoever ſlandereth any one of them, if it come unto the parties ear, he is ſure to die for it. Of money and expence he is very thrifty, and loves to be at no more coſt, than he is ſure to ſave by, or receive great thanks for: but otherwiſe for civil carriage and behaviour, ſurpaſſing all the Gentry of the World beſides. Only in ſtrictneſs to their wives they exceed all reaſon, of whom they are ſo extremely jealous, that they ſhut them up all day from the common view, and permit them liberty of diſcourſe with few or none. The lock uſed by a Gentleman of Venice to be aſſured of his wives chaſtity in the time of his abſence, is ſo known a ſtory, that it needs no report. But touching the predominancy of this jealous humor in moſt Southern Nations, we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter when we come to Spain. And yet if that be true, which is proverbially ſpoken of the women of Italie, the husbands have more reaſon for this ſtrict reſtraint, than other Nations are aware of. For though they be for the moſt part witty in ſpeech, and modeſt in the outward appearance, as much as any; yet it is ſaid of them in the way of proverb, that they are as Magpies at the door, Saints in the Church, Goats in the Garden, Devils in the houſe, Angels in the ſtreets, and Sirens in the windows, not wanting on this ground to ſet out themſelves with all advantages of Art, there being few amongſt them who uſe not painting, and other the ſophiſtical helps to fallacious Beauty; and thereupon they have a ſaying, that, if God make them tall and fat, (for the title of a goodly woman is much prized among them) they will make themſelves fair.

The language of both Sexes is very Courtly and fluent, all of them ſpeaking the Courtezan, or Court language; notwithſtanding the diverſity of Dialects which is amongſt them. For though there be a remarkable difference betwixt the Florentine and Venetian, the Millaneſe and the Roman, the Neopolitan and the Genoeſe; yet it is hard to be diſcerned by the tone or pronunciation, what language any Gentleman is of. But generally it is beſt ſpoken in the great Dukes Countrey, in the Cities of Florence and Sienna, but in Florence eſpecially; in which City Guicciardine the Hiſtorian, Boccace the Author of the Decameron, and other great Maſters of the Italian language, did live and flouriſh in their times.

For other men of note both for Arts and Arms, Italie hath afforded many ſince the fall of the Empire, viz. Æneas Silvius, afterwards Pope, by the name of Pius the ſecond; 2. Marſilius Patavinus, a ſtout defender of the Imperial Rights; 3. Petrarch, a Roman born; 4. Angelus Politianus, the Reſtorer of polite Literature in Italie; 5. Rodolphus Volaterranus; and 6. Picus Mirandula, two great Humanitians; 7. Guido Bonatus, a famous Aſtrologer; 8. Arioſto, and 9. Taſſo, the moſt renowned Poets of their times, and the later never followed ſince; 10. Sixtus Senenſis, one of the beſt Antiquaries of the Nation, and a great Divine; 11. Bellarmine, and 12. Baronius, the Buttreſſes and Pillars of the Church of Rome. And then for Armes, 1. Ludovicus Conius, the firſt Reſtorer of the honour of the Italian Souldiery; 2. Forti-Bracchio, and 3. Nicolao Picinino, two of his training up in the feats of Chivalry; 4, 5. Sforza the father, and the ſon; of which the ſon attained by his valour to the Dukedom of Millain: 6. Chriſtopher Columbus, a Genoeſe; Americus Veſputius, a Florentine, and 8. Sebaſtian Cabot, a Venetian, the fortunate Diſcoverers of America; 9. Andrea D' Oria, Admiral of the Navie to Charles the fifth; and 10. Ambroſe Spinola (both Genoeſe) Commander of the Armies of Philip the ſecond, King of Spain: Which laſt being once upbraided by Maurice, Prince of Orange, as iſſued from a Race of Merchants (though otherwiſe of a very ancient and noble Family) returned this tart and ſudden Anſwer, that he thought it a greater honour to him, being a Merchant, to have the command of ſo many Princes; than it could be unto the other, though a Prince by birth, to be under the command of ſo many Merchants.

The uſual Diviſion of Italie is into ſix parts, 1. Lombardie, 2. Tuſcanie, 3. the Land of the Church, 4. Naples, 5. Riviere de Genoa, and 6. the Land of Venice: and of them there is paſſed this Cenſure according to the principal Cities, i. e. Rome for Religion, Naples for Nobility, Millain for beauty, Genoa for ſtatelineſs, Florence for Policy, and Venice for riches. But take it as it ſtands at the preſent time, and

Italie is beſt divided into
- The Knigdoms of { Naples. Sicilie. Sardinia. }
- The Land or Patrimony of the Church.
- The great Dukedoms of { Urbin. Tuſcanie. }
- The Common-wealths of { Venice. Genoa. Luca. }
- The Eſtates of Lombardie, i. e.
  - The Dukedome of { Millain. Mantua. Modena. Parma. Montferrat. }
  - The Principality of Piemont.

The Kingdome of NAPLES.

THe Kingdom of NAPLES is invironed on all ſides with the Adriatick, Ionian, and Tuſcan Seas, excepting where it joyneth on the Weſt to the Lands of the Church: from which ſeparated by a line drawn from the mouth of the River Tronto (or Druentus) falling into the Adriatick, to the Spring-head of Axofenus. By which accompt it taketh up all the Eaſt of Italie; the compaſs of it being reckoned at 1468. miles.

It hath been called ſometimes the Realm of Pouille, from Pouille or Apulia, a chief Province of it; the firſt poſſeſſion of the Normans (the Founders of this Kingdome) in theſe parts of Italie: but called moſt commonly the Realm of Sicil, on this ſide of the Phare, to difference it from the Kingdom of the Iſle of Sicil, lying on the other ſide of the Phare or Strait of Meſſana. The reaſon of which improper appellation proceeded from Roger the firſt King hereof, who being alſo Earl of Sicil, and keeping there his fixed and ordinary reſidence; when he obtained the favour to be made a King, deſired (in honour of the place where he moſt reſided) to be created by the name of King of both the Sicilies. And that indeed is the true and ancient name of the Kingdome, the name or title of King of Naples not coming into use till the French were dispossessed of Sicil by the Aragonians; and nothing left them but this part of the Kingdome, of which the City of Naples was the Regal Seat, called therefore in the following times, the Kingdome of Naples; and by some of the Italian Writers, the Kingdome only. Naples.

This is esteemed to be the most fertile place in all Italie, abounding in all things necessary for the life of man, and in such also as conduce to delight and Physick; viz. Many Springs, and Medicinall waters, Baths of divers vertues, sundry Physical herbs. It hath also an excellent breed of Horses, which may not be transported but by the leave of the King, or at least the Vice-roy; great store of Allom, Mines of divers Metals, and the choicest Wines, called anciently Vina Massica, and Falerna, frequently mentioned by the Poets. And as for Merchandise, to Alexandria they send Saffron, to Genoa Silks, to Rome Wine, and to Venice Oyl, &c.

The Noblemen or Gentry hereof, live of all men the most careless and contented lives; and like the Tyrant Polycrates in the elder stories, have nothing to trouble them, but that they are troubled with nothing. And there is a great number of them too, there being reckoned in this Realm in the time of Ortelius, 13 Princes, 24 Dukes, 25 Marquesses, 90 Earls, and 800 Barons; and those not only Titular, as in other places, but men of great power and revenue in their several Countreys; insomuch that the yearly income of the Prince of Bisignan is said to be an hundred thousand Crowns, one year with the other; the Princes of Salerne, and St. Severine being near as great. They are all bound by their Tenure to serve the King in his Wars, which gives them many priviledges, and great command over the common Subject: whereby as they were made the abler to assist the King, upon any forein invasion; so are they in condition also of raising and countenancing such defections as have been made from King to King, and from one Family to another, as sorted best with their ambitious and particular interesses. For not alone the Nobles, but in general as many of the common people as can be spared from husbandry; are more addicted to the Wars than they are to Merchandise: The Nobles in pursuit of honour, and the Paisant out of desire of being in action; so that the greatest part of the Forces which serve the Spaniard in the Low Countreys, are sent from hence. To which, the humour which they have from the highest to the lowest, of going bravely in Apparel, serves exceeding fitly. An humour which is so predominant in both sexes, that though the Paisant lives all the rest of the week in as great servility and drudgery, as his Lord doth in pride and jollity; yet on the Sundaies and Saint-daies, he will be sure to have a good Suit to his back, though perhaps he hath no meat for his belly. And for the women, she that works hard both day and night for an hungry living, will be so pranked up on the Sundaies and other Festivals, or when she is to shew her self in some publick place; that one who did not know the humour, might easily mistake her, for some noble Lady.

The principal Rivers of this Kingdom are, 1 Sybaris, 2 Basentus, 3 Pescara, 4 Trontus, 5 Aufidus, 6 Salinellus, 7 Vomanus, 8 Salinus, and 9 Gariglian. The most famous of which, are Aufidus and Gariglian. The first as being the only River of Italie, which rising South side of the Apennine, forceth a breach through it to the upper Sea: but more for the great battel fought on the banks thereof, called the battell of Cannæ, of which more hereafter. The other no lesse famous for those many battels, which have been fought near it between the French and the Spaniard, for the Kingdome of Naples: especially that famous Battel between the Marquesse of Saluzzes, General of the French, and Gonsalvo, Leader of the Spaniards; the loss of which Victory by the French, was the absolute confirmation of the Realm of Naples to the Spaniards. More famous is this River for the death of Peter de Medices, who being banished his Countrey at the comming of King Charles the 8. into Italie, and having divers times in vain attempted to be reimpatriate, followed the French Army hither, and after the loss of the day, took ship with others, to fly to Cajeta; but over-charging the vessel, she sunk and drowned them all. But most famous is it, in that Marius, that excellent, though unfortunate Captain, being by Sylla's faction driven out of Rome, hid himself stark naked in the dirt and weeds of this River: where he had not layen long, but Sylla's Souldiers found him, and carried him to the City of the Minturnians, being not far off. These men, to please Sylla, hired a Cimber to kill him, which the fellow attempting (such is the vertue of Majesty even in a miserable fortune) run out again, crying, he could not kill C. Marius. This River was of old called Liris; and towards its influx into the Sea expatiated into Lakes and Fens, called the Lakes of Minturni, from a City of that name adjoyning.

It is divided into the Provinces of 1 Terra di Lavoro, 2 Abruzzo, 3 Puglia or Apulia, 4 Terra de Otranto, 5 Calabria Superior, 6 Calabra Inferior, and 7 the Isles of Naples. Some of which have some smaller Territories adjoyning to them, which we shall meet withall as they come in our way.

TERRA DI LAVORO is bounded on the North with Abruzzo, from which separated by the Apennine Hils; on the East with the River Silarus, which parteth it from the lower Calabria; on the South with the Tyrrhenian or Tuscan Sea; and on the West with Latium, or Campagna di Roma; from which divided by the River Gariglian, called in old times Liris. Called anciently Campania Felix, in regard of the wonderful fertility of it, and that it was the seat or dwelling of the Campans; by some modern Latinists named Campania Antiqua, to difference it from Latium, which they now call Campagna di Roma, or Campania Nova. And for the other name of Terra di Lavoro, or Terra Laboratoris, it was given to it, from the continuall labour of the Husbandman in cultivating the ground, and carrying in the fruits thereof; but neither the reason, nor the name so new, as some men suppose. But I am sure, as old as Pliny, who calleth these parts sometime by the name of Laboriæ, sometimes of Campus Laborinus; and gives this reason of the name, quòd ingens in eo colendo sit labor, because of the great pains it requires to till it, and the great profit reaped by them who did till and manure it.

The Countrey so exceeding fruitful in Wines and Wheat, that by Florus the Historian it is called led Cereris & Bacchi certamen, and deservedly too. For in this noble Region one may see large and beautiful fields overshaded with rich Vines, thick and delightfull Woods, sweet Fountains, and most wholsome Springs of running waters; useful as well for the restoring of mans health, as delight and pleasure: and in a word, whatsoever a covetous minde can possibly aim at, or a carnal covet.

Towns of note here were many in the elder times. The principal whereof, 1 Cajeta, seated on a fair and capacious Bay, from the crookedness whereof it is thought by Strabo, to have took the name; the word in the Laconian language signifying crooked. Others will have it so called from Καίω, Uro, with reference to the burning of the Fleet of Æneas by the Trojan Ladies; for fear of being forced again to go to Sea, where they had been so extremely tossed in their former voyages. But why that Fact committed on the furthest coasts of Sicil, should be so solemnly commemorated here on the shores of Italie, I can see no reason, and therefore we may far more probably derive it from Cajeta, the nurse of Æneas; in memory of whom, being buried here, or hereabouts, Æneas is affirmed to have built this Town. Of which thus the Poet, Æneid. lib. 7.

Æternam moriens famam, Cajeta, dedisti.

That is to say,

Æneas Nurse, Cajeta, by her death,
Did to these shores an endless fame bequeath.

But on what ground soever it first had this name, it is assuredly a place of great strength and consequence; and of so special importance for the estate of this Kingdome, that (as Comineus hath observed) if King Charles the 8. had but only fortified it, and the Castle of Naples; the Realm had never been lost. 2. Naples, the Metropolis of the Kingdome, a beautiful City, containing seven miles in compass. It was once called Parthenope, and falling to ruine, was new built, and called Neapolis. Among other things, here is an Hospital, the revenues whereof is 60000 Crowns, wherewith, besides other good deeds, they nourish in divers parts of the Kingdome, 2000 poor Infants. In this City, the disease called Morbus Gallicus, or Neapolitanus, was first known in Christendome. This City is seated on the Sea-shore, and fortified with four strong Castles, viz. 1 Castle Capodua, where the Kings Palace was; 2 Ermo; 3 Castle del Ovo, or the Castle of the Egge, and 4 Castle Novo, or the new Castle. But nature hath not done much less to her Fortifications, than the hand of Art; the Town being for the most part environed by Sea, or Mountains not to be ascended without great difficulty and disadvantages. Which Mountains, as they serve on that side as a bank to the City, so do they furnish the Citizens with most generous Wines; and being once ascended yeeld a gallant prospect both for Sea and Land. A City honoured by the seat of the Vice-roy, and the continual resort, if not constant residence of most of the great men of the Realm; which makes the private buildings to be very graceful, and the publick stately. And yet it had increased much more in buildings, than it is at present, if the King had not forbidden it special by Edict. And this he did, partly at the perswasion of his Noblemen, who feared that if such a restraint were not laid upon them, their vassals would forsake the Countrey to inhabit here, so to enjoy the priviledges and exemptions of the Regal City: but principally upon jealousie and point of State, the better to prevent all revolts and mutinies, which in most populous Cities are of greatest danger. 3 Capua, once the head of the Campans, seated in a delicious and luxurious soyl, and one of the three Cities which the old Romans judged capable of the seat of the Empire; the other two being Carthage, and Corinth. Being distressed by the Samnites, they were fain to cast themselves into the Armes of the Romans, who did not only take them into their protection, but suffered them to live according to their own Lawes, as a Free Common-wealth; rather like a Confederate than a Subject-State. Which freedome they enjoyed, till after their revolt to the Carthaginians; when being reduced to their obedience by force of Armes, they lost all their Liberties, and hardly scaped its fatal and final ruine: drawing the whole nation of the Campans, with divers lesser States, which depended on them, into bondage with it, A. V. C. 542. Appius and Flaccus being Consuls. The pleasures of this place was it which enervated the victorious Army of Annibal, who wintered here after the great defeat given to Terentius Varro at the Battel of Cannæ; whence came the saying, Capuam esse Cannas Annibali. 4. Cuma, a City once of great power and beauty, till Campania was subdued by the Romans; after which it decayed in both. Near hereunto was the Cave or Grot of one of the Sibyls, called from hence Cumæa; and not far off the Lake called Lacus Avernus, the stink whereof is said to have poysoned Birds as they flew over it; supposed by ignorant Antiquity for the entrance of Hell. And finally, from this place it was, that Æneas is fabled by the Poets to have gone down to the infernal Ghosts, to talk with his Father. 5 Nola, where Marcellus discomfited the Forces of Annibal, and thereby gave the Romans to understand, that he was not invincible. 6 Puteoli, a small Town standing on a Creek of the Sea, just opposite to Baiæ, on the the other side of it; from which distant about three miles and an half. Both Towns remarkable for the Bridge built betwixt them by Caligula, composed of sundry vessels joyned together in such sort, that there was not only fair and large passage over it, but victualling houses on both sides of it: Over which Bridge thus made, he marched and remarched in triumphal Robes, as if not only the Earth, but the very Seas were made subject to him. And this he did (as himself afterwards affirmed to some of his friends) to awe the Ocean; and imitate (if not exceed) the like acts of Xerxes and

Darius,

Campania

Darius, mentioned in the ancient Writers; as also to terrifie the Britains and the German Nations, with the report of such a notable exploit; or (as some thought) to fulfil the Propheſie of one Thraſibulus a fortune-teller of those time, who had been often heard to say in the lifetime of Tiberius (his next immediate Predeceſſor) that it was as impoſſible for Caius to ſucceed in the Empire, as it was for him to ride on horſeback from Baul to Puteoli. 7 Not far hence, on a Semicircular Bay, ſtands the City of Baiæ (whereof Baul before mentioned is a part) ſo called, as they ſay, from Baius one of the companions of Ulyſſes in his Navigations. A City in the flouriſh of the Roman Empire of five miles in length, and two in breadth; ſo wonderfully endued by nature, and adorned by Art, that no place in the world was thought comparable to it:

Nullus in Orbe locus Baiis prælucet amœnis.

Few places in the world there are
With pleaſant Baiæ to compare. As it is in Horace.

A City beautified with magnificent Temples, multitudes of Baths, or Bannias, Imperial Palaces, ſtately buildings, and the adjoyning Manor-houſes of the principal Romans, whom the pleaſures of the place invited hither; and was indeed too great and ſenſible a monument of the laſciviouſneſs and luxury of that proſperous people, of which the Ambubaiæ mentioned in the Satyriſt is ſufficient proof; (though ſome fetch the Etymologie of the word far enough from Rome, deriving it from Ambub, a Syrian word ſignifying a Pipe, from whence the Latines give this name to their Minſtrels) now ſo demoliſhed by War, and devoured by Water, that there is nothing of it to be ſeen but ſome ſcattered ruines. 8 Miſenus, ſeated near a great hill or Promontory of the ſame name, at the foot whereof there is a large and capacious harbour; where Auguſtus keeping one Navy, and another at Ravenna in the upper Sea, awed the whole Roman Empire. But theſe were places of renown in the former times, all which, exepting Naples, are now only known by what they have been, not by what they are. The principal Cities at this time, are (next to Naples it ſelf) Seſſa, the Sinueſſa or Suiſſa of the ancients, and now the title of a Dukedome to the houſe of Cordova in Spain derived from Gonſalvo the great Captain, of whom more hereafter. 2 Averſa, a Town of great ſtrength and conſequence, ſecond to few in all the Kingdome; but forced to yeeld (though the Earl of Monpenſier then Vice-roy of the Realm for Charles the 8. were in perſon in it) to the good fortune of Gonſalvo, ſpoken of before: the whole Kingdome following after. 3 Ceano, 4 Salvi, 5 Venafre, and 6 Caſerte, with others, to the number of 22, beſides 166 Caſtles or defenſible places. Here is alſo in this Tract the Hils called Gallicanum, where Annibal that great Maſter in the Art of War, frighted that wary Captain Fabius Maximus, by the ſtratagem of two thouſand Oxen, carrying fire in their horns; by which device he freed himſelf out of thoſe difficult Straights, in which he was at that preſent. And in this Countrey there is alſo the Hill Veſuvius, that caſteth out flames of fire, the ſmoke of which ſtifled Plinie ſenior, coveting to ſearch the cauſe of it. The flame hereof brake forth cruelly alſo during the reign of Titus, caſting out not only ſuch ſtore of ſmoke, that the very Sun ſeemed to be in the Eclipſe, but alſo huge ſtones: and of aſhes ſuch plenty, that Rome, Africk, and Syria, were even covered; and Herculanum, and Pompeii, two Cities in Italie, were overwhelmed with them. There were heard diſmal noiſes all about the Province; and Giants of incredible bigneſs ſeen to ſtalk up and down, about the top and edges of the mountain; which extraordinary accident, either was a cauſe, or preſage of the future Peſtilence, which raged in Rome and Italie long after.

On the Eaſt ſide of this Campania, and properly (as anciently it was eſteemed) a part thereof, lieth that little Territory, which Alfonſo King of Naples cauſed to be called the Principate; bounded upon the Eaſt with Calabria inferior, or that part thereof which is called the Baſilicate; from which parted by the River Silarus. It extends in length 33 miles, and 16 in breadth: and was of old the ſeat of the Picentini, a colony of the Piceni dwelling on the Adriatick. Principal places of it, 1 Maſſa, by the Italians called Marſo, of more note for the Hils adjoyning, than any great beauty or antiquiuy it hath in it ſelf. Thoſe hils now called Monte Marſo, but known to the Romans by the name of Montes Maſſici; of ſpecial eſtimation for the rich Wines, called Vina Maſſica. 2 Nuceria, nine miles from the Sea, in a very plentiful and delicious ſoyl. 3 Rivelli, a City not long ſince built, which for the elegancy of the buildings hardly yeelds to Naples. 4 Malſi, or Amalphi, an Arch-biſhops See, in which it is ſuppoſed that the Mariners Compaſs was firſt found out. It is ſituate on the Sea ſide, and giveth name to the coaſt of Amalfe, fenced with Hils or Mountains of ſo great an height, that to look down into the Valleys or the Sea adjoyning, makes men ſick and giddy. A Town of great note (were there nothing elſe to commend it to our obſervation) for the finding out of the Mariners Compaſs (as before is ſaid) deviſed and contrived here about the year 1300, by one John Flavio, a native or inhabitant of it. 5 Salern, about a mile from the Sea, the title of the Prince of Salern, and an Univerſity, but chiefly for the ſtudy of Phyſick, the Doctors of which wrote the Book called Schola Salerni, dedicated to a King of England: not to K. Henry the 8. as it is conceived, for then the Commentary on it, written by Arnoldus Villanovanus, (who lived about the year 1313) muſt needs have been before the Text. And therefore I conceive it dedicated either to King Richard the firſt, or King Edward the firſt, who in their journeys towards the Holy Land, might beſtow a viſit on this place, and give ſome honourary incouragement to the Students of it. Beſides theſe there are ſaid to be in this ſmall Territory, fifteen other good Towns, and two hundred and thirteen Caſtles or walled places; but theſe the principal.

II. North of Campania, lyeth the Province now called ABRUZZO, bounded on the Eaſt with

Puglia,

Abruzzo. Puglia, or Apulia; on the West, with Marca Anconitana; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; and on the South, with the Appennine. It is called Aprutium by the Latins, but the Reason of the name not agreed upon: divided anciently between the Picentes and the Samnites: the Picentes taking up those parts which lay next the Adriatick; the rest (being far the greater part) was possessed by the Samnites. These last (for of the others we shall speak elsewhere) a people which held longer wars with the state of Rome, than almost all Italie besides; as keeping them in continual action for the space of 70 years together, besides many after-claps. In which long course of Wars, the Romans were so hardly put to their shifts, that they were four times fain to have recourse to the last refuge; which was the choosing of Dictators; and yet came off so often with success and victory, that it afforded them the honour of thirty Triumphs. But these Samnites, as they were a potent, so they were also a compound Nation; consisting of the Ferentani, Caraceni, Peligni, Præcatini, Vestini, Hirpini, and Samnites properly so called; into which name the rest of the inferiour Tribes were after swallowed. The chief City of the whole was called Samnium, whence they had their name; which in the conclusion of the War was so defaced by Papyrius the Roman Consul, ut hodie Samnium in ipso Samnio requiratur; that not improperly (saith Florus) a man might ask where Samnium stood, even in the middle of the City. Which hapned A. V. C. 481.

The River of Pescara runneth through the midst of it, and divideth it into two parts, whereof the one containeth 5 Cities, and 150 Castles, or walled places; the other, 184 Castles, and 4 Cities. The principal Cities of the whole, 1 Arpinum, once the chief Town of the Arpinates, and the Countrey of M. Tullius Cicero, that famous Orator, now a poor Village called Arpino. 2 Beneventum, heretofore called Maleventum, as we finde in Pliny, because the Winds hereabouts were so fierce and violent, that men could not sit upon their horses; but had at last that name of Beneventum, from the pleasant Plains and spacious Valleys which lye round about it; in like manner as the Countrey of the old Allobroges, exchanged the name of Malvoy, into that of Salvoy. It was one of the four Dukedomes which the Lombards erected, when they first came into Italie, for the better assuring of their Conquest; and was given to the Church of Rome by the Emperor Henry the fourth, in exchange of a certain Tribute remitted by Pope Leo the ninth to the Church of Bamberg, where the said Emperor was born; and is still under the command of the Popes of Rome. 3 Aquila, built by the Emperor Frederick the second, King of Naples, to assure the Realm upon that Quarter. 4 Lanciano, four miles from the Adriatick, a Town of great Trade, and much resorted to by Merchants at her Annual Marts. 5 Ortona, the Port-town unto Lanciano. 6 Teranum, or Teran (Ptolemy cals it Inter-amna) anciently the Metropolis of the Precatini. 7 Citta di Chieti, situate on a Hill some seven miles from the Sea, heretofore known by the name of Theate. 8. Aquino, the Birth-place of Thomas Aquinas the great School-man, who first brought the scattered limbs of Popery into a body. Here stood also 9 the old Town Corfinium, the chief City of the Peligni, made good a while by Domitius Ænobarbus against Julius Cæsar, in his first following after Pompey, then retired from Rome. And seven miles hence, 10 Sulmo, honoured with the birth of Ovid, that renowned Poet, as himself testifieth,

Sulmo mihi Patria est, gelidis uberrimus undis, Millia qui novies distat ab Urbe, decem.

From the great City ninety miles doth stand.

There belongeth also to Abruzzo the Countrey of Molisi, in which are 104 walled places or Castles, and four considerable Towns; the principal of which is Bovianum, or Boiano, now a Bishops See, in former times a Colony of the Romans by Pliny called Bovianum Undecumanorum to difference it from another in this Tract of the same name, which he cals Bovianum vetus. 2 Luparetha, of which little memorable. In this Countrey also (I mean Abruzzo) are the straights called Furcæ Caudinæ, in which when the Samnites and their confederates had so inclosed the Romans, that there was no possibility to escape, they sent to Herennius, a man for his Age much honoured, and for his Wisdome much followed by them, to know what they should do with the captive Enemy. Word was returned, that they should send them home safe, and without dishonour. Thinking the old man had not been well informed of the state of the business, they sent to him again, and he advised, that they should put them all to the sword. These contrary answers made them judge amiss of the old mans brain; and therefore following their own fancies, they spoyled the Romans, and disarmed them, and despightfully used them, and so sent them home. Which when Herennius came to know, he much lamented the imprudence of so rash an action; but much more the destruction of his Countrey, as a consequent of it. Telling them, after their return, that had they given the Romans a safe and honourable deliverance from the present danger, they had made them their friends for many Ages; or had they put unto the sword so many of their Souldiers and chief Commanders, they had disabled them for long time from pursuing the War: The middle which they had taken, would be their undoing; and so accordingly it proved For the Romans not being made their Friends by so odious a benefit, but hatching revenge for the disgrace, soon renewed the War; and under the conduct of Papyrius subdued the Countrey, and handled the poor conquered people with the like despight. An excellent Precedent unto Princes and those in power, how to proceed towards men of Quality and Rank, when they have them under; which must be, either not to strike at all, or to strike home and to the purpose. Nic. Machiavil in his Florentine History taxeth Rinaldo of Albizi for committing a great Solœcism in point of State, in that hating Cosmo

de Medices, and desiring to remove him from the publick managery of affairs, he thought it was sufficient to procure his Banishment: which Cosmo, afterwards returning, paid in better coyn. Whereupon he inferreth this notable Aphorism, that Great Persons must not at all be touched, or if they be, must be made sure from taking Revenge. Yet do I not interdict a Prince, or any supreme Governors, the use of Mercy. I know it is the richest Jewel which adorns the Crown. Nor dare I take upon me to direct the use of that excellent vertue. Only I shall observe what usage hath been commonly afforded towards such persons after their Delinquencies; whose liberty or life may create danger to the publick. The first is present Execution; for Mortui non mordent, as the saying is: a course more to be allowed of where it cannot, than commended where it may be spared. The second is either close imprisonment under trusty Guards, or else confinement to the house and custody of some trusty Statesman: in which great caution also is to be observed. For besides that nothing is more ordinary than the escape of great Prisoners, either by corrupting or deceiving their Keepers; We find in our own Histories, how Dr. Morton Bishop of Ely, being committed to the Duke of Buckingham by King Richard the 3. not only procured his own liberty, but brought about that Duke to the contrary faction. The last, which is in all times the gentlest, and in some cases the safest, is not only an absolute pardon of life, and a grant of liberty; but an endearing of the party delinquent, by giving him some place of honour, or committing unto his fidelity some office of trust; it being the nature of most men, that where they are not trusted, they are never true; and that as long as they lie under suspect and jealousies, they will be apt to entertain some thoughts of their lost condition. And of this kinde of dealing with a person Delinquent, we have a pregnant instance in the Emperor Otho: who not only pardoned Marius Celsus one of Galba's faction, and a chief one too; but put him in place nearest to him, and made him one of his principal Leaders, in the following War against Vitellius. His reason was, Ne hostis metum Reconciliationis adhiberet, lest lying aloof as a pardoned Enemy, he might conceive the breach were but badly made up. And on the other side, Marius Celsus proved so sensible of the obligation, that he continued faithfull to him to the very last; and lost his life in the pursuance of his quarrel: shewing thereby, that persons of a generous and noble disposition, are more obliged by favours, than restrained by terrour. But it is now time I should free my self of these Furcæ Caudinæ, and sport my self a while in the Plains of Apulia.

Apulia.

But I must note, before I take my leave hereof, that these two Provinces of Campania and Abruzzo, make up the greatest, richest, and best peopled part of the Realm of Naples. And therefore when the Kingdome was divided between the French and the Spaniards, it was allotted to the French, as having the priority, both of claim and power. The Provinces remaining, although more in number, yet are not comparable to these two for wealth and greatness, and were assigned over to the Spaniard, as lying most conveniently for the Realm of Sicilie.

III. PUGLIA is bounded on the West, with Abruzzo; on the East, with Terra di Otranto; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; on the South, with Calabria. It contains the whole Countrey called of old Apulia; from whence the Puglia of the Italians, and the Pouille of the French are to be derived.

The whole Countrey containeth in it besides Villages and Towns unfortified, 126 Castles and walled places, with 13 Cities of good note. The most considerable of which we shall meet withall in our Chorographie of the several parts, divided anciently by Ptolemie, and since him, by Leander, into Apulia Daunia, and Apulia Peucetia: the former subdivided into the Capitanate, and Pouille the Plain; the later into Bari, and the Land of Otranto. For that the land of Otranto, (though now a Province of it self) did sometimes pass in the accompt of Apulia; seems to me most probable in that all the East parts of this Kingdom were held by the Constantinopolitan Emperors (after the coming in of the Lombards) by no other names then those of Apulia and Calabria: and by no other names then those were assigned over unto Otho the 2. of Germany, on his mariage with Theophania, Neece to one of those Emperors. And I conceive that it was then laid unto Apulia, rather then to Calabria, first, in regard that the old inhabitants were the same in both; the Iapyges, Messapians and Salentini, possessing promiscuously all this Tract from Mount Garganus in Daunia, to the Promontory called Iapygium in the most Eastern angle of the Land of Otranto. And secondly, in regard that the people of both, have a disease peculiar only to themselves, occasioned by the biting of a little Serpent called a Tarantula, not curable but by musick only. This said, we will proceed in our Survey of the parts. And first,

APULIA DAVNIA, is that part hereof which lieth next to Abruzzo, from which parted, by the River Phiternus (now called Fortore) and so extending East-wards to the River Ausidus (Lofanto, the Italians call it) where it meets with Peucetia. The reason of the name is not yet agreed on. But I finde no more probable conjecture of it, than that it should be called thus of Daunus, the son of Danae by Pilumnus, once the King of this Countrey; it being reported in the Legends of those elder times, that Danae being delivered of Perseus whom she had by Jupiter, was by his Father the King Acrisius, exposed to the mercy of the Seas; by which she was waited with her young son to the coasts of this Province, here taken up by a poor Fisher, and by him carried to the Court, where the King became so enamoured of her, that he took her to Wife, and by her was Father to this Daunus. But Daunus had not long enjoyed it, on the death of his Father, when either by force or composition, he was fain to leave it to Diomedes King of Ætolia: who at the end of the Tojan War, wherein he was a principal Actor, hearing of the libidinous courses of his Wife Ægiale, abhorred the thought of living with her; and so came with his people to this Countrey; where he fixt his dwelling, and built the City of Argirypa, whereof more anon. But as for Daunus, though he was not able to keep the possession of this Countrey, yet he bequeathed his name unto it; and afterwards withdrawing into Latium with such of his subjects as were willing to follow his Adventures, he became there the chief or head of the Rutuli, Apulia. tuli, and built among them the Town of Ardea, his chief ſeat at the coming of Æneas into Italie; betwixt whom, and Turnus the ſon of this Daunus, grew that deadly ſewd, ſo celebrated in the Works of Virgil.

In this part hereof is the Lake of Leſina, ſo called from a City of that name adjoyning to it, made of the waters of Phiternus and ſome other Rivers, which there loſe themſelves; in compaſs 40 miles, and well ſtored with fiſh: the Eeles hereof the largeſt that have been ſeen. Another Lake called Arduarius, more memorable though not ſo great, it being ſaid hereof by Pliny, that the waters of it are neither diminiſhed by drawing, nor increaſed by Land-flouds. Here is alſo the Mount Garganus, known by that name in Virgil but now called S. Angelo, high, ſteep, and full of cragged rocks: 20 miles in compaſſe, but that extent diverſified into hils and moſt pleaſant vallies; well wooded, and well ſtored with waters: here being one Lake (beſides many others) called Lacus Varanus, ſaid to be 30 miles in circuit. A place defenſible by nature, and ſo ſtrong by art, that it is commonly the laſt piece in the the Realm of Naples, which is given up to the Invader: as appears plainly by the keeping of it by the Greeks and Sarazens for many years, after the Normans had poſſeſſed themſelves of the reſt of the Kingdome.

The whole divided by Alfonſo (in his new modelling of this Kingdome) into two parts, the greateſt and moſt flouriſhing called Pouille the Plain, from the condition of the ſoyl which is plain and level, not ſo much ſwelled with hils as the reſt of Apulia: for which cauſe called Puglia Piana by the modern Italian. Interjected betwixt which and Abruzza, lieth a ſmall Territory, by the ſaid King Alfonſo called the CAPITANATE, deſtitute both of Woods and Rivers, and conſequently not ſo populous as the reſt of this Province: well furniſhed notwithſtanding with all ſorts of grain, and ſtored with large and ſpacious paſtures, which breed ſuch infinite herds of Cattel, that the Tribute thence ariſing was valued at 80000 Crowns per annum in the time of Guicciardine, and by him reckoned one of the beſt Revenues of the Realm of Naples. Of which Tribute when the French could receive no part, by reaſon that on the diviſion which they made with Ferdinand the Catholick (ſpoken of before) this Territory as a part of Apulia, did belong to the Spaniards, they brake out into open war, pretending that the Countrey appertained to them, (as indeed it lay very near their part) and thereby gave a juſt occaſion to the Spaniards, a more diligent nation, and more intent upon their work, to worm them by degrees out of all the Kingdom.

Chief places of the whole Daunia, 1 Luceria, the Nuceria of Ptolemie, and the Rudra of Suetonius; as rich as it is ancient, and honoured with an Epiſcopal See. 2 Aſcoli, of old called Aſculum, and ſometimes Aſculum Satrianum, to difference it from another of that name in Anconitana; the ſtile and honour of a Duke. 3 Troia, a Dukes title alſo, built by the Eaſtern Emperors in a place of ſtrength and great advantage to reſtrain the inſolencies of the Sarazens, then infeſting this Countrey. Theſe three in that part of it which is called the Capitanate. Then in the other part called Pouille the Plain. 4 Sipontum, once a Roman Colony and an Archbiſhops See, which honour it enjoyed till deſtroyed by the Saracens. 5 Manfredonia, founded near the place of the former, by Manfred the Baſtard, King of Naples, the better to aſſure theſe parts of his Kingdome. A ſtately and magnificent City, the Seat of the Archbiſhop of Siponto; beautified with a capacious Harbour for receipt of Ships, and an impregnable Caſtle for defence thereof. 6 Salpe of great antiquity, but not elſe obſervable. 7 S. Severine of a newer date, but more rich and populous. 8 As ancient and as famous as the beſt amongſt them the poor Village of Canna, ſituate near the mouth or influx of the River Aufidus; ignobilis Apuliæ vicus, as it is in Florus, but ſuch as afterwards grew more notable for the great defeat which Annibal there gave to Paulus Æmilius and Terentius Varro the Roman Conſuls, of whoſe Army he ſlew 42700 on the very place. Which victory had he husbanded as he might have done, he had utterly ſubverted the State of Rome: ſo that it was moſt tartly (as moſt truly) ſaid by Maharbal General of his Horſe, Vincere ſcis Annibal, victoriâ uti neſcis; that he knew better how to get, then to uſe his victory. 9 But of moſt note in this part of Apulia was the Town of Argyripa, or Argyrippa as ſome call it, founded by Diomedes in the skirts of Mount S. Angelo towards the Sea, and in that part of this Countrey which then (or afterwards) was held by the Iapyges. Of which thus Virgil in the 11. of the Æneids:

Victor Gargani condebat Iapygis arvis.

And being Victor he a City builds
Near Garganus in the Iapygian fields,
And called it Agyrippa, by the name
Of ſome known place in the land from which he came.

By which we alſo may conclude, that it took this name with reference to ſome Town of Etolia, which was the native Countrey of Diomedes. For although I know that many of the ancient Writers, ſuppoſe it to have been firſt called Argos Hippium, with relation to a famous City of that name in Peloponneſus; and after by contraction or corruption to be named Argyrippam yet theſe words of Patriæ de nomine gentis, do perſwade me otherwiſe. Diomedes having nothing to do in the Countrey of Argolis, where that City ſtood; nor in the whole Demy-Iſland of Peloponneſus, whereof Argolis was a part or Province. It was called alſo Diomedia, and urbs Diomedis, becauſe of his foundation, and his Royal Seat, after his fixing in this Countrey; but at the laſt it came to be called Arpy, and by that name was known in the time of the Roman greatneſs. Now no where to be found but in the ruines of time, time, and the Records of Antiquity, unleſs it be in a poor Village called Sarpy whence Niger findeth it. Terra di Otranto.

APULIA PEUCETIA, extendeth from the Banks of the River Aufidus on the Weſt, to the land of Otranto on the Eaſt. So called as ſome conceive from Peucetius the Brother of Oenotrus; which may be probable enough, this being the firſt Countrey at which Oenotrus touched, when he came into Italie with his people. Bochartus a great Enemy of all Traditions, will have it called Peucetia, ἀπὸ τῆς πεύκης, for that great quantity of Pitch which theſe Countreys yeeld, as the word ſignifieth in the Greek. But whatſoever was the reaſon of the ancient name, that of the preſent is well known and agreed upon from Bari the chief City hereof, being now called Barry.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Barri, ſeated near the Sea, but without an Haven, but ſeated in ſo rich a ſoyl, and ſo well inhabited, that it is a fair and wealthy City, and the chief of this part of Apulia, taking name from hence. 2 Barlette, by the modern Latiniſts called Barulum, ſituate in or near the place of the old Canuſium; an Haven Town, and of great importance, reckoned for one of the four ſtrong holds of Italie, in theſe latter Ages; the other three being Crema in Lombardie, Prato in Tuſcanie, and Fabrianum now called Fabiano in Ancenitana. 3 Monopolis, a Port-town alſo, not very large, but of a neat elegant building; new built, and the Title of a Marqueſs. 4 Tranum, an ancient City, and an Archbiſhops See, but at this time better built then peopled, by reaſon of ſome defects in the Harbour upon which it ſtandeth. Theſe three laſt together with Manfredonia in the other Apulia, pawned by the Kings of Naples (when firſt invaded by the French) to the ſtate of Venice: but recovered from them not long after by Ferdinand the Catholick, when poſſeſſed of that Kingdom. 5 Bitonto, an Archbiſhops See alſo, one of which was a notable ſtickler in the Councel of Trent. 6 Polignano, on a rocky hill, the Honourary title of a Marqueſs, and a See Epiſcopal. 7 Molfette, which gives title to a Prince, but not elſe conſiderable. 8 Vigilia, now called Biſigli a Biſhops See, ſituate near the Adriatick amongſt craggie rocks. 9 Venſa, a ſtrong piece and of great importance; one of the laſt Towns which held good for the French, in the recovery of this Kingdom from Charles the 8. The Venuſium of the ancient Romans, and the Birth-place of Horace, hence called Venuſinus. Nothing conſiderable of theſe people in point of ſtory, but that confederating with Tarentum againſt the Romans, as the Calabrians, Brutii, and Lucani did; they were all forced to ſubmit to the power of Rome at the end of that war, A. V. C. 481. Papyrius Curſor and Sp. Carvilius being the ſecond time Conſuls.

IV. TERRA DI OTRANTO, as it is now called, was once the Eaſtern part of Apulia Daunia, unto which it joyneth, from which parted only by a line drawn from Brunduſium to Tarentum, of which more anon. Thus called from Otranto the chief Town hereof, the ſeat and habitation in the elder times of the Salentinia, the Japiges, and the Meſapiani, and is accordingly intituled in ancient Authors by the ſeveral names of Japygia, Meſapia, and Salentina. They were the laſt people of Italie which held out againſt Rome, and ſunk immediately after the Tarentini, upon whoſe Fate they did depend, Anno V. C. 487. Junius Pera and Fabius Pictor, the two Conſuls then triumphing for it. Of theſe three Nations the Japyges were of greateſt Fame or of greateſt Infamy. Cretans originally ſent in queſt of Glaucus the ſon of Minos, whom when they could not finde, and durſt not return without him, they fixed here their dwelling, Japyx the ſon of Dedalus, being their Captain, and conductor, and from him denominated. Growing into eſtate and power, they became not only ſo luxurious in their courſe of life, and effeminate in their dreſs and habit, that they were a ſcorn and ſcandal to the neighbour nations; but ſo regardleſs of their gods, that in the end they threw down all their Images, and deſtroyed their Temples: puniſhed at laſt for theſe high inſolencies by balls of fire falling on them from the heavens, with which the whole ſtock of them were almoſt extirpated. The Promontory called Japygium; being the extreme point of this Countrey towards Greece, now better known by the name of the Cape of St. Mary did take name from this people; and from thence the North-weſt wind (or the Weſt-north-weſt) which the Latines generally call Caurus, frequently blowing from this coaſt, had the name of Japyx; occurring by that name in the 8. of Eneids, and in Horace, Carm. l. 1. ode. 4.

But to proceed, this Countrey is invironed on all parts, with the Adriatick and Ionian Seas, ſaving where it joyneth to Apulia by an Iſthmus of about 30 miles in bredth; reaching from Brunduſium in the Adriatick or upper Sea, to Tarentum on the Gulfe or Bay thence named in the Ionian Sea. And is from land to land, as you go by water, about 200 miles in compaſs. The ſoyl hereof is very fruitfull if well manured, abounding in Corn, Oyl, Melons, Citrons, Saffron, and other commodities of good price; for which they never want the company of the Merchants of Genoa. They are many times much endangered by Graſhoppers, which commonly devour all whereſoever they come, and would in one night conſume whole fields of ſtanding corn, if divine Providence by ſending the birds called Gaines amongſt them, did not provide a remedy for ſo great a miſchief. The greateſt defect hereof is the want of waters, and therefore probably enough may be the Siticuloſa Apulia, ſpoken of by Horace; which notwithſtanding they have very rich paſtures. The people are conceived to be the ſimpleſt or moſt void of craft, of any in Italie; perhaps becauſe they have ſo little commerce with their own Countreymen, and ſo much with ſtrangers.

The chief Towns are, 1 Lecci, Aletium in Latine, a rich Town well built, and very well peopled. 2 Caſtro, a Sea Town, but not well fenced by Art or nature, which hath made it very often a prey to the Turks. 3 Gallipolis, a Town built on ſo craggie a rock, that it is conceived to be unconquerable. 4 Brunduſium, the head town of the Salentini, once glorying in the moſt capacious Haven of all the world; from whence there was continual paſſage into Dalmatia, Epirus, Macedon, and the reſt of Greece. Here was it that Pompey took ſhip to flie from Cæſar, and Cæſar took ſhipping alſo to purſue after him: when to encourage the Pilot who was affraid of the ſtorm, he cryed out, Cæſarem vehis &

Calabria. fortunam ejus. It was first bult by the Aetoliant, under the conduct of one Diomedes, and called Brontesion, which in the Messapian Tongue signifieth the horn or head of a Stag, which it much resembleth: from whence the Latines gave it the name of Brondusium. At this day it is but a mean Town, the Haven of it being so choked, that a Gally can very hardly enter. 5. Hydruntum, a very antient Town, and yet still reasonably well peopled, having a strong Castle upon a Rock for its defence, and a capacious Port for Traffique; the principal at the present of all the Province, which is therefore called Terra Hydruntina, by our modern Latinists. It is now called Otranto, and is a place of such importance, that the taking of it by Mahomet the Great, An. 1481. put all Italy into such a fear, that Rome was quite abandoned. Not well inhabited again till the expulsion of the Turks in the year next following.

Passe we on next to the two Calabrias, so called from the Calabri an antient people of this Tract, inhabiting that part hereof which formerly had been called Magna Grecia, now Calabria Superior, with part of the Countrey of the Salentini, lying on the Northern side of the Gulf of Tarento, now called by the name of Otranto. But the Greek Emperours being possessed of these parts of Italy, when the more Western parts thereof were under the Gothes and Lombards, extended the name of Calabria, as far as to the Strait of Messana, taking the County of the Brutii, now Calabria Inferior, into the accompt: and making but two Provinces of their whole Estate which was left in this Continent by the names of Apulia and Calabria: of which Apulia contained all the Countrey on the coast of the Adriatick, from Abruzzo to the extreme point or Promontory in the land of Otranto, called antiently Iapygium, now the Cape of St. Mary; Calabria, all the rest of these parts of Italy, which lie between the Tuscane or Tyrrhenian Sea, and the Bay of Tarentum. So that the antient Calabria was but part of this; and of that Ennius the old Poet was a Native, as is affirmed by Ovid in his 3 de Arte.

Old Ennius his Garden tills
Among the steep Calabrian Hills.

Now called the Basilicate, and reckoned as a member of the lower Calabria.

But leaving these matters of remote Antiquity, let us behold the Countrey as it standeth at the present; divided of late times into Inferior and Superior, in which distinct capacities we shall look upon it. Premising only by the way, that this Countrey is the title of the eldest Sonne of the Kings of Naples; who were from hence called the Dukes of Calabria; and that before it was subjected to these Kings, it had a King of its own; Holofernes, whose daughter Flora was marryed unto Godfrey of Bovillon, being King hereof, An. 1098.

IV. CALABRIA SUPERIOR, called formerly Magna Grecia, from many great and famous Cities founded there by the Grecians, hath on the East the Adriatick or Ionian Sea; on the West Lucania, from which it is divided by the Apennine and the River Crathis; on the North, Sinus Tarentinus, or the Gulf of Tarento; and on the South and South-East, Calabria inferior, and Golfo di Squillaci, of old called Sinus Scilleticus. The principall Cities at this time are, 1. Belcastro, eight miles from the Sea, where once stood Petilia. 2. Besignan, the title of a Prince, fortified with a very strong Castle, and endowed with the best Revenues of any principality or other Noble-man of Title in all the Kingdome. 3. Macera, an Arch-bishops See, a rich Town, and well peopled. 4. Rosanum, three miles from the Sea, a well fortified City, and situate in a very fruitfull and pleasont Soil. 5. Altavilla, which gives title also to a Prince. 6. Terra Nova, given with the title of Duke to Gonsalvo Fernandes de Cordova, commonly called the great Captain, as a reward of his signall service in the conquest of the Realm of Naples: and still enjoyed (together with the title of Duke of Sessa) by the house of Cordova.

As for the chief Cities of the Greeks in the former times, they were Locris founded by the Locrians, a people of Achaia. Here lived the Law-maker Zaleucus, who ordering Adultery to be punished with the losse of both eyes, was compelled to execute the Law on his own Sonne, as the first offender. Therefore to shew the love of a Father, and the sincerity of a Judge, he put out one of his Sonnes eyes, and one of his own. He also provided in his Laws that no woman should be attended in the street with more than one Maid, but when she was drunk; that she should not go abroad at night, but when she went to play the Harlot; that she should not wear gold or embroidered apparell, but when she meant to set her self to open sale; and that men should not wear Rings and Tissues, but when they went about the prostituting of some woman; and many others of this mould. By means whereof both men and women were restrained from all extraordinary trains of Attendants, and excesse of Apparell; the common consequents of a long and prosperous tranquillity. It was also famous in old times for the victory which Eunomus an excellent Musician obtained against Aristonus of Rhegium, another of the same profession. For though Aristonus had made his prayers unto Apollo the God of Musick for his good successe; yet Eunomus plainly told him, that Nature was against him in that contention, which had made all the Grashoppers mute on that side of the water. And so accordingly it hapned. For when the day appointed came, Eunomus had the ill hap to break one of his Harpstrings, even in the middle of his Musick; when presently a Grashopper leaped upon his Harp, and supplyed most melodiously the place of the broken string; and by that means obtained the victory to Eunomus. An accident not unworthy of the Muse of Strada, in his personating of the Poet Claudian. And though I bind not any man to believe this Tale (though of Strabo's telling) yet there are very good Authors for thus much thereof, that on the one ſide of the River Alax, which parteth Locris from Rhegium, the Graſhoppers do merrily ſing; but on the other ſide, which is that towards Rhegium, they are always ſilent. 2. Tarentum, a Town of no leſs note, ſituate on the Bay called Sinus Tarentinus; firſt built by the Spartans: the people whereof having a great command on the Countrey adjoyning, were one of the laſt Italian Nations taken in by the Romans. Nam quis poſt Tarentinos auderet? For who durſt ſtir when once the Tarentines were vanquiſhed? ſaith the Hiſtorian. For in the ruine of this Eſtate, the Apulians, Lucani, Brutii, and the neighbouring Calabrians being all confederate together in defence thereof, were brought under the command and power of Rome, A. V. C. 578. all which (from the beginning of the Tarentine war ſome nine years before) were either a free people, or in a kind of ſubjection to this mighty City; but never felt the force of the Roman puiſſance. So that the war began but A. V. C. 472. and ended in the totall ſubjection of theſe ſeverall Nations, An. 481. Papyrius Curſor, and Sp. Carvilius being then the ſecond time Conſuls, as before was ſaid. In defence of this people did Pyrrhus war againſt the Romans; the hopes of getting this place by Annibal, was the loſſe of Capua; and finally here lived Archytas ſo famous for his flying Dove. 3. Crotona, the Inhabitants whereof were once ſo active, that at one Olympick meeting the Victors were all of this one Town. Their glory much decayed in a battell againſt the Locrians, in which one hundred and twenty thouſand of them and their Confederates, were vanquiſhed by fifteen thouſand of the enemy. 4. Amycle, a Town inhabited formerly by Pythagoreans, who having been often terrified with a falſe report of the approach of their Enemies, publiſhed a Law prohibiting all ſuch reports. By which means, their Enemies coming unawares poſſeſſed themſelves of it. Hence grew the proverb, Amyclos ſilentium perdidit; and hence that notable ſaying of Lucilius, who being commanded to be ſilent, returned this Anſwer: Mihi neceſſe eſt loqui, ſcio enim Amyclos ſilentio periiſſe. 5. Sybaris, a City built by the Grecians after the deſtruction of Troy; the people whereof were Lords of 25 good Towns, and could Arme 30000 men. A people ſo effeminate, that they permitted no Smith nor Brazier, no not ſo much as a cock to live amongſt them, becauſe they would not have their ſleeps diſturbed: but the Fidlers, and Muſitians were in high requeſt, (which advantage the Crotonians taking, (with whom then in hoſtility) they entred the Town in the habit of Muſitians, and ſo maſtered it. Before which accident there had been a Propheſie, that the Town ſhould never be taken, till men were more eſteemed then the Gods themſelves. It hapned that a ſlave being grievouſly beaten by his Maſter, and obtaining no pardon for the Gods ſake, upon whom he called, fled to the monument of ſome of his Maſters Anceſtors, and was pardoned by him; which coming to the ears of Amyris the Philoſopher, he forſook the Town, moſt men holding him mad in a time of no danger to leave ſo delicate a ſeat: whence came the Proverb, Amyris inſanit, applyed to ſuch as under the pretence of madneſſe or folly do provide for their ſafety. Calabria.

VI. CALABRIA INFERIOR is bounded on the North with Calabria ſuperior, from which parted by the River Crathis, and a branch of the Apennine; on the South with the Tyrrhenian Sea, and the Strait of Meſſana; on the Weſt with that part of Campania which is called the Principate: and on the Eaſt with a part of the Adriatick or Ionian Sea. It was antiently the habitation of the Brutii, whom the Greek Writers generally call Bretti; and their Countrey Bretania; upon which ground, ſome of our modern Criticks (envying ſo great an honour to the Iſle of Great Britain) have transferred to this Province the birth of Conſtantine, the firſt Chriſtian Emperour. Theſe Brutii being firſt conquered by the Romans, with the reſt of Italy, after the defeat of Cannæ, took part with Carthage, and was for a long time the retreat of Annibal, whom the Romans had ſhut up in this corner. A Countrey not much ſhort in fruitfulneſſe of the reſt of the Kingdome; and having the advantage of ſo much Sea, is the better ſituate for Trafique. At one extremity hereof, is the Promontory called by Ptolemy, Leuco Petra, now Labo di Spartimento; all along which, eſpecially in the moneth of May, are taken great ſtore of Tunnies (a fiſh which much reſembleth mans fleſh) which being barrelled up are ſold to Mariners. Here are two Rivers alſo of a very ſtrange nature; of which the one calleth Crathis, makes a mans hair yellow, and dyeth ſilke white; the other named Buſentus, cauſeth both hair and ſilk to be black and ſwarthy.

The principall Cities of it are, 1. Conſentia, an antient Town, comprehending ſeven little Hills, and a Caſtle on the top of one of them, which commandeth both the Town and the Countrey adjoyning. It is built betwixt the ſaid two Rivers, and is ſtill reaſonably rich, though not ſo wealthy now as in former times. 2. Rhegium, or Rhezo, on the Sea-ſhore, oppoſite to Meſſana in the Iſle of Sicily, which is ſuppoſed to have been broken off from the reſt of Italy, and that this Town had the name of Rhegium from the Greek word ῥηγνύω, which ſignifieth to break off, or to tear aſunder. A Town in former times very well traded, but left deſolate in a manner ſince the year 1594. when it was fired by the Turks. 3. Caſtrovillare, ſeated upon the top of a very high Mountain. 4. Belmont, and 5 Altamont, two very fair Towns, whoſe names ſufficiently expreſſe their pleaſant and lofty ſituations. 6. St. Euphemie, from whence the Bay which antiently was called Sinus Lametinus, or Lametirius, is now called Golfo de St. Euphemie. 7. Nichaſtro, three miles from the ſea, the ſame with New-caſtle in Engliſh.

On the Weſt ſide of this Calabria, and properly a part thereof, but reaching to the North as far as Apulia, ſtandeth that mountainous Countrey, which in the ſubdiviſion of theſe Provinces by King Alfonſus, was called the BASILICATE; antiently the ſeat of the Lucani, and therefore called Lucania by the elder Latiniſts. Divided from the Principate, or Weſt parts of Campania, by the River Silarus. A Countrey heretofore very unſafe for Travellers, by reaſon of the difficult wayes, and aſſured company of Theeves, but now reduced to better order. It containeth in it 93 walled places, and nine Towns or Cities, the chief whereof are, Poſiidonia, or Peſt, a City ſituate in ſo clement and benign a ſoyl, that Roſes grow there thrice a year. 2 Polycaſtro, on the Sea-ſhore, as the former is, honoured with the title of a Dukedome. And 3 Dian, or Diunam, a more midſand City, neer which there is a Valley 20 miles in length, and four miles in breadth; which for all manner of delights, and fruitfulneſs, yeelds to none in Naples.

VII. The ISLES of NAPLES are either in the Adriatick, and Tuſcan Seas, or in the Bay of Puteoli. In the Adriatick Sea, are the Illands of Diomedes, right againſt Apulia, where it encountereth with Abruzzo: ſo called from Diomedes King of Ætolia, who after the end of the Trojan War, (in which he was ſo great a ſtickler) ſetled himſelf in ſome part of Apulia; the principall whereof are, St. Maries, St. Dominico, and Tremitana. 2 The Iſland of Acates, over againſt the Town of Gallipolis. 3 St. Andrews, in the Bay of Tarentum. 4 And finally the two Illands of Dioſcoros and Calypſo, over againſt the Cape of Lacinia, now called Colonnes, in the upper Calabria. Of all which there is little famous. In the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Seas, are the Iſlands of Pontia and Panditaria (now called Palmarde) as little famous as the other; ſave that the laſt is memorable in the Roman Stories, for the confinement of Agrippina the wife of Germanicus, and mother of Caligula, by the appointment of the Emperour Tiberius Nero.

Thoſe in the Gulf or Bay of Puteoli are of better note. The principal whereof are 1 Iſchia, heretofore called Oenotris, from its plenty of Wine, wherewith it aboundeth to this day; as alſo with Allom, Sulphur, and moſt excellent Fruits. It is in compaſſe 18 miles, and ſo begirt with Rocks and dangerous Cliffs, that it is acceſſible at one entrance only; and that too fortified with a ſtrong and impregnable Citadell: and therefore choſen by King Ferdinand for his place of refuge, when he was outed of his Kingdome by Charles the 8. Here is alſo good plenty of Hares and Conies. 2. Prochita, now called Procita, about ſix miles in circuit, wherein are very wholſome Bathes, good ſtore of Conies, Hares, and Pheaſants; the ſhore repleniſhed with Fiſh, and the land with Fountains. John de Prochita, who plotted the Sicilian Veſpers, was once Lord of this place; but afterwards for a reward of that ſervice, made Vice-roy of Valentia, a Kingdome of Spain. 3. Capreæ, a ſmall rocky Iſland, having no Haven, nor convenient ſtation for Ships, but of a mild and temperate Air; much beautified by Auguſtus Cæſar, in regard that an old ſapleſſe tree upon his caſual landing here, did bud forth afreſh. After that, it was much honoured by his retirement from affairs of State; and as much diſhonoured by Tiberius his next Succeſſor, who withdrawing hither many times from his Court at Rome, made it the Theater of his Cruelties, and moſt filthy Luſts. It hath a little City of the ſame name, having a ſtrong Fortreſſe, and a Biſhops See; and another Town called Anacapræ, inhabited by Fiſhermen, and Ship-wrights belonging to the Navy of Naples. Into this Iſland they uſed to confine offenders in former times, and ſometimes alſo at this day. 4. Ænaria, a ſmall Iſland given by Auguſtus to the Neapolitans, in exchange for Capreæ, whoſe before it was.

There are few Nations under the Sun, who have ſuffered under more changes and alterations of State, than the Inhabitants of this Kingdome. For being at the firſt a mixture of ſeverall Nations, ſome of them preyed upon the others, till they were all ſubdued (as hath been ſhewn before) by the power of Rome. In the declining of her fortunes, they followed for the moſt part the Carthaginians, and took part with Annibal; and he being called home, they returned again to their old obedience. When Italy was ſubdued by the Gothes, it became ſubject to that people, as Sicil, and the reſt of thoſe Iſlands did; and when the Lombards Lorded it in the Roman Provinces, all Naples fell into their hands, except Apulia and Calabria; which the Greek Emperours having conquered from the Gothes with the reſt of Italy, kept (but with much difficulty) to themſelves. In the diviſion of the Empire betwixt Carolus Magnus and Irene, theſe two laſt Provinces only were aſſigned to the Conſtantinopolitans, the reſt to Charles, and his Succeſſors: both outed of their ſeverall parts by the prevailing Saracens, under the conduct of Sabba, and other ſucceſſive Generalls. Theſe partly diſpoſſeſſed by the Emperour Otho the firſt, and his Almain forces; challenging a right herein, as King of Italy; that right confirmed and enlarged by the marriage of Otho the 2d. with Theophania, Neece to Nicephorus Phocas the Eaſtern Emperour, who brought Apulia and Calabria for her Dower or Portion. But long the Germans had not held it, when they were again expelled by the Greeks and Saracens, joyning together againſt them as a common Enemy; who afterwards held bitter wars againſt one another, for the ſole command. During theſe wars, it hapned that one Drangot a Gentleman of Normandy, having in the preſence of Duke Robert (the Father of William the Conquerer) ſlain one Repoſtel, a Gentleman of like quality; to avoid the juſtice of the Prince, and the practices of Repoſtels kindred, fled into this Countrey, attended by ſuch of his followers, as either did depend upon his fortunes, or had been medlers in the Fray. Where being come, the Duke of Benevent, Vicegerent to the Eaſtern Emperour, took them into pay. Their entertainment being bruited in Normandy, and a report raiſed withall that the Greeks hearkned after men of valour and action; cauſed many private Gentlemen to paſſe over the Alpes, and there to hew themſelves out a more proſperous fortune, than formerly they had enjoyed. The fortunate ſucceſſe of which laſt Adventurers, drew thither alſo Tancred, the Lord of Hauteville; who with his twelve ſonnes came into Apulia, An. 1008. and in ſhort time not only drove the Saracens thence, but the Grecians alſo, as men that had broke Covenant with them in the diviſion of the Booty. For William the ſonne of Tancred, combining with Melorco, Governour of Apulia for the Greek Emperour, and with the Princes of Capua and Salern, men of power and honour, for the conqueſt of Sicil (which the Saracens then wholly held) agreed amongſt themſelves to divide the places conquered by them into four equall parts; one, for each Adventurer. But when the Saracens were driven out, Melorco having new ſupplies ſent him out of Greece, ſeized on the poſſeſſion of the whole Iſland in the Emperors name. Which injury William cunningly diſſembled till Melorco's Forces were diſperſed, and then he ſuddenly ſet upon him; firſt took the City of Melfi, and after by degrees, moſt of the other Towns and places which the Greeks held in Italie: of which both he and his Succeſſors kept poſſeſſion by the Title of Dukes of Calabria only. Of theſe (though all of eminent vertue) there were two beſides this William, of ſpecial fame. 1 Robert Guiſcard, the third ſon of Tancred, the moſt valiant Captain of his time, and chief eſtabliſher of the Normans power in Italie; to which he added in concluſion the Iſle of Sicil, together with the City of Naples it ſelf, and all the Lands which lie betwixt it and Rome. 2 Bohemund the eldeſt ſon of this Robert, who going with Godfrey of Bovillon and others of the Weſtern Chriſtians to the Holy Land, was for his ſignal merits inveſted with the Kingdome of Antioch; inherited by his children after his deceaſe. Naples.

But to proceed, this Guiſcard at his death, (but not without ſome wrong to the children of his Brother William, whom he had diſpoſſeſſed of all by the Popes Authority) gave Sicil, with the title of Earl, to his ſon Rogero; and his eſtates in Italie, to his other ſon William: who going to Conſtantinople to marry with the Emperors daughter, was outed of his part by his brother Roger; made not long after, by the Pope, the firſt King of this Familie.

The Kings of Naples of the Norman Line.

1125 1 Roger, Earl of Sicil, created by Pope Anacletus 2 King of both the Sicilies at the Town of Benevent; which City, in requital of ſo great a favour, he reſtored again unto the Church, from which it had been taken (after the firſt Donation of it) by the German Emperors. 24.

1149 2 William, the ſon of Roger, who to aſſure himſelf of his Kingdoms, was content to take them as a gift from the hands of Pope Adrian the 4. to be holden for ever in Fee of the Church of Rome. 21.

1170 3 William II. ſon of the former William, who left a daughter called Conſtance, who became a Nun. 26.

1196 4 Tancred, the baſe ſon of William the 2. excluded his Siſter from the Crown, but was ſententially depoſed by Pope Celeſtine the 3. who had an aim to get the Kingdom for himſelf. But when he ſaw that Tancred was too ſtrong for him, out of meer ſpight to be defeated of his purpoſe, he called in the Germans, the ancient enemies of his See; and gave the Lady Conſtance, then almoſt fifty yeers of age, in mariage unto Henry the 6. 2.

The German Line.

1198 5 Henry, the ſixth of that name, Emperor, and Duke of Schwaben, ſucceeded on his mariage with the Lady Conſtance. 4.

1202 6 Frederick, ſon of the Emperor Henry and Queen Conſtance, crowned at the age of three years; afterwards Emperor by the name of Frederick the 2. He had to wife the daughter of John di Bren, the titulary King of Hieruſalem, of which the Kings of Naples have ever ſince had the title of Kings; and in the rights of this Kingdom, the Kings of Spain.

1250 7 Conrade, the ſon of Frederick, King of Naples and Sicil, as alſo Emperor and Duke of Suevia, or Schwaben; poiſoned (as it was conceived) by his baſe brother Manfred. 4.

1254 8 Munfroy, or Manfred, baſe ſon of Frederick, and Duke of Benevent, firſt governed the Kingdom as Protector unto Conradine, the ſon of Conrade; but after took it to himſelf againſt the will of Pope Urban the 4. who being weary of the Germans, called in Charles Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Provence, brother to Lewis the 10. of France: it being uſual with the Popes (as Machiavel very well obſerveth) to call new men into Italie, and ſtir up new wars for their own ambition; not ſuffering any to poſſeſs that long which themſelves (through their weakneſs) could not hold, and practiſing the overthrow of thoſe very men, whom themſelves had raiſed to power and greatneſs.

The French Line.

1261 9 Charles, Earl of Anjou and Provence, overcame King Manfred, and was after Crowned by Pope Urban the 4. who conditioned with him, that neither he nor his Succeſſors ſhould aſſume the Empire; and that they ſhould pay fifty thouſand Crowns per annum as a Rent to the Church. This Charles did alſo vanquiſh Conradine the ſon of Conrade, the laſt of the royal houſe of Suevia, whom he cauſed to be beheaded at Naples. After which bloudy Act, neither he nor any of his poſterity, did either quietly or long injoy theſe Kingdoms. For in his own time Peter King of Aragon, claimed the Kingdome of Naples, in right of Conſtance his wife, the daughter of Manfred: betwixt whom and Charles, a ſingle combat was appointed to be fought in Bourdeaux, before King Edward the firſt of England, to decide the Controverſie. But whileſt Charles there expected him, he ſeized on Sicil, Anno 1281. This Charles reigned three and twenty years.

1284 10 Charles II. ſon of Charles the firſt, formerly priſoner in Sicil to Peter of Aragon, was ranſomed by the procurement of King Edward above-named for 30000 Marks. By Mary, daughter of Stephen, King of Hungary, he had fourteen children: the moſt pertinent of which (to our purpose) were Charles surnamed Martel, King of Hungary in right of his Mother; Robert King of Naples, John of Durazzo; and a daughter (whose name I finde not) maried to Charles, Earl of Valois, who in her right obtained the Earldom of Anjou. 26.

1310 11 Robert, the second son of Charles the 2. 32.

1342 12 Joane, the Neece of Robert by his son Charles, first maried Andrew, the second son of Charles King of Hungary, whom she hanged at her window for insufficiency; and for her second husband had Lewis, Prince of Tarentum, who over-straining himself to satisfie her carnal appetite, died. Her third husband was James, Prince of Majorca, a gallant young Gentleman, whom she beheaded for lying with another woman. Her fourth, Otho of Brunswick, a tough Souldier, who had the good fortune to outlive her. She was twice driven out of her Kingdome by Lewis King of Hungary, brother of Andrew her first husband: restored the first time by the power of Pope Clement the sixth; but at the second time taken and hanged at the same window where she had hanged her first husband. But first, out of an hatred to her next heirs of the house of Hungary, she adopted Lewis Duke of Anjou, (descended from Charles Earl of Valois spoken of before) for her heir and successor.

The Hungarian Line.

1371 13 Charles III. son to Lewis, and nephew of Prince John of Durazzo before mentioned, by the power of Lewis, King of Hungary, and the favour of Pope Urban the fifth, was made King of Naples. He overthrew and killed in battel Duke Lewis of Anjou, his competitor, and after the death of King Lewis of Hungary, succeeded in that Kingdom also; but long he had not reigned therein, when poisoned (as it was supposed) by the old Queen Mother, to advance her daughter to that Throne. 15.

1386 14 Ladislaus, son of Charles the 3. having a quarrel with the Pope, made a voyage Royal unto Rome, where he forced his entry, and was there triumphantly received: on which displeasure the Pope called in Lewis the 2. Duke of Anjou, who gave Ladislaus a great overthrow. Insomuch, as Ladislaus used to say, that if Lewis had followed his Victory the first day, he had been Master of his Kingdome and Person too; if the second, of his Kingdom, but not of his Person: but not pursuing it till the third day, he failed of both. So in the end he was compelled to flie to Rome, and give over the enterprise. 29.

1415 15 Joane II. Sister of Ladislaus, of as much levity, but not altogether of so ill a fame as the former Joane, observing the unprosperous successes of the house of Anjou, she adopted for her heir, Alphonso the fifth of Aragon; who had some claime unto the Kingdom, as the direct heir of Pedro, or Peter the 3. and Constance the daughter of King Manfred, spoken of before. But finding him to stand too much on his own right, and to be too forwards in taking a possession of it, before her death; she revoked that Adoption, and made a new grant of the Estate to Lewis the fourth, Duke of Anjou, and after his decease to his brother Rene, or Renatus: both vanquished by the Aragonians.

The Aragonian Line.

1434 16 Alfonso King of Aragon, partly by Conquest, and partly by Adoption, having got the Kingdom; left it well setled unto Ferdinand, his natural son. 24.

17 Ferdinand, the base son of Alfonso (the lawful sons inheriting the Realm of Aragon, Sicil, &c.) succeeded in the Realm of Naples. 36.

1494 18 Alfonso II. son of Ferdinand, in whose time the French began to aim at the Realm of Naples. This King and his two Predecessors were of the Order of the Garter.

1494 19 Ferdinand II. Son of Alfonso the second, outed of his Estate and Kingdome by Charles the eighth, son of King Lewis the eleventh of France, whom Rene the last Duke of Anjou had made the sole Heir of all his Titles, and Possession. And though Charles upon this Conquest was solemnly crowned, yet posting back again into France before he had setled his affairs in this Kingdom, and having much discontented the chief men of Anjouvin Faction; he lost it suddenly to the same Ferdinand from whom he had so suddenly won it.

1497 20 Frederick II. brother of Alphonso the second, and Unkle of this last Ferdinand, succeeded him in his Estates; and was the sixth King that had reigned in Naples within the compass of three years: that is to say, Ferdinand the first, Alfonso the second, Ferdinand the second, Charles of France, the second Ferdinand again, and then this Frederick. Finding himself betrayed by the Spaniards, he submitted himself to Lewis XII, King of France, and yeelded up his Kingdome to him. And indeed what else could that poor Prince do, when he saw his own bloud, and such as had taken his Realm into their protection, conspiring against him?

For when Charles made his passage towards Naples, Ferdinand the Catholick, sent Gonsalvo, (who was afterward for his valour surnamed the Great Captain) with some Forces, to resist the French Invaders. But when the French were expelled, Gonsalvo would not leave the Countrey, because his Master had not as yet sent for him. In the mean time it was agreed between Lewis of France, and this

Fer-

Ferdinand, that they ſhould joyntly ſet upon the Kingdom of Naples: That having won it; the French ſhould poſſeſs Abruzzo, and Lavoro; the Spaniards, Puglia, and both Calabria's: That the firſt ſhould be entituled King of Naples; the other, Duke of Apulia. This Confederacy was kept ſecret till the French Forces were come to Rome; and Gonſalvo poſſeſſed (under pretence of defending it) of all Calabria. So that it was no marvel that they made themſelves Maſters of the Countrey. An Action in which the French dealt very unadviſedly, in bringing into Italie where he was before the ſole Moderator, another King as great as himſelf; to whom as to his Rival, his enemies might have recourſe on all occaſions; and the Spaniard as unnaturally, in betraying for the moity of a Kingdom, a Prince of his own bloud, under pretence and promiſe of ſuccours. But the two Kings did not continue long in good terms of Partnerſhip. For the Spaniards being more intent upon their advantages, ſoon picked a quarrel with the French, within two or three years drave them out of all, and to this day keep it; though both this Lewis, and his ſucceſſors Francis the firſt and Henry the ſecond, have divers times, and with great effuſion of bloud, attempted the recovery of it. Sicil.

The Spaniſh or Caſtilian Line.

1516 23 Charles V. Emperor, King of Spain, and the IV. of that name in Naples. 43.
1558 24 Philip the 2. of Spain, and the firſt of Naples. 40.
1598 25 Philip II. of Naples, 3. of Spain. 22.
1621 26 Philip III. of Naples, 4. of Spain.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure, Seme of Flower de Lyces, Or, a File of three Labels, Gules.

The Revenues of it are two Millions and a half of Crowns; whereof 20000 are due to the Pope for Chief-rent; and the reſt ſo exhauſted in maintaining Garriſons upon the Natives, and a ſtrong Navie againſt the Turks; that the King of Spain receiveth not a fourth part de claro.

The Kingdome of SICILIA.

BEfore we can come into the Iſle of Sicilie, we muſt firſt croſs that branch of the MEDITERRANEAN Sea, which is called the Fare, or Straight of Meſſana; where the paſſage it ſo ſtrait and narrow, that it exceedeth not in breadth a mile and an half. In other parts, as the Sea growes wider, it is diſtant from the main land of Italie near 300 miles; that is to ſay, from the Town of Drepanum in Sicilie, to the City of Naples. As for the Mediterranean Sea, it is ſo called becauſe it interlaceth the midſt of the earth; extending from the Straights of Gibraltar on the Weſt, to the Coaſt of Paleſtine on the Eaſt; and ſo dividing Africk both from Europe, and Aſia Minor. In the Scriptures, Joſh. 1. 4. it is called by the name of Mare magnum, or the great Sea: great in compariſon of the dead Sea, and the Sea of Galilee, lying on the other ſide of the land of Paleſtine; but ſmall enough if compared to the Ocean, with which in probability the Writer of that Book might have no acquaintance. Beſides which general name of the Mediterranean, it hath alſo many particular names, as the Adriatick, Ægean, Ionian, and Carpathian Sea, where it bordereth upon Greece, and Anatolia; Mare Libycum, where it runneth by the ſhores of Africk; with reference to Italie called in ſome places, Mare Tyrrhenum, in others Mare Liguſticum; in ſome parts Mare Siculum, and in others Mare Sardoum, &c. And as the Chameleon is ſaid to apply it ſelf to the colour of the neareſt adjacent body; ſo this Sea taketh its particular denominations from the neareſt ſhores. Theſe Seas are alſo called by ſome modern Writers, in imitation of the French, by the name of the Levant, or the Seas of the Levant; becauſe in reſpect of France, Spain, Britain, Germany, &c. they lie toward the Eaſt; the word Levant ſignifying in the French, a riſing up after ſleep, and more eſpecially the Sun-riſing. The principal Iſlands of this Sea which relate to Italie (for of others we ſhall ſpeak in their proper places) are thoſe of Sicil, Sardinia, Corſica, and ſome Iſles adjoyning unto theſe.

SICILIE, environed round with the lower, or Tyrrhenian Sea, contains ſeven hundred miles in compaſs; and is ſuppoſed to have been joyned to Italie in former times, being then a Peninſula, or Demy-Iſland, ſuch as Peloponneſus; and joyned unto the Continent by as narrow an Iſthmus. The reaſon of that name we ſhall ſee anon.

The ſeparating of it from the main Land of Italie, is by the Poets aſcribed to Neptune, who with his three-forked Mace or Trident broke it off from the land, in favour of Jocaſtus the ſon of Æolus; that ſo he might inhabit there with the greater ſafety, being invironed round with waters. Which though it be a Fable or Poetical fiction, yet with ſome help from the Mythologiſts, may be made a ſtory. For if by Æolus, and Neptune, we underſtand the Winds and Seas, it intimates that it was divided from the reſt of Italie, either by the fury of the Waves, or by the violence of ſome Earthquakes, to which this Iſland is ſtill ſubject; which might in time conſume and wear away the Earth. Nor want there very good reaſons for this ſuppoſition; as, 1 the narrowneſs of the Straight, exceeding not a mile and a half; inſomuch as at the taking of Meſſana by the Carthaginians, many of the people ſaved themſelves by Sicil. by ſwimming over this Straight, into the oppoſite parts of Italie. 2. The ſhallowneſs of it, being found upon a diligent ſounding, not to be above eight fathom deep. Then 'tis obſerved, that the land on both ſides is very brittle, full of caves and chinks made in it by the working of the Sea, on this ſeparation; and that on the Italian coaſt where the ſtreight is narroweſt, there ſtands a City of old called Rhegium, which ſignifieth a breach or cutting off, from the Greek word Ῥήγνυμι, which ſignifies to break off, or violently to pull aſunder; and is ſuppoſed to be ſo called upon this occaſion. And indeed the violence of the Sea is ſo great and dangerous in this narrow channel, ſo ſubject unto bluſtring winds iſſuing out of the hollow caverns of the earth; that the breaking off of this Iſland from the reſt of Italie, is a thing moſt credible. Which dangerous nature of the paſſage, being alſo full of Rocks, and unſafe by reaſon of the Whirl-pools, occaſioned it to be called by Florus the Hiſtorian, Fabuloſis infame monſtris fretum; chiefly ſo called with reference to Scylla and Charybdis, of which ſo many fabulous things are reported by the ancient Poets. Of theſe, Charybdis is a Gulf or Whirl-pool on Sicilie ſide, which violently attracting all veſſels that come too nigh it, devoureth them, and caſteth up their necks at the ſhore of Tauromeni, not far from Catina. Oppoſite to this in Italie, ſtandeth the dangerous Rock Scylla, at the foot of which many little Rocks ſhoot out; on which the water ſtrongly beating, make that noiſe, which the Poets feign to be the barking of dogs. The paſſage between theſe two being to unskilful Mariners exceeding perillous, gave beginning to the Proverb;

Incidit in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charybdim.

Who ſeeks Charybdis for to ſhun,
Doth oftentimes on Scylla run.

But there are other things which made Sicilie famous in old times, beſides theſe two, as viz. the puniſhment of the Giant Enceladus, for his attempt againſt the gods: the frequent burnings of Ætna (under which he is fabled to be ſhut up) being ſuppoſed to proceed from his ſulphurous breath. Secondly, the birth of Ceres in this Iſle; and thirdly, the Rape of Proſerpine. To theſe two laſt the Iſle was conſecrated in thoſe daies; to Ceres, in regard ſhe firſt taught the people to ſow Corn, whence the word Ceres is often uſed in the Poets to ſignifie Bread, and other neceſſary proviſions for life, as Sine Cerere & Baccho friget Venus: To Proſerpine, becauſe beſtowed upon her by Pluto, to pleaſe her after the Raviſhment committed on her.

It is ſituate under the fourth Climate, the longeſt day being 13 hours and an half. And was once called Trinacria, becauſe it ſhoots forth into the Sea with three Capes or Promontories: viz. 1 Pelorus, now Capo de Foro, to the North; 2 Pachinus, now Cape Paſſaro, to the Weſt; and 3 Lilybæum, now Capo Boii, or Capo Coro, to the South. This laſt looketh towards Carthage, and the ſhores of Africk, from which diſtant 180 miles. And of this Strabo doth affirm, that a man of a quick and ſtrong ſight getting up into a Watch-tower that ſtood in this Cape, deſcryed a Fleet ſetting ſayl out of the Haven of Carthage; and told the Lilybitanians their bigneſs and number. That this is true, I dare not ſay: for beſides the unlikelyhood of kenning at ſo great a diſtance; we are taught by by Philoſophy, that the Sea being of an orbicular form, ſwelleth it ſelf into the faſhion of a round Turret or Hill, till it put bound to the eye-ſight. From theſe three corners, this Countrey was (as we have ſaid) called Trinacris or Trinacria, according to that of Ovid.

Trinacris à poſitu, nomen adepta, loci.

An Iſland with three corners braves the main,
And thence the name of Trinacris doth again.

The firſt Inhabitants that we finde to have dwelt in this Countrey, are the huge Giants ſo often mentioned in the Odyſſes of the divine Poet Homer, called Laſtrygones and Cyclops; of which laſt rank was the ſo much famouſed Polyphemus, who with ſo much humanity entertained Ulyſſes and his companions. Theſe were afterward rooted out by the Sicani, a people of Spain, who called it Sicania. As for the name of Sicilia, ſome derive it from Sicileus, a ſuppoſed King of Spain, who is fabled to have conquered this Countrey. But the truth is, it came from the Siculi, who being by Evander and his Arcadians driven out of Latium, came into this Iſland: to which, having Maſtered the Sicani, and driven them from the Weſt and the Northern part, to the Eaſt and South, they left their name. At their firſt landing they built the City of Zancle, called afterwards Meſſana, together with Nea, Hybla, Catana, and Leontium. After them came another Italian people named the Morgetes, being driven thence by the Oenotrians; and ſate down in that part of the Iſland where ſtood the City of Morgentum, built by them at their firſt arrival. The firſt of all the Greeks who ſet footing in it (not to ſay any thing of the coming of Minos hither, in the purſuit of Dædalus, having more in it of the Fiction than Hiſtorical truth) were the Chalcidians, a people of the Iſle Eubœa, now called Negropont; who built the City of Naxos; and after them Archias of Corinth, with his fellow Adventurers, by whom Syracuſe was either firſt built, or very much beautified and repaired. Next them the Rhodians and Cretans ſent ſome Colonies hither, the firſt Founders of Gela; and after of the renowned City of Agrigentum: And not long after a new Plantation ſent from Sparta built Heraclea. The Citizens of Megaris, another ſtate of Greece, ſent a Colony alſo, who built Selinus. And ſo did thoſe of Meſſene alſo, who taking the Town of Zancle from the Siculi, new built or beautified it, and gave unto it ſo repaired the name of Meſſana. Nor is it to be thought, that the Tyrians and Phœnicians, being ſo great undertakers of publick buſineſſes, and very powerfull in ſhipping, would ſit ſtill, when ſo fair a booty did invite their induſtry: who ſeiſing on the Promontories of Pachinus and Lilibæum, and ſome of the adjoining Iſlands; did fortifie them for the better ſecuring of the Trade which they had in Sicily. But all theſe ſeverall Adventurers having ſeverall intereſſes, joyned not together in the work of an abſolute Conqueſt; but planting themſelves only on the Sea-ſhores, altered not the name by which they found it called at their coming thither. Sicil.

The people are ingenious, eloquent, and pleaſant, but withall very unconſtant, and ſo full of talk, that from thence came the Proverb, Gerræ Siculæ. They are alſo ſaid to be of a very envious, ſuſpitious, and diſtruſtfull nature, uncapable of injuries, and vehement in purſuit of revenge, as appears by that great ſlaughter which they made of the French; yet withall courteous enough to ſtrangers, and Paraſiticall enough to their ſuperiors. They have been famous heretofore for many notable inventions, Ariſtotle aſcribing to them the Art of Oratory, and firſt making of Paſtorall Eclogues; Plinie of Clocks (or rather of Hour-glaſſes; for Clocks were but a late invention, and that of the Flemmings) and Plutarch of Military Engines; which laſt were brought by Archimedes unto great perfection.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached here, by ſome of the Diſciples of St. Peter, whom he ſent hither at his firſt coming to Rome; of which Pancratius (whom we call commonly St. Pancrace) is ſaid to have been the firſt Biſhop of Tauromenium, and Marcianus of Syracuſe. They are now generally of the Religion authorized by the Popes of Rome; that of the Greek Church being rather connived at than allowed of; in the Communion whereof here are thought to be ten thouſand ſouls, but looked on by the reſt as ſchiſmaticall people. For the moſt part they uſe the Italian Language, but very much altered, by the Greek, Arabian, Norman, French, and Spaniſh tongues; to which Nations they have been ſeverally ſubject, ſince the time of the Romans. The totall number of the people is thought to be about a Million and a half.

The ſoyl is incredibly fruitfull in Wine, Oyl, Honey, Minerals of Gold Silver, and Allom, together with plenty of Salt and Sugar; which laſt commodity the Natives ſell in the Canes unto the Venetians, and buy it again of them when it is refined; and thereby letting ſtrangers go away with the beſt part of their gains; as generally they do in all other Merchandize, which they permit to be exported, rather than put themſelves to the trouble of Traffiqueing abroad in Forain Nations. There are alſo Gems of Agates, and Emralds. It yeeldeth alſo great ſtore of the richeſt Silks, which grow plentifully about Meſſana; variety of moſt excellent and delicious fruits, both for taſte and colour: with ſuch abundance of all ſorts of Grain, that it was called in old times Horreum Romani populi, or the Granary of the Roman Empire; and doth now furniſh ſome parts of Italy, Spain, and Barbary, beſides Malta, and the adjacent Iſles, with that which ſhe can ſpare of her ſuperfluities. Nay, Tully doth not only call it the Granary and ſtore-houſe of the City of Rome, in regard of Corn, but addes that it was accounted for a well-furniſhed Treaſury; as being able of it ſelf without charge of the State, to cloath, maintain, and furniſh the greateſt Army, with Leather, Corn and Apparell. And if Diodorus Siculus may be credited in it, he telleth us, that about Leontium and ſome other places, Wheat did grow of it ſelf, without any labour of the Husbandman. At this day in ſome parts of the Iſle, the ſoyl is ſo exceeding fruitfull, that it yeelds unto the Husbandman an hundred meaſures of Corn for one. And certainly the Corn of this Countrey muſt needs yeeld a wonderfull increaſe, the King of Spain receiving an hundred thouſand Crowns yearly for the Cuſtome of Wheat. In this Countrey is the Hill Hybla, ſo famous for Bees and Honey; neer which there was a City of the ſame name alſo, which afterwards was called Megara. And here is alſo the Hill Ætna, now called Montgibel, which continually ſendeth forth flames of Fire, to the aſtoniſhment of all beholders. The moſt famous conflagrations in the former times were preſently before the breaking out of the War in Sicil, which the Roman Writers call Bellum ſervile; not pacified but by the ſlaughter of 70000 of the Slaves which had taken Arms againſt Rome: and ſhortly after the death of Julius Cæſar, portending thoſe proſcriptions and bloody Wars, which did after follow. And to this day ſuch extraordinary eruptions of it are accounted ominous. The Hill it ſelf is of that height, that it is ten miles from the top to the bottome, and may be eaſily diſcerned by Saylers at an hundred miles diſtance: the lower parts thereof being very fruitfull; the middle ſhaded with Woods, and the top covered with Snow, a great part of the year, notwithſtanding the frequent vomiting of flames and cinders. But theſe eruptions of fire are not now ſo ordinary as they have been formerly; the matter which gave fuel to it being waſted by continuall burnings: ſo that the flames which iſſue hence are hardly viſible but by night, though the ſmoak ſhew it ſelf the moſt part of the day. And when it doth break out, which is commonly once in three or four years, it falleth in great flakes on the Vales adjoyning, to the deſtruction of the Vintage, and great loſs of the Countrey. But that, they ſay is recompenſed by the plenty of the following years; the aſhes thereof ſo batling and enriching the ſoyl, that both the Vines and Corn-fields are much bettered by it. And this report I am the apter to believe, in regard we find by late experience here amongſt our ſelves, that the Turf taken from the ground and burnt to aſhes, and ſo ſpread on land and ploughed into it, doth yeeld a very great improvement, even to barren ſoyls. Which kind of Husbandry is called the Devonſhiring of land, becauſe there firſt uſed; but in Hampſhire it was called, as I remember (having been unfortunately too long a ſtranger there) by the name of burning and beaking. But to return again to Ætna. Into this fiery Furnace the Philoſopher Empedocles caſt himſelf, that he might be reputed a God.

Deus

Sicil.

——Deus immortalis haberi
Dum cupit Empedocles, ardentem frigidus Ætnam Insiluit—— as Horace in his Book de Arte Poetica.

Empedocles to be a God desires,
And casts himself into th' Ætnean fires.

The reason of these fires is the abundance of Sulphur and Brimstone, contained in the bosome of the Hill; which is blown by the wind, driving in at the chaps of the Earth, as by a pair of bellows. Through these chinks also there is continually more fuel added to the fire, the very water adding to the force of it: as we see that water cast on coals in the Smiths Forge, doth make them burn more ardently. The reason of this flame is thus set down by Ovid.

Ista bitumineæ rapiunt incendia vires,
Luteaq; exiguis ardescunt sulphura flammis.
Atq; ubi terra cibos alimentaq; debita flammæ
Non dabit, absumptis per longum viribus ævum;
Naturæq; suum nutrimen deerit edaci;
Non feret Ætna famem, desertaq; deseret ignes.

A rozen mould these fiery flames begin,
And clayie brimstone aids that fire within:
Yet when the slimie soyl consumed, shall Yeeld no more food to feed the fire withall,
And Nature shall restrain her nourishment,
The flame shall cease hating all famishment.

Under this Hill some Poets feign the Gyant Enceladus to have been buryed, as before is said, whose hot breath fired the mountain lying on his face. Others suppose it to be the Shop of Vulcan, and the Cyclops; and the gross Papists take it for the place of Purgatory; all alike unfallible.

The principall Rivers hereof, 1. Taretta, antiently called Terius. 2. Himera, neighboured by Mount Hybla, much famed for Honey. 3. Isaurus. 4. Hypsa. 5. Acasius, of great note for its precious stones. None of them much observable for length or breadth, but that defect supplyed by the commodiousnes of Bays and Creeks, which are very frequent in this Island; and by the benefit of Fountains and fresh-water Lakes. Most memorable amongst these, 1. The Lake called Palicoro, (now Napthia) which for three moneths doth cast forth water very hot, but of very ill smell; of which there is mention made in Pliny, by the name of Ephintia. 2. A Fountain neer the foot of Ætna, the water whereof is sharp like Vinegar, and sometimes boyleth; into which a piece of cloth cast, being before steeped in water mixed with Gall, becomes suddenly black. 3. Another Fountain neer Drepanum, the water of which, as soon as drunk, provoketh loosnes. All which effects proceed from that sulphureous and bituminous matter, of which the whole Island is exceeding full. 4. Arethusa, of greater fame among the Antients, than all the rest, especially in that the River Alpheus (a River of Greece) having swallowed up one hundred and forty lesser streams, and losing it self under the ground; is thought to empty it self into it. The thing affirmed by Seneca and Strabo both; and seems to be sufficiently proved, by the severall instances of a wooden dish or cup lost in the River Alpheus, and found rising up in this River; and by the leaves of certain trees growing on the banks of that Greek River, and swimming on this in great abundance; there being none of these trees in all Sicil. Dicitur Alpheus (saith Mela) se non consociare pelago; sed subter maria, terrasq; depressus, huc agere alveum, atq; hîc se rursus extollere.

This Island is famous for the worthy Scholars she once produced, viz. Æschylus, the first Tragedian of fame; who being bald through age, once walked in the fields, where by chance an Eagle taking his bald pate for a white Rock, let a shell-fish fall on it, of that bigness, that it beat out his brains. 2. Diodorus Siculus, that famous Historian. 3. Empedocles the first Inventer of Rhetorick; and his fellow Gorgias. 4. Euclide, the textuary Geometrician, who taught in Megaris. 5. Archimedes, a most worthy Mathematician, the first Author of the Sphere; of which instrument he made one of that art and bigness, that one standing within, might easily perceive the severall motions of every celestiall orb. He made also divers military Engines, which in the siege of Syracusa sorely vexed the Romans; and was at last slain in his study by a common Souldier in the sack of the Town, to the great grief of the Generall Marcellus. 6. Epicharmus, the first Inventer of Comedies; and 7. Theocritus, the first Author of Pastorall Eclogues. In the later times, Nicolas Abbot of Palermo, a learned Canonist, and Cardinall of the Church of Rome, commonly called Panormitanus, was of greatest fame.

In Plinies time there were reckoned in this Island seventy two Cities, of which only twelve are now remaining. The whole divided at this time into three small Provinces, that is to say, 1. Val de noto. 2. Mazara, and 3 Mona; to which the Isles adjoyning may adde a fourth.

1. VALLIS DE NOTO taketh up the Eastern parts of the Island. The chief Cities of which are, 1. Syracusa, once the Metropolis of the whole Island, and a most flourishing Common-wealth, it was (as Tully reports) the greatest and goodliest City of all that were possess'd by the Greeks, for for ſituation very ſtrong; and of an excellent proſpect, from every entrance both by Sea and Land. The Port thereof which had the Sea on both ſides of it, was for the moſt part environed with beautifull buildings; and that part of it which was without the City, was on both ſides banked up, and ſuſtained with very fair walls of Marble. Nor was it only the goodlyeſt City of the Greeks, as Tully tells us, but the greateſt alſo of the World, as is ſaid by Strabo; by whom it is affirmed, that without the outmoſt wall thereof, (for it was environed with three walls) it contained one hundred and eighty Furlongs in compaſſe, which of our meaſure cometh to eighteen miles. It was compounded of four Towns made up into one, that is to ſay, Inſula (or the Iſle) Acradine, Neapolis, and Tyche; beſides the Fort called Hexapla, which commanded the reſt; the greatneſſe of all which, the ruins and foundations of it do ſtill demonſtrate. It ſtandeth North of the Promontory called Pachinus, and was built by Archias of Corinth, about the time of Jotham King of Judah; who being for an unnaturall Rape committed on a young Gentleman, baniſhed his Countrey, together with his friend and Companion Miſcellus; conſulted with the Oracle at Delphos, how and in what place they ſhould diſpoſe of themſelves. The Oracle demanding whether they moſt affected wealth, or health; Miſcellus anſwered health, and Archias wealth; and thereupon the former was directed to ſettle himſelf at Crotona in Italy, and the other here. Nor did the Oracle deceive him in his expectation; this Town by reaſon of its beautifull and commodious Port, proving of greateſt trade and wealth next to Carthage it ſelf, in thoſe times of the World. It was the cuſtome of this Town, when any of the Citizens grew too potent, to write his name in an Olive leaf; which being put into his hand, did without more ado condemn him to baniſhment for five years; and was called Petaliſme, from the Greek word πέταλον, ſignifying a leaf. Yet could not this device ſo well ſecure them, in the poſſeſſion of their ſo much deſired Freedome, but that this City fell oftener into the power of Tyrants, than any one City in the World. That which is now remaining of it is the work of Auguſtus, who after a ſecond deſtruction of it in the time of Pompey, ſent a Colony hither, and built upon the Iſle and the parts neer unto it. But now the whole Iſle (Ortygia the Antients called it) is taken up with a very ſtrong Caſtle; the whole City alſo being very well walled, and held by a Garriſon of Spaniards. 2 Noto, which gives name to this whole Diviſion. A City which heretofore contended with Syracuſe in point of greatneſſe: Situate on a very high Rock, unacceſſible on all ſides but by one narrow paſſage; and having under the Cape of Paſſari a very fair and capacious Harbour, the Key of Sicil on that ſide. 3 Auguſta, ſituate on the ſhore alſo, and of ſo large a Haven that it could never be fortified. 4 Caſtro Giovanni, a Town of about four thouſand Families, ſituate in a wholſome air, and a fruitfull Soyl, which they hold to be the very Navell and exact middle of the Iſland. It is alſo much prized for Mines of moſt excellent Salt. 5 Lentini, famous for its Lake, whoſe fiſhing is farmed for eighteen thouſand Crowns yeerly. It was antiently called Leontium, and ſtood ſomewhat North of Syracuſa; with which continually in war, either to preſerve their own Liberties, or get the Soveraignty of the other. 6 Enna, a midland Town, whence Pluto is ſaid to have raviſhed Proſerpine: In after times the dwelling of that Syrus Ennus, who ſtirred up the Roman Slaves againſt their Lords; and having broke open the common Priſons, and received all ſuch as came unto him, patched up an Army of forty thouſand. This war the Roman Writers call Bellum Servile, ended at laſt, but with no ſmall difficulty, by the valour and good fortune of P. Rupilius.

Sicil.

2. MAZARA containeth all the Weſt-parts of the Iſland. The chief Cities whereof, 1 Agrigentum, now called Gergenti, famous for Phalaris the Tyrant, and his torturing Perillus in a Brazen Bull, which he had made for the deſtruction and torture of others. Of which aptly Ovid.

——— Nec enim lex juſtior ulla eſt,
Quam necis Artifices arte perire ſua.

Moſt juſt it is a man ſhould be tormented
With that, which firſt his cruel wit invented.

It was ſaid antiently of the people of this City, that they built as if they ſhould never dye, and eat as if they were ſure to live no longer. 2 Palermo, antiently called Panormus, and then a Colony of the Phœnicians; now the chief City of Sicil, and the Seat of the Spaniſh Vice-roy. Situate on the Weſt Cape of the Iſland looking towards Sardinia, beautified with large Streets, delicate buildings, ſtrong walls, and magnificent Temples. It hath no naturall Port appertaining to it, (Drepanum ſerving antiently as the Port thereof) but of late there is an Haven forced out by a mighty Pierre; a work of vaſt expence, and worthy of the greatneſſe of Rome. It is alſo an Arch-biſhops See, and an Univerſity. 3 Monreal, commonly called Morreal, famous for the Church, the Arch-biſhops See. It is called in Latine Mens Regalis. 4 Drepanum, now called Trapani, ſituate on a Promontory thruſting into the Sea, not far from that of Lilybæum, a Town well fortified, in regard of the ill neighbourhood of the Moors, who do often pillage on theſe coaſts; and having the command of a very fair Port. The Inhabitants of this place are ſaid to be the beſt Sea-men of Sicil. 5 Mazara, which gives name unto all this Vale, ſituate South of Lylibæum, and not far from Selinus. 6 Eryx, ſituate on a Mountain over-looking the Sea, ſaid by the Antients to have took this name from Eryx the ſonne of Venus, ſlain here by Hercules: memorable in thoſe elder times for being the Seat of K. Aceſtes, who ſo kindly entertained Æneas, and his wandring Trojans; and a magnificent Temple, in which Venus was worſhiped, who from thence was called Erycina; as Sive tu mavis Erycina ridens, in the Poet Horace. This was the laſt Town which the Carthaginians held in Sicil. On the ſurrendry whereof by Amilcar the Sicil.

Father of Annibal, at the end of the first Punick War, it was conditioned by the Romans, amongst other things, that the Carthaginians should relinquish all the claime or title which they had to any part of this Island; which thereby fell unto the Romans (the State of Syracusa excepted only). Who, whatsoever colour they were pleased to put upon that action, were principally tempted to it by ambition, and covetousnesse. And therefore in my mind Florus states it rightly, who saith, that it was undertaken specie quidem juvandi Socios, re autem sollicitante præda; i. e. under pretence of aiding the Mamertines, who had put themselves into their protection, but in plain terms to get possession of the Island which lay fit for Italy. Now and long since a ruin only, the place on which it stood being called Mount S. Julian. 7 Segesta, on the Sea-side, not far from Eryx, neer unto which the Trojan Ladies weary of their many long and dangerous voyages, and fearing to go again to Sea, burnt the Fleet of Æneas; on which occasion it was built. Peopled at first by such of the more old and feeble Trojans, (Longævosq; senes, & fessas æquore matres, as the Poet hath it) who chose rather to fix their dwelling here, than to follow the fortunes of Æneas, in his quest of Italy. Called then Acesta, in honour of King Acestes spoken of before, part of whose Kingdome it was made; afterwards Egesta, from Ægestus one of Trojan race, born here, by whom it was repaired and beautified; and at last Segesta.

3. MONA lyeth on the North-east of the Island, opposite unto Vallis de Noto. The chief Towns of it, 1 Nicosia, in the mid-land. 2 Milase, on the Northern Promontory. 3 Messana, a City of great strength and beauty, just opposite to Rhezo in Italy. It was the first Town which the Romans had in this Island, being put into their hands by the Mamertines, a Troop of Souldiers brought thither out of Campania for the defence of the City; who finding themselves too strong for the Citizens, made themselves Masters of the place; but being withall too weak to hold it, chose rather to surrender it to the Romans, than to its true and proper owners. Hence the beginning of the first War betwixt Rome and Carthage. A City it is at this time, of the most beautifull building of any in Sicil; and peopled by the wealthyest sort both of Merchants and Gentlemen; who live here in great pleasure (if not voluptuousnesse) as having plenty of all necessary provisions, fruits of all kinds, delicious Wines, and snow to moderate and qualifie the heats thereof, at cheaper rates than any elsewhere in the Countrey. On the West side, there stands a strong Citadell, highly mounted, and well Garrisoned, which commands the Town: and not far off a very high Lanthorn, where lights are kept burning all night long, for the direction of such Mariners, as are to passe those dangerous Straights; which from this Phare or Watch-Tower, is called commonly the Phare of Messana. The Haven of this Town is the fairest of Sicil, whose entrances are so strongly sconced and bulwarked, that the people let their Gates (in derision of the Turks) stand alwayes open. It is also an Arch-bishops See. 4 Catina, so often vexed by Dionysius the Tyrant of Syracuse: more antient than beautifull: seated on the North side of a great (but hollow) Bay, not easily approached by Ships, and therefore neither held by any Garrison, nor much traded by Merchants; the riches of the place consisting principally in the fruitfulnesse of the Soyl, the habitation of many of the Gentry, and by being a small University. It was once a Colony of the Naxians. And so was also Tauromenium, the fifth Town of note in this part of the Island; called sometimes from its Founders Naxos, but now Thermino; a ruine only of what was in the former dayes; a place by nature of great strength, but over-topped by Syracusa and Messana, betwixt which it standeth. It was in this part of the Countrey that the Cyclops dwelt, there being three little rocky Islands (now not inhabited) not far from this Town, which for a long time were called Cyclopum Scopuli.

4 On the West part of Sicil lie the ÆOLIAN or Vulcanian Islands, heretofore only seven, and all almost of equall bigness; now eleven in number. The first name derived from Æolus, once Lord of them; who being well skilled in divining from what coasts the winds would blow, (which he conjectured by the smoak ascending from them) occasioned the Poets to make him the God of the Winds. The other is derived from Vulcan, the God of Fire; by reason of the continuall flames of fire from thence evaporating in those elder dayes. But now the matter of those flames being wasted in long tract of time, there is only one of them which burneth, now called STOMBOLO; by some Writers Strongyle, from the roundnesse of it. An Island of about ten miles compasse, but such as seems to be no other than a large round Mountain. Out of the top whereof issueth continually a flame like a burning Beacon, easily discernible far off, but at nights especially: a place so full of horror to the neighbouring Islanders, that they and many others of the Romish Catholicks conceive it to be Hell it self. And yet in those parts where the rage of the fire offendeth not, it is of a very fruitfull soil, and apt for tillage.

2. But the fairest and best peopled of those Islands, is that of LIPARA, some ten miles in circuit, (from whence the rest are called the Liparean Isles) so named from Lipara the chief Town, said to be built in the time of Josiah King of Judah; the See of a Bishop, under the Arch-bishop of Messana. The Island generally fruitfull, well furnished with Allom, Sulphur, and Bitumen; and with some hot medicinall Bathes, which are much frequented, and from thence called Thermessa by the antient Writers. It was formerly of so great wealth, that falling into the displeasure of Agathocles (then the Tyrant of Syracuse) they were able to buy their peace of him, at the sum of one hundred Talents of Gold; which sum they had no sooner paid, but the Tyrant for a farewell, robbed their very Temples. Unprosperous in his Actions always after that adventure. Nor sped it better with the Turks, who in the year 1544. laid the Countrey desolate; in which condition it remained, till Charles the fifth repleniſhed it again with Spaniards, and fortified it very strongly against all invasions.

3. Not far off lyeth another of these Islands, now called FAVOGNANA, or Fauciana, but antiently Ægusa, conceived to be the same which Livy and Florus call Ægates; in which there is a fair and capacious Bay able to receive the greateſt Navies; and neer to which Lucſatius Catulus the Conſul gave the Carthaginians their laſt blow at Sea, which drew along with it the ſurrendry of Eryx, and the loſſe of Sicil. Dedyme, Ericoſa, Eunymos, and Phœnicuſæ, four other of theſe Iſlands, but of leſſer note, I paſſe over willingly; and make haſte to Sicil.

4. HIERO, the ſeventh and laſt of theſe Iſlands of any conſideration, and the eighth in tale, called alſo Vulcania, in which Vulcan was worſhipped; ſaid to have firſt appeared above the water at ſuch time as Scipio African dyed. A barren, ſtony, and uninhabited place, by reaſon of the fires which formerly have flamed ſo hideouſly (eſpecially in the year 1444.) that it made not only the reſt of theſe Iſlands but all Sicily tremble. Neer unto this Iſle was fought the firſt Navall fight betwixt Rome and Carthage. Before which time the Romans had never uſed the Seas, as being totally employed in the conqueſt of Italy; inſomuch that when they had built their Gallies, they were fain to exerciſe their men in rowing, by placing them on two Seats neer the water with Oars in their hands. Which notwithſtanding, having deviſed an Engine like a Grapling-hook, they ſo faſtened the Adverſe Fleet unto them, that the whole fight ſeemed a Land-battell fought upon the Sea. The victory fell unto the Romans, C. Duilius the Conſul then commanding in Chief; and honoured with the firſt Navall Triumph that was ever ſolemnized at Rome.

After this Iſland was once known to the Greeks, they ſent from all their chief Cities ſeverall Colonies, who planted in the Sea-coaſts of the Countrey, as before we noted. But ſo as they never united themſelves in a body together, but had their ſeverall eſtates and particular ends; whereby they came to be divided into many factions, and at laſt made themſelves a prey to as many Tyrants. Phalaris lording it at Agrigentum, Panatius at Leontium, Gelon at Syracuſe, Cleander at Gela; and when one Faction grew too weak to reſiſt the other, they called in ſeverall Forain Nations to abet their quarrel. For on this ground, the Carthaginians were firſt called into Sicily by the Meſſanians, againſt the Agrigentines. And on the ſame was managed here a great part of the Peloponneſian wars; the Athenians ſiding with the Leontines, and the Spartans with the Syracuſans: in which the whole power of Athens was broken by Sea and Land; and their two Generalls Nicias and Demoſthenes, murdered in priſon. But becauſe Syracuſe was a City of the greateſt Authority, and of greateſt influence over the reſt of Sicily, we ſhall more punctually inſiſt on the State and affairs thereof. The Government of which at firſt was popular, as it was in moſt of the Greek Colonies, according to the platforms which they brought from home; and was but newly altered to the Ariſtocraticall, when Gelon made himſelf King of it, about 26 years after the expulſion of the Tarquins at Rome; whom with as many as ſucceeded in the Royal dignity, take along as followeth.

The Tyrants, or Kings of Syracuſe.

A. M.

3465 1 Gelon, the Prince or Lord of Gela, taking advantage of the quarrels in Syracuſa, betwixt the Magiſtrates and people, made himſelf Maſter of the City; and was choſen King. A valiant and prudent Prince, by whom 150000 Carthaginians were ſlain in battle, for their firſt welcome into Sicil. 7.

3472 2 Hiero, the brother of Gelon, a valiant King alſo, but a rude and covetous man, whereby he loſt the love of his people. 11.

3484 3 Thraſibulus, brother of Hiero, whoſe Government proved ſo cruel and unſupportable, that he held it not above 10 moneths; who being forced into Exile by the Syracuſans, the people did a while enjoy their liberty; but withall fell into thoſe Factions, which after 60 years made them loſe it again.

3544 4 Dionyſius, that ſo famous Tyrant, from being Generall of the Forces of the Syracuſans, made himſelf their King: A man of great vices, but great vertues withall. He brought almoſt all Sicily under his obedience, and the Town of Rhegium in Italy; reigning in all 38 years.

3582 5 Dionyſius II. ſucceeding his Father in his Kingdome and vices, but not in valour or wiſdome, was firſt outed by Dion a noble Gentleman of Syracuſe; and afterward taken Priſoner by Timoleon of Corinth, to which City he was ſent, and there dyed in exile.

3635 6 Agathocles, by trade a Potter, after that a Souldier; 20 years after the death of Timoleon, made himſelf King of Syracuſa. To draw the Carthaginians out of Sicil, he paſſed over into Africk, and beſieged Carthage; which example Scipio after followed, but with better fortune. 29.

3737 8 Hieronymus, the ſonne of Hiero, after whoſe death Syracuſe and all Sicil became ſubject to Rome, by the fortunate conduct of Marcellus.

Of theſe eight Kings, the ſix firſt commonly paſſe under the name of Tyrants; from whence, and from ſome others of like diſpoſition, who Lorded it over the reſt of the free Cities of Sicil, the name of Siculi Tyranni grew into a Proverb. But of all none more hated than the two Dionyſii, who were ſo odious, that there were continuall execrations powred on them; only one old woman praying for the life of the later. Who being asked the cauſe, made anſwer, that ſhe knew his Father to have been a monſtrous and wicked Tyrant; on whom when the curſes of the people had prevailed, and obtained his death, this his ſonne ſucceeded, worſe by far than he; for whoſe life ſhe was reſolved to pray, leſt after his death the Devil himſelf ſhould come amongſt them. But to proceed, after theſe Tyrants, as they called them, were rooted out, and the Iſland was conquered by Marcellus; it alwayes followed the fortune of the Roman Empire; till in the partition of that Empire, it fell together with Apulia, and Calabria, into the power of the Greeks. In the declining of whoſe greatneſſe, this Iſland having been miſerably pilled and ſpoyled by the Emperour Conſtans, An. 669. became a prey to the Saracens; from them recovered again by the help of the Normans, who held both this and the Realm of Naples, in Fee of the Church, under the title of Kings of both Sicils. From that time forwards it ran the fortune of that Kingdome, ſubject unto the Princes of the Norman and German lines, till the death of Conrade; no interruption intervening. After whoſe death when Munfroy or Manfrede, the baſe ſonne of the Emperour Frederick, and Brother of Conrade, had forcibly made himſelf King of theſe Countreys; it was offered to Richard Earl of Cornwall, Brother to Henry the third of England: a Prince of ſuch riches, that he was able to diſpend an hundred Marks per diem, for ten years together; which according to the Standard of thoſe times, was no ſmall ſum. But the conditions which the Pope propoſed were ſo impoſſible for the Earl to perform, that his Agent told him, he might as well ſay to his Maſter, I will give thee the Moon; climb up, catch, and take it. The Earl refuſing it, it was offered the King for his ſecond ſonne Edmund, who was inveſted by the gift of a Ring, and money coyned in his name by the Popes appointment, with the inſcription of Almundus Rex Siciliæ. But the King not being able to purſue the buſineſſe, becauſe then overburdened by his Barons Wars, and the Pope having ſucked no ſmall ſtore of Treaſure from him; it was in the year 1261, given unto Charles Earl of Provence and Anjou, brother to Lewis the 10. Under him thoſe Countreys joyntly continued ſubject till the year 1281. in which his Competitour, Peter of Aragon, claiming it in right of his wife the daughter of Munfroy before mentioned, promiſing him to fight a ſingle combat before our K. Edward the firſt, at Bourdeaux; fail'd of his word; and in the mean time ſo contrived it, that at the ſound of a Bell tolling to prayers, all the French-men in Sicily were cruelly maſſacred. This exploit is known now under the name of Veſperi Siculi; and was managed by John de Prochita, a Gentleman of the Realm of Naples, whom Charles had diſpoſſeſſed of the Iſle of Prochita, whereof he had been formerly Lord; and not content to do him ſuch a piece of injuſtice, added a further inſolency to it, in the forcing of his Wife. Provoked with theſe two injuries, the abuſed Gentleman plots with King Pedro of Aragon, to make him Maſter of the Iſle of Sicily, where he had very good intelligences; and where the French by reaſon of their Luſts and Inſolencies had ſo exaſperated the Natives; that they were capable enough of any ſuch impreſſions, as a man ſharing with them in their ſufferings, could imprint upon them. According to the compact made, Don Pedro riggeth out his Navy, under pretence of ſome exploit againſt the Moors, and anchoreth in the Port of Sardinia, there to expect how well the Tragedy would be acted; which fell out ſo agreeably to his expectation, that in one inſtant as it were, on the ſignall given, the French were univerſally murdered in all parts of the Iſland: the people being ſo enraged, that they would not ſpare women great with child, if ſuppoſed to have been got by any of that hated Nation; and Pedro coming in with his Navy as the deed was done, was by the generall conſent of all ſorts of people, crowned King of Sicily. A bloody policy, I confeſſe, which as the Actors learned of the Engliſh Saxons, who had made like riddance of the Danes; ſo did they teach it to the French, who practiſed it on the Hugonots of France in that horrid Maſſacre of Paris, An. 1572. An Act which ſo provoked the Pope, that he ſolemnly accurſed the King, and cauſed many of the neighbouring Princes to Arme againſt him. But the Fox fared never the worſe for that: who did ſo order his affairs, that he did both clear his own Countrey of thoſe Enemies which on the Popes curſe had come in againſt him; and ſetled Sicily more firmly in obedience to him. Since which time this Iſland hath belonged to the houſe of Aragon, but not alwayes in poſſeſſion of the Kings thereof; being a while governed as a State apart by its own Kings, whoſe ſucceſſion followeth.

Kings of Sicily of the Houſe of Aragon.

1281 1 Pedro, or Peter the 3d. King of Aragon by birth, of Sicily in the right of his Wife, the choice of the people, and the Legacy of Corradine (the laſt of the Royal line of Suevia) but principally by the power of the ſword.

1291 3 Frederick, the brother of James, on his Brothers taking the Crown of Aragon, got poſſeſſion of Sicily. By Frederick-Alfonſo, a younger ſonne of this Frederick, the title of Duke of Athens came into this Family.

1336 4 Peter, or Pedro II. Sonne of Frederick.

6 Peter, or Pedro III.

7 Lewis, Sonne to Peter III.

8 Frederick III. in the life of Lewis his Brother called Duke of Athens; after his death ſucceeded in the Kingdome of Sicily.

1389 9 Martin, ſonne to Martin the firſt, King of Aragon, ſucceeded in the right of his wife Blanch, daughter of Frederick the third; and dying without iſſue, gave the Kingdome unto Martin his Father.

1409 10 Martin II. of Sicily, and the firſt of Aragon, of which laſt he was King by birth, and of the former by the gift of his ſonne. After which time the Iſle of Sicily being again united united to the Crown of Aragon, was never ſeparated from it; except it were when John King of Aragon gave it to Ferdinand his ſonne, the better to fit him for the bed of Iſabel Princeſſe of Caſtile, with whom the match was then in treaty; and when the Emperour Charles the fift gave it, with Naples, unto Philip his eldeſt ſonne, on his marriage with Mary Q. of England, who thereupon was ſtyled King of Naples, Sicily, and Hieruſalem. But this held only for a year; his Father ſhortly after reſigning to him all his Kingdoms, whereby it became joyned to Spain again. Sardinia.

The Revenues of this Kingdome are by ſome ſaid to be but 800000, but as others ſay, a million of Ducats; moſt of which is again diſburſed on the entertainment of the Vice-roy, and the defence of the Iſland. The Arms are, Or, four Pallets Gules (being thoſe of Aragon) betwixt two Flanches Argent, charged with as many Eagles Sable, beaked Gules, which was the bearing of Manfroy King of Naples, and Sicil, ſpoken of before, who gave thoſe Arms with reference to his deſcent from the German Emperours.

This Iſland for the number of its Nobility compares with Naples, as having in the time of Ortelius, 80 years ago, 7 Princes, 4 Dukes, 13 Marqueſſes, 14 Earls, 1 Vicount, 48 Barons: Men of authority and power in their ſeverall Territories, and therefore not permitted to live much in the Iſland; the greateſt part of their time being ſpent in the Court of Spain; but more to ſatisfie that King upon reaſon of State, than any affection of their own to ſo long an exile. And for the Government of the Church,

The Kingdome of SARDINIA.

THE Iſland and Kingdome of SARDINIA lyeſt Weſt from Sicily; from the neereſt point whereof called Cape Boii, or Cape Coro, it is diſtant about 200 miles. It is in length 180 miles, 90 in breadth, 560 in the circuit; and is ſituate under the 4th. Climate, the longeſt day being 14 hours.

In the time of Ariſtotle it was called Ichnuſa, next Sandaliotis, from the reſemblance which it hath to a mans ſhooe or Sandals; and finally Sardinia from Sardus the ſonne of Hercules, who coming out of Africk poſſeſſed the ſame. For this there is ſufficient authority amongſt the Antients. Of the firſt names ſaith Pliny in as plain terms as may be, that Timæus called Sardinia Sandaliotis; and Myrſilus, Ichnuſa, from the ſimilitude which it hath to the Shooe-ſole, or impreſſion of a mans foot on the ground; Sardiniam Timæus, Sandaliotin appellavit ab effigie ſoleæ; Myrſilus, Ichnuſam à ſimilitudine veſtigii. And for the laſt nothing can be more plain than that of Pauſanias, who tells us that the firſt who came by ſhipping into Sardinia, were certain Africans under the conduct of Sardus the ſon of Maceris, whom the Egyptians called by the name of Hercules; who coming into this Iſland then called Ichnuſa, τὸ ὄνομα ἀπὸ τοῦ Σάρδου τότε μεταβαλεῖν ὁ νῆσος, cauſed it after his own name to be called Sardinia. For further evidence whereof, the people in the Latin tongue are called Sardi; the adjoyning Sea, Mare Sardoum. And to this name it was ſo conſtant, that no following Plantations from other Countreys, were ever able to alter it. Some Companies of Attica, led by Iolaus, came and ſetled here, where they built Olbion, and Agrillis: leaving a memory of Iolaus their Captain in ſome places, which remained in the time of Pauſanias, called Iolaia; and taking to themſelves for his ſake, the name of Iolatenſes. And after the deſtruction of Troy, ſome of that ſcattered Nation came and planted in ſome voyd parts of the Iſland, kept to themſelves the name of Ilienſes, and by that name are mentioned both by Pliny and Livy. But neither of theſe Nations did attempt the change of the name, becauſe not of ability to ſuppreſſe or out-power the Natives. Nor could the Carthaginians do it, though a more puiſſant Nation than the former were; and ſuch as by the neerneſſe of their habitation (Sardinia being diſtant but 160 miles from Africk) had all advantages to make (as at laſt they did) a full Conqueſt of it: building therein the Cities of Charmis, Chalaris, and Sulchi; and holding it untill it was unjuſtly extorted from them by the Romans, at the end of the firſt Punick War: at what time Carthage was in danger to be ruined by the revolt of her own Mercenaries, and ſo not able to reſiſt.

But of the name and firſt Plantations of this Iſland we have ſaid enough. Let us now look upon the place; in which it is reported that there is neither Wolf nor Serpent, neither venomous nor hurtfull Beaſt, but the Fox only, and a little Creature like a Spider, which will by no means endure the light of the Sun, except held by violence. Some Pools it hath, and thoſe very plentifull of Fiſh; but generally ſo deſtitute of River-water, that they are fain to keep the rain which falls in Winter for their uſe in Summer. By means whereof, and for that there is no paſſage for the Northern Winds, being obſtructed by the high Mountains neer Cape Lugudori, the Air is generally unhealthy, if not peſtilentiall: Inſomuch that Tully writing to his brother Quintus being then in this Iſland, adviſeth him to remember, as in point of health, that he was in Sardinia; and ſpeaking of Tigellius, a Sardinian born, ſaith of him, that he was more peſtilent than the Countrey which bred him.

The ſoyl is very fertile in reſpect of Corſica, but barren if compared with Sicil; which yet may rather be imputed to the want of good manuring in the Husbandman, than any naturall defect in the ſoil it ſelf. Well ſtored with all ſorts of Cattel, as appears plainly by that plenty of Cheeſe, and Hides, which are ſent hence yearly into Italie and other places. The Horſes hereof, hot, head-ſtrong, and hard to be broken, but will laſt long. The Bullocks naturally amble, ſo that the Countrey-man rideth them as familiarly, as they do in Spain on Mules and Aſſes. Here is alſo the Beaſt called Mufrones, or or Muſcriones, found in Corſica alſo, but in no other part of Europe; ſomewhat reſembling a Stag, but of ſo ſtrong an hide, that it is uſed by the Italians in ſtead of Armour: Of the skin of which carried to Cordova in Spain, and there dreſſed, is made the right Cordovan Leather. Finally, here is an Herb, of which if one eat, it is ſaid that he will dye with laughter; Whence came the Proverb, Riſus Sardonicus. The truth of which report I ſhall not diſpute, though it be by others more probably conjectured, that the Herb being of a poyſonous nature, cauſeth men to dye with ſuch a Convulſion or attraction of Sinews, that they ſeem to grin, or laugh at the time of their death.

The people are ſmall of ſtature, of complexion inclining unto ſwarthineſs; and that either by reaſon of the heat of the Sun, or more probably from their African extraction: their behaviour much participating of that people alſo. So ſlothful in the times of the Romans, that they were grown into a Proverb, and a Law made to compel them to work; but now eſteemed a very painful and laborious Nation. Much given to hunting, and ſo prone to Rebellion, that the Spaniard permitteth no Cutler to live among them; yet peaceable amongſt themſelves, and in ſome meaſure courteous unto Strangers alſo. Their language a corrupt Catalonian; their diet on meats common and groſs; their apparel in the Towns (eſpecially that of the women) gorgeous, in the Villages ſordid.

In matters of Religion they are little curious. That which they make moſt ſhew of, is according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome; which both their neighbourhood to the Pope, and their Subjection to the Spaniard, have impoſed upon them. But in their practiſe of it they are looſe enough, going to Maſs on Sundaies and Saints daies; which done, they fall to dancing in the midſt of the Church, ſinging in the mean times ſongs too immodeſt for an Ale-houſe. Nay, it is thought that their Clergy it ſelf is the moſt rude, ignorant and illiterate of any people in Chriſtendome; ſaying their Maſſes rather by rote, than reaſon, and utterly unable to give any accompt of their Religion.

It is divided commonly into two parts, viz. Cape Lugudore, towards Corſica, and Cape Cagliari, towards Africk: the firſt the leaſt, and withall mountainous and barren; the laſt the larger, level, and by much more fruitful. Chief Cities of the whole, 1 Calaris, firſt built by the Carthaginians, and ſituate in that point of the Iſland which lieth neareſt to Africk; which from hence took the name of Cape Cagliari, by which it is at this day called. A City of ſuch fame, when it was firſt taken by Gracchus for the uſe of the Romans, that it is called by Florus, Urbs Urbium; and was deſtroyed by the ſaid Gracchus, the better to diſable the Natives from rebelling againſt the Conquerors. Being new built again in more ſetled times, it was a ſecond time deſtroyed by the Saracens; and finally re-built and beautified by the Piſans, at ſuch time as they were Maſters of this part of the Iſland. Very well fortified by Nature, as ſeated on the top of an hill; and hath under it a ſpacious and goodly Haven, much frequented by Merchants. The Town it ſelf adorned with a beautiful Temple, being the See of an Arch-biſhop, many fair Turrets, and the conſtant reſidence of the Vice-roy: from whoſe authority it is exempt by eſpecial priviledge, as to the legal Government of it, and ordered by a Common Councel of its own Citizens. 2. Boſſa, on the Weſt ſide of the Iſland, another Arch-epiſcopal See. 3 S. Reparata on the North, looking towards Corſica. 4 Aquilaſtro, on the Weſtern ſhores. 5 Saſſari, a Town of conſequence, where they have an Aquedũct twelve miles long, reaching from thence unto S. Gavius. Alghes-Boſa, a good Town, ſituate in a wholſome air, and a fertile ſoyl; and having a fair Haven of ſix miles in length, in which the ſhips of Genoa and Catalonia do moſt commonly ride. 7 Oreſtagne, a large Town, but very ill peopled, by reaſon of a bad air which proceeds from the Fens; the Countrey about which gives title to the Marqueſs of Oreſtagne. 8 Turrita, once a Roman Colony, now little better than a ruine; yet giving title to the third Arch-biſhop of this Iſland, who is called in Latine Turritanus. Here are alſo in divers parts of this Iſland the remainders of ſundry Towers and Forts, which the people call Noracks, from Nora, one of the ſons of Geryon; who (as they think) came into this Countrey, and built the firſt dwelling or manſion in it. And this Tradition of the Vulgar hath ſo much in it of Hiſtorical and undoubted truth, that certain Colonies from Spain came and planted here, under the conduct of one Nora; ſomewhat before the expedition of the *Attick*s under Iolaus, as Pauſanias teſtifieth.

This Iſland taken by the Romans from the Carthaginians, as before is ſaid, was firſt under the immediate Juriſdiction of the Præfect of the City of Rome: but after by Juſtinian was made a Province of his new Dioceſe of Africk; and as a part thereof, or rather an Appendix to it, was challenged, invaded, and finally conquered by the Saracens, Anno 807. From them recovered by the joynt-forces of the Piſans, and Genoeſe, who divided it betwixt them: the Southern part, called Cape Cagliari, being allotted to the Piſans, and the Northern towards Corſica, to thoſe of Genoa. But the Genoeſe not content with the partage, (their portion of the Iſland being leſs in quantity, and worſe in quality) began to quarrel with the Piſans, and at the laſt to break into open wars. To part the Fray, Pope Boniface the 8. beſtowed it on James King of Aragon, who driving thence the Genoeſe, (Anno 1324. became Maſter of it. The Aragonian before that did pretend ſome Title to it, in right of the Kingdome of Sicil, then in his poſſeſſion; to ſome preceding Kings whereof it had once been ſubject: and having backed that Claim by the Popes Donation who challenged it as a part of S. Peters Patrimony; incorporated it for ever to the Crown of Aragon. Once indeed it was offered unto Anthony of Burbon, in exchange for his Title to Navarre, but without any purpoſe of performance; that being only a device to fetch him off from the party of the Reformed in France, to which he formerly adhered; adhered; and was as ſuddenly laid by, as it had done the feat intended in the Propoſition. Land of the Church.

The Government hereof is by a Vice-roy, who reſides at Calaris, and muſt of neceſſity be a Spaniard; under whom are two Deputy Governors, Spaniards alſo; the one for Cape Cagliari, the other for Cape Lugudori. Inferior Officers of command may be of the Natives. What profits ariſe hence to the Crown of Spain, I have no where found. The Arms hereof are ſaid to be Or, a Croſs Gules, betwixt four Saracens heads Sable, curled Argent. Which Arms were given upon the taking of it from the power of the Moors: but firſt taken (as ſome ſay) for the Arms of Aragon, on occaſion of the heads of four chief Princes of the Moors which were found ſevered from their Bodies in the battel of Alcoraz, Anno 1094. won by Don Pedro King of Navarre and Aragon.

There are divers ſmall Iſlands about Sardinia, as 1 Iſola Roſſa, heretofore called Phintanis. 2 The Iſle of Hercules, now called Aſinaria. 3 S. Peters, anciently Hierucum, or Accipitrum, with others of as little note: all which, as the Appendants of Sardinia, do belong to the Spaniard.

There are in this Iſland,

The Land of the CHVRCH.

WEſt of the Realm of Naples, lyeth the LAND OF THE CHURCH, extended North and South, from the Adriatick to the Tuſcan Seas. Bounded on the North-eaſt with the River Trontus; on the South-eaſt, with the Axoſenus, by which two parted from that Kingdom; as on the North-weſt by the River Po, and Fiore, by which ſeparated from the State of Venice; and on the South-weſt with the River Piſco, by which it is divided from the Modern Tuſcany, or the State of the Florentine.

By this Accompt the Popes Dominion taketh up the whole middle of Italie; having in breadth from the one Sea unto the other above one hundred miles, and in the length above three hundred. By which advantages it lieth moſt fitly for the command of all the reſt, it being very eaſie for the Popes to convey their forces by Sea or Land, into what part thereof they pleaſe. And were it not that the Popes commonly are of ſeveral factions; and that the Succeſſor purſueth not the deſigns of his Predeceſſors, but hath his own ends to himſelf, which for the moſt part are driven on without conſideration of increaſing the publick Patrimony; it is not poſſible, but that the Pope long before this time, had been Lord of all. And this may be conceived the rather, conſidering the extraordinary fertility of the ſoyl, able to ſpare proviſions for the greateſt Armies; the multitudes of people which it may afford, in regard they are ſo ſeldome conſumed by wars; and that the men of this Dominion (but chiefly thoſe of Rome, and the parts adjoyning) are conceived to be the beſt Souldiers of Italie; as retaining ſome ſparks of their Anceſtors valour, together with their gravity, magnificence, and a certain greatneſs of courage, which ſeems to be particular to them of this Nation. And they preſerve alſo to this day ſo much of the ancient Roman, as to prefer any kind of life, before Trades or Merchandiſe. For though their Lands be very well tilled, and their Vines well dreſſed, and all things done exactly in the way of Husbandry: yet for their Manufactures they are brought from other places, as Venice, Naples, Florence, Genoa. And though they have the Sea on both ſides, and the advantage of many fair and commodious Rivers and Havens, which with little coſt might be made very uſeful: yet do they no way improve their fortunes, or the publick Patrimony in the way of Traffick; which is the main defect of the Papal Politie, and filleth a rich Countrey full of poor and indigent perſons. But to proceed to the deſcription of the Popes Eſtate, it containeth the Provinces of 1 Romandiola, 2 the Territory of Ferrara, 3 the eſtate of Urbine, 4 Marca Anconitana, 5 Ducato Spoletano with Sabinia, 6 S. Peters Patrimony, and 7 Campagna di Roma.

1. ROMANDIOLA extendeth from the River Iſaurus (now called Foglia) by which parted from the Dukedome of Urbine on the Eaſt, to the Dukedome of Parma on the Weſt, from which parted by the River Panaro, called of old Scultenna: and from the Apennine on the South, to Padus, and the Adriatick, on the North. It was called anciently Flaminia, from Flaminius the Roman Conſul, who having won it from the Galls planted Colonies in it, and had the honour (though he purſued this war againſt the will of the Senate) to have it called by his own name: and for the better paſſage betwixt Rome and this, made a very large Cauſey, which for a long time was called Via Flaminia. Chief Rivers hereof, beſides thoſe ſpoken of already, which are only borderers, 1 Ariminum, now called Marechia; and 2 Rubicon, now called Piſſatello, betwixt Ariminum and Ravenna, of which more anon.

The chief Cities of it are, 1 Bononia, (or Boulogne) ſeated in a ſpacious plain neer the Apennine hils, a very populous City, of a round form, and a great circuit: the building antick, ſeeming for the moſt part to be the work of the Lombards; the foundation of the houſes of Free-ſtone, the reſt of Bricks; built with Arched Cloyſters towards the ſtreet, under which one may walk dry in the greateſt rain. A City honoured with many Palaces of the neighbouring Nobles, the chief Univerſity of Italy, and the retiring place of the Popes. The Civil Law is much ſtudied here, inſomuch that from hence proceed the famous Civilians, Johannes Andreas, Aza, Bartolus, and Socinus. I believe they have built Caſtles in the air, which aſcribe the founding of this Univerſity to Theodoſius the 2. The Charter of this foundation

tion dated Anno 423. is an idle and fooliſh thing. For there it is ſaid, that at the inſtitution there were preſent Gualter Earl of Poictiers, Embaſſador for the King of England; and Baldwin Earl of Flanders, for the King of France: when at that time, neither thoſe Earldoms, or thoſe Kingdoms were in rerum natura. It is ſituate on the River Apoſa, and was by former writers called Felſina. Near unto this Town in a Demy-Iſland called Forcelli, was that meeting between Auguſtus, Antony, and Lepidus; wherein they agreed on the Triumvirate, dividing the Empire and City of Rome, among themſelves: Which combination was confirmed by the enſuing Proſcription; wherein, that they might be revenged on Cicero, Lepidus proſcribed his Brother; Antonius, his Uncle. 2 Rimini, anciently called Ariminum, ſeated on the mouth of the River Ariminum, of no great note but for giving name unto this City, and now called Marechia. The City large, and ſeated in a plentiful and pleaſant ſoyl, abundantly productive of Wines, Figs, and Olives: wealthy withall, the trade which formerly enriched Ravenna, being for the moſt part managed here. Divided by the River into the City and the Suburbs; but joyned together by a fair and ſtately Bridge, built over it by Auguſtus Cæſar, who alſo erected in the City a Triumphal Arch. It is ſituate ſomewhat Eaſt of the River Rubicon, which in thoſe times divided Italie from Gaule: upon the bank whereof looking towards this Town, there was an old Marble Pillar having on it a Latine Inſcription to this purpoſe, viz. Leave here thy Colours, and lay down thine Arms, and paſs not with thy Forces beyond the Rubicon; whoſoever goeth againſt this command, let him be held an Enemy to the people of ROME. Which Rule when Cæſar had tranſgreſſed, and ſurprized this City, he ſo frighted Pompey and his faction, that they abandoned Italie and Rome it ſelf, and withdrew themſelves into Epirus. It is ſaid that Cæſar dreamed the night before, that he carnally knew his own Mother: whereby the Sooth-ſayers gathered, that he ſhould be Lord of Rome, which was the common Mother of them all. Which dream, and ſeveral prodigies hapning at the ſame time with it, did ſo incourage him in his enterpriſe, that he is ſaid, at the paſſing over Rubicon, to have ſaid theſe words, Eámus quo nos Deorum oſtenta, &c. Let us go, whither the ſins of our Enemies, and the prodigies of the Gods do call us. In memory of which venturous, but fortunate action, he cauſed a monument to be erected in this City, with his name and Titles. It was anciently a Roman Colony, and in the buſtles happning betwixt the Pope and the Emperor, was ſeized on by the Malateſti, as Bononia was by the Bentivoli, two potent Families of theſe parts; who held them in defiance of the Popes of Rome, till they were reduced again unto the Church, by Pope Julio the ſecond. 3 Cervia, on the Adriatick Sea, where there is made ſo much Salt, that they furniſh therewith all their neighbours of Marca Anconitana, and a great part of Lombardie: the Pope receiving for his Cuſtomes of this one commodity, no leſs than 60000 Crowns per annum. 4 Furlii, (called of old Forum Livii) one of the Towns belonging properly to the Exarchate of Ravenna, ſeated in a very pleaſant air, and a fruiful ſoyl, betwixt two freſh ſtreams; of which the one is called Ronchus, and the other Montonus. 5 Faventia, now called Faenza, on the banks of Anemus, a calm gentle River; an ancient City, but well peopled: much benefited by the Flax which groweth in the adjoyning fields, and the Earthen Veſſels which they vend to moſt parts of Italie. It was firſt given unto the Popes by Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards, whom they but ſorrily requited for ſo great a courteſie. 6 Sarſina, an old City, ſeated at the foot of the Apennine, the birth-place of Plautus the Comedian. 7 Imola, anciently called Forum Cornelii; and 8 Ceſena, Cities both of them of no ſmall Antiquity; but this laſt the fairer built, the better peopled, and the more ſtrongly fortified: there being a ſtrong Caſtle on the top of an hill, the work of Frederick the 2, Emperor and King of Germany. This Town, with that of Sarſina ſpoken of before, ſeem to be ſeated on the banks of the River Rubicon, now called Piſſatello. 9 Ravenna, ſituate in the embracements of two rivers called Montonus and Ronchus: by the confluence whereof at their fall or influx into the Adriatick, it was once beautified with one of the faireſt Havens in the world, and for that cauſe made the Road of one of the two Navies, which Auguſtus kept alwaies manned to command the whole Empire of Rome: the other riding at Miſenus in Campania. This of Ravenna, being in the upper Sea, awed and defended Dalmatia, Greece, Crete, Cyprus, Aſia, &c. the other at Miſenus, in the lower Sea, protected and kept under France, Spain, Africk, Ægypt, Syria, &c. The wals of this City are ſaid to have been built or repaired by Tiberius Cæſar; the whole City to have been much beautified by Theodoricus King of the Gothes, who built here a moſt ſtately and magnificent Palace; the ruines whereof are ſtill eaſily diſcernable. The private buildings are but mean, the publick ones are of a grave, but ſtately ſtructure. Of which the principal heretofore was the Church of S. Mary the Round, whoſe roof was of one entire ſtone, and honoured with the rich Sepulchre of the ſaid King Theodorick: which the Souldiers (in the ſack of this City by the French, Anno 1512.) pulled down, together with the Church it ſelf, only to get the Jewels and Medals of it. The principal at the preſent, is the Church of S. Vitalis, the pavement whereof is all of Marble, and the wals all covered with precious ſtones of many ſorts, but unpoliſhed as they were taken out of Mines; which ſheweth as well the magnificence as Antiquity of it. The Patriarchs of this City, in regard it was ſo long the Regal and Imperial Seat, have heretofore contended for precedency, with the Popes themſelves: not brought to yeeld the place to the proud pretenders, til Donus the 2d. in the ſhort time of his Papacie about the year 975. did in fine prevail. And this they did upon good reaſons, this City having been anciently the Metropolis of the Province called Flaminia, afterwards honoured with the Seat of the Emperor Honorius, and his ſucceſſors; next of the Gothiſh Kings, then of the Exarchs, and laſt of its Patriarchs. And it was choſen for this purpoſe, becauſe of the plentiful Territory, ſince covered with water; and the conveniency of the Haven, at this day choked: though lately by expence of a great deal of treaſure, the Fens about the City have been very much drained; and the Bogs in ſome places turned to fruitful Fields, to the great benefit hereof both for health and pleaſure.

As

As for the Fortunes of this Countrey, it was anciently, together with the Territories of Ferrara, and some part of Trevigiana, the habitation of the Boii; who with the Senones, the Insubres, and the Cenomanni, made up the whole body of the Cisalpine Galls, of whom more hereafter. Finding the Romans grown too near them, by whom the Senones their next neighbours had been rooted out, they thought it was high time to bestir themselves, especially after the defeat given them by the Consul Minutius, who carried the war home unto them; which never any of the Romans had done before. For after this, under Cerolamus their King, they set upon Marcellus the Consul, killing 3000 of his men, but vanquished and subdued by him in a following Battel. Vanquished again not far from Mutina by Cornelius Merula, with the loss of 14000 of their men, they called both the Insubrian and Transalpine Galls to come in to aid them. But being then vanquished also at the battel of Telamon (of which more in Lombardie) A. V. C. 528. they were followed home, and utterly subdued by the Consul Flaminius, as before was said: after which times this Countrey following the same fortunes with the rest of Italie, became subject to the Gothes, as a part of their Italian conquests: whose Kingdome here was no sooner destroyed by Narses, but the Lombards entred. To give a stop to whose successes, and preserve so much unto the Empire as was not already conquered by them; it was thought good by Justine the second, to send thither an Imperial Officer of principal command and note, whom he honoured with the title of Exarch. His residence setled at Ravenna, as standing most commodiously to hinder the incursions of the barbarous Nations; and withall to receive such aids from the Eastern parts, as his occasions did require. These Exarchs having divided Italy into many Governments, appointed over each some supreme Commander, dignified with the name of Dukes. And even the City of Rome it self (so far then was it from being subject to the Pope in Temporal matters) had a chief Officer of this kinde (accomptable to the Exarch, and subordinate to him) whose Government was called the Roman Dukedom. That which they kept unto themselves, as their own peculiar, contained the Cities of Ravenna, Rhegium, Mutina, Bononia, Classi, Forli, Forlimpoli, Sarcino, Parma, and Placentia: which ten Cities with the Territories belonging to them, made up that District, which properly was called the Exarchate of Ravenna; much mentioned in the Histories of the middle times, by reason of the continual wars which they had with the Lombards; but newly entred when this Magistracy had its first beginning. The names of these Exarchs are as followeth. Romandiola.

In the daies of this Exarch, Ravenna was taken from the Empire, by Luitprandus King of the Lombards, Anno 740. But regained by Charles the Great, and by him given to the Bishops of Rome, together with Anconitana and Spoleto; as a requital for the Kingdome of France, confirmed unto King Pepin his Father, by the consent and authority of the Popes. The donation of this Exarchate to the Popes, partly to blot out the memory of the Exarchs, and partly to make the people obedient to those Prelates; changed the name of the Countrey from Flaminia (by which name it was formerly known) to Romandiola, and now to Romagna. Notwithstanding which Donation, or Original Grant, the Popes injoyed not long the possession of it: the Emperors of Germany, and their Vice-gerents in Italie, wresting it by strong hand out of the possession of the Church; and giving it to such as deserved well of them, and were most likely, or most able to uphold their Faction. And so it stood, till the last Popes conspiring with the French Kings, Lewis the 12 and Francis the first, brought them into Italie, Anno 1509. and by their aids, and by the censures of the Church, so prevailed in fine, that they extorted Ravenna, and some other places, out of the hands of the Venetians, ejected many petit Princes out of other Cities, which they pretended to belong to S. Peters Patrimony; and thereby got possession of all those Territories, which lie betwixt the State of Venice, and the Marches of Ancona.

2. The Territory of FERRARA lieth in the very skirts of Romandiola towards the Venetian; extending one hundred and sixty miles in length, and about fifty in breadth: the soyl thereof exceeding rich, but subject to the overflowings of the River Po; which makes the air in many places to be somewhat unwholsome. And though as well the former Dukes as the Popes, who are now Lords hereof, have been at great charge in raising high Banks and Ramparts to keep in the waters: yet could not this resist the violence of the River, falling from so high a spring, and seconded with so great Landflouds (as sometimes it is) but that it makes many breaches in them, do they what they can. The places of most note herein, are 1. Graffignan in the borders of Tuscany, near the Apennine. 2 Carpi, a place of great importance, seated in the midst of this Dukedome; belonging heretofore to the house of the Pici. But partly by exchange made with Marcus Picus, partly for one hundred thousand Crowns in ready money, given unto Lionel Pico, once the Lords hereof; it was by Charles the 5. incorporated into this estate. 3 Commachia, seated in the Marshes of the Adriatick, from which the Princes of this Family of Esto, were at first called only Lords of Commachia; a place which yeelded great profit to the former Dukes, by the fishing of Eeles. 4 Saxole, given by Duke Alphonso in exchange for

Ferrara. Carpi. Here is also the Territory and Lordship of the Polesine, the cause of so many quarrels and contentions between the ancient Dukes of Ferrara, and the State of Venice. But the chief honour of this Dukedom, is in the Capital City, that which denominates the whole, Ferrara; a City of five miles in compass, so called from the Iron mines which are about it; commodiously seated on the River Po, which by reason of its breadth, depth, and violent swiftness of the current, is a sufficient rampart to it on that side; the other sides being fortified with a strong wall, and a spacious mote. In the middle of the City is a fair and spacious Market-place, into which do open on all sides about twenty streets, all of them half a mile in length; and all so straight and evenly built, that the furthest end of each of them may be easily seen. Neer to this Market-place is a little Island, in which the former Dukes had a stately Palace, called Belvedere, from the fair prospect which it had or gave to the whole City; and on the North side of the City a large Park for pleasure. The other houses are for the most part built of fair Free-stone; not joyning unto one another as in other Cities, but at a pretty distance with neat Gardens between. Arioſto, the Author of that ingenious Poem called Orlando Furioſo, and Hierome Savanarolo the Prophetical Frier, were both of them Natives of this place: of which the first lieth here entombed, the last for preaching against the Pope was burnt at Florence.

In the declining of the power and Empire of the Lombards, this City, together with Favenza, was given by Deſiderius, their last King, to the Church of Rome, the better to oblige the Popes by so great a benefit. But being taken from them by the Emperors of the House of Schwaben, it was again recovere by the prowess of the Countess Mathildis, Anno 1107. who took it, with many other Towns in Italie, from the Emperor Henry the 4. and at her death conferred the same upon the Church. The Popes once more possessed hereof, and not able to hold it, gave it in Fee for ever unto Azo of the House of Este, a man of great sway in the affairs of Italie, who valiantly had defended it against Ezelinus, Vicegerent of Frederick the 2. This was the first of this Family who had Ferrara in propriety: His Ancestors being called before the Marquesses of Este, and sometimes Marquesses of Ferrara, (but in title only) as Governors hereof in behalf of the Popes of Rome. Obizo the Grand-child of this first Azo, obtained of Rodolphus the first (who was willing to make what money he could of his lands in Italie) the Cities of Rhegium, and Modena; that Grant confirmed by Guido Legat of Pope Benedict the ninth, with the Popes consent, Anno 1304. Other improvements there were made by the following Princes, according to the chance of war; but none of them continued constant in their possession, but these three Cities and the Territories adjoyning to them. As for this Family de Este (Familia Ateſtina it is called in Latine) it took this name from Este, or Ateste, a small Town in the Signeury of Venice, conferred upon the Ancestors of this Azo, by Charles the Great. And for the chiefs or Princes of it, they have been men of great authority and power in their several times, commanding sometimes the Venetian Armies, and sometimes the Popes: great favourers of learned men, and advancers of learning; insomuch that the Reinaldo's and Rogero's of Este, make up a great part of the Poems of Arioſto and Taſſo, two of the greatest wits of Italie; and finally allied to many of the best Houses of Christendom. The Catalogue of whom, since they were made the hereditary Lords and Princes of this noble City, I have here subjoyned.

The Dukes and Marquesses of Ferrara.

1236	1	Actius, or Azo de Este, the ninth of that name, but first hereditary Marquess of Ferrara, by the Grant of the Pope.
1264	2	Obizo, the sixth of that name, Grand-son to Azo by his son Rinaldo, second Marquess of Ferrara.
1293	3	Azo the tenth of Este, and II. of Ferrara, son to Obizo.
1308	4	Franciſco, brother to Azo the 2. after whose death, Anno 1312. Ferrara for a time was under the command of the Popes.
1312	5	Alobrandinus, brother of Franciſcus, who had the Title to, but not the possession of Ferrara.
1315	6	Reinaldo the 3. of Este, and the first of Ferrara, recovered Ferrara from the Pope, and cast out his Garrisons. 1317.
1335	7	Obizo II. brother of Reinaldo.
1352	8	Alabrandino II. son of Obizo.
1361	9	Nicolao the 2. of Este, and first of Ferrara, brother of Alabrandino, whose children being yong, he dispossessed of the Estate.
1388	10	Albertus brother of Nicolas, the Founder of the University of Ferrara, Anno 1392.
1393	11	Nicolas II. base son of Albertus.
1441	12	Leonellus the base son of Nicolas, in the minority of his brother Hercules, begot in lawful Wedlock, invaded the Estate, and held it.
1450	13	Borſius, another of the base sons of Nicholas 2. succeeded Leonel in the Estate; who being made Duke of Mutina by Frederick the 3. was by Pope Paul created Duke of Ferrara also, Anno 1470.
1471	14	Hercules, the lawful son of Nicolas the 2. made Knight of the Garter by King Edward 4.
1505	15	Alphonſo the son of Hercules.
1534	16	Hercules II. son of Alphonſo.
1559	17	Alphonſo II. who dying without lawful issue, Anno 1595. Pope Clement the 8. challenged lenged this Estate in the right of the Church; and partly by force, partly by composition (whereof we shall say more when we come to Modena) united it for ever to the See of Rome. Urbine.

The yearly Revenues of this Dukedom were heretofore two hundred and fifty thousand Crowns; now not so much worth unto the Pope, by reason of the Alienation of Modena and Reggio; of which more hereafter.

The Arms of these Dukes (which for the honour of this noble and illustrious Family, and for the strangeness of the Coat, I shall here put down) were Pale-wise of three pieces, 1 Partie per Fesse, in a chief Or, an Eagle displayed Sable, membred, langued, and crowned Gules; and in Base Azure, three Flowers de Lys Or, within a Border indented Or and Gules. 2 Gules, two keys in Saltier, the one Or, the other Argent, charged in Fesse with an Escocheon of pretence Azure, supporting an Eagle of the third, membred and crowned of the second. Over all in chief a Papal Crown Or, garnished with sundry Gems Azure and Purple. The 3 as the first Counter-placed. Which Coat upon the falling of the House of Ferrara, doth now belong to that of Modena and Reggio, as descended of it.

3 From the Territory of Ferrara proceed we to the Estate of Urbine; both Dukedoms and distinct Estates till these later times: this last the yonger of the two, and consequently (as in the ordinary course of Nature) the sinviver also; but swallowed at last into the Popedome as the other was. Bounded on the West with the River Isaurus (now called Figli.) by which parted from Romandiola, on the East from Marca Anconitana; on the North with the Adriatick; and on the South with the Apennine hils, by which parted from Tuscanie. So called from Urbine the chief City of it, and the Ducal Seat. It is in length about 60 miles, 35 in breadth: Some pieces and Estates belonging anciently to the Church, lying intermingled with the Lands and Signeuries which belonged to the Dukes.

The soyl is very fruitful of Corn, Wine, and Oyl, plentiful of Figs and other fruits of most pleasant taste; and in a word, affording all things necessary for the life of man. But the air is generally unwholsome, especially about Pesaro and Fossombrune, by reason of the low flats and overflowes of the water. The principal commodities which they vend abroad, are the Wines of Pesaro, sold in great abundance to the Venetians; and dryed Figs, which they vend unto Bologne, and other places.

The most famous River is Metaurus, (now called Metremo) and a famous one it is indeed, by reason of that great battel fought on the banks thereof, betwixt Asdrubal the brother of Annibal, and his Carthaginians; and the two Consuls Livius and Cl. Nero: in which after a long and hot dispute, the victory fell unto the Romans; there being 56000 of the Carthaginians slain, (as Livie writeth) and 5400 taken prisoners. Polybius speaks of a less number both slain and taken; and like enough it is, that Livie, to advance the honour of that Family, might inlarge a little. But whatsoever was the truth in this particular, certain it is, that this victory turned the tide of the Roman Fortune, which from this time began to flow amain upon them: the Citizens of Rome beginning at this time to trade and traffick, to follow their affairs, and make contracts and bargains with one another, which they had long forborn to do; and that with as secure a confidence, as if Annibal were already beaten out of Italie. This famous River riseth in the Apennine hils and passing by Fossombrune, a Town of this Dukedom, fals into the Adriatick.

There are reckoned into this Dukedom seven Towns or Cities, (four of which are Episcopal Sees) and three hundred Castles. The principal of which are, 1 Urbine, one of the most ancient Cities of Italie, which both Tacitus and Pliny mention; a fair Town, well built, and the Dukes ordinary seat in Summer. It is seated at the foot of the Apennine hils, in a very rich and pleasant soyl, built in the fashion of a Miter, and therefore called Urbinas, quod urbes binas continere videbatur. Francisco Ubaldi the first Duke, built here a very sumptuous Palace, and therein founded a most excellent Library, repleniſhed with a great number of rare Books, covered and garnished with gold, silk, and silver; all scattered and dispersed, in the time that Cæsar Borgia seized on the Estate. Polydore Virgil, the Author of the History of England, which passeth under his name, was a Native here: an History of worth enough as the times then were, except only in such passages as concern the Pope (the Collector of whose Peter-pence he was then in England) whose credit and Authority he preferreth sometimes, before truth it self. 2 Pisaurum, now called Pesara, the strongest town of all the Dukedom, two miles in compass, and fortified according to the modern art of war: the fortifications of it being first begun by Francisco Maria, and perfected by Guido Ubaldo his son and successor; the ordinary seat of the Duke in winter, well garrisoned, and therefore trusted with the publick Armory. It is seated near the shore of the Adriatick, at the mouth or influx of the River Isaurus, which parts it from Romagna: populous, of handsome buildings, and a very strong wall; the soyl exceeding rich, but the air so bad, that partly in regard of that, and partly by their eating of too much fruits, nothing is more frequent here then Funerals, especially in the moneth of August; few of the inhabitants living to be fifty years old. 3 Senogaille, called anciently Sena Gallica, a strong and well-fenced City near the River Metaurus, over which there is a Bridge consisting of eighty Arches; made of that length, not so much in regard of the breadth of the Channel, as the frequent overflowings of that turbulent water. 4 Fossombrune, called in old Authors Forum Sempronii, for air and soyl of the same nature with Pisaurum; bought by D. Frederick of Galeazzo Malateste, for thirteen hundred Florins of Gold. 5 Cabo, or Cagli, on the Sea. 6 S. Leon, a good Town, and the chief of the Countrey of Montfeltre, which is a limb of this Dukedom. 7 Fano, not far from the Sea, an Episcopal City, and anciently belonging to the Church of Rome: of old times called Fanum fortunæ, from a Temple there erected to goddess Fortune (Te facimus Fortuna deum, as the Poet hath it.) 8 Engubium (now called Angubeo) a Town belonging Urbine. longing to theſe Princes, but properly within the bounds of the Spoletan Dukedom; and there we ſhall hear further of it. Of the Caſtles the principal are, Marivola, and the Rock of S. Leon, which were the laſt that held good for Duke Guido Ubaldo againſt Cæſar Borgia, Duke of Valentinois, ſon to Pope Alexander the ſixth; and the firſt which did return again under his obedience. For which cauſe when he fled the ſecond time from the ſaid Borgia, he diſmantled all his other Caſtles, as being more likely to admit than reſiſt the Invader; and theſe two laſt being very well fortified, he left to keep poſſeſſion of the Countrey for him.

Here is alſo within the limits of this Eſtate, the Dukedom of CAMERINE, an ancient and well peopled Town, of a ſtrong natural ſituation amongſt the hils: an Eſtate holden of the Church by the noble Family of Varena, till the time of Pope Paul the third; when Julia di Varena the heir hereof, conveyed it by Mariage unto Guido Ubaldi Duke of Urbin. But the Pope pretending an Eſcheat for want of heirs males, made himſelf Maſter of it by force of Arms: and gave it to his ſon Piero Farneſi, whom afterwards with the conſent of the Colledge of Cardinals he made Duke of Parma; and ſetled Camerine on the Church, as it ſtill continues.

As for the fortunes of this Countrey, it was anciently the habitation of the Senones; a Nation of the Ciſalpine Galls, who only had the honour of ſacking Rome, till the declining of the Empire in the time of Honorius. They being rooted out at laſt (of which more in Lombardie) and the Countrey peopled with Roman or Latine Colonies, it followed the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Italie; till the time of Conradin, the laſt Duke of the Imperial Houſe of Schwaben, when Urbine was the firſt ſubdued by the Earls of Montfeltre, whoſe Succeſſors increaſing in power, added the Town and Territory of Engubio to it. And in the buſtles betwixt Lewis of Bavaria the Emperor, and Pope Clement the ſixth, Anno 1345. Gelaſſo di Montfeltre held it by no other Title, but as the Emperors Vicegerent. This Family injoyed it till the year 1444. by the Title only of Earls of Montfeltre, and Lords of Urbine; when Frederick Ubaldi, for his ſingular and ſurpaſſing valour, was by Pope Eugenius the fourth, created the firſt Duke hereof: to hold as Feudataries of the Church, and paying 2240 Crowns for an Annual quit-rent. A man of ſuch repute for all gallant qualities, that he was by King Henry the ſixth made Knight of the Garter; in recompence of which high honour, the Engliſh to this day injoy many priviledges in theſe Dominions. Guido Ubaldi this Dukes ſon loſt his Eſtate to Cæſar Borgia; after whoſe death he did recover it again by the Power and favour of Pope Julio the ſecond; to whom ſucceeded Franciſco Maria di Rovero, his ſiſters ſon, in whoſe Family it ſtill continues, as will appear by this enſuing Catalogue of

1444 1 Frederick Ubaldi, of the ancient Family de Monte feltro, the firſt Duke of Urbine, and one of the Knights of the honourable Order of the Garter.

2 Guido Ubaldi, ſon of Frederick, for a while outed of this Dukedom by Cæſar Borgia. He was Knight alſo of the Garter.

3 Franciſco Maria de la Rovero, ſiſters ſon and next heir to Guido Ubaldi, was in his own right Lord of Senogallia, and had Piſauro from the Pope in reward of his many ſervices done unto the Church; diſſeized for a while by Pope Leo the tenth.

4 Laurence de Medices, Father of Catharine di Medices the French Queen, and of Alexander the firſt Duke of Florence; was for a while made Duke of Urbine by Pope Leo the tenth, (being of that Family) but loſt it ſhortly after to Duke Franciſco, who after the death of Pope Leo, recovered his Eſtates again, and died poſſeſſed of the Dukedom.

6 Franciſco Maria II. ſon of Guido the ſecond.

The Revenues of this Dukedom were reckoned to have been 100000 Crowns per annum; but might have been raiſed to a greater ſum, had not the Dukes preferred the love and eaſe of their Subjects, before the filling of their own coffers. He is to raiſe 1200 good Souldiers out of this Eſtate; and more the people would ſupply, if they had occaſion. The Arms hereof Azure, a Tower Argent, environed with Flower de Lyces Or.

4 MARCA ANCONITANA is bounded on the Weſt with the ſtate of Urbine; on the Eaſt, with River of Trontus or Druentus, by which it is parted from Abruzzo; on the South, with the Apennine Hils, by which parted from the Spoletan Dukedom; on the North, with the Adriatick. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

It was formerly the dwelling of the Picentes, who poſſeſſed all theſe parts on the coaſts of the Adriatick, from the River Rubicon on the Eaſt, to that of Auſidus on the Weſt. For aiding the Tarentines their Allies, in their war againſt Rome, they were invaded and ſubdued by the Romans, A. V. C. 485. which was about five years before the firſt Punick war, under the conduct of Sempronius; at which time they were ſo great and multitudinous a nation, that they were numbred to amount to 360000, which were then brought under the command and vaſſallage of the Roman Empire. When Italie was divided into no more then eight Regions, theſe Picentes only made up one; ſo did they alſo when divided into eleven. Afterwards, in the time of the Antonini, they made up one of the ſixteen Provinces, into which Italie was divided by thoſe Emperors; and the ſame repute it held in the time of Conſtantine, Piceaum making alwaies one: Aſculum caput gentis, as Florus cals it, which was the head of their Nation, being the Metropolis of the Province. Called in thoſe times Picenum Annonarium, partly by by reaſon of the abundance of grain which it did produce; and partly to diſtinguiſh it from the dwelling of the Picentini, which from its nearneſs unto Rome, had the name of Picenum Suburbicarium; that part of Campania at this time, which is called the Principate. In the declining of the Empire, it was firſt called Marcha Firmiana, from Firmo, once a Roman Colony, and at that time of moſt importance in the Countrey; but by transferring the chief ſeat from Firmo to Ancona, in the time of the Lombards, it came to have the name of Anconitana. The chief Rivers, beſides thoſe named already, which are only borderers, are, 1 Chientus, 2 Sentinus, and 3 Potentia; all riſing in the Apennine, and paſſing with a ſwift courſe to the Adriatick. Anconitana.

The chief Towns, 1 Ancona, ſeated on the Hill Cimmerius, ſhooting into the Sea, glorying in giving name to the Province, and her Haven built by Trajan the Emperor; one of the faireſt in the world, not ſo much for capacity, as the pleaſantneſs and beauty of it: the deſcents down unto the water being made of Marble, and very delectable walking on all ſides of it. The City it ſelf is begirt with hils; on one of which Pope Clement the ſeventh built a very ſtrong Caſtle, Anno 1532. under pretence of defending the Town againſt the Turks, but indeed to keep the people in more full ſubjection, who till that time, did yearly chooſe their own Magiſtrates, and lived according to their own Laws, like a Common-wealth. 2 Recanati (heretofore Ælia Recina) ſeated upon the banks of the River Muſio, renowned for the great concourſe of Merchants from all parts of Europe, at her Annual Marts; and a vein of the moſt excellent Wines. 3 Firmo, ſurnamed the Strong, in former times of moſt eſteem in all the Province, which was hence called Marca Firmiana; and to this day, a place of great ſtrength and conſequence; and an Archbiſhops See. 4 Macerata, now of moſt credit, by reaſon that the Popes Legat keeps his reſidence there, and with him the Chancery for this Marquiſate. 5 Loretto, called in Latin Lauretana, a little City betwixt Recanati and the Sea; well fortified againſt the Turks, and other Pirats who once ſpoyled the ſame, and might be eaſily tempted thither on the like occaſions: The Church here being admirably rich, and frequented by Pilgrims from all parts, to pay their devotions unto our Lady of Loretto, and behold her Miracles. Concerning the removal of whoſe Chamber hither, in our deſcription of Paleſtine, you ſhall meet with a very proper Legend. 6 Aſcoli, ſurnamed the Fair, ſeated at the influx of the River Druentus, and on the furtheſt ſide of it towards Abruzzo, to which by ſome it is aſcribed. Anciently the chief City of the Picentes, as before is ſaid, and then called Aſculum, conquer'd by the Romans, under the conduct of Sempronius, A. V. C. 485. Nigh unto this City, was fought the ſecond battel between C. Fabricius and the Romans on the one ſide, and Pyrrhus with the Epirots on the other; wherein the Victory (as Plutarch telleth us) fell to the King, having ſlain 6000 of his Enemies; but yet with ſuch loſs on his ſide alſo, that he affirmed to ſome of his friends and followers, that ſuch another Victory would quite undoe him; and with ſuch apparency of valour and vertue in the Romans, that he could not but break forth into this acclamation; O quam facile eſſet orbem vincere, aut mihi, Romanis militibus, aut me rege, Romanis. This Town alſo was the ſeat of the War called Bellum ſociale, raiſed by the people of Italie againſt the Romans; Popedius being both Author of the Rebellion, and Captain. They, for a while, ſorely ſhaked the ſtate of Rome; but at laſt were vanquiſhed, and this Town by Strabo Pompeius forced and ſpoyled. 7 Adria, now not otherwiſe famous, than that it gave denomination to the adjoyning Sea, and the Emperor Adrian. 8 Humana, which together with Ancona, was given to Pope Zachary, by Luitprandus King of the Lombards, about the year 741. The ſucceeding Popes after the giving of this Inch, took the whole Ell.

5 Having ſurveyed the Provinces of the Church along the Adriatick, we muſt next croſſe the Apennine, which parts the Marches of Ancona from the Dukedome of SPOLETO (DUCATO SPOLETANO the Italians call it) which takes up the Weſtern part of that Province which the old Romans called Umbria: and therefore before we come to the the deſcription of this, we muſt a little look on the ſtate of that. A Countrey bounded on the Eaſt with the River Aniene, dividing it from the Eaſt parts of Latium; on the Weſt with Tuſcia or Hetruria; on the North, with the Apennine; on the South, with Pareach or winding of the Tiber, the main body of Latium; and with part of Tuſcanie, which is now called S. Peters Patrimonie. So called, becauſe being ſituate under the ſhade of the Apennine Hils, it was Regio Umbroſa. Some give another reaſon of it, and think that the Inhabitants were called Umbri, quaſi Ὄμβροι, as men that had eſcaped the Deluge; becauſe ſo ancient a people, that no body could tell the original of them.

But whatſoever was the reaſon of the name, they were a ſtout and valiant people, and gave the firſt check to Annibals career, after his great Victory at Thraſymene; repulſing him with loſs and ſhame from the wals of Spoleto: yet not of power ſufficient, for all their valour, to preſerve their Countrey from the Tuſcans, who are ſaid to have deſtroyed in it 300 good Towns. Made by that means, if not plainly ſubject, yet ſo obnoxious to the will and pleaſure of the Victors, that at their inſtance or command they ſided with them in a war againſt the Romans (whom formerly they had found very quiet neighbours): and by the Romans were ſubdued together with the reſt of the Confederates then in Arms againſt them, A. V. C. 458. Decius and Qu. Fabius then the fifth time Conſuls, which was about 77 years before Annibal fell into their Countrey. After which time in ſuch eſteem, that it was one of the eleven Regions into which Italie was divided by Auguſtus Cæſar; and finally together with Tuſcia, made up a Province of the Empire.

As for the Dukedome of Speleto, it taketh up the Weſtern parts of the Province of Umbria, as before was ſaid, included betwixt the Apennine, the Tiber, and the River Nar, by which laſt (now called Neora) it is divided from Sabinia, or the Land of the Sabines. The Countrey of a mixt nature, equally compoſed of very rough hils, and yet moſt delectable vallies; exceeding plentiful of all neceſ-

Spoletano. saries, and much commended heretofore for the extraordinary fœcundity of the women. The Wine hereof is much commended by Martial, as the best of Italie.

De Spoletanis quæ ſunt cariosa lagenis
Malueris, quam ſi muſta Falerna bibas.

That is to ſay,

If with Spoleto bottles once you meet,
Say that Falerno Muſt is not ſo ſweet.

Places of greateſt note herein, 1 Spoletum, built partly on the hill, and partly on the lower ground; the reſidence heretofore of one of the four Dukes of the Longobardians, who governed as Vice-roys, or Lord Preſidents, of the remoter parts of that Kingdom: from whence the Countrey round about it was called Ducato Spoletano. It is ſtill a Town of good eſteem, populous, and of handſom building; and hath a ſtrong Fortreſs for defence thereof, built upon the ruins of an old Amphitheatre: to which men paſs over a great bridge of ſtone, upheld by 24 great pillars, which joyns two Mountains together; having between them a deep Vally, but narrow and without any water. Theodorick the Goth built a fair Palace in this City, rebuilt by Narſes, but ſince ruined. 2 Eugubium (now called Augubio) ſeated on the foot of the Apennine; in or near that place where anciently ſtood that City which Pliny cals Iuginium, Ptolemy, Iſuvium, utterly ſubverted by the Gothes. A Town well ſeated in a fruitful and wealthy ſoyl, and bleſſed with an induſtrious people: acknowledging the Dukes of Urbine for Lords thereof, till that eſtate was ſwallowed up into the Popedome. 3 Nuceria, (now Nocera) in Plinies time called Alfatenia, at the foot alſo of the Apennine; the people of which in former times much traded in their wooden veſſel. 4 Aſſiſium, or Aſſiſe, deſtroyed almoſt to nothing in the Civil Wars of Italie, and only famous at this time, for a See Epiſcopal, and being the birth-place of S. Francis; the founder of the Franciſcans, or Cordeliers, as the French call them, but we in England the Gray Friers. 5 Citta de Caſtello, anciently Tiphernum, on the banks of Tiber. 6 Tudertum, now called Todi, ſeated near the Tiber, on the declivity of a rich and fruitful hill.

The reſt of Umbria towards the Eaſt, not being within the compaſs of the Spoletane Dukedom, but under the command of the Popes of Romo, is by late Writers called SABINIA, becauſe the dwelling in times paſt, of the ancient Sabines: who being taken into Rome, and made Free Denizens of that City in the time of Romulus, upon the League concluded betwixt him and Tatius then the King of this people; for a long time lived under the protection of that mighty City. But after joyning with the Latins in a War againſt it, they were ſubdued by Curius Dentatus the Roman Conſul, and made a ſubject Province of that Common-wealth, A. V. C. 463. But though the Sabines, at this time bare away the name, yet were they not the ſole Maſters of it in theſe elder times; the greateſt part hereof being poſſeſſed by ſome nations of the Umbri, whom by a general name they called Vilumbri (the Sabines interjected betwixt them and Rome) and as a member of that body, ſubdued together with the reſt of the Umbri by the conquering Romans. Afterwards in the diviſion of Italie made by Antoninus, it was called Nurſia; and in that made by Conſtantine, it was contained within the new Province of Valeria, Reate being the Metropolis, or head City of both. A Territory of no great circuit, but abundantly fruitful in Oyl or Olives, Vines, and Fig-trees: watered with the River Farfarus, which cutteth through the very midſt of it; and with the Lake called anciently Lacus Velinus (now Lago di Pedeluco) eſteemed to be the Centre or Navel of Italie by ſome ancient Writers, the waters of which are of ſuch a nature, that in ſhort time they will clothe a piece of wood with a coat of ſtone, and yet yeeldeth excellent Trouts, and other good Fiſh. The Towns and Cities of moſt note, are, 1 Reate (now called Riete) an ancient City, and the Metropolis heretofore of all this Tract; as well when it was called Nurſia, as when it was under the name of Valeria. 2 Nurſia, a City no leſs ancient, ſeated amongſt the Hils, which for the moſt part are covered with know; from which Town, being heretofore of more reputation, the Province of Nurſia, ſpoken of in the Itinerarie of Antoninus, took denomination. 3 Magliano, a pleaſant and well-peopled Town, at this time the principal of this Territory. 4 Ocriculum, built amongſt many Fruitful hils, a mile from Tiber. 5 Narnia, the Countrey and Birth-place of the Emperor Nerva, the firſt of all the Emperors not born in Rome, as after him there were few born in it. The ſoyl about it is of ſo different and ſtrange a nature, that it is ſaid to be made dirty by the Sun and Winds, and duſty by Rain: the City well-peopled, and a Biſhops See, ſeated upon a very ſteep and craggy Hill, not far from the River Nar (now Negro) from which perhaps it took the name. A City given unto the Church of Rome by Luitprandus King of the Lombards; of which the Popes of Rome having got poſſeſſion, never left practiſing till they had got into their power all the reſt of the Countrey. Little elſe famous in the whole Region of Umbria, but that in the Weſtern part thereof, is the Lake called Lacus Vademonius, near to Ameria, now called Amelia, a Town of the Dukedom, where Dolobella overthrew ſuch of the Senones, a valiant nation of the Galls, as had eſaped the ſword of Camillus, Quinctius, Curius, and other fortunate Commanders in the wars againſt them; Ne quis extaret in ea gente (ſaith the Hiſtorian) qui incenſam à ſe Romam gloriaretur: a former ſlaughter being made of them by Camillus, on the banks of Aniene, the Eaſtern limit of theſe Umbri.

5 S. PE-

5. S. PETERS PATRIMONIE, properly and ſpecially ſo called, is that part of Tuſcanie, which appertains unto the Church; bounded upon the Eaſt with Tiber, which divides it from Latium, or Campagna di Roma: on the Weſt, with the River Piſeo, which falleth into the Sea near the Mountain of Argentario, and parteth it from the eſtate of the great Duke of Tuſcanie; on the North, with the Apennine, and the Spoletan Dukedom; on the South, with the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Sea. It took this new name preſently on the donation of the Counteſs Mathildis, who gave it for ever unto the Church, An. 110. Paſchal the ſecond ſitting in the Chair of Rome, to be the Patrimonie of S. Peter, and his ſucceſſors in that See. A Countrey not inferior unto any in Italie, for the fertility of the ſoyl; but for the moſt part of an unhealthy Air, by reaſon of the frequent overflowings of Tiber, and the thick woods which hinder that the winds cannot purge and cleanſe it. S. Peters Patrimony.

The principal Cities, and places of moſt obſervation, are, 1 Perugia, formerly called Peruſia; a famous Town, in which Auguſtus beſieged L. Antonius the brother, and Fulvia the wife of M. Antony the Triumvir; who, when they had in vain attempted to ſeduce Rome from his party, repaired to this City; which alſo at the laſt, yeelded to the more fortunate Emperor. Auguſtus afterwards, having much adorned and beautified it, cauſed it to be called Auguſta; but it returned not long after, to its ancient name. It is ſeated very pleaſantly on the banks of Tiber, not far from the Apennine, in a very rich and fruitful ſoyl; well built both for the publick and private ſtructures; a Biſhops See, and made an Univerſity An. 1090. In the diſtractions of Italie betwixt the Emperours and the Popes, this City was ſeized on by the Baillons, who held it as Vicars of the Church. The Oddies, an oppoſite Faction to them, having got together a ſtrong party of Malecontents, ſo ſuddenly entred one night into the City, that the Baillons began to fly: nor was there any thing to hinder them from being Maſters of the Palace, but the chain which was drawn croſſe the gate. One of the Souldiers going about to cut this chain, and wanting room to wield his arm, cryed aloud, Give back; which words being heard, but not well underſtood by thoſe furtheſt off, put them to their heels; and the foremoſt, which thought they fled not for nothing, ran away too. So the City was ſaved. 2 Orvieto, ſeated on ſo high a Rock, that it is no ſmall terrour to look down from the top of it, into the vallies beneath; in which there is a Church of a wondrous lightneſs, and yet the windowes of the ſame (if we may credit Adrianus who reports it) are made of Alabaſter, in ſtead of Glaſs. 3 Viterbo, famous for the long reſidence of the Popes, at ſuch time as they were affronted by the Romans Senators. 4 Civita Vecchia (called anciently Centumcellæ) the only uſeful Haven that belongeth to Rome; which being ruined by the Saracens, was rebuilt by the Popes, new named, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle for the defence of their Shipping. 5 Porto, ſeated on the mouth of Tiber, over againſt Oſtia; but cannot make one good Haven betwixt them both: a Biſhops See, who is one of the ſeven Cardinals which is alwaies aſſiſtant to the Pope. 6 Farneſe, the ancient ſeat and Patrimony of the Farneſis, now Dukes of Parma. 7. Bracciano, which gives the title of a Duke to a branch of the Urſins, a well-known Family of thoſe parts. 8 Bacchano, near the laſt in ſound, although not in ſite: compaſſed round about with Hils in the form of a Theatre, having a fair Lake in the middeſt; out of which runneth the River Cremera, neer which the Fabii were ſlain.

Here was in this Countrey alſo the City of the Veii, affirmed to be as big as Athens, but queſtionleſſe of great wealth and power; in a War againſt which, managed for the moſt part by the aforeſaid Fabii, 306 of them were ſlain in a day, at the battell of Cremera, a petit River of the Tuſcans: only one little child of them being left at home, who reſtored the houſe; and was the Anceſtor of that Fabius Maximus who preſerved Italy, in the wars with Annibal. Of which great ſlaughter, thus ſaith Ovid.

Ter centum Fabii, ter cecidere duo.

———On the Veientine plain
Three hundred and ſix Fabii were ſlain.

This City of the Veii was at laſt, after a ten years ſiege, taken by Furius Camillus, and by him levelled with the earth; becauſe he found that the common people of Rome had a minde to leave their own City, and inhabit here. Here is alſo that fatal River of Allia, nigh unto which Brennus and his Galls, (that people, as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter, having 200 years before been drawn into Italie by the ſweet taſte of the Italian Wines) ſlaughtered the Romans: the Roman Army at that time conſiſting of 40000 Souldiers, moſt of them being raw and unexperienced; the Galls not more in number, but naturally of a more fierce and hardy courage, and withall ſo big-boned, that it ſeemeth they were born to be the terrour of mankind, and the ruine of Cities. Which overthrow at Allia, and the vanquiſhment of the Fabii, hapning in one day, though in divers years, occaſioned the old Romans to put that day among thoſe unfortunate daies, on which they never did attempt any buſineſſe of importance. The like cuſtome, whether on ſuperſtition, or fear of ill luck, is uſed by many Chriſtians; and eſpecially on Childermas day: on which Philip de Comines telleth us that Lewis the 11. uſed not to debate of any matter, but accounted it a ſign of ſome great misfortune towards him, if any man communed with him of his affairs; and would be marvellouſly diſpleaſed with thoſe that were near him, if they troubled him with any matter whatſoever. In this particular, little leſs ſuperſtitious (if not more) then the ancient Romans. And finally, here is the famous Lake called Thraſymene (now Lago di Perugia, from the nearneſs of it to that City) where Annibal slew Flaminius the Consul, and 15000 of his Romans: which fight continued three hours, with so great an eagerness, that the Souldiers perceived not a terrible Earthquake which at that time hapned.

6 CAMPAGNA DI ROMA, containeth that part of Italie, which anciently was called Latium, the habitation of the Latins, and seat of Rome; so called for that it is adjoyning to that famous City, as the more proper Territory, and precinct thereof. It is sometimes also called Campania nova, to difference it from Campania properly so called; the seat and dwelling of the Campans. It is bounded on the East with the said Campania, from which it is parted by the River Axofenus; on the West, with Tiber; on the North, with Umbria, or the new Ducato Spoletano, and Sabinia; and on the South, with the Tyrrhenian, or Tuscan sea: and came unto the Popes by no other Title, than as they had the Soveraignty and possession of the City of Rome; to which it alwaies did belong.

The old Inhabitants were the Latins, as before is said, but subdivided into many petit and inferiour Tribes, such as the Æqui, Volsci, Fidenates, and others of as little note, to the number of thirty, all vanquished piecemeal by the Romans, first under the conduct of their Kings and then of their Consuls and Dictators. Broken at last by L. Quintius the Dictator, A. V. C. 295. they became associates with the Romans, and so continued for the space of 100 years and upwards. But growing insolent on the sack of that City by the Galls, and impudently requiring that one Consul yearly should be chosen by and from themselves; they drew the Romans into Arms: by whom subdued under the leading of Manlius Torquatus, and Decius Mus, then Consuls, A. V. C. 413. Subject from that time forwards to the state of Rome, but enjoying greater priviledges than the rest of the conquered nations did; excepting such to whom the like were granted by especiall favour.

The chief place of it in old times was the City of Alba, then the Seat-royal of the Latin, or Silvian Kings, ruined by Tullus Hostilius the third King of Rome, in which war Rome and Alba being laid at the stake, the whole action was committed by the Romans, to the Horatii; to the Curatii, by the Albans, being three Brethren of each side; in which it hapned that two of the Horatii were first slain, and the third counterfeiting a flight severed his enemies, and so slew them; whereby the Albans ever after became subject to Rome. 2 Lavinium, built by Æneas in honour of his wife Lavinia. 3 Antium, honoured many times with the seat and retirement of the Emperors; the Countrey round about affording variety of Recreations. The people once very strong in shipping, till the taking of the Town by Mævius a Roman Consul; who having broke their Forces at Sea, brought with him into Rome the Beaks of their Ships and other vessels, with which he decked and beautified the Pulpit for Orations (in the common Forum) which have generally ever since been called Rostra. This was the chief City of the ancient Volsci, a people very strong in shipping, though without an Haven: afterwards much frequented by the principal Romans in their retirements from the City, so that for pompous and stately buildings it might compare with any other. Out of the ruins of this Town long ago destroyed, sprang the new City called Neptunum, situate on a rock near unto the Sea: the steepness of which gives it natural strength enough; and yet it is fortified besides with two strong Castles, surveying the Sea, and commanding the shore. 4 Ardea, the chief Town of the Rutuli, and seat of Turnus, the Rival and Competitor of Æneas: afterwards taken by Superbus the last King of the Romans; to which when the Galls had taken Rome, the miserable Citizens were compelled to fly. 5 Gabii, taken also by the same Superbus, whose son Sextus counterfeiting some dislike of his Fathers cruelties, fled to the Gabii; by whom improvidently entrusted with the command of their City, which he betrayed unto the Romans. 6 Ostia, anciently the Port-Town to Rome, built at the mouth of Tiber, by Ancus Martius, the 4th King of Rome; but the Haven hath been long since dammed up, to stop the passage of the enemies Ships unto the City. The Bishop of this Town useth to consecrate the Pope. 7 Præneste, first conquered by the Romans under Qu. Cincinnatus the Dictator. Nothing so much endamaged this City as its natural and artificial Fortifications: for when the Romans in the times of sedition abandoned the Town, they used to make this place their refuge. Among others, Marius the yonger made it the seat of war, against L. Sylla: but perceiving the unsuccessefulness of his affairs, here killed himself; and Sylla entring it as conqueror, put 12000 of the Citizens to the sword. It hath since been so often sacked, that it is very short now of its former lustre; but still it holds the reputation of a Bishops See. 8 Tibur, and ancient City also, an seated in an healthy Air. It is now called Tivol, where there is a Fountain, which with artificial Engines moved with water, representeth the notes of divers Birds. A device very rare (it seemeth) in the time of Adrianus, who reporteth it; but now grown ordinary. In the perfection of which Art, as almost all Civil Nations may pretend a share; so I conceive that the priority herein doth belong of right unto the French: whose Master-pieces in this kinde do far exceed the rest of Europe. For in the Kings house at St. Germains, seven miles from Paris (if it be lawful for me to digress a little on this Argument) one may behold the Statua of a Nymph, sitting before a pair of Organs: whose fingers by the help of water, are taught to manage the keys in so due an order, and the instrument to yeeld such a Musick to it, as comes exceeding near the Organ, if it be not the same; her head in the mean time jolting from one shoulder to another, like an old Fidlers at a Wake; there being also not far off, the counterfeits of divers Mils, who very busily plyed their work till the Musick sounded, and then stood still as if inchanted with the noise. In another place, upon the drawing of a Curtain, one may see two Tritons riding on their Dolphins, in a Sea of water; each of them with a shell in his hand, which enterchangeably and in turns served in stead of Trumpets. In a third, the story of Perseus and Andromeda most lively acted; and in a fourth, fourth, Orpheus in ſylvis poſitus, Orpheus playing on a Viol, the Trees moving, and the wilde Beaſts dancing in two rings about him, by the artificial guidance of the waters only; the pretty Birds in every place ſo chirping out of their ſeveral and reſpective notes, that the hearer would conceive himſelf to be in ſome pleaſant Grove. But it is time to go from Tivoli to 9 Velitri (called anciently Veliterꝛ, and then a City of the Volſci) famous for the birth of the Emperor Auguſtus, and the dwelling of the Octavian Family; a place moſt delectably ſeated amongſt the Vines, which yeeld as rich Wines as moſt in Italie. 10 Anxur, ſo called of the Temple which was here dedicated to Jupiter; ſurnamed Anxurus, that is, Beardleſs; firſt built by the Spartans, who flying from the ſeverity of Lycurgus his Laws, did here ſeat themſelves; after, a Colony of the Volſci, and at laſt of the Romans. But this town being deſtroyed by the tyranny of time, there ſtarted up 11 Taracina in the place thereof, ſeated upon a Mountain, but near the Sea, which it embraceth like a half Moon (it is now called the Bay of Mola): this City lying on the one horn thereof, in the very extremity of the Popes Dominions; and that of Cajeta on the other, which is the firſt Port-town of the Realm of Naples. The Countrey hereabouts hath moſt pleaſant Orchards, of Citrons, Oranges, and Limons; the Oranges having at the ſame time both ripe and Green Fruits, and repreſents a kinde of Summer in the dead of Winter. Campagna di Roma.

Such other things as are remarkable in this Campagna (heretofore called Latium) but more by what they have been, than they are at the preſent, are 1 Tuſculum, a Village which belonged to Tully, who here compoſed his excellent Book, called the Tuſculan Queſtions. 2 Formiæ, built by the Laconians, heretofore the delight and ſolace of the ancient Romans, now viſible only in its ruines. 3 Priverꝛum, once the chief City of the Volſci, and the ſeat of Camilla, a noble Amazonian Lady; who aided Turnus the Rutulian, in his ſharp war againſt Æneas and the Trojans, where ſhe loſt her life. 4 Circe, an old City (in the place whereof now ſtands S. Felix) the habitation of Circe, that ſo much celebrated Sorcereſs; of whom, and her chanting of Ulyſſes and his companions, there is ſo much upon record, in the ancient Poets. Near to which is the head-land called the Circæan Promontory, the repercuſſion of the Waves by whoſe Southern Baſis makes a dreadful noiſe; and gave occaſion to the fabulous inventions of the roaring of Lions, howling of Dogs, &c. which were heard about that Witches dwelling.

But the great glory of Latium, and indeed not of Italie only but of all the World, was that the famous City of ROME was ſeated in it, being built on the Eaſt ſide of Tiber; now much inlarged by the increaſe of 42 leſſer ſtreams or Rivers. It is diſtant from the ſea about 15 miles, firſt built, as Fryer Leander a great Italian Antiquary is of opinion, by Roma, Daughter or Wife to one of the Latin Kings. But being forſaken & forlorn, by reaſon of the unwholſom air coming from the Fens, was rebuilt by Romulus, much pleaſed with the natural ſtrength of the ſituation, and therefore like to make a good Town of war. And this tradition I ſhould rather ſubſcribe unto, than that it was called Rome from Romulus; who had he pleaſed to challenge to he honour thimſelf, might better have cauſed it to be called Romulea (of which name there was a Town among the Samnites) than to call it Roma. But whatſoever greatneſs it did after come to; it was ſmall enough (God knows) at firſt; the City comprehending the Mount Palatine only, and therefore not a mile in compaſs: the Territory not extending, as Strabo witneſſeth, above ſix miles from the City; and the Inhabitants thereof at the firſt general Muſter, amounting at the moſt to 3300 men. So inconſiderable they were, as well in quality as numbers, that their neighbours thought it a diſparagement to beſtow their daughters on them; and therefore they were fain to get themſelves wives by a ſleight of wit: proclaiming ſolemn Playes and Paſtimes to be held in Rome; and raviſhing the women which came thither to behold the ſports. The Kings ſucceeding much inlarged it. Mount Aventine, and the hill Janiculum on the other ſide of the water, being walled and added to it by Ancus Martius; as Quirinalis, Eſquilinus, and Viminalis, were by Servius Tullus; Capitolinus and Mount Cœlius, came not in till afterwards. But at the laſt it was improved to ſuch an height, that in the flouriſhing times of that Common-wealth, the men increaſed to the number of 463000, and the compaſs of the Town unto 50 miles; there being on and about the wals 740 Turrets. And in this number of 463000 men, I reckon neither ſervants, women, nor children, but men able to bear Arms, Free-Denizens, and ſuch as were inrolled into Cenſe, or the Subſidie Books. To which if we ſhould add their wives, children, and ſervants, we cannot probably conjecture them to have been fewer than three or four Millions: and ſo Lipſius is of opinion, in his Tract de Magnitudine Romana. The moſt memorable buildings of it, were firſt the Capitol, founded by Tarquinius Superbus, and beautified with the ſpoyls of their conquered Neighbours; ſaved from the fury of the Galls by the cackling of Geeſe. Tacitus calleth this houſe, Sedem Jovis optimi maximi, auſpicatò à majoribus pignus imperii conditum. It was twice burnt, once in the Civil Wars of Sylla and Marius; and again in the wars of Veſpaſian and Vitellius. In the third building of it, Veſpaſian carried the firſt basket of earth; after him the Nobility did the like, to make the people more forward in the ſervice: and perhaps the cuſtome of laying the firſt ſtone in a building, or driving the firſt nail in a timber-work, by him whoſe edifice it is; hath from hence, if not beginning, yet growth. 2 Here was the Temple of Janus, open in the time of wars, and ſhut in the time of peace; which, during all their Monarchy, hapned but thrice: namely, during the reign of Auguſtus, after the firſt Punick war, and in the time of Numa. 3 Here was the Bridge called Pons Sublicius, on which Horatius Cocles reſiſted the whole Army of King Porſena, Tarquin, and the Tuſcans; till the Citizens behind had broken down the bridge, received him ſwimming to the bank with joyfull acclamations, and ſaved their City from preſent ruine. Here lived the famous Warriers, ſo much renowned in the ſtories of elder times; here flouriſhed the exact Martial diſcipline, ſo memorized by ancient Hiſtoriographers; and finally here were laid up the ſpoyls and Tropheys of all Europe.

ROME, as now it ſtandeth lower on the bank of Tiber, upon Campus Martius, (where it was ROME. built after the inundation of the Gothes and Vandals) is in compaſs about eleven miles, within which compaſs is not a little waſt ground. The Inhabitants of all ſorts reckoned to amount to 200000, two parts whereof are Clergy-men and Courtiers; that is to ſay, ſuch as have their dependence on the Court of Rome, either by holding offices and places of employment under the Popes, or by attending on his perſon, or waiting on the Cardinals and eminent Prelates who are there abiding; or otherwiſe being of the retinue of ſuch Forein Ambaſſadors as are alwaies commorant in the City to follow the Negotiations of their ſeveral Maſters; all which muſt needs amount to a very great number. It was firſt built on the Eaſt ſide of the River, in the Territory of Latium, but now there is little left of the old City but the goodly ruins; and here and there ſome Churches and ſcattered houſes (except it be a little on the North-Eaſt of the River, from the Gate called Del Populo, to the Iſland of Tiber): the reſt, eſpecially toward the South, being taken up with Paſtures and fields of Corn. The main body of the City, as now it ſtands, is on the Weſt ſide of the water, and the Holy Iſland; conſiſting of three diſtinct parts or members. Of theſe the leaſt is that which they call La Iſola, but anciently the Holy Iſland; firſt made an Iſland by the Corn, Straw, and other goods of the Tarquins; which the Senate not vouchſafing to convert to any publick or private uſe, commanded to be flung into the River; where it ſunk and ſetled to an Iſland, called afterwards the Holy Iſland, from a Temple herein built unto Eſculapius, brought hither from Epidaurus in the ſhape of a Serpent. This Iſland is not above a quarter of a mile in length, and hardly half ſo much in breadth; but full of ſtately Churches and beautiful houſes. Next to this is that which they call Traſtevere, or Tranſ-Tiberina, but of old Janiculo, from the Mountain of that name included in it. Called alſo Civitas Ravennatium, or the City of the men of Ravenna, of the Souldiers which Auguſtus kept at Ravenna againſt Antonius; and after placed in this out-part of the City; which by reaſon of the unwholſomneſs of the air, is inhabited only by Artizans and poor people; yet compaſſed about with wals, except on that ſide next the water, and adorned with many goodly Churches and ſome handſome buildings. But the chief glory of the City conſiſteth in that part of it which is called Il Borgo, lying on the North ſide of the other, but disjoyned from it; compaſſed about with wals by Pope Leo the 4. and from thence called Civitas Leonina. For in this part there are, 1 the Church of S. Peter, which were it once finiſhed, would be one of the rareſt buildings in all the World. 2 The Caſtle of S. Angelo, impregnable unleſs by Famine. 3 The Popes Palace, called Belvidere, which with the Gardens thereof was compaſſed about with a very high wall, by Pope Nicolas the 5. and had this name from the fair proſpect which it hath: in the ſame ſenſe, as Belvoir Caſtle here in England, the Barony and Manſion of the Earls of Rutland. A Palace of magnificence and receipt enough. 4 The Library of the hill Vatican, properly called the Palatine, but more commonly the Vatican Library: a Library firſt founded by Sixtus the 4. who not only ſtored it with the choiceſt Books he could pick out of Europe; but allowed alſo a large revenue for the perpetual augmentation of it. Bibliothecam Palatinam in Vaticano, toto terrarum orbe celebrem, advectis ex omni Europa libris conſtruxit; proventuſq; certos &c. So Onuphrius. When the Duke of Burbon ſacked Rome, Anno 1527, it was much defaced and ranſacked; but by the ſucceeding Popes it hath been again recovered to its former fame, and beauty. Rome is now an Univerſity, which was founded by Urban the fourth, at whoſe requeſt Thomas Aquinas profeſſed here. Pope Nicolas the fifth was a ſpecial benefactor to the ſame; and after him, Leo the tenth, who revived the Greek Learning and Language, which were in theſe parts almoſt forgotten. And finally, to this place are brought all the treaſures of thoſe parts of Chriſtendom ſubject to the Popes authority: partly for the expence of ſtrangers, which do there remain on their ſeveral pleaſures or occaſions; and partly for the expeditions which are there obtained, for the Inveſtitures of Biſhopricks, and Buls of Benefices, Indulgences and other matters of Court-holy-water; and partly in the Penſions, which are paid there to the Cardinals and other Miniſters of thoſe Kings and Princes, which know beſt how to make their ends of the Popes ambitions. So that it may be truly ſaid, there came not more Tributes into Old Rome from the conquered Provinces, than hath been brought into the New from the ſubject Churches, which have ſubmitted to the power of the Roman Prelates: and that they have as great command now under the pretence of Religion, as ever they had formerly by force of Arms. So truly was it ſaid by Proſper of Aquitane (if my memory fail not)

Roma caput mundi, quicquid non poſſidet Armis, Religione tenet.——

That is to ſay,

What Rome ſubdu'd not with the Sword,
She holds by colour of the Word.

But yet there wants the Genius of the ancient City, the power and natural courage of the old Inhabitants, which held the ſame againſt the bravery and aſſaults of all Forein Enemies: this City during the time of the ancient Romans, being never took but by the Galls; but ſince Pontifical, it hath been made a Prey to all Barbarous Nations, and never was beſieged by any that did not take it. In a word, the City of Rome as now it ſtandeth, is but the carkaſs of the old, of which it retains nothing but the ruines, and the cauſe of them, her ſins.

The Popes much brage of the foundation of their Church, and the authority of S. Peter; whoſe being there is indeed conſtantly atteſted by moſt ancient Writers; inſomuch that Calvin, though no friend to the Popes of Rome, yet propter Scriptorum conſenſum, in regard of the unanimous conſent of of the primitive times, did not think fit to controvert it. The silence of the Scriptures is a Negative Argument, and concludes nothing to the contrary; against so great a Cloud of unquestioned Witnesses, as soberly and positively have affirmed the same. And yet I would not have it thought by the captious Romanists, that I conceive that it makes any thing at all for the Popes Supremacy, because he sits in Peters seat: no more than it did make for Vibius Rufus (as Dion doth relate the story) to attain Tullies eloquence, or Cæsars power, because he maried Tullies widow, and bought Cæsars chair: though the poor Gentleman did befool himself with this opinion, that he should be Master of them both. Of which see Lib. LVII. And yet the Popes relie so much upon this fancy, of being the direct heirs of S. Peter, and all his preheminences; that all things which they say or do, must be entituled to S. Peter. Their Throne must be S. Peters Chair, their Church S. Peters Ship, their Lands S. Peters Patrimony, their Tributes and exactions must be called Peter-pence, their Excomunications fulminated in S. Peters name; and all their Buls and Faculties sealed Annulo Piscatoris, with S. Peters Signet. Nay they went so far at the last, that Pope Steven not being contented to be Peters Successor, did take upon him in plain terms to be Peter himself. For being distressed by Astulphus King of the Lombards, he sends for aid unto King Pepin in this following stile. Petrus Apostolus JESU CHRISTI, &c. i. e. Peter the Apostle of JESUS CHRIST to you the most illustrious King Pepin, and to all Bishops, Abbots, &c. I the Apostle Peter, whose adopted sons you are, admonish you that you presently come and defend this City, &c. And doubt you not, but trust assuredly, that I my self, as if I stood before you, do thus exhort you &c. and that I Peter the Apostle of God, will at the last day yeeld you mutual kindnesses, and prepare you Tabernacles in the heavens. Baronius who records this Letter, Anno 755. num. 17. was it seems, pretty well perswaded it, that the Pope and Peter were all one. For in his Exhortation or Paræneſis to the State of Venice, being then upon some differences with Pope Paul the fifth, he stileth him in plain terms thus, Paulus idemq; Petrus vicem Christi agens in terris, i. e. Paul, who is also Peter, and Christs Vicegerent. But leaving these imaginary claimes and challenges of S. Peters priviledges, though they did really advance the reputation of that See in the darker Ages; two things there were which did exceedingly conduce to the improvement of their power, in the more knowing and discerning times of Christianity. Of which the principal, was the Orthodoxie of the Bishops or Popes of Rome, their eminent and sincere profession of the Faith of Christ; when almost all the other Churches were either torn in pieces by the fury of Schism, or wasted and subverted by the fraud of Heresie. In which regard, Appeals were frequently made to the Church of Rome, as a more competent Judge of the truth of Doctrine; the communion of it much desired by all true Christians; and a repair thither for relief and shelter in the times of trouble, made by the Orthodox Professors under persecution. And of these times, and this condition of that Church, we are to understand such passages of the Ancient Writers, as magnifie the Faith of the Church of Rome, and set it above all the batteries and assaults of Heresie. Such is that passage of S. Cyprian, Romanos esse ad quos perfidia non potest habere accessum, lib. 1. ep. 3. and that of Hierome, Romanam fidem (i. e. Romanorum fidem) Apostolica voce laudatam, ejusmodi præstigias non recipere, in Apol. cont. Ruffin. and many others of that kinde. Which passages it were as foolish and ridiculous to apply to all following times; the condition of that Church being different, from what then it was; as to accommodate all those Elogies and commendations to the present City of Rome; which the Orators and Panegyrists of the elder times have hyperbolically ascribed to old Rome, in her greatest glories. The next was the fixation of the Popes in the Metropolis, or Imperial City; which drawing to it such a multitude of suiters and attendants from all parts of the world, could not but add much to the power and reputation of those Prelates, who had the happiness and honour to be resident there: and thereby opportunity to gain more Disciples, to solve more doubts of conscience, and decide more controversies, than any other could expect. And so we are to understand that passage in S. Irenæus, in which he saith, Ad hanc Ecclesiam propter potentiorem Principalitatem, necesse est omnem convenire Ecclesiam, i. e. eos qui sunt undiq; Ecclesias. And so they did as long as Rome enjoyed the honour of a more potent Principality, than other Cities. But when that more potent Principality failed to be at Rome, by the removal of the Imperial See, first to Constantinople, and afterwards unto Ravenna; then did the Bishops of Constantinople, and Ravenna, dispute with those of Rome for Superiority; the chief Seat of Religion most commonly following the seat of the Empire. And in this claim the Patriarch or Bishop of Constantinople prevailed so far, that with the permission of Mauritius the Emperor, he took upon him the title of Universal Patriarch. Gregory the Great (of whom it is said that he was the worst Bishop of all that went before him, and the best of all that came after him) was at that time Bishop of Rome: who sharply inveighed as well against the Emperor, as the Patriarch of Constantinople, for this Title; and plainly maintained, that whosoever called himself Universal Bishop, was the fore-runner of Antichrist. As for himself, it is probable that he took the title of Servus servorum Dei, more in opposition to him of Constantinople, than with an intent to be so truly. To which though those of Rome reply, that Gregory did not absolutely condemn this Title, but only blamed John the Constantinopolitan Patriarch, for assuming to himself that attribute, which properly belonged to the See of Rome; yet this cannot be. For then either in the old Buls of the former Popes, we should find mention of this Title; or else Pope Gregory would have assumed it to himself, that the world might take notice to whom of right it did belong. But Boniface, who next but one succeeded Gregory, having further aims, applyed himself to Phocas that bloudy Tyrant: who having murdered the Emperor Mauritius, his wife and children, and thereby got the general hatred of all the good Subjects of the Empire, the better to assure himself of Italie, which he feared was ready to revolt, declared this Boniface to be the Oecumenical Bishop, and Head of the Church. To such a good beginning, such a gracious Patron, do the Popes stand indebted for that power and Empire, which now they challenge to themselves over all the Church.

The Papacy.

Now

The Papacy. Now as the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, and Ravenna, did challenge a priority or precedency, of the Popes of Rome; by reaſon that they were reſpectively honoured with the Seat Imperiall: ſo were there divers other Biſhops, as Antioch, Alexandria, Carthage, Millain, which claimed an equality with them; and would by no means yeeld them any ſuperiority. For triall of whoſe claim, we muſt look back on ſomewhat which hath been ſaid before; where it is ſhewn that the Roman Empire was divided into fourteen Dioceſes, each Dioceſe being ſubdivided into ſeverall Provinces, each Province comprehending many ſeverall Cities: then that in every of thoſe Cities, where the Romans had their Defenſores, the Chriſtians alſo had a Biſhop; in the Metropolis of each Province, which commonly was the ſeat of the Roman Preſident, the Chriſtians had their Metropolitan; and that in each principal City of each ſeverall Dioceſe, wherein the Vicar of that Dioceſe had fixed his dwelling, there did the Chriſtians place a Primate. And this was done according to that famous Maxim of Optatus, Reſpublica non eſt in Eccleſia, ſed Eccleſia eſt in Republica, that the Church is in the Common-wealth, and not the Common-wealth in the Church. Upon which foundation the Fathers in the Councell of Chalcedon, raiſed this ſuperſtructure, Ἐκκλησιαστικὸν τὸν τάξιν, &c. that the honours of the Church ſhould be accommodated unto thoſe in State. So that according to this Platform, the Primates of the Church were of equall power, each of them limited and reſtrained to his proper Sphere; out of the which if he preſumed once to act, he moved irregularly, and in his Eccentricks. And for thoſe Primates, I ſhall give you once for all this generall Muſter, that is to ſay, the Patriarch or Pope of Rome, for the Dioceſe or Præfecture of that City; the Primate or Arch-biſhop of Millain, for the Dioceſe of Italy; of Syrmium, for that of Illyricum; of Lyons, for that of France; of York, for Britain; of Toledo, for Spain; and of Carthage, for Aſrick. Then for the Eaſt parts of the Empire, there was the Patriarch of Alexandria, for the Dioceſe of Egypt; of Antioch, for that of the Orient; the Primate or Arch-biſhop of Epheſus, for the Dioceſe of Aſia; of Nicomedia, for that of Pontus; of Bizantium, or Conſtantinople, for that of Thrace; of Theſſalonica, for the Dioceſe of Greece; and of Juſtiniana prima, for that of Dacia. Amongſt all which there was a mutuall correſpondence and Co-ordination, for the generall Government of the Church; maintained by Letters of intercourſe, which they called Literas Formatas, and Communicatorias; but no ſubordination, and much leſſe ſubjection, unto one another; as doth appear moſt evidently by the Canons of the Councell of Nice, aſſigning to the three great Patriarchs their peculiar bounds, according to the cuſtome of the former times. As for the Dioceſe or Patriarchate of the Popes of Rome, it contained in it thoſe ten Provinces, which were immediately ſubject to the Præfect or Provoſt of that City (an Officer inſtituted firſt by Auguſtus Cæſar) that is to ſay, the Provinces of Tuſcia and Umbria, Picenum Suburbicarium, Campania, Apulia and Calabria, Valeria, Samnium, Lucana and the Brutii, in the main land of Italy; and the three Iſlands of Sicily, Corſica, and Sardinia. In which regard, (I mean as to the immediate Government of thoſe Provinces by the Præfect of the City of Rome) as they are called Regiones Suburbicariæ, by Ruffinus an Italian Writer; ſo antiently the Pope himſelf was called Urbicus, or the City-Biſhop, as appears plainly by Optatus, who calleth Pope Zepherinus, Zepherinus Urbicus. Bnt the Popes were not long content with that allotment, growing up dayly by a ſteddy and conſtant watchfulneſſe upon all occaſions, to encreaſe the Grandour of that See; and taking to themſelves the honour to be Vindices Canonum, the ſtrict and punctuall preſervers of the antient Diſcipline, which took extremely well with all ſorts of people. Till in the end from being Vindices Canonum, they came to be Interpreters, and at laſt the Rulers, or rather the Over-rulers of the Canons; and from chief Labourers in the Vineyard, they became the Landlords: which was the honour aimed at, and at laſt obtained by the foreſaid Boniface, whom that cruell and butcherly Tyrant Phocas made the Head of the Church, the ſixty ſixth Biſhop and firſt Pope of Rome: the Latine word Papa coming from the old Greek Πάππας, ſignifying a Father. A Title at the firſt common unto other Biſhops, as is evident to any one who hath read the Fathers; but after this appropriated unto thoſe of Rome. Of theſe Popes, their Succeſſion, and times of Government, our Chronologers are very uncertain: not one of them that ever I had the luck to ſee, agreeing exactly with another. The reaſons whereof, as I conceive, are, 1 The frequent Vacancies; and 2 the many Schiſms which have hapned in it; and 3 the Anti-Popes in them created: the Writers of thoſe times accounting him only among the Popes, to whoſe faction they were moſt devoted. This Catalogue enſuing I have collected principally out of the Tables of Helvicus, Freigius, Bellarmine, and Onuphrius, whoſe differences I have reconciled as well as poſſibly I could: premoniſhing the Reader, that where the number of yeers which every Pope is found to ſit in the Papall Chair, make not up the full number from his firſt admiſſion, to the coming in of his Succeſſor; it muſt be underſtood of ſome Schiſm or Vacancy, hapning in the Intervall, by which the tale is to be made up. And for the difficulties which occurre amongſt the Antients, in the firſt Succeſſion, ſome placing of them thus, Linus, Cletus, Clemens; ſome Linus, Clemens, Cletus; and finally ſome others putting Clemens the firſt: I know no better way to compoſe the ſame, than to affirm (as many of the Fathers do) that S. Peter and S. Paul were Co-founders of the Church in Rome; S. Peter of the Church of the Circumciſion, and S. Paul of the Gentiles; each of them being Biſhop of the Church of his own foundation: and then to draw down the Succeſſion in this manner following.

The Bishops of Rome.

70	2	Linus, Successor to S. Paul in the Church of the Gentiles. 11.
81	3	Clemens, having succeeded Linus first in the Church of the Gentiles, did after, An. 93. succeed Cletus also in the Church of the Jews; reckoned by some the next Successor to S. Peter, because the next who after him had the charge of the whole; the Church of the Gentiles not being founded, or not distinguished from the other, till some years after Peters coming.

To these 179 Popes, adde the 65 Bishops which preceded that arrogant title of Universall, and they make up the full number of 244. How many are to come, he must be a cunning man that can determine. And yet such cunning men there have been, who have determined positively, but withall Prophetically, of the number of Popes; by name S. Malachy one of the first Apostles of the Irish Nation, very much honoured by that people to this very day. Of whom there is remaining in Massinghams collection of the Irish Saints, a certain number of Mottos, in the Latin tongue; agreeable to the nature or chief accidents of as many Popes successively to one another, according to the order of those severall Mottoes: and thereunto this Propheſie annexed, that when so many Popes had sate in S. Peters Chair, either the World should end, or the Popedome fail. The Book was shewed to me by the Author, when I was at Paris, and the Popes names in order joyned to every Motto, as far as to the time of Urban, who last deceased; which I compared as well as my memory would serve me, and found the Mottoes and the Popes to be very answerable. The Motto for Pope Urban, which I took most notice of, was, Lilium & Rosa: a Motto very suitable to the principall Action which was like to happen in his time, being the conjunction of the English Rose, and the French Lily; in the Marriage of Charles K. of England, and Madam Henrietta Maria the Princess of France; which that Pope earnestly promoted, in his speedy and cheerfull granting of the Dispensation. And to take from me all suspicion of Impostur, this Massingham shewed me an old Book written by one Wion a Flemming, and printed neer 200 years before his Collection; in which the Mottoes stood as in his they did, and comparing the Mottoes with a printed Catalogue of the Popes, I found the name of Urban, and that Motto, to jump even together. From Urban downwards there remained (as I now remember) 36 Mottoes more to come; by consequence if this Malachy were as true a Prophet as one Malachy was, just so many Popes, and then the Popedome to be ruined, or the World to end. But I hope God for his Elects sake will abridge those dayes, and not permit the superstitions and corruptions of that Church to endure so long; nor so many Assertors and Defenders of those Roman Heterodoxies, tobe added to the former number. Out of the stories of all which (pretermitting many things of less consideration) I will only select some particular passages, for the better understanding of their state and story.

1. Pelagius the first, ordained that Hereticks and Schismaticks should be punished with temporall death; which severity continueth still: and that none should be preferred to Eccleſiasticall dignities by Gifts, and Bribes; which pious order is long since antiquated.

2. Vitalianus, first brought Organs into the divine service of the Church of Rome, to be used with the singing or vocall Musick formerly in use; which afterwards was brought unto more perfection by the Popes succeeding.

3. Constantine was so generally beloved of all men, that going to Constantinople, Justinian the second kist his feet in sign of honour: which some of the ambitious Popes in times succeeding, drew into example; and at last brought into a custome, as it still continueth.

4. Paſcal the firſt, cauſed the Prieſts of certain Pariſhes in Rome, by reaſon of their neerneſſe to his perſon, their preſence at his Election, and to honour them with a more venerable Title, to be called Cardinals. Now mates for Kings, and numbred about 70. but more or fewer at the ſole pleaſure of the Popes. The Papacy.

5. Eugenius the ſecond took to himſelf within the Territories of the Church, the Authority of creating Dukes, Earls, and Knights; as the Exarch of Ravenna had uſed to do.

6. Sergius the ſecond, was the firſt that changed his name. For, thinking his own name, Bocca di Porco, or Swines-mouth, not conſonant to his dignity, he cauſed himſelf to be called Sergius; which precedent his Succeſſors following, do alſo vary their names. So that if one be a Coward, he is called Leo; if a Tyrant, Clemens; if an Atheiſt, Pius, or Innocent; if a Ruſtick, Urbanus; and ſo of the reſt.

7. John the eighth is by moſt men confeſſed to be a woman, and is uſually called Pope Joane. To avoyd the like diſgrace, the Porphiry chair was ordained; Ubi ab ultimo diacono, &c. ſo that both in a literall and myſticall ſenſe, this woman may be called, The Whore of Babylon. The name of this Female Pope, the Romiſh Chronologers have not inſerted into the Catalogue; the reaſon, as Marianus Scotus giveth it, propter turpitudinem rei, & ſexum muliebrem. And from hence it is that in the common Catalogues, theſe Popes that have called themſelves Johns, are ſo ill ordered; ſome making that John which ſucceeded Adrian the ſecond, An. 872. to be the 8th. and others the 9th. Platina only of all the Pontificians reckoneth Pope Joane as the 8th. of the Johns, and ſo forward: in which particular I have followed his authority. And it is probable enough that God might ſuffer that proud See to fall into ſuch an infamy, the better to humble the enſuing Popes, in the times of their greateſt ruff and flouriſh; or to prevent the brag of that continued Succeſſion, they ſo much pretend to. More of this Argument, (as to the truth of the ſtory in matter of Fact) he that liſts to ſee, may ſatisfie himſelf in Mr. Cooks Book of Pope Joane; who moſt induſtriouſly hath anſwered all objections, which hath been made againſt it by thoſe of Rome.

8. Nicolas the firſt, the better to faſten the Clergy to the See of Rome, and make them the leſs obnoxious to their naturall Princes; was the firſt who did by Law reſtrain them from marriage. Saying that it was the more honeſt to have to do with many women privately, than openly to keep a wife: and ſome of his Succeſſors followed it ſo cloſe, that a Prieſt of Placentia being accuſed to have wife and children, was deprived of his Benefice; but upon proof made, that ſhe was the wife of another man, and his Strumpet only, he was again reſtored unto it.

9. Adrian the third ordained, that the Emperour from thenceforth ſhould have no more to do with the Election, or confirmation of the Pope; but that it ſhould be left wholly to the Roman Clergy.

10. Formoſus was ſo ill beloved, and of ſuch a generall diſeſteem, that Pope Steven the ſeventh cauſed his body to be unburyed, all his Acts reverſed, two of his fingers to be cut off, and then the mangled carkaſs to be again interred among the Laity. And though theſe Acts of Steven were adjudged illegall, both by John the tenth, and Pope Romanus, two of his Succeſſors; and the doings of Formoſus juſtified: yet Sergius the third cauſed his corrupt and putrified body to be taken once more out of the grave; and his head to be cut off, as if ſtill alive. So little did the infallibility of St. Peters Chair preſerve theſe Popes from falling into groſs and irreconcileable contradictions.

11. John the twelfth, was the next after Sergius the ſecond, that changed his name; a very wicked cruel, and libidinous man: who coming to that place by his Fathers greatneſſe, cut off the Noſe of one Cardinall, and the hand of another, for that they had ſignified to the Emperour Otho the firſt, what a ſcandall all the Church did ſuffer by his deteſtable life; and finally being taken in Adultery, was ſlain by the husband of the woman.

12. Gregory the fifth, finding the power of the Emperour, as long as it continued in a way of ſucceſſion, not likely to be over-born by that of the Church; and being withall incenſed againſt the Romans, who till that time retained ſome ſhadow of an Empire; projected the election of the future Emperours, by the Princes of Germany; by which the Germans were diſtracted into Factions, and the Romans weakned; and ſo a door left open to the Popes of Rome, to make their ends upon them both.

13. Steven the tenth brought the Church of Millain to be under the obedience of the Popes of Rome, which till that time had challenged an equality with them; as before Pope Domnus had done the Church of Ravenna, which for ſome time had challenged the precedency of them.

14. Gregory the ſeventh, commonly called Hildebrand, a turbulent and unquiet man, who firſt adventured to draw the premiſes layd down by ſome of his Predeceſſors into a concluſion: Excommunicating the Emperour Henry the fourth, for medling with the Inveſtitures of Biſhops, and cauſing Rodulph Duke of Suevia to rebell againſt him. A man much favoured againſt the Princes of her own Houſe by the Counteſſe Mathildis; who is ſaid to be ſo much his friend, that for his ſake ſhe left the company of her husband, and diſherited her right Heirs, ſetling her whole eſtates in Italy on the See of Rome. And though the Emperour had the better of this Pope, and made him fly out of Rome, and dye in exile; yet he was fain at laſt to ſubmit himſelf to Pope Paſchal the ſecond, (who had armed his own ſonne againſt him) to attend bare-foot at his door and cry peccavi.

15. Sergius the third ordained the bearing of Candles, in the Feaſt of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, thence called Candlemaſs day.

16. Sergius the fourth was the firſt that on Chriſtmaſs night, with divers Ceremonies did conſecrate Swords, Roſes, or the like; to be ſent as tokens of love and honour to ſuch Princes as deſerved beſt

of

The Papacy. of them, or whom they desired to oblige. Thus Leo the tenth sent a consecrated Rose to Frederick Duke of Saxony, requesting him to banish Luther: and Paul the third an hallowed Sword to James the fift of Scotland, to engage him in a war against Henry the 8th. who had then withdrawn himself and his Kingdome, from the Popes commands.

17. Nicolas the second took from the Roman Clergy the election of Popes, and gave it to the Colledge of Cardinals.

18. Celestine the second, was the Inventer of that mad manner of cursing, or Anathematizing, by Bell, Book, and Candle.

19. Alexander the third, pursuing the desperate course of Gregory the seventh, excommunicated the Emperour Frederick the first; and by raising war against him in every place, brought him to that exigent, that he was fain to prostrate himself at his feet: when the Pope treading on his neck, said aloud, super Aspidem & Basiliscum, &c. profanely applying those words to the present occasion. And when the Emperour, to put the better colour on his disgrace, meekly replyed, Non tibi sed Petro; the Pope not willing to lose his part of so great a glory, subjoyned as angerly, Et mihi & Petro.

20. Innocent the third held a Councel in Rome, in which it was decreed that the Pope should have the correction of all Christian Princes; and that no Emperour should be acknowledged, till he had sworn obedience to him. Which bringeth into my mind that jolly humour of the great Cham of Tartary; who when he hath dined, commands his Trumpeters to sound, and make Proclamation, that now all other Kings and Princes may sit down to dinner. He brought in the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, and ordained that there should be a Pix made to cover the consecrated (but now transubstantiated) Bread, and a Bell to be rung before it. He is also said to have first imposed Auricular Confession upon the people.

21. Nicolas the third was the first Pope who practised to enrich his kindred, intending to make one of them King of Lombardy, another King of Tuscany; and to raise the rest to great Advancements out of the Lands of the Church. Before which time (as Machiavil very well observeth) as there was no mention of the advancement of any of the Popes kinsfolks or posterity; so afterwards they studyed no one thing more than to preferre their own blood; insomuch that they have not only laboured (as he saith) to make them Princes, but if it were possible would procure the Popedome to be made hereditary. So he, with probability enough. For so dearly do they love their Nephews (by which name they use to call their Bastards) that it was very justly said by Pope Alexander the third, The Laws forbid us to get Children, and the Devil hath given us Nephews in their stead.

22. Boniface the eighth, of whom it is said, that he entered like a Fox, reigned like a Lyon, and dyed like a Dog; by his generall Bull, exempted the Clergy from being chargeable with Taxes and payments, unto Temporall Princes. Which being complyed with by the Clergy of England, King Edward the first put them out of his protection; and so the Popes Bull left roaring here. He caused the Book of the Canon Law, called the Decretals, to be first set out: and instituted the Feast of Jubilee, to be held in Rome every hundredth year; but by Clement the sixt it was brought unto the fiftieth year, and since reduced to the five and twentieth. This is that Boniface, who in that great concourse of people which repaired to Rome, to observe his new Feast of Jubilee, (to which every one that did repair was to have a plenary remission of all his sins) shewed himself one day in the habit of a Pope, and the next day in that of an Emperour; and caused two Swords to be born before him every day, in sign that all power Eccleasiasticall and Temporall did belong unto him.

23. Clement the fifth was the first that made Indulgences and Pardons saleable. For seeing (said he) that one drop of our Saviours blood had been enough to have saved all Mankind, and yet all that his blood was shed; the over-plus was left to the Church as a standing Treasure, to be disposed of by St. Peter and his Successors. And hereunto, to make his Treasure the more inexhausted, he added the Merits of the Virgin Mary, and all other Saints. Being wearied with the insolencies of the people of Rome, he removed the Papall See to Avignon in France, where it continued for the space of seventy years.

24. Clement the sixth had an ill time of it. For in his Papacy the Emperour gave freely all Lands belonging to the Church, to such as formerly had usurped them; to be holden by them of the Empire. Upon which title the Malatesti became Lords of Rimini, the Ordelaffi of Forli, the Vareni of Camerine, the Bentivolies of Bononia, the Manfredi of Faenza, &c. Which Estates were never recovered to the Church, till the time of Pope Julio the second; though conquered from the present owners in the time of Alexander the sixth, by Cæsar Borgias his sonne; who had an aime of setling them, and perhaps the Papacy it self, on the Borgian Family.

25. Gregory the eleventh returned the Papall Chair again to the City of Rome, whither he conveyed himself by Sea, in private, for fear of being withheld by the French: and being come thither, found the chief parts of the City so over-grown with bryers and bushes, and the principall buildings of it so decayed and ruinous; that a little longer absence would have made it desolate.

26. Paul the second endeavoured to encrease the Majesty of the Popedome by Arms and Avarice, and exceeded all his Predecessours in pomp and shew: causing his Miter to be enriched with Diamonds, Saphirs, Emeralds, and other Stones of great price; and augmenting the splendour of the Cardinalls with a scarlet Gown, whom Innocent the 4th. had graced with red Hats before. He brought the Jubilee from 50 years to 25.

27. Sixtus the fourth ordained a constant Guard to attend his person. He very much beautified and repaired the City of Rome, and was the first founder of the Vatican Library. But on the other side

he is said by some, to have set all offices and preferments to sale, and to have builded in Rome Stewes of both sexes, to bring in Beads, and to authorize our Ladies Psalter. The Papacy. 1

28. Alexander the sixth, setting aside all modesty, was the first that openly acknowledged his Nephews (as they call their Bastards) to be his sonnes. By one of which, the Cæsar Borgias before named, he recovered Forli, Imola, and many other estates from the present owners, on a design of setling them in his own Family, as before is said; and to that end called in the French, who after made such foul work in Italy.

29. Julio the second had more in him of the Souldier, than the Prelate, recovering many Towns unto the Church which had been formerly usurped, being taken from the Occupants by Cæsar Borgias; and keeping Italy in his time in continuall wars. This is the Pope who passing over the Bridge of Tiber, brandished his Sword, and threw his Keyes into the River; saying, that if Peters Keyes would not serve his turn, then Pauls Sword should do it.

30. Leo the tenth was indeed a great Favourer of Learning, but of great prodigality, and vast expence. For maintenance whereof, he sent his saleable Indulgences into France, and Germany: which business being indiscreetly handled by his Ministers, occasioned Luther in Germany, and Zuinglius amongst the Switzers, first to write against them; and afterwards to question many points of Popish Doctrine. In pursuance of which quarrel, the Pope of Rome burnt Luthers Books, whom he declared for an Heretick; and Luther did the like at Wittenberg, with the Popes Canon Law, whom he declared to be a Persecuter, a Tyrant, and the very Antichrist. Which flame encreased so fast, and inlarged so far, that it burnt down a great part of the Papal Monarchy.

31. Pius the fourth continued the Councell formerly called at Trent by Pope Paul the third, but interrupted and layd aside from one Pope to another, and having brought it to an end, and thereby setled and confirmed the Interest of the Church of Rome, caused it to be received as Oecumenicall: though the Italian Bishops being most of them the Popes creatures, did more than double the number of all the rest; and yet some of the rest also were but meerly Titulars. He added also a new Creed consisting of twelve Articles to be added to that of the Apostles, by all who lived in the Communion of the Church of Rome. But of the words and actions of these Ghostly Fathers we have said enough, if not too much. I will therefore end with that of the Painter, who being blamed by a Cardinall, for giving to St. Peters picture too much of the red, replyed, that he had made him so, as blushing at the lives of those who were called his Successors.

As for the Temporall power and greatnesse of the Popes of Rome, there is a pretended Donation of the Emperour Constantine; by which the City of Rome it self, most part of Italy, and Africk, and all the Islands of those Seas are conferred upon them: the forgery whereof is very learnedly shewn by our learned Cracanthorp, in his discourse upon that subject. But that Donation might most justly be suspected of Fraud and Forgery, though no body had took the pains to detect the same; considering how fearfull the Popes are grown to have the truth thereof disputed: insomuch that many leaves are razed out of Guicciardine by the Inquisition, where it had been questioned. For in that place the Historian not only denyeth the said feigned Donation, but affirms that divers learned men reported, that Constantine and Silvester (to whom it is said to have been made) lived in divers Ages. Then sheweth, how base and obscure the Authority of the Pope was in Rome it self, during the time that the barbarous Nations made havock of Italy. 2 That in the institution of the Exarchate, the Popes had nothing to do with the Temporall Sword, but lived as subject to the Emperours. 3 That they were not very much obeyed in matters Spirituall, by reason of the corruption of their manners. 4 That after the overthrow of the Exarchate, the Emperours now neglecting Italy, the Romans began to be governed by the advice and power of the Popes. 5 That Pepin of France, and his sonne Charles having overthrown the Kingdome of the Lombards; gave unto the Popes, the Exarchate, Urbine, Ancona, Spoleto, and many other Towns and Territories about Rome. 6 That the Popes in all their Bulls and Charters, expressed the date of them in these following words; Such a one the Lord our Emperour reigning. 7 That long after the translation of the Empire from France to Germany, the Popes began to make open protestation, that the Pontificall dignity was rather to give Lawes to the Emperours, than receive any from them. 8 That being thus raised to an earthly power, they forgot the salvation of souls, sanctity of life, and the Commandments of God, propagation of Religion, and Charity towards men: And that to raise Arms, to make war against Christians, to invent new devices for getting of money, to profane sacred things for their own ends, and to inrich their kindred and children, was their only study. And this is the substance of Guicciardine in that place: an Author above all exception. He was a man whom the Popes employed in many businesses of principall importance; so that no hate to them, but love to the truth, made him write thus much. As for the City of Rome, so unlikely is it to have been given by Constantine, that neither Pepin nor Charles his sonne, (though more beholding to the Popes than that Emperour was) could be induced to part with it. Lewis surnamed Pius is said to have been the first Donor of it, and a Copy of his Donation is found in the third Book of Volaterran, subscribed by the Emperour, his three sonnes, ten Bishops, eight Abbots, fifteen Earls, and the Popes Library-Keeper: yet notwithstanding it is thought, by many very learned and judicious men, that really there was no such matter; but that all this was forged by Anastasius the Popes Bibliothecarian, or Library-Keeper, who is cited as a witnesse to the Donation. And yet to put the matter further out of question, let us next hear what that great Politician and Statesman, the Recorder of Florence, Nic. Machiavel, hath observed in this case. "Rome (saith he) was always subject to the Lords of "Italy, till Theodorick King of the Gothes removed his Seat to Ravenna; for thereby the Romans were "enforced to submit themselves to the Bishops, An. 430. or thereabouts. And talking of the estate

The Papacy.

" of the Popedome, An. 931. he ſtates it thus. In Rome were elected yeerly out of the Nobility two " Conſuls, who according to the antient Cuſtome ruled that City. Under them was appointed a Judge " to miniſter juſtice to the people. There was alſo a Councell of twelve men, which gave Governours " unto the Towns ſubject to Rome. And for the Pope, he had in Rome more or leſſe Authority, accor- " ding to the favour which he found with the Emperours, or others then moſt mighty; but the lea- " ving of Italy by the German Emperours, ſetled the Pope in a more abſolute Soveraignty over the " City. And yet it ſeems they were not of ſuch abſolute power, but that the Romans tugged hard " with them for their Liberties. Concerning which he tells us in another place, That the ambition of " the people of Rome did at that time (viz. An. 1010.) make much war with the Popes; and that having " helped the Pope to drive out the Emperour, and altered the Government of the City as to them " ſeemed good, ſuddenly they became Enemies to him; and the Popes received more injuries at their " hands, than at any other Chriſtian Princes; and that even in thoſe dayes when the Cenſures of the " Popes made all the Weſt of the World to tremble, yet even then did the people of Rome rebell, and " both the Popes and the people ſtudyed for nothing ſo much, as how one of them might overthrow " the Authority and Eſtimation of the other.

But for the method and degrees by which the Popes aſcended to their temporall greatneſſe take here an extract of the Story collected out of the beſt Authors, by the moſt reverend Father in God the late Lord Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, in his learned and laborious work againſt Fiſher the Jeſuit. " The Pope (ſaith he) being choſen antiently by the Clergy and people of Rome, uſed alwayes to re- " ceive from the Emperours hands a ratification of that choice: inſomuch that about the yeer 579. " when all Italy was on fire with the Lombards, and Pelagius the ſecond conſtrained through the ne- " ceſſity of the times, to enter upon the Popedome without the Emperours leave; S. Gregory then a " Deacon, was ſhortly after ſent in an Embaſſie to excuſe it. But when the Lombards grew ſo great " in Italy, and the Empire was ſo infeſted with the Saracens, and ſuch changes hapned in all parts of " the world, as that neither for the preſent the Homage of the Pope was uſefull to the Emperour, " nor the Protection of the Emperour available for the Pope: by this means was the Biſhop of Rome " left to play his own game by himſelf. A thing which as it pleaſed him well enough, ſo both he and " his Succeſſors made great advantage by it. For being grown to that eminence by the favour of the " Emperours, and the greatneſſe of that City and place of his abode; he then found himſelf the more " free, the greater the Tempeſt was that beat upon the other. And then firſt he ſet himſelf to alie- " nate the hearts of the Italians from the Emperour; in which he did prevail ſo far, that Theophylact " the Exarch coming into Italy, was oppoſed by the Souldiers, who wiſhed better to the Pope, than " to the Emperour; and the Emperours own Governour was fain to be defended from his own Soul- " diers by the power of the Pope, who had gotten intereſt in them againſt their own Maſter. Next " he oppoſed himſelf againſt him; and about the yeer 710. Pope Conſtantine the firſt did openly af- " front Philippicus the Emperour, in defence of Images, as Onuphrius telleth us. After him Gregory " the 2d. and 3d. took up his example, and did the like by Leo Iſaurus. By this time the Lombards be- " gan to pinch very cloſe, and to vex on all ſides not only Italy, but Rome too. This drives the Pope " to ſeek a new Patron, and very fitly he meets with Charles Martel in France, that famous Warrier " againſt the Saracens. Him he employeth in defence of the Church againſt the Lombards, and the " Addreſſe ſeems very adviſedly taken, it proved ſo fortunate to them both. For in ſhort time it diſ- " ſolved the Kingdome of the Lombards, having then ſtood two hundred and four yeers, which was " the Popes ſecurity: and it brought the Crown of France into the Houſe of Charles, and ſhortly after " the Weſtern Empire. And now began the Popes to be great indeed. For by the bounty of Pepyn, the " ſon of Charls, that which was taken by him from the Lombards, was given to the Pope; that is to " ſay, the Exarchate, and all that lay betwixt the Apennine and the River of Po. So that now he " became a Temporall Prince. But when Charles the great had ſet up the Weſtern Empire, then he re- " ſumed the Antient and Originall power, to govern the Church, to call Councells, and to order Pa- " pall Elections. And this power continued for a time in his poſterity; for Gregory the ſeventh was " confirmed in the Popedome by the ſame Henry the fourth, whom he afterwards depoſed. And it " might have continued longer, if the ſucceeding Emperours had had Abilities enough to ſecure, or " vindicate their own Rights. But the Pope keeping a ſtrong Councell about him, and meeting with " ſome weak Princes, and thoſe oft-times diſtracted with great and dangerous wars, grew ſtronger till " he got the better; yet was it carryed in ſucceeding times with great changes of fortune, and diffe- " rent ſucceſſe; the Emperour ſometimes plucking from the Pope, and the Pope from the Emperour; " winning and loſing ground, as their ſpirits, abilities, aids and opportunities were; till at laſt the " Pope ſetled himſelf on the grounds laid by Gregory the ſeventh, in that great power which he now " uſeth in and over theſe parts of the Chriſtian World. A power firſt exerciſed (ſaith he in another " place) by this Pope Gregory the ſeventh, and made too good upon the Emperour Henry the fourth, as " by Pope Adrian the fourth, Alexander the third, with ſome others, upon Frederick Barbaroſſa. And " others of the Emperours were alike ſerved when they did not ſubmit. And for this I hope his Holy- " neſſe was not to be blamed. For if the Emperour kept the Pope under for divers yeers together, " againſt all reaſon, the Popes, as Bellarmine affirms, being never ſubject to the Emperour, and wanting " force to ſtand on his own Prerogative: I hope the Pope having now got power enough, may keep the " Emperours under foot, and not ſuffer them any more to ſtart before him.

Having thus a little glanced at the means, by which the great power of the Church of Rome was firſt obtained; let us next conſider of thoſe policies, by which this Papall Monarchy hath been ſo long upheld in eſteem and credit. We may divide them into three heads. 1 Thoſe by which they have insinuated and screwed themselves into the affections and affairs of the greatest Princes: 2 Those by which already they have, and by which they will hereafter be able to secure their estate; And 3 those by which they keep the people in obedience and ignorance. The Papacy.

1. Concerning the first. First the Donation of severall Kingdomes to them which have no right nor title, but by these Grants of the Pope, cannot but bind them fast to uphold that power, without which they could lay no claime to that which they are possessed of. Of which sort was the confirmation of the Kingdome of France to the house of Pepin; of Naples to the house of Schawben, and Anjou; of Navarre to the Spaniards. 2 The readynesse of their Ministers to kill such as resist them, cannot but necessitate Princes to seek their friendship, and hold fair with them: especially since by a Writ of Excommunication, they can arm the Subjects against their Soveraign; and without the charge of levying one Souldier, either destroy him utterly, or bring him to conformity. The frequent wars raised by them against the Emperours of Germany, and that against King John in England, by these Papall fulminations only; the poysoning of the said King John by a Monk of Swinestead, and killing of King Henry the third of France, by Jaques Clement; are full proofs of this. 3 Then followeth their allowance of Mariages prohibited both by God and Nature; the issue of which cannot but uphold the Popes Authority, without which their birth would be illegitimate, and consequently themselves uncapable of the estates they are born unto: And by this means they do more strengthen themselves by the unlawfull Mariages of others, than ever Prince could do by the lawfull mariage of his own. Nothing more fastened Queen Mary of England to the See of Rome, than the question that was raised about the Mariage of her Mother to King Henry the eighth; the lawfulnesse of which depended chiefly on the dispensation of Pope Julio the second. 4 Then cometh in their dispensing with the Oaths of Princes, when they conceive themselves induced upon reason of State, to flie off from those Leagues, and break off those Treaties, which have been solemnly made and sworn betwixt them and their Neighbours. By means whereof, such Princes think themselves not perjured, becaus dispensed with by the Pope; and commonly get something in advantage, or point of profit, for which they cannot be unthankfull unto the Papacy. Examples of this kind are obvious in all times and stories. 5 Next comes the choosing of the younger sonnes of great Princes, into the rank of Cardinalls; which obligeth the whole Stock or Family to the Papall Throne: that being a means whereby young Princes are preferred without charge to their Fathers, or any diminution of the Regall Patrimony. 6 And as by these courses he holds in with all Christian Princes generally, which are of the Religion of the Church of Rome; so hath he fastned more particularly on the King of Spain; whereof we shall speak further when we come to that Countrey.

2. Concerning the second. So it is that their Estate hath the firmest foundation of any, as being built on the Consciences of men possessed with an opinion of their Infallibility, and that undoubted power they pretend unto, not only in Heaven and upon Earth, but also over Hell and Purgatory. 2 Then comes the innumerable Preferments at their disposing, for men of all humours and affections; as having in their power the disposing of almost all the Benefices and Bishopricks in Italy, half of those in Spain, divers in Germany and France: which keepeth the Clergy, and all such as are that way studyed, in a perpetuall dependence upon that See; especially injoying by it many notable Priviledges, which those of the Temporalty are not capable of. 3 Consider next the multitude of Monks and Fryers, whose very being depends wholly upon his Authority; every Monastery and Convent being a Garrison (as it were) to defend the Papacy, and train up a Militia of Spirituall Janisaries; men most affectionately devoted to his See and Service. Of these it is conceived that there are no fewer than a Million, one half whereof at least may be fit for action; and all maintained at other mens cost, themselves not disbursing a penny towards it. 4 Their Pardons and Indulgences are a great increase to their Revenue: some of them as unlimited as that of Pope Boniface the eighth, which was for 82000 yeers to all that could say such a Prayer of S. Augustines; and that for every day, Toties, quoties. 5 Their practising on Penitents, whom they perswade in the very agony of their souls, that there is no salvation for them, but by giving part of their Estates unto the Church. 6 Nor have they found any small advantage to their Power and Patrimony, by the invention of Spirituall Fraternities; which are Appurtenances (as it were) to the Orders of Friers, and may in number perhaps equall them. Into these the Lay-people of all sorts, men and women, marryed and single, desire to be inrolled; as hereby injoying the spirituall prerogatives of Indulgences, and a more speedy dispatch out of Purgatory.

3 Concerning the third. 1 They deter the people from reading the Scripture, alleadging unto them the perils they may incur by mis-interpretation. 2 They breed an Antipathy between the Papists and the Protestants; insomuch that a Papist may not say Amen, unto a Protestants Deo gratias. 3 They debar them from all sound of the Religion, in prohibiting the Books of the Reformed Writers; and hiding their own Treatises, in which the Tenent of the Protestants is recited, only to be confuted: insomuch that in all Italy one shall seldome meet with Bellarmines works, or any of the like nature to be sold. 4 They have under pain of Excommunication prohibited the Italians from Travell and Traffick with Hereticall Countreys, or such places, where those contagious sounds and sights (as they term them) might make them return infected. 5 The Severity, or Tyranny rather of the Inquisition, (of which we shall speak more at large when we come to Spain) crusheth not only the beginnings, but the smallest suspicions of being this way addicted. And 6 the People thus restrained from Travell, are taught to believe that the Protestants are Blasphemers of God and all his Saints; that in England Churches are turned to Stables, the people grown barbarous and eat young Children; that Geneva is a professed Sanctuary of Roguery, and the like. We have yet two later examples of their dealing in this kind. First, the grosse slander of the Apostasie (or as they call it, the Reconciliation)

The Papacy. tion) unto their Church, of the Right Reverend Father in God Dr. King, not long ſince the Lord Biſhop of London, a Prelate of too known a faith and zeal, to give occaſion for ſuch a calumny. The ſecond, a book by them publiſhed, and commonly ſold in Italy and France, containing a relation of Gods judgements, ſhown on a ſort of Proteſtant Hereticks, by the fall of an houſe in St. Andrews Pariſh in London, in which they were aſſembled to hear a Geneva Lecture, Octob. 26. A. D. 1623. By which dealing the ſimple people are made to believe that to be a judgement on us of the Proteſtant party, which the Authors of that Pamphlet well know to be a calumny in regard of us; and a ſad chance (I will not ſay a judgement) which befell their own, by the fall of a Chamber in Black-Fryers, where they were met to hear the Sermon of one Druris, a Popiſh Prieſt, and that too on the fifth of November in their own accompt, being the 26 of October before mentioned.

The Popedome being thus cunningly and ſtrongly founded, it cannot be if the Popes had been choſen young, or of the ſame Family, (ſo that the Succeſſor had not often croſſed the deſigns of his Predeceſſor) but that this new Monarchy had been greater and better eſtabliſhed, than ever the old Roman Empire was in her greateſt glory. And to ſay truth, I have oft wondred with my ſelf, that ſome of the more active Popes, eſpecially ſuch as were choſen young, and had the happineſſe to deſcend of noble Families; did never ſeek the ſetling of this Eſtate in their own Poſterity: eſpecially conſidering the good Precedents which they had before them, both in ſacred and in civil ſtories. The high Prieſthood in the Church of Jewry went from Father to Sonne; and why ſhould any man think it inconvenient, to follow the example of Almighty God, in making the high Prieſthood in the Church of Chriſt to be alſo hereditary, not elective? The Saracens who were as great Maſters for wit and policy, as any thoſe Ages did produce, purſued that precedent; governed by Hereditary Caliphs many yeers together, untill the Sultans their Vicegerents (ambitiouſly affecting the Supreme Command) rooted out their races. And if the ſame Obligation lie on the Maſters of Religious or mixt Orders, for preſerving the Rules and Statutes of their foundations; as is upon the Pope by the fundamentall Ordinances of the Conclave, as it ſeems to do; why might not the Popes as well diſpenſe with thoſe Conſtitutions, and turn the Popedome into an Hereditary Eſtate; as Albert of Brandenbourg, and Gotardus of Denmark, Maſters of the Dutch Knights in Pruſſia and Livonia, in their times have done? Nor can I ſee, but that ſuch an alteration as I ſpeak of, might be altogether as contenting to the Princes of Chriſtendome, as the like change from an unſetled popular Government to an hereditary Monarchy, was formerly unto the Provinces and People of the State of Rome. Of which it is affirmed by that notable Hiſtorian and Stateſman Tacitus, Neque Provinciæ illum rerum ſtatum abnuebant, ſuſpecto Senatus populique imperio ob certamina potentium, & avaritiam Magiſtratuum; invalido Legum auxilio, quæ vi, ambitu, poſtremo pecunia turbabantur. The Provinces (ſaith he) diſliked not the alteration, to whom the Government of the Senate and People had been long diſtaſted, by reaſon of the factions of the great ones, and covetouſneſſe of their Officers: the Laws affording no ſecurity at all, as being ſwayd up and down by force, ambition and corruption. The Popedome ſetled in one houſe, would prove more conſtant in the preſervation of all Leagues and Treaties, more carefull to preſerve the intereſt of their Eſtate, more uſefull to the Confederates and Allies thereof upon all occaſions, than it is at preſent: where the Popes ſo often change their ſides, and ſhift their factions; the Succeſſor many times eſteeming it his greateſt glory, to reſcind all the Acts of his Predeceſſor. And poſſible enough it is that Cæſar Borgia the ſonne of Alexander the ſixth, might have ſome ſuch ends; when it was covenanted betwixt him and Lewis the twelfth of France, that being declared Generall of the Churches Forces, and giving his helping hand to that King in the Conqueſt of Millain; he ſhould be aided by him in recovering all the Lands of the Church, which the Dukes of Urbine and Camerine, the Families of the Malateſti, Baillons, and Bentivogli, with divers others of leſſe note, did poſſeſſe in Italy. Which having got into his hands, had not his Fathers ſudden death, and his own dangerous ſickneſſe hapning at the ſame time, cut off his deſign; it had been a matter of no great difficulty (if of any at all) to have made himſelf abſolute Maſter of Rome, and of all the Lands of the Church, and to have left the ſame eſtabliſhed in the Borgian Family. 'Tis true, that ſuch an alteration would be very diſtaſtfull to the ambition of the Cardinals, who by the deaths (naturall or violent, it matters not) of the preſent Pope, aſpire by all means both of love and money to that high dignity. But for my part, I cannot ſee how all the wit in the Concluve had been able to hinder it, if Alexander, on a purpoſe to poyſon ſome of that number whom he had invited to a Supper, by a meer miſtake of his Cup-bearer, had not poyſoned himſelf, (even in the very heat of the buſineſſe then almoſt effected) and ſo made fruſtrate the device.

But paſſing by this imagination of an Hereditary Popedome, let us behold it as Elective, and look upon the form and order obſerved in it. Now the election of the Pope is made moſt commonly, in this place, and manner. In the Popes Palace on the Hill Vatican, are among other buildings five Halls, two Chappels, and a Gallery ſeventy foot long. The Gallery is appointed for conference, one Chappel for the Maſs, and for the Election; the other with the Halls are for the Cardinals lodgings. Every Hall hath two rows of Chambers, which are purpoſely for the time, made of green or violet cloth. To each Cardinal is allowed four ſervants, to lie in his Chamber. They that are once within, are compelled, unleſs they be ſick, ſtill to continue there; and ſuch as are once out, are no more permitted to go in: leſt by that means, the Cardinals ſhould maintain intelligence with any forain Princes. To this Conclave (for by this name the place of the Election is called) is but one door, to which belongeth four locks, and as many keys. One key is in the keeping of the Cardinals; one, of the City-Biſhops; one, of the Roman Nobility; and one, of the Maſter of the Ceremonies. There is in this door a Wicket or Hatch, which is opened only at dinners and ſuppers, whereof the Maſter of the Ceremonies keepeth a key. At this hole the Cardinals ſervants receive their meat; every diſh being firſt diligently ſearched, leſt any Letters ſhould be conveyed in them. As for the lodgings; they have neither holes nor windows to give light; ſo that there they make day of wax-candles: And leſt the Pope ſhould be made by force, both the City and Conclave are ſtrongly guarded. When the Cardinals are going to Election, the priviledges of the Cardinals are recited: which every one ſweareth to obſerve, in caſe he be choſen Pope. Then the Maſter of the Ceremonies ringing a Bell, calleth them to Maſſe: which ended there is brought to every Cardinall a Chair, and therein a Scroll of all the Cardinals names. Before the Altar is ſet a Table covered with a Purple cloth, whereupon is ſet a Chalice, and a Silver Bell, and about it ſix ſtools, on which ſit two Cardinal-Biſhops, two Cardinal-Prieſts, and two Cardinal-Deacons. Every Cardinal writeth his voyce in a piece of paper, goeth to the Altar, prayeth God to guide him in the Election, putteth his voyce into the Chalice, and departeth to his ſeat. The firſt Biſhop taketh out all the papers, and delivereth them to the firſt Deacon; who unfoldeth each of them, readeth (without mentioning the name of the Elector) the name of the elected: and every Cardinal in his particular Scroll, noteth how many voyces every one hath. The accompt being made, the firſt Prieſt having the like Scroll, pronounceth who hath moſt voyces: which done, the Prieſt ringeth a Silver Bell; at which call the Maſter of the Ceremonies bring in a pan of coles, and burneth all the little papers, wherein the names of the elected were written. He that hath the moſt voyces (ſo that his voyces exceed the proportion of two parts of three) is acknowledged Pope, and adored by the reſt of the Cardinals: but if they exceed not this number, they muſt begin all anew. If in the ſpace of thirty dayes the Election be not fully ended, then muſt the Cardinals be kept from fire, light, and victualls till they are fully agreed. The Wicket which we before mentioned, is called the Golden Gate, at which ſtand an infinite number of poor people; on whom the new Pope, having opened that Gate, beſtoweth his Fatherly benediction, and remitteth to them all their ſins. Then ſtriketh he continually on the ſame door with a Golden Mallet; which whilſt he is doing, workmen without break it open. The chips, ſtones, duſt, and dirt which falleth from the Gate, while it is opening, are gathered and preſerved as choiceſt Reliques; and the Golden Mallet is uſually given to that Cardinal, who is in moſt grace with the new Pope. The Papacy.

This is the ordinary way of the Popes Election; but ſubject to much Faction and Diviſion amongſt the Cardinalls, and that in times of leſs deceit than the preſent are: Inſomuch as after the death of Pope Clement the fourth, the differences amongſt them held for two years and more. Which gave occaſion to one of them to ſay in ſcorn, that they muſt uncover the roof of the houſe, to make way for the Holy Ghoſt to come upon them. And there is now much more corruption and abuſe in it, than ever formerly; as buying of Voyces, ſetting up ſome for ſtales, and tearing Scrutinies; every Cardinall deſiring to have a Pope of his own, or his Princes Faction. So that we find it written of an old Sicilian Cardinall, who after long abſence came to the Election of a Pope, where he expected that inceſſant prayers, as in times of old, ſhould have procured ſome fit man to be pointed out to them for the Vicar of Chriſt: that finding nothing but canvaſſing, promiſing rewards, and threatning for Voices in the choice; Ad hunc modum (ſaith he) fiunt Pontifices Romani? and ſo returned into his Countrey, and ſaw Rome no more.

The ordinary Temporall Revenue of the Papacy ariſing out of Land-rents, Impoſts upon Commodities, and ſale of Offices, Boterus maketh to be better than two Millions of Crowns; but the extraordinary, and Spirituall, to be far beyond. For it is ſaid of Pius Quintus, who ſate Pope ſix years only, that he got from the Spaniſh Clergy 14 Millions. And though he was a very great builder, which ſpent him a great deal of money; yet he ſo managed his Eſtate, that he layd up four millions of Crowns in the Caſtle of S. Angelo. Sixtus the fifth took from the Jeſuits at one clap 20000 Crowns of yearly rent, (becauſe they were too rich for men profeſſing poverty:) and having ſate but five years, had coffered up five Millions of Gold; four of which his Succeſſor Gregory the fourteenth ſpent in leſſe than a yeer. Out of France they receive no leſſe than a Million of Crowns yearly. Out of England, when it was the Popes Puteus inexhauſtus, they and their followers extracted no leſs than 60000 Marks per an. which amounteth to 120000 pounds of our preſent money; and was more than the Kings ſtanding Revenue did attain unto: Yet was this in the time of K. Henry 3d. before their avarice and rapine was at the height. And of late dayes, no longer than ſince the reign of K. Henry the 8th. beſides their Peter-pence, which was an Annual rent upon every chimny in the Realm, firſt granted to the Pope by Offa King of the Mercians, An. 730. or thereabouts, and afterwards confirmed by Ethelwolf the ſecond Monarch of England; beſides their firſt Fruits, Tenths, and all other exactions: it was made evident that in ſome few years then laſt paſt, the Popes had received out of England no leſs than 160000 l. ſterling, for the confirmation of Epiſcopal Elections only. By which we may conjecture what vaſt ſums they drew hence on all other occaſions. Let other Countreys ſubject to the Popes authority be accordingly rated, and the totall wil amount to a ſum incredible. Next adde to this the ſums of money they receive from particular perſons, for pardons, for diſpenſations with unlawfull Mariages; the profits ariſing from Pilgrimages, from the death and Funerals of great perſons, from the Indulgencies granted to Abbies and Convents; in all which the Popes have a ſhare; and it would puzzle a good Arithmetician to ſtate his Intrado. So truly was it ſaid by Pope Sixtus the fourth, that a Pope could never want money, as long as he was able to hold a pen in his hand. Yet notwithſtanding, their Treaſury for the moſt part is but low and empty. For 1 the State they keep, becauſe of that great honour which they have above other Princes, which is to be maintained at a great expence (for the more worſhip the more coſt, as the ſaying is) is very chargeable unto them; their ordinary Guards ſtanding them in no leſſe than 30000 Crowns per annum. 2 The large allowances which they are fain to give unto their Legates, Nuncios,

The Papacy. and other Miniſters, keep their coffers low; the entertainment of their ordinary Nuncios in the Courts of Chriſtian Princes, amounting to no leſs than 1200 Crowns a moneth to each. And 3 their greedy deſire to enrich their Sons or Kinſmen with the treaſures of the Church (with which humour Pope Sixtus the fifth, being of poor and obſcure birth, was never touched) keeps them alwaies bare. Add unto theſe the exceſſive gorgeouſneſs of the Papal veſtments (in which vanity every one ſeeketh to excel the other) eſpecially that of their Triple Crown; which muſt needs put them to great charge, and continual iſſues of their treaſure. And for an evidence of this laſt, we find that Clement the fifth, who firſt transferred his See to Avignon, to ſhew his gallantry to the French (probably unacquainted with the like fine ſights) had his Crown thick ſet with Carbuncles and precious ſtones; one of which being loſt by a fall from his horſe, was valued at 6000 Ducats.

As for the Forces of the Church, the Pope is able to impreſs as great a number of Land-ſouldiers out of his eſtate, as any Prince or Common-wealth within the limits of Italie. Paul the 3d ſent to the aid of Charles the 5th in the Wars of Germany, 12000 Foot, and 500 Horſe; and yet raiſed his own Family to the Dukedom of Parma. Pius the fifth ſent to the aid of Charles the ninth, againſt the Hugonots, 4000 Foot, and 1000 Horſe; which Forces they maintained at their own charges. And when Clement undertook the War of Ferrara, he raiſed out of his eſtate 20000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, in leſs than a moneth; which was more then moſt Princes in Europe could poſſibly have done. And for the valour of his Souldiers, and ability of his Commanders, they retain ſo much (as before was ſaid) of their Anceſtors vertues; that there are thought to be many Families in the eſtate of the Church, able to furniſh all the Common-wealths and Princes of Chriſtendom, with ſufficient Captains. What, and how little he is able to do by Sea, may be beſt ſeen out of the aid which he ſent to the Venetians, at the famous Battel of Lepanto, wherein he furniſhed them with no more than twelve Gallies; and thoſe too hired of the Duke of Florence: The Venetians in the Adriatick, and the Florentines in the Tuſcan Seas, having all the Trade, and conſequently all the power in the Seas of Italie. 'Tis true the Pope was bound by the capitulation, to bear the fifth part of the charge of the war, and with the help of the reſt of the Princes of Italie (who were to march under his colours) to ſet forth 50000 Foot, and 4500 Horſe: which is as great an Argument of his riches and power by land, as the other is of his weakneſs at Sea.

Having a purpoſe in the proſecution of this Work, to mention ſuch particular Orders of Knighthood, as moſt Countreys have given beginning to; I will here ſet down the Orders of ſuch Popiſh Spiritual Knights or Friers, which his holy benediction hath erected, and fat allowance doth maintain. And for our better proceeding, we will begin with the original of a Monaſtical life; and then we will make ſpecial mention of ſome of the Romiſh Votaries of both ſexes. Know then that under the ſeventh perſecution raiſed againſt the Church by Decius, one Paulus, born at Thebes in Egypt, retired to a private cave under the foot of a Rock, Anno 260. Here he is ſaid to have lived one hundred years, and to have been ſeen of no man but one Anthony, who was at his death. This Anthony was the firſt that followed the example of Paulus; a man of a noble houſe, and one that ſold all his eſtate, that he might the more privately injoy himſelf. He lived an hundred and fifty years, and is called the Father of the Monks. To theſe beginnings, doth Polydore Virgil refer the original of the Monks, and religious orders; the name Monk coming from the Greek μόνος, becauſe of their lonely and ſolitary lives. Thoſe of the religious orders are called Fratres, and in Engliſh Friers, from the French word Frere, which ſignifieth a Brother; and that either becauſe of their brotherly cohabitation; or elſe becauſe they are Fratres in malo, brethren in miſchief and deſign.

The foundation of Monaſtical life thus laid by Paulus, and Anthony; the world increaſed ſo faſt in Monks and Eremites, that it ſeemed neceſſary to preſcribe them orders. Hereupon Saint Baſil gathered them together, living formerly diſperſed; and is ſaid to be the firſt that built them Monaſteries. He is alſo ſaid to have ordained the three Vowes of Poverty, Chaſtity, and Obedience; to have inſtructed them in good Arts, true Religion, and in the ſervice of God, with Hymns, Prayers, and Watching. Of this order there are not many in the Latin Church, but good plenty of them in the Greek. They are bound to abſtain from all kinde of fleſh, and are called Monks of S. Baſil, by the name of that Father; amongſt the Writings of which Father, the Rules for theſe Monaſticks are ſet down at large.

2 The next who preſcribed Orders was S. Auguſtine, born in the year 350, who being thirty years of age, is ſaid to have obtained a Garden without the wals of Hippo, for private contemplations. Twelve only he aſſumed into his ſociety, living with them in all integrity, and wearing a leathern Girdle to diſtinguiſh them from Monks. Hence came the preſent Auſtin Friers, or the Eremites of S. Auſtin, as others call them. Of ſuch eſteem formerly in the Univerſity of Oxford, that all who took the degree of a Maſter of Arts, were to ſubmit themſelves to their Oppoſitions in the publick Schools, and receive approbation from them; from whence the form, in Auguſtinenſibus reſponderit vel oppoſuerit, ſtill retained among them. Their houſe in London ſtood in Broadſtreet, of which a part of the Church ſtill ſtandeth, converted to a Church for the uſe of the Dutch; the reſt demoliſhed, and in the place thereof a ſtately Manſion erected by Sir William Pawlet the firſt Marqueſſe of Wincheſter, and Lord Treaſurer of England. Theſe make the firſt order of the Friers Mendicants. The firſt Monaſtery of them was erected at Paris by William Duke of Guien, Anno 1155: and Anno 1200, they began to flouriſh in Italie, by the favour of John Lord of Mantua. The other branches of this Tree, are 1 the Monks of S. Hierom, 2 the Carmelites, 3 the Crouchet Friers, and 4 the Dominicans.

1 The Monks of S. Hierom challenge their original from the worthy Father of the Church, ſo called. They flouriſh eſpecially in Spain, where there are thirty two Monaſteries of them; their chief chief House being St. Bartholomews of Lupiena; and have taken unto themselves the Rule of St. Austin. Their Robe is a white Cassock, under a tawny Cloak. The Papacy.

2 The Carmelites, so called from Mount Carmel in Syria, pretend their original from Elias, and John the Baptist. They only allowed at first the Rule of S. Basil; and were confirmed in Europe by Honorius the third. They are by some called Jacobines, from a Church dedicated to S. James, where they had their first Convent; and by us, the White Friers, from the colour of their habit. Their House in London stood in Fleetstreet, converted since into a dwelling of the Earls of Kent, besides other Tenements. Their Rule was afterwards corrected according to the Rule of S. Austin, by Donna Eresba (or Teresa) a Spanish woman; who made them also certain Constitutions, confirmed by Pius the fourth, Anno 1565.

3 The Friers of S. Crosse, Crossed, or Crouched Friers, were first ordained by Cyriacus Bishop of Hierusalem, who shewed to Helena the place where the Cross was hidden; hence this Order; which being almost decayed, was restored first by Urban the second, and afterwards by Innocent the third, under the rule of S. Austin. Their Robe is Watchet, and in their hands they carry the figure of the Cross. Their house in London near the Tower, still retains its name.

4 The Dominicans, or Friers Preachers, were instituted by S. Dominick a Spaniard. He put himself in this Order with sixteen of his Disciples, under the Rule of S. Austin, Anno 1206, and had his device confirmed by Honorius the third. Their duty is to preach the Gospel in all places unto the fartheſt parts of the world; which both they did, and their successors since have done, not at home only, but in India and America, with great zeal and diligence. They are called by us Black Friers, from the colour of their habits, and are the third Order of Friers Mendicants. Their house in London stood neer Ludgate, and took up the whole Precinct which is still called Black Friers; though nothing be remaining of it but the very name.

3 The third that prescribed Orders was S. Benedict, born at Nursia, in the Dutchy of Spoleto, Anno 472. He gathered the Monks of Italie together, gave them a Rule in writing, caused them to be called Benedictines, or Monks of S. Benedict; and lived till he had seen twelve Monasteries filled with them. After his death this Order grew so populous, that there have been of it 29 Popes, 200 Cardinals, 1603 Archbishops, 4000 Bishops, and 50000 Canonized Saints. Their habit is a loose Gown of black, reaching down to the ground, with a Hood of the same; an under-garment of white woollen, and boots on their legs. The other principal streams of this Fountain are, 1 the Monks of Clugnia, 2 of Carthusia, 3 of Cisteaux, 4 the Celestines.

1 The Monks of Clugnie, are so called from the Abbey of Clugnie in the County of Burgundy; the Abbot whereof, by name Odo, was the first that reformed the Benedictines, then fallen from their former integrity, Anno 913. He obtained of the Popes and Emperors, that all such Abbies as would come under the compass of his Reformations (which were in all about two hundred) should be called the Congregation of Clugnie, and that they might call their Chapiters, and dispatch their common businesses, when and as often as they pleased.

2 The Carthusians were first instituted by one Bruno, a German Doctor of Divinity, at the Town of Carthusia in Daulphine, Anno 1080. His followers, which were at the first but six, have at this day 93 Monasteries. They eat no flesh, live by couples, labour with their hands, watch, pray, and never meet together but on Sundaies. Their house in London by corruption and long tract of time, got the name of the Charter-house (the Monks themselves being corruptly called the Charter-house Monks) now better known by the name of Suttons Hospital; from the Hospital of the Foundation of Richard Sutton, a wealthy Citizen of London.

3 The Monks of Cisteaux were first instituted by one Robert, Abbot of Molesme, Anno 1090 or thereabouts; who together with 21 of the most religious of his Covent, retired to Cisteaux in Burgundy Dutchy; hence the name. About five years after, one Bernard, a great Lord, became of their Order; who built and repaired for them 160 Abbeys. Their Robe is a white Cassock, girt with a Girdle of wool, the rest black. They were by us called White Monks; and the common Benedictines, Black Monks; both from the colour of their habits.

4 The Celestines owe their original to Peter de Moron, a Samnite, born Anno 1250; who being afterwards for his sanctity chose Pope, was called Celestine the fifth. He reformed the Benedictines, then much degenerated; and had his Order confirmed by Gregory the 11. There are at this present 124 Monasteries of them.

4 The fourth and last that prescribed new Orders to the Monasticks, was St. Francis of Assis in the Dutchy of Spoleto. He fell from Merchandize, which was his first profession, unto the study of Religion, going barefoot, and behaving himself very penitently: whereupon, great store of Disciples following him, he gave them a Rule in writing; by which they are bound to profess absolute beggery, and are not permitted to carry any money about them, or more victuals then will for the present serve themselves and their Brethren. This they observe punctually in their own persons, but give themselves leave to have a Boy with them, to do both without scruple. S. Francis desired they should be called Minors, to shew their humility; but they are generally called Franciscans by the name of their Founder. By the French called Cordeliers, because of the knotty Cord which they wear about them instead of a Girdle; by us, the Gray Friers, from the colour of their upper Garment. Their house in London stood near Newgate, of which the Church, the Cloysters, and some other the publick Offices do still stand entire; the whole converted to an Hospital for poor Children by King Edward the sixth, in the latter end of his reign, now best known by the name of Christ Church. Their Rule and Order was confirmed by Innocent the 3d Anno 1212, and is the fourth and last of the Friers mendicants.

The Papacy. cants, or begging Friers. The other principal children of this Father, are 1 the Minimes; and 2 the Capouchins.

1 The Friers Minimes, were first founded by Franciscus de Pola, a Neapolitan, Anno 1450. according to a corrected copy of the Rule of S. Francis of Assis. His followers keep alwaies a true Lenten fast, unless in case of sickness. Their Robe is a dark tawney, an hood of the same hanging to their girdles.

2 The Capouchins, (so called from their cowle or capouch) were ordained by one Matthew Basci of Ancona. Frier Lewis his companion, obtained for them of the Pope, the habit and rule of S. Francis, Anno 1526. In the space of 42 years they increased to 2240 associates, had 222 Monasteries, and were divided into 15 Provinces. They are bound by their Rule to spend their time in prayer; and are generally thought to be the devoutest of all the Orders Monastical.

I should now speak of the Jesuites, but that I cannot bring them under any rule; as being a people neither simply Lay nor Priests, nor meerly secular, nor regular, but all together. They were founded by Ignatius Loyola, born in Navarre, who being in his youth addicted to the wars, was lamed in one of his legs: after which maim betaking himself to the study of Religion, he framed this order, consisting at the first of ten only. Paul the third did confirm it, Anno 1540. confining the number within sixty: which he after inlarged ad infinitum. They are now the greatest Politicians, soundest Scholars, and chiefest upholders of the Romish See: so that the only way to re-establish the Romish Religion in any Land, is to plant a Colledge of Jesuites in it. To the three vowes of Poverty, Obedience, and Chastity, common to all other orders; Ignatius at the institution of this, added the vow of Mission: whereby his followers are bound to obey their General, or the Pope, without demanding any reason, in all dangerous and hazardous attempts whatsoever, whether it be undertaking some tedious voyage, for the propagation of the Romish Religion, or the massacring of any Prince whose life is a hinderance to their proceedings. It is reported, that a Jesuite being in the midst of his Mass, which they call the sacrifice of the Altar, was sent for by Ignatius; to whom leaving off his Mass he went immediately. Ignatius having no business wherein to imploy him, told him, he only sent for him to try his obedience; and withall profanely added, that obedience is better than sacrifice: and this is called the blinde obedience of the Jesuites. To leave them then as they are, the greatest disturbers of the quiet of Europe, I have heard a worthy Gentleman, now with God, say many times, that till the Jesuites were taken from the Church of Rome, and the peevish Puritan (or Presbyterian) Preachers out of the Churches of Great Britain, he thought there would never be any peace in Christendome; with what a true presaging spirit, the event hath shewed.

Corrivals with the Jesuites in power and learning, and almost coætaneous in point of time, are the Oratorians, founded by Philip Nerio a Florentine, Anno 1564. Who marking the great sway which the Jesuites began to have, and the danger which the Church might run, if that Order were not equally ballanced by some other of as much ability; first established this, consisting altogether of Priests; that by their diligence in preaching of the lives of the Saints, and other heads of practical and moral duties, they might divert the torrent of the peoples affection from the brood of Ignatius. The renowned Cardinal Cæsar Baronius, Francis Bourdino, afterwards Bishop of Avignon in France, and one Alexander Fidelis, were the three first whom he admitted to his Rule: initiated in S. Hieroms Church at Rome by Pope Pius the fourth with great zeal and cheerfulness; to whom, as to some of his Predecessors, the power and practises of the Jesuites were become suspicious. They increased speedily (being countenanced on so good grounds) to great numbers, and a proportionable Revenue: as much esteemed of for their knowledge in Ecclesiastical History, and Practical Divinity; as the others for Philosophy, Tongues, and the study of Controversies; and more accepted of in most places, because not usually intermedling in affairs of State. So evenly looked on by the Popes, that the Jesuites could not obtain the Canonization of their Ignatius, till the Oratorians were grown rich enough to celebrate that of their Nerius also: which hapned in the short Popedom of Gregory the 15. Anno 1622.

To conclude this discourse of Monks and Friers, I will say somewhat of the severest kinde of Recluse, which is the Anachoret, or Anchoret, so called from ἀναχωρέω, because they use to live retired from company. They are kept in a close place, where they must dig their graves with their nails; badly clad, and worse dieted; not to be pitied for all that, because their restraint of liberty is voluntary; yet to be sorrowed for in this, that after such an earthly Purgatory, they shall finde in stead of an Euge bone serve, a Quis quæsivit hæc de manibus vestris.

But concerning these Orders of Monks and Friers, certain it is, that at their first institution they were a People much reverenced for their holy life; as men that for Christs sake had abandoned all the Pomps and Vanities of the world. And questionless they were then a People altogether mortified, and who by their very aspects would gain upon the affection of the hardest heart; insomuch that not only mean men, but great personages also did desire to be buried in a Friers weeds; as Francis the 2d Marquess of Mantua, Albertus Pius another Prince of Italie, Isabel the renowned Queen of Castile and Aragon, wife of Ferdinand the Catholick; and in late times the great Scholar Christopher Longolius. But as Florus saith of the Civil Wars between Cæsar and Pompey, Causa hujus Belli, eadem quæ omnium, nimia felicitas; we may say also of these Friers. The greatness of their wealth, which many on a superstitious devotion had bequeathed unto them, brought them first to a neglect of their former devout and religious carriage; next to a wretchlesness of their credits, and consequently into contempt: so that there was not a people under heaven that was more infamous in themselves, or more scornfully abused by others. Hence the vulgar sayings of the people, that Friers wear crosses on their breasts, because they have none in their hearts; and that, when a Frier receiveth the Razor, the Devil entreth into him; and the like. Nay, Sir Thomas Moor, who loſt his head in the Popes quarrel, ſticks not in his Utopia, to call them Errones maximos; and would have them comprehended within the Statutes of Vagabonds and ſturdy Beggers. Now to ſhew both the humours of Reſpect, and Contempt, uſed ſeverally to theſe Monks and Friers, as men ſtood affected; there goeth a Tale, how the Lady Moor, Sir Thomas his wife, finding by chance a Friers Girdle, ſhewed it to her husband with great joy, ſaying, Behold, Sir Thomas, a ſtep towards Heaven: whereunto with a ſcornful laugh he returned this anſwer, that he feared that ſtep would not bring her a ſtep higher. And as for their retiredneſs and ſolitary courſe of life; ſo it is that many Kings, eſpecially of the Saxons in the time of their Heptarchie, have abandoned their Scepters to enjoy it: And Barclay in his Argenis, under the perſon of Anarcheſtus, hath defended it in ſuch Princes, as have cloyſtered themſelves to enjoy the ſolitude of a Convent. Which notwithſtanding, Philoſophers have defined a man to be ζῶον πολιτικὸν, a Creature principally made for civil converſation; the Poets ſay, Naſcitur indignè per quem non naſcitur alter; that he dyeth indebted to the world, who leaveth no poſterity behinde him: and the Jewes, which live in great numbers even in Rome it ſelf, abhor this unſociable kinde of living, and prefer a civil ſociableneſs much before it; as to Nature more agreeable, to Man more profitable, and conſequently to God more acceptable. And having ſpoken thus much of the Monks and Friers, deſcend we now unto the Nuns

The Papacy.

And indeed I ſhould much wrong the Friers, if I ſhould deprive them of the company of their deareſt Votaries; and therefore take ſomewhat of them alſo. Called anciently Moniales from the Greek word Μόνος, from their living alone; whence we alſo had the names of Monks and Monaſteries: in the middle times called Nuns, from Nonna an Egyptian word, (for Ægypt in old times was not meanly furniſhed with ſuch Eremites) which alſo ſignifieth a ſolitary and lonely life. A word in ſome of the barbarous Latines very much in uſe. Scholaſtica the Siſter of S. Benedict, was the firſt who collected them into companies, and preſcribed them Rules. They are ſhaved as Monks are, and vow (as they do) perpetual poverty and Virginity. Which laſt how well they keep, let Clemangis teſtifie; who telleth us, that Puellam velare idem eſt ac publicè eam ad ſcortandum exponere: to veil a Nun, and proſtitute her for a common Harlot, were terms equivalent. And one Robinſon, who lived for a time in the Engliſh Nunnery at Lisbon, hath told us that he found an hole in the Garden-wall covered over with Morter, in which were hidden the bones of many new-born children, which their unnatural Mothers had murthered and thrown in there. But of theſe I will inſtance only in two Orders, viz. that of S. Clare, as being the ſtricteſt; and that of S. Brigit, which injoyeth moſt liberty.

1 S. Clare was a Knights daughter of Aſſis, where S. Francis was born, with whom ſhe was co-temporary, and with whoſe auſtere life ſhe was ſo affected, that ſhe forſook her Fathers houſe, and followed him. Having learned her Lirris of that Frier-monger, ſhe deviſed an Order of Religious women, and had it confirmed by Pope Honorius the third, Anno 1225. Her followers vow Poverty and Virginity; as before was ſaid, go barefoot, feed meanly, and are more ſtraightned in their courſe of life, than thoſe of any other Order. By their Foundreſs, out of a deſire to conform the better to the Rule and Order of S. Francis, they were called Minorites, or Minores, and gave name to the place near the Tower-hill in London, where they had their houſe, called from them the Minories.

2 S. Brigit was a Queen of Swethland, and coming to Rome on devotion, obtained of Pope Urban the third, Anno 1370. or thereabouts, that Friers and Nuns might in ſome places live together. For being a Woman and a Widow ſhe knew beſt, (as it ſeemeth) what was good for both Sexes; and ſo deviſed ſuch a Rule, as contented both. But little needed this cohabitation or living together, under the ſhelter of the ſame roof. For they had formerly been joyned in carnal affections, though parted by wals, neither were the viſitations of the Friers ſo fruitleſs, but that the Nuns did fructifie by them. Theſe Friers and Nuns though they lived under the ſame roof, are prohibited from coming to one another, but on ſpecial occaſions: the Foundreſs ſo ordering it that the Nuns ſhould lie in the upper rooms, and the Friers in the lower. The Confeſſor alſo is denied acceſs into their chambers, but ſhrieveth them through an Iron-Gate, by which his lodging is parted from the Lady Abbeſſe's. And herein lyeth the Myſtery of Iniquity. For Robinſon, whom before I named, tels us, that at the time of his ſervice in the Engliſh Nunnery at Lisbon, he was ſhewed a way, by which this uncharitable Grate, which ſeemed to keep the Friers from the company of their female friends, might be and was on ſuch occaſions uſually removed, and the acceſs made free and open to each others beds. Which if it be truly ſaid of theſe, may be ſuſpected alſo in all the reſt of this Order, and in moſt alſo of the others.

And now I return unto my Friers, which beſides the maintenance which by their Founders is allotted for their preſent ſubſiſtence; are kept in a continual hope and poſſibility of attaining to the higheſt honours which that Church can give, if they continue conſtant in their due obedience. For there is not one of them which hopeth not to be the Prior of his Convent; 2 Provincial of his Order, in that Countrey where he liveth; 3 and then the General of his Order. Next, none more likely then the Generals to be choſen Cardinals, and out of the Cardinals one of neceſſity muſt be choſen (and why not he, as well as any of the pack?) to be Pope of Rome. So firm and ſweet a Companion of man is Hope, that being the laſt thing which leaves him, it makes all toyls ſupportable, all difficulties conquerable.

The Venice.

The Signeurie of VENICE.

NOrth of the Lands of the Church from Romandiola to the Alpes, lie the Italian Provinces of the State of VENICE; bounded upon the South with the Territory of Ferrara, and the reſt of Romandiola; on the Weſt, with the Dukedom of Millaine; on the North, with the main body of the Alpes; and on the Eaſt, with the Adriatick and the River Arſia, by which laſt parted from Liburnia, a Sclavonian Province. Beſides which it commands a great part of Dalmatia, together with the Iſlands of Candi, Corfu, Cephalenia, Ithaca, Zant, Cithera, and certain others of leſs note. The length of their Dominions by Sea and Land extending above a thouſand miles, but the breadth not anſwerable.

The nature of the ſoyl, and the principal Rivers which refreſh it, we ſhall ſee anon in the deſcription of the Provinces into which divided. According to which Provinces and the chief Cities of them, the Character of the people may beſt be taken: it being ſaid proverbially by the Italians, that the Venetians themſelves are ſtately, crafty, and greedy; the Veronians, ſtudious and faithful; the Paduans fierce, the Vincentians eager on revenge; thoſe of Friuli, grateful, but inconſtant; thoſe of Hiſtria, neither long-livers, nor of very great courage. That in the conduct of a war, thoſe of Venice bring ſilver, thoſe of Treviſo ſwords; that the Breſcians are fit to dig in trenches, thoſe of Bergomo to lay ambuſhes, thoſe of Padua to manage horſes. And of the women it is ſaid, that thoſe of Crema are deceitful, thoſe of Venice inſolent, thoſe of Vincentia conſtant, thoſe of Verona gracious, thoſe of Treviſo jealous, thoſe of Breſcia diligent, and the Bergomaſque crafty.

But not to dally longer in theſe proverbial characters (though they carry a great deal of truth in them) certain it is that the Venetians themſelves do affect a great deal of gravity in their actions, ſpeak very little at the table; very ſevere where they have authority, and many times in the exceſs. And yet ſuch is the conſtant temper of their Government, and their impartiality in doing Juſtice, that they are very well well obeyed, and generally well beloved of all their ſubjects (notwithſtanding the heavie preſſures which are laid upon them) as well in Italie as without. Eſteemed in former times good Souldiers both by Sea and Land, maintaining wars continually with the Turks in Paleſtine; the Emperors of Conſtantinople in Greece it ſelf; the Genoeſe by ſea, and their neighbours of Italie in this Continent. But of late times they have more ſtudied to preſerve, than inlarge their Dominions; and that too rather by expence of money, than the loſs of bloud; and by wit rather than by valour. So fortunate in this laſt kinde of practiſe, that Machiavel obſerved of them in his time, that whatſoever they loſt by War, they recovered by Treaty. A pregnant evidence whereof we ſhall ſee anon.

To proceed now to the deſcription of ſuch of the Provinces and Eſtates of this Common-wealth, as paſs under the accompt of Italie, they are theſe that follow, that is to ſay, 1 Marca Trevigiana, 2 Friuli, 3 Hiſtria, 4 the Italian Iſles of the Adriatick; of which now in order; leaving the other Members of this Eſtate to be conſidered in their proper places.

1 MARCA TREVIGIANA is bounded on the South, with the River Atheſis, and the moſt Northern Branch of the Po, which from ſome lime-kils near adjoyning, they now call Fornaces, by which parted from the Territory of Ferrara, and the reſt of Romagna; on the Weſt, with the Rivers Mincius and Sarca, and the Lake of Benacus, (now called Lago de Garda from a little Town of that name adjoyning) by which parted from the Dutchy of Millaine; on the Eaſt, with Friuli, and the Golf of Venice; and on the North, with the Alpes which divide it from Tirolis, a Province of Germany. In the time of great Auguſtus Cæſar, this tract together with Friuli the next neighbouring Province had the name of Venetia, from the Veneti, the old inhabitants hereof; and by that name made one of thoſe eleven Regions, into which he then divided Italie. How it obtained this new name, we ſhall ſee anon.

The principal Rivers of this Tract are, 1 Brenta, called anciently Medvacus Major, which riſing in the Alpes not far from Trent, and watering the fields of Padua, paſſeth into the Sea near the City of Venice, making up the famous Haven of Malamocco. 2 Bachilio, called anciently Meduacus Minor, which riſeth alſo in the Alpes, and paſſing by Vincenza, emptieth it ſelf into the Brenta. And 3 Atheſis, now called Adige, which ſpringeth alſo out of the Alpes not far from Trent, and having taken many leſſer ſtreams into its channel, paſſeth by Verona, and after is divided into two great branches; whereof the one fals into the Sea, the other loſeth it ſelf in the midſt of the Mariſhes.

The chief Cities of it are, 1 Vincentia, one of the twelve Cities built by the Tuſcans, or Hetrurians on this ſide of the Apennine; pleaſantly ſeated on the banks of the River Bachilio, and another navigable water called Retone (Erotenus formerly.) The Territory of the City not more large than fruitful, abounding with all ſtore of fruits, and yeelding an excellent kinde of wine, which from thence is vended unto Venice. The buildings of it for the moſt part of poliſhed ſtone, whereof the fields adjoyning afford ſpecial Quarries; and the Inhabitants generally an induſtrious people, making great quantity of Silks, with which they do adorn themſelves, and ſupply their Neighbours. 2 Treviſo, ſeated on the banks of the River Silus, (which runneth through the middle of it) in the midſt of a large and ſpacious plain, abounding even to admiration, with moſt excellent wheat, and all other neceſſaries. A City of no ancient name, not mentioned by Ptolemie, or others of the old Geographers: but of ſufficient note in the later times, for being the reſidence or ſeat of thoſe Provincial Governors (Marqueſſes they are ſometimes called) which the Lombardian Kings ſent hither to defend their borders. Hence it gave name to all the Countrey, in Latine called Marca Treviſiana, or Tarviſana, as ſome call it: taken by the Venetians, and loſt again divers times; but was finally conquered Anno 1380. or thereabout, Antonio Venieri being Duke of Venice. 3 Padua, formerly called called Patavium, built by Antenor, whoſe Tomb Tomb is ſtill here to be ſhown. From him named Antenoria, as ſome report, but after called Patavium quaſi Padavium, from its nearneſs to the River Po, and the Fens thereof. Situate in ſo delectable and ſweet a ſoyl, that Conſtantinus Palæologus was uſed to ſay, that did not the authority of the Scriptures perſwade him otherwiſe, he ſhould look for Paradiſe no where elſe, then in perſuavi Patavina amœnitate, amongſt the flouriſhing and delightful ſweetneſſes of the Paduan field. The Town of great eſteem in the time of the Romans, who much reſorted to the ſame: and much frequented at the preſent for the Univerſity here eſtabliſhed Anno 1220. famous for Phyſicians, who have here a Garden of Simples; of good name alſo for the birth of Livy the Hiſtorian, Julius Paulus a Civil Lawyer his Co-temporary, L. Aruntius Stella, and C. Valerius Flaccus two famous Poets celebrated by Martial: and in the later times, of Marſilius Patavinus a Minorite Frier, who wrote ſo learnedly in behalf of the Emperour, againſt the Pope; Fr. Zabarella the Civilian, Mic. Savanorola the Phyſician, Maginus the Geographer, and divers others. It was much renowned in former times for the humanity of the men, and chaſtity of the women; which laſt ſo eminent and famous, that as chaſt as one of Padua, grew into a Proverb. Hereunto alludeth Martial, ſpeaking of his laſcivious writings. Trevigiana.

Tu quoq; nequitias noſtri luſuſq; libelli,
Uda puella leges, ſis Patavina licet.

Young maids my wanton lines will long to ſee,
And read them or'e, though Patavines they bee.

The City after much viciſſitude of fortune, fell into the power of the Venetians, with all her Territories, being in compaſs one hundred and eighty miles, Anno 1400. Michael Steno then Duke; Vicenza being won about the ſame time alſo. 4 Breſcia, the ſecond City for bigneſs and beauty, in all Lombardy. It is alſo the ſeat of an Arch-biſhop, who is an Earl, a Marqueſs, and a Duke. Her Territories are in length one hundred, in breadth fifty miles; which the Citizens, together with their freedom, bought of Otho the German Emperor, but loſt it to Philip Maria Viſconti, Duke of Millaine, Anno 1421. to whom they yeelded upon certain conditions; which being broken by the Duke, they gave themſelves unto the Seigneury of Venice, Anno 1434. Francis Foſcari being then Duke; under whom it continueth to this day. The City is very populous, the air ſound and good, the ſoyl exceeding plentiful of corn, wine and fruits; and having in it Mines both of Iron and Copper, to the great enriching of the people. It was anciently the chief of the Cenomani, who coming out of Gaul, drove the Tuſcans hence, and ſeated themſelves in their habitations, till finally conquered by the Romans. It is ſituate on a litle River called Garcia, which runneth through the middle of it; and is ſaid to contain at this time 50000. Inhabitants. 5 Verona, ſo called (as ſome conceit it) quaſi vere una; or as others, quaſi Brenona, becauſe built by Brennus; both falſe and frivolous alike. It is ſituate on the banks of the River Atheſis, and is counted the firſt City of the ſecond rank of the Cities of Italie: proud in the birth of Catullus, a well-known Poet, and in an Amphitheatre (a remainder of the Roman greatneſs) able to contain 80000. perſons. The Territories hereof are ſixty five miles in length, forty miles in breadth; enriched with many medicinal herbs, (eſpecially on Mount Baldus, an hill therein) where the Phyſicians go a Simpling. 6 Bebriacum, or Bedriacum, as ſome Writers call it, two daies march from Verona, now a ſmall Burrough named Labinia, and never of any great note when it was at the beſt. Remarkable in the Roman ſtories, for the defeat here given by the Vitellians unto Otho's Army; and after by Veſpaſians forces unto thoſe of Vitellius. By Tacitus called in that regard duabus Romanis cladibus notus & infauſtus Vicus. 7 Crema, a Town of no great Antiquity, but ſituate in a wealthy ſoyl, well peopled, and as well built for the private Edifices: ſo ſtrongly fortified, that it is reckoned the chief Bulwark of the Signeury of Venice, againſt the Millaneſe, on the borders of which State it ſtandeth. Firſt built about the year 970. by ſome remnants of the Anthropomorphites, who on the deſtruction of Pornaſſus (a Town of Lombardy) where before they lived, abjured their hereſie, and were permitted to build here. Honoured in ſucceeding times with a See Epiſcopal; and either the birth-place or preferment of John Cremenſis, a Roman Cardinal. Who being by Pope Honorius ſent into England, Anno 1225. to diſſwade the Clergy-men from Mariage; and having in a Convocation of the Clergy called for that purpoſe, highly advanced the honour of the ſingle life, and ſhewed the inconvenience and unfitneſs of Mariage, in men preferred unto Holy Orders; was the night following (to the great diſcredit both of his cauſe and perſon) taken in Adultery. 8 Bergomo, a right ancient Town, but very well built, ſeated upon the ſide of an hill, and having a very large and beautiful Suburb; the Territory whereof hath many rough and craggie Mountains, the Spurs and excurſions of the Alpes; but withall many rich and delightfull valleys, intermingled with them. The people of this City and Countrey are ſaid to ſpeak the courſeſt language, of any in Italie; but to have as fine wits as the beſt. Places of more inferior note are, 1 Eſte, (Ateſte in moſt Latine Writers) whence came the Family D' Eſte, late Dukes of Ferrara. 2 Liniacum, a ſtrong Garriſon on the borders of Mantua; as 3 Caſtel-France is towards Ferrara; and 4 Seraval, of moſt remarkableneſs, for the great quantity of Armour which is therein made. 5 Feltri, which ſtill preſerves its old name of Feltria; moſt memorable at the preſent for a See Epiſcopal. 6 Altina, a Biſhops See alſo, but deſtroyed and ruined.

This Province being anciently a part of the Ciſalpine Gaul, fell to the power of the Romans at the end of the ſecond Punick war: and being conquered by the Romans, did continue theirs, till firſt the Gothes, and afterwards the Lombards became Maſters of it. Afterwards in the fall of the Kingdom of Lombardie, it fell firſt unto the French, and after to the German Empire; from which by many mean conveyances, Friuli. ances, it came at last to Ottocarus, King of Bohemia and Duke of Austria, who bought the same of Ulricus the last Duke of Carinthia: whose Predecessor probably had been seized hereof, from the time that Henry son of Eugelbert, Præfect of Histria, adopted by Henry of Epperstein Duke of Carinthia, or Karnten, succeeded him in that Estate. Upon a reconciliation made betwixt this Ottocarus and Rodolphus of Habspurg (then Emperor of Germany) it was added (together with Austria it self) unto the Patrimony of that Family, sold by Duke Leopold the ninth, to the Cararas, then Lords of Padua; in the ruine of whose estate and Family, it fell (together with that City) into the power of the Venetians, who still hold the same.

2 FRIULI hath on the East the River Formio, which parteth it from Histria; on the West, Marca Trevisana, and a branch of the Alpes; on the North, the main body of the Alpes, which divide it from Germany; and on the South, the Adriatick Sea, or Golf of Venice.

It is called Forum Julii in the Latine (of which that of Friuli is derived) from Julius Cæsar, who conducting his Armies this way, built the Town so named; and from that march of his, the Alpes adjoyning, as 'tis thought, had the name of Julie. By some Writers of the middle times it is called Regio Aquilegiensis, as appertaining for the most part, by the gift of the Emperors Otho and Conradus, to the Church, or Patriarchate of Aquileia; and by the common people of Venice for the most part, Patria, or the Countrey; because from these parts they derive their first Original. In which regard part of the Region of Venetia, as before was said.

The Countrey is in a manner square, each side fifty miles; watered with the Rivers of 1 Hydra, heretofore of no small fame for the silver Mines. 2 Tiliaventum, rising from the Alpes, and navigable towards the latter end of its course: but broken into many channels (seven at least in number) which makes it not so navigable as it would be otherwise; most of these channels being shallow, and easily forded, but swift and violent withall, by reason of their fall from the neighbouring hills. 3 Natisco, neighboured by the famous City of Aquileia. 4 Timavus, mentioned in the first of the Æneids; which rising out of the Alpes, and running under ground for the space of 330 furlongs, breaketh out again; and being branched into nine Channels, falleth into the Gulf or Bay of Trieste. By Niger it is now called Lareina; but by Leander named Timavo. The Soyl sufficiently fruitful, except towards the Alpes, and yeelding a very pleasant Wine, which Plinie did prefer before any in Italie.

Towns herein of most note and consequence, 1 Aquileia, or Aquilegia, as some call it, made the Metropolis first of the Province of Histria and Venetia, by the Emperor Antoninus; as afterwards of the whole Diocese of Italie, by the Western Emperors. Honoured in that regard with the seat of the Præfectus Prætorio, or of his Vicarius or Lieutenant: translated from Millaine to this City, as the Gate of Italie, by which the barbarous Nations were to make their entrance; never so like to be shut out, as by the power and presence of so great an Officer. After this time, and on this occasion the Bishop hereof had the title of Patriarch. And here the Patriarchal See had not long continued when the City was destroyed by Attila, that furious Hun; 37000 of the Citizens being slain with the sword, the rest removing to some places of more safe abode. Re-edified afterwards by Narses, but never able to recover its former lustre. After which time fearing the like miseries from the hands of the Lombards, the Patriarchal See was removed to Venice, as the safer place, and setled in the Isle of Grada; yet so, that the succeeding Bishops of Aquileia (for they stayed at Venice only till the times were quiet) do still retain the dignity, and name of Patriarchs, as well as those of Grada do, and with better reason. For besides the honor which it had in being made the seat of the Præfectus Prætorio, it had been formerly more honoured with the residence of Augustus Cæsar, who here kept his Court; whence it had the name of Roma altera, or a second Reme; and of Tiberius, who lived here with Julia the daughter of the said Augustus, before his coming to the Empire. As for the City it self, it is situate on the River Natisco, but not well inhabited at the present; partly because of the ill Air, partly by the removal of the Patriarch thence, drawn by the Venetians of late times, for good reasons of State, to fix his dwelling in their City, and drawing after him a great resort of Bishops, and others of the Clergy of his Jurisdiction, principally by the ill neighbourhood of Venice, attracting all Trade unto it self. Most memorable in old story for enduring that famous siege against Maximinus, for the safety of the Empire of Rome, and her Emperors Maximus and Balbinus. In whose cause the Citizens hereof were so resolutely faithful, that they bereaved the women (willing to lose that invaluable ornament of their sex, for the common good) of the hair of their heads, to make Bow-strings withall. Nor did this pious constancy of theirs want an happy issue. For they beheld the Tyrant headless under their wals (slain by the hands of his own Souldiers) and saw the Metropolis of the World preserved by their loyalty. And yet the matter was not ended with the death of the Tyrant; the Souldiers and people laying hands on his children also, and putting all unto the sword. Of which cruelty being asked the reason, they returned this Answer, That not a whelp was to be spared of so ill a litter; none of the brood of such a Cur; or in the language of the Author, Pessimi Canis Catulus non est relinquendus. 2 Trieste, of old called Tergestum, from whence a spacious Bay adjoyning had anciently the name of Sinus Tergestinus, and is now called Golfo di Trieste. The Bay repleni shed principally with the water of the River Timaus, which with many streams doth fall into it; and is therefore by the inhabitants of that Golf or Bay, called Fons Maris, as Polybius in Strabo telleth us. The town of greater Antiquity then observation, mentioned by Plinie and some others of the Ancient Writers, but not else considerable. 3 Montfalcon, famous for its medicinal herbs. 4 Porto Gruare, of old called Portus Romatinus, an Haven-town, as the name importeth. 5 Concordia, in former times of no small esteem; but so demolished by Attila the Hun, that it is now nothing but a ruin. The people hereof betaking themselves to the Islands in the Marishes of Venice, where they planted in Tourcellan, Muriano, Constantiaca, and some others were adjoyning to them, them, of which more hereafter. 6 Utina, or Uden, the faireſt and largeſt at this time of all the Province, containing about five miles in compaſs, and about 15000 Inhabitants. Honoured for a time with the Patriarchal See, removed hither from Aquilegia, at ſome ſiege thereof: of which though long ago deprived, yet it is ſtill the ordinary ſeat of the Procurator or Provincial Governor, ſent from Venice hither. 7 Palma, a new Town, as being built by the Venetians no longer ſince than the year 1583, but held to be the beſt fortified of any in Italie. 8 Cividad de Auſtria, firſt built by Julius Cæſar, in ſome of his marches towads Gaul, by whom it was called Julium, after Forum Julii, whence the name of Friuli (Diſtrictus Foro-Julienſis, as the Latins call it) came unto the Province. But being taken and repaired by ſome Princes of the Auſtrian Family (on the borders of whoſe Eſtate it ſtandeth) it got this new name of Cividad de Auſtria. Hiſtria.

This Province anciently was the ſeat of the Euganei, inhabiting this tract and part of Marchia Trevigiana. But thoſe being vanquiſhed by the Veneti; and the Veneti by the Ciſalpine Gauls, it became finally ſubject to the State of Rome, and in the fall of that great Empire was one of the four Dukedoms founded by the Lombards, when they conquered Italie; the other three being Turin, Benevent, and Spoleto. The Family of the Berengarii were once Dukes hereof; three of which were of ſpecial fame, and two of them Competitors for the Kingdome of Italie. But this Family being ſuppreſſed by the Emperor Otho, he gave a great part of the Countrey to the Church of Aquileia; to which almoſt all the reſt was added by the Emperor Conrade; yet ſo that there were divers petit Lords, who had good eſtates in it; the name of Duke remaining unto ſome of the ancient race. One of which named Luitprandus, envying to the Venetians their increaſe of Dominion, made war againſt them; which ended in the loſs of his Countrey, Anno 1020, or thereabouts; ever ſince ſubject to that State: the Patriarch of Aquileia (whoſe authority in this Countrey began to decline, in the riſing of the ſtate of Venice) ſurrendring all his intereſs alſo to that powerful Signeurie, as better able to defend it againſt all Pretenders, Anno 1420. But notwithſtanding this ſurrendry, the Patriarch hath ſtill large poſſeſſions and revenues here, and ſtill retains his Juriſdiction over the Prelates of this Countrey, and thoſe of Hiſtria and Trevigiana (20 in all, or thereabouts) ſix only which are thoſe of the Iſles of Venice, continuing at this day under him of Grada.

HISTRIA is environed on the Eaſt, Weſt, and South, with the Adriatick, in the manner of a Demy-Iſland, or Peninſula, ſave where it toucheth on Friuli; and on the North, is parted from Carinthia, with the Alpes of Germany. The Countrey very woody, and full of Quarries, affording materials to Venice both for ſhips and houſes; not comparable for fertility to the reſt of Italie; and of air ſo ſickly and unwholſome, that the Venetians were compelled to hire people to dwell there, and afterwards to grant them many large immunities. It is two hundred miles in compaſs, watered with the Rivers of Formio, which they now call Riſano; 2 Nauportus, called at this day Quietus; and 3 Arſia, which runneth into the Gulf of Quevero, called anciently Sinus Flanaticus, and divides this Countrey from Liburnia, a Sclavonian Province.

The chief Towns of it are, 1 Cape de Iſtria, called in Plinies time Ægide; and being afterwards repaired by the Emperor Juſtin, was called Juſtinopolis. But being taken and deſtroyed by the Genoeſe, and re-built again, it took the name of Caput Hiſtriæ, or Cape d' Iſtria; becauſe the principal of the Province, and a Biſhops See. Of this See was Vergerius Biſhop, about the time of Luthers firſt preaching in Germany; who with Antonio de Dominis Arch-biſhop of Spalato, were of moſt note of any of theſe parts of the world, that fell off from the Church of Rome to the Proteſtant party, and therefore ſhall be ſpoken of in more particulars; Spalato in his proper place, and Vergerius here. Being a man of great induſtry, and eminent parts, he was by many of the Popes employed in Germany, againſt Luther. In which negotiation he behaved himſelf with ſuch dexterity, and gave ſuch content unto the Pope, that Paul the third, Anno 1541. intended to have made him Cardinal; had not ſome who envyed him that honour, accuſed him of Lutheraniſm. To purge himſelf he began to write a Book, entituled, Againſt the Apoſtata's of Germany; in the purſuit whereof, pondering Luthers reaſons he became of his opinion; which being known, he was driven from Juſtinople. He ſubmitted himſelf and his cauſe to the Fathers at Trent, but could not get a hearing. Thence he went to the D. of Mantua, from him to the State of Venice; but no-where finding protection, he retired unto the Griſons, and there preached; till Chriſtopher Duke of Wittenberg, Anno 1548, placed him in his Univerſity of Tubing, and there allowed him a ſufficiency of maintenance. It was built by Juſtinus (as before) the Nephew of Juſtinian the Emperor, as a fortreſs againſt the incurſions of the barbarous people. 2 Pola, built by the Colchians, at their firſt coming hither; the name in their language importing as much as the place of baniſhment. It was after made a Roman Colony, and called Pietas Julia: but being firſt deſtroyed by Attila, after by the Genoeſe, it recovered the old name again; and ſtill continueth with the title of a See Epiſcopal. It abutteth upon Sinus Flanaticus, or the Golf of Quevero. 3 Parenze, 4 Pliun, 5 Cita Nova, all of them ſeated in the Mid-lands, and not much obſervable, but that Parenze, and Cita Nova are Epiſcopal Sees: this laſt being anciently called Emonia, whence the Biſhop hath the name of Emonienſis. 7 Rovigno, in a little Iſland, and mounted on an high hill, not unfruitful in Olives; beautified with a convenient Port, and that defended alſo by a very ſtrong Caſtle. The Town but poor, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of Venice, from which diſtant not above twenty miles; inhabited for the moſt part by Mariners, and skilful Pilots, hired by ſuch ſhips as are bound for Venice, to conduct them ſafely over the Bars of Malamocco. The Countrey adjoyning mountainous and ſomewhat wilde; but thoſe mountains covered on the outſide, with Phyſical Simples; and yeelding many Quarries of moſt excellent Marble, which ſo adorn the Venetian Palaces.

The Adriatick Isles of Venice.

It is recorded that the Histrians were a people of Colchis, who being sent by King Æetas to pursue Jason and the Argonauts, were driven up this Gulf: and either for fear of the Kings anger, or not daring to venture their weak vessel to so long a voyage, as from hence to Colchis whence they came; stayed in this Countrey. It was after that time called Iapidia, from Iapis an Aetolian, who first planted here; and took the name of Istria from the Istri, a people on the banks of Ister, or Danubius; who made up a considerable part of this plantation. Siding with the Aetolians in their Wars against the Romans, and making many inrodes and excursions on them; they were invaded first by Manlius, without leave of the Senate: and him they charged with such a fury, that they beat him out of his Camp. Where finding plenty of Wine, and all store of Provisions, they fell roundly to it; till Manlius having rallied his men again, charged them in their Cups, and killed 8000 in the place; their miserable King deing so hotly pursued by the Victors, that he was fain to kill himself for fear of Captivity. This was in Anno V. C. 575. Cl. Pulcher the next Consul perfected the conquest. Sempronius long time after that, sc. Anno V.C. 625. reduced it to the form of a Province. So it continued to the time of Augustus Cæsar, who joyning it to that of Venice (or Venetia) made out of both the eleventh and last Region of Italie. Under the Romans they continued whilest that Empire stood, and after the decay thereof regained their liberties; which they enjoyed till by Piracy molesting the Venetians, they lost many of their Towns to Duke Petro Candiano, Anno 938; and the whole Countrey was made Tributatary, by the valour of the Duke Henry Dondolo, about the year 1190. After which many times rebelling, they were still re-conquered.

4 The fourth member of this estate with respect to Italie, are some ISLANDS in the Adriatick; which being principally under the command of this Common-wealth, is commonly called the Gulf of Venice; a Gulf extending in length 700 miles, in breadth 140 miles, in some places less; so called of Adria once a famous Haven-town (as before was said) at the mouth of Eridanus or Po. Concerning which we are to know, that though this Golf or Bay of the Adriatick extended no farther then the Eastern parts of Dalmatia, where the Sea beginneth to take the name of the Ionian; yet Mare Adriaticum, or the Adriatick Sea was of greater length. Extended by the Ancients over the Ionian, and thence South-west-ward till it meeteth with the Tuscan Seas; and South-wards, till it come to the coast of Africk; insomuch as Mare Libycum, or the Sea of Africk, is by Orosius made a part of the Adriatick. For speaking of the Province of Tripolis (a Province of Africk) properly and especially so called, he boundeth it on the North with the Adriatick; as he doth the Isle of Crete, on the South side of it, with the Libyan Sea, quod & Adriaticum vocant, which they also call the Adriatick, as his own words are. The like might also be made evident out of other Authors both Greek and Latin: which I note here, because Pauls being tossed up and down in the Sea of Adria, as is said Act. 27. 27. and being after cast on shore in the Isle of Malta; occasioned some to think this Melite or Malta, to be that Island of Dalmatia which is now called Melida; being seated in the Bay or Golf of Adria: whereas the Text speaks plainly of that Isle of Malta, which lieth in the furthest parts of the Adriatick Sea, on the coasts of Africk. But to return to this Golf, it was accounted heretofore to be very tempestuous and unsafe, as appeareth by Improbo iracundior Adria, in Horace; the Minax Adriaticum, in Catullus, and the Ventosi tumor Adriæ, in Seneca's Thyestes. But when the Empress Helena had found the Cross on which CHRIST suffered, she caused one of the three Nails with which his body was fastned to it, to be thrown of purpose into this Sea; since which time, as Platina hath told us in the life of Pope Silvester (and cites Saint Ambrose for his Author) it hath been very calm and quiet; the second nail being made into a Bridle for her son Constantines horse, and a Crest for his Helmet of the third. But not to trust too much to the truth of this miracle, certain it is that the Venetians are Lords of it, by reason of their Naval power: and that it is every year espoused to the Duke of Venice, by the solemn casting in of a Wedding-Ring; and every year Baptized on Epiphany day, by the Bishop of Zant. When this last ceremony took beginning, I am yet to seek. But for the first, which is performed with a great deal of state, every Holy-Thursday, the Duke, and all the Magnificos being rowed in the Bucentaure (which is a rich and stately Gallie made for such solemnities, and capable of 200 persons, whence it had the name) it took beginning from Pope Alexander the third. Who being hardly put to it by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, fled unto Venice in the habit of a Cook; Sebastian Cyani being then Duke: in prosecution of whose quarrel, the Venetians encountred Otho the Emperors son, vanquished him, and restored the Pope. The Duke returning back in Triumph with his Royall Prisoner, was thus saluted by the Pope. Cyani take here this Ring of Gold, and by giving it unto the Sea oblige it unto thee: a Ceremony which on this day (the Ascension day) shall be yearly observed, both by thee and thy Successors; that so posterity may know that you have purchased the dominion thereof by your valour, and made it subject to you, as a Wife to her Husband.

The principall Islands of this Sea, lie on the other side thereof, on the coast of Dalmatia. Some few there are upon this side (but those, as well as these under the command of this Signeury) neither great, nor famous. Of these the chief are, 1 MALAMOCCO, in Latin Methuacum, situate at the South-west end of the bank or causey called Il Lido; now only considerable for the Haven, which is large and deep made by the influx of Meduacus before mentioned; in which the greater ships do ride, till they hire Pilots from Rovigno to cross the Bars. It was ennobled heretofore with the Dukes Palace, and an Episcopal See: the See of Padua being translated hither, at the sack of that City by the Lombards. But the Dukes Palace being removed to Rialto, and the Episcopal See to the Island of Chioggia; it is now inhabited for the most part by none but Sea-men. 2. TORCELLAN, in which there is a little City of the same name, honoured with a Bishops See, (the Bishop of Altina with much people with him, for fear of the said Lombards retiring hither) but by reason reason of the ill air, not very well peopled. 3 MURIANUM, or MURIANO, three miles in compass, and but one from Venice, of a sound air, and very well inhabited; the people whereof make the best Venice Glasses, so much used in all parts. 4 CHIOGGIA, called in Latin Fossa Clodia, a little West of Malamocco, at the very entrance into the Mariss es from the Adriatick: distant from Venice 25 miles; to which it serveth instead of a Bulwark. There is a Town in it of the same name, to which the Bishops See was removed from Malamocco, Anno 1103, and near to which are many Salt-pits, which yeeld great gain unto the people, and as much unto the Common-weal h. Near to this Island, the Genoese so discomfited the Venetians in a fight at Sea, that thereupon, (the taking of the Island following shortly after) they were offered a blank Charter to write what they would. But the Genoese being grown too insolent on their good success, made the City desperate; who putting all to hazard fell again upon them, beat them, pursued them home, and there utterly crushed them; as we shal tell you more at large, when we come to Genoa. 5 POVEGIA, five miles from the City, first peopled by some who had raised a commotion in the City, on the death of Petro Tradonico the thirteenth Duke. After which much increased both in wealth and buildings, till destroyed by the Genoese. It is called Pupilia by the Latins. 6 JUDECHA (in Latin called Judaica) so named from the Jews who did there inhabit: not above half a mile from the City, and not very large; but liberally furnished with most pleasant gardens. These and the rest reckoned as members of Trevigiana or appendents on it. Venice.

Betwixt these Islands and the main land of Friuli, lyeth a shoal of little Islets, in and amongst which standeth the renowned City of Venice, the head City of this Common-wealth, and the glory of Italie. These Islets 72 in number, but joyned together by many Bridges, of which here are said to be 4000 at least, besides 10000 boats for passage from one Isle to the other. The compass of the whole aggregate body said to be eight miles, the buildings fair, and generally adorned with glass windows; an Ornament not common in Italie; where the windows for the most part, are made with paper to let in the light; and that paper oyled all over, to keep out the wet. The number of the inhabitants estimated at 300 thousand. By the situation one would think, that it was denominated from Venetia, which in the old Latin signifieth the seething or frothing of the Sea. VENETIA maris exæstuatio est quæ ad littus veniat, saith the old Glossarie upon Isidore, out of Marcus Varro. But the truth is, that it was so called from the Veneti, the old Inhabitants of the neighbouring Province of Friuli; who to avoid the fury of the barbarous Huns then threatning Italie, abandoned the main land, and built this City in the bogs and marishes of the sea adjoyning. And that it might afford them the greater safety, they not only built it in the most inward part of the Adriatick Sea, commonly called the Gulf of Venice; but in the midst of many Lakes of salt-water, extending ninety miles in compass, and having on the East the said Adriatick Sea for the length of 550 miles: betwixt which and the said Lakes, there is a bank or causey which they call Il Lido, made as it were by nature, to defend the Islands which lie in this Lake, from the violent fury of the Sea. A Causey of 35 miles in length, bending like a Bow, and opening in seven places only; which serve as well to keep the Lakes alwaies full of water, as for the passage of Vessels to and from the City: known by the the names of the Ports of 1 Brondolo, 2 Chioza, 3 Malamocco, 4 the three Castles, or the Castles of Lio. 5 S. Erasmus, 6 Lito Maggiore, or the great shore, and 7 the Treports: of which that of Brondolo lieth most to the Southwest, and that of Treports to the Northwest of the said great Causey. And through every one of these there is safe passage for Ships and Barks of smaller burden: the bigger being compelled to lie at Anchor, on the South side of the City, near to the ports of Malamocco, and the Castles of Lio, which are very well fortified; and there must remain till they are brought in by skilful Pilots, who know the passages, which, by reason of the shifting of the sands, change very often. On the West and North sides, it is compassed with very deep Marishes, about five miles distant from the land; and on the South with many Islands, in which are severall Churches and Monasteries, like so many Forts; which lie between it and those parts of Italie, which are not under the obedience of the Common-wealth. So that is impossible to be taken, but by an Army which can stretch 150 miles in compass. It is built, as before is said, on 72 Islands, 60 of which lie close together round about the Rialto, the other at a greater distance. Of these the principall, 1 Heraclea near the Firm Land of Trevigiana, peopled at first by such as followed Magnus Bishop of Oderza, who to avoid the fury of the Lombards came and planted here: calling the Island and the Town which they founded in it by the name of Heraclea, in honour of Heraclius the Eastern Emperor, in whose time it hapned. Made by this means a Bishops See, and being grown populous withall, it was honoured with the first seat of the Dukes of Venice, removed by Theodotus the seventh Duke to Malamocco, and from thence finally to Rialto. Destroyed by Pepin King of Italie, son of Charles the Great, it was re-edified in the time of Angelo Partitiatio the tenth Duke, and called Cita Nova; more memorable at this time for the antiquity of the Bishops See, then the number of Citizens. 2 Jesulan, neighbouring to Heraclea, first planted by some Countrey people, who flying the fury of the Lombards, brought with them a great drove of Mares and of Horses, whence it had the name of Equilene, or Equilia. Made afterwards a Bishops See also, by the name of Jesulanus or Equilicnsis. 3 Grada, on the same part of the City also, but more towards the North, inhabited at first by such of the City of Aquileia as betook themselves thither to avoid the tyranny of the Hunnes: but made more eminent than before, by Paul the Patriarch of that City, who flying the fury of the Lombards transported to this Island the Relicks and Treasures of his Church; and setled where the Church of S. Euphemia had been built before. And though Helie who succeeded Paul, obtained of Pope Pelagius the 2d Anno 580. that the Bishops of Grada should from thenceforth have the title of Patriarchs, and be esteemed the Metropolitans of the City and Countrey of Venice: yet the Aquileian would not so be robbed of his ancient priviledges, and therefore stirred up many suites and disputes about it. The business compromi-

Venice. sed at last to this effect, that the Patriarch of Aquileia should enjoy his ancient Jurisdiction over all the Churches in the Continent which belonged unto him: and that he of Grada, with the title and stile of Patriarch, should have like jurisdiction over the Churches in the Islands; that is to say, the Bishopricks of Heraclea, (or Cita Nova) Equilia, Torcellan, Chioggia, Caprulæ, and Castello Olindo. His habitation near the Church of S. Silvester, in the third Region of the City, called de Canaregio. 4 Caprulæ, towards the openings of the Adriatick, a Bishops See before the time of Charles the Great, but not else observable: none of these four, nor of the residue of the twelve, which lie remote from the Rialto, being much inhabited at the present. 5 Castello Olindo, or Olivaller as some call it, situate at the East end of the City, not far from the Causey called Il Lido. Of old a City of it self (as the former were) now joyned by a Bridge to the rest of Venice; of most note for the Cathedral Church of S. Peter, and the Palace of the Venetian Patriarch: this City having been made a Bishops See by Pope Adrian the first, Anno 774. with jurisdiction over the Isles of Olivolla, Rialto, Lupria, and Dorse-dura. His title first Castellonensis, but afterwards the Bishop of Venice, because the best part of the City did belong unto him, invested by the Duke, but confirmed by the Patriarch of Grada, whose suffragans they were till the year 1450. At what time Pope Eugenius the 4th (a Native of the City of Venice) advanced the Bishops hereof to the dignity and name of Patriarch; assigning the Churches of Dalmatia (of which they were entituled Primates) for their Jurisdiction. By means whereof, and by perswading him of Aquileia to fix his dwelling here also, as before is said, there are no fewer than three Patriarchs which have their constant habitation in the City of Venice. 6 Rialto, which is of most esteem and reputation, so called quasi Rivo alto, because the Marishes are there deeper than in other places; or quasi Ripa alta, because it lay higher above the waters, than the other Islands. For which reasons that Island getting reputation above the rest, most of the Gentlemen setled their dwellings in the same; and drew thither in the end, the Dukes Palace also; insomuch that in some ancient writings, the whole City hath been called Rialto; many of the old Records being dated in such and such a year of the Rialto. But as they did increase in numbers, so were they fain to spread themselves from one Isle to another; till in the end they built on all the Islands which lay near together, and might conveniently be joyned by Boats or Bridges. By this Rialto runs the passage called the Grand Canale, being in length about 1300 paces, and some forty in breadth; adorned on both sides with stately and magnificent Palaces; and covered with an incredible number of Boats called Gondolos, very neatly built, and veiled over with cloth, so that the passengers may go unseen and unknown, without the molestation of sun, wind, or rain. For publick buildings it hath in it 70 Parish Churches, to each of which belongeth a Market-place and a Well; 31 Cloysters of Monks, 28 of Nuns, besides Chappels and Almes-houses.

The principal Church of this City is that of S. Mark, the Patron of their Common-wealth, whose body they report to have been brought hither from Alexandria in Egypt, and intombed herein: Affirmed by some to be the richest and goodliest Church in all the World. The building, of Mosaick work, of which they boast themselves to have been the Authors. A kinde of work, by the Grecians called Λιθόστρωτα, and by the Latin Writers Musiva, Musica, and Musaica; wrought out of stones or metals of divers colours, into the shape of Flowers, Knots, Birds, Beasts, and other fancies of the Workman; yet done with such exactness of skill and judgement, that it seemeth to be all one stone, the work rather of Nature than Art. A Church of admirable work both within and without, compacted of most rare pieces of Marble, Porphyrie, and a rich stone which the Lapidaries called Ophitis, because it is speckled like a snake; adorned on the outside with 148 Pillars of Marble, and eight of Porphyrie near the door; besides 600 Marble pillars of a lesser size, which carry up an open Gallery round about the Church; from whence the Magistrates and others of the principal Citizens, behold such shews as are presented in the Market-place, adjoyning to it. The Church in length not above 200 foot of Venice measure, nor above 50 in breadth; the roof thereof being of an Orbicular form, lieth open at the very top, where the light comes in, there being no windows in all the Church, as commonly the Churches in Italie are exceeding dark, either to strike in the spectators a religious reverence, or to make their Candles shew the better. And for the inside of the Church, the riches of it are so great, the Images so glorious, the furniture of the Altars so above comparison; that all the treasures of the State, may seem to be amassed in the decking of it. And yet as goodly and as glorious as the Fabrick is, it is still unfinished; and as some think, is kept unfinished on purpose; partly to draw on other Benefactors to advance the work, the benefit of whose liberality may be employed unto the use of the publick Treasury; and partly lest the Revenues which are given already should be resumed by the Heirs of the deceased, if the work were ended. So infinitely doth the furniture of the Church exceed the sumptuousness, and beauty of the Church it self.

Of other of the publick buildings, the Councel-house, the Ducal Palace, Monasteries, Churches, and the like, though stately and magnificent structures, I forbear to speak. Nor shall I here say any thing of their private houses, so large and beautified, that here are said to be no fewer than 200 (most of them on the Grand Canale) able to entertain and lodge the best King in Christendom. All I shall add, and so leave this City, will be a word or two of their Arsenal, and publick Magazine. In the first of which they have in readiness 200 Gallies, with rooms for Cables, Masts, Sails, Victuals, and Ammunition of all sorts; able thereby to set out a Navie to the Sea, on the shortest warning. And in the other it is said, that they have Arms sufficient for 100000 Souldiers of all sorts; amongst which are affirmed to be a thousand Coats of plate, garnished with gold, and covered with velvet; fit for the use and wearing of the greatest Princes. But of their power and forces both by Sea and Land, we shall speak more shortly. In the mean time

Viderat Adriacis Venetam Neptunus in undis
Stare urbem, & toto ponere jura mari:
Nunc mihi Tarpeias, quantumvis Jupiter, arces
Objice, & illa tui mœnia Martis, ait.
Si Pelago Tibrim præfers, urbem aspice utramq;:
Illam homines dices, hanc posuisse deos.

In English thus:

Neptune saw Venice in the Adrian stand,
And all the Sea brought under her command;
Now Jove, said he, thy Roman Towres object,
And those proud wals which Mars did once protect.
Before the Sea if Tiber thou preferre,
Behold both Cities, and thou wilt averre,
That men built Rome; the gods plac'd Venice there.

Proceed we now unto their story: and if we look upon them in their first original, we shall finde them to have been a people of Paphlagonia (a Province of Asia the lesser) called the Heneti, who aiding Priamus King of Troy in his ten years wars against the Greeks, where they lost their King named Philamenes (or Philemon, as some call him) chose rather to seek out new dwellings than return with shame unto their old. Upon this resolution they joyn themselves to Antenor, who with some remnant of the Trojans had the same design; and sayling as the wind and sea conducted them, arrived at last in those parts of Italie, now called Friuli. So witnesseth the Poet, saying,

Antenor potuit, mediis illapsus Achivis,
Illyricos penetrare Sinus, atque intima tutus
Regna Liburnorum, & fontes superare Timavi.

Antenor through the Greeks could force his way,
And safely piercing the Illyrian Bay,
Cross the Liburnian Realms; and conquer all
From fierce Timavus Fountain, to his fall.

Here landing they subdued the Euganei (who before inhabited this tract) and possessed their dwellings: the name of Heneti being changed into that of Veneti. But this perhaps not done till subdued by the Galls, and made part of Gallia Cisalpina; agreeably to the name of the Veneti, an old Gallick Nation, opposite to the Isle of Britain. When those Galls were vanquished by the Romans, the name and nation of these Veneti, was so considerable, that their Territory had the name of Venetia; and together with Histria, made one Province of the Roman Empire. And here they lived in peace and safety under the protection of the Empire, till the terrible noise of the great preparation of the Hunnes for the conquest of Italie, occasioned many of the principal men, with their several Retinues, to betake themselves to the Islands, and inaccessible Marishes of the Adriatick; where in the place now called Rialto, they laid the foundation of this City, March 25. Anno 421. exceedingly increased by the destruction of Aquileia, and the neighbouring Cities by Attila and the said Barbarians, Anno 456. at what time it began to be called Venetia, by the name of their Nation. Not much increased in power or greatness, at the fall of the Lombardian Kingdom; though so considerable at that time, that in the division of Italie made by Charles the Great, betwixt himself, the Popes, and the Eastern Emperors; the Venetians were left at liberty, as a Free-Estate: and they deserved to be left in a free condition, considering how notably they had freed themselves from Pepin, the son of Charles, who invaded them with a puissant Army, and was well beaten for his labour, though at first successful. After which, making use of their situation, they grew not only rich in trade, but strong in shipping; and thereby did good service to the Western Princes, in their wars against the Turks in the Holy Land. And they served themselves well by it too: getting in one Expedition only (that namely in which the Empire of Constantinople was made a prey unto the Latines, Anno 1200.) all the Islands which they have at the present, in the Ægean, and Ionian Seas; many in those Seas which they have lost, and not a few good Towns in Peloponnesus, since conquered from them by the Turks. Contending with the Genoese for the Soveraignty of the Mediterranean, they received so great a blow at the Naval battel near Chioggia, (spoken of before) that they had utterly lost all, if the Enemy could have used his fortune with moderation. But being recovered of that blow, after many various successes and events of War, Anno 1381. they got the better of them, and made them quiet: by means whereof, being Lords Paramont at Sea, they next cast their eyes on the main land of Italie, which now they were at more leisure to look after, than they had been formerly.

Venice. The Hiſtrians had before infeſted them with Piracy, and were puniſhed for it, in the time of Duke Pietro Candiano, by the loſs of many of their Towns; but in the year 1390, the whole Countrey is brought under the command of this Common-wealth. Padua with a great Part of Trevigiana then appendent on it, they extorted from the noble family of the Carrari, An. 1400. The City of Vincentia they poſſeſſed themſelves of in the ſame year alſo; and not long after fully perfected their Conqueſt of Hiſtria, with the revolts whereof they had before been often troubled.

But that whereby they moſt improved their eſtate was by a conſtant watching of their opportunities, taking advantage of the factions and fractions amongſt their neighbours, and working their own greatneſs out of others ruins. By means whereof they came poſſeſſed of many places, of right belonging to the Empire, and the Church of Rome; as alſo of ſome Towns, pertaining to the Dutchy of Millain; and four of the beſt Havens in the Adriatick, which properly belonged to the Realm of Naples: not giving aid to any of their diſtreſſed neighbours, without the mortgage or direct ſale of ſome piece or other. Which ſordid kinde of merchandizing, drew all the Princes, of thoſe parts, (confederated together in a league at Cambray, Anno 1508) to make war upon them; every one to recover by ſtrong hand, what the Venetian had extorted from them, in their neceſſity. And the confederates thrived ſo well, that Maximilian the Emperor recovered to the Empire, the Towns and Territories of Padua, Vincentia, Verona, Trieſt, Friuli, and whatſoever elſe he laid claim unto; the Popes in right of the Church, regained Ravenna, Cervia, Rimini (or Arminum) and Faventia; Lewis the 12. of France, in right of the Dutchy of Millaine, Bergamum, Crema, Cremona, Brixia: the King of Spain in right of the Realm of Naples, Manfredonia, Trano, Barlette, and Monopoli, all upon the Adriatick; the Duke of Ferrara gained Rovigo, and the Duke of Mantua the Town of Aſula. So that the Venetians being (like the Jay) ſtripped of all their feathers, were fain to quit the firm land, and betake themſelves unto the Iſles and Mariſhes of their City; having not one foot of all their whole Dominion left them in Italie, but their Seas and Iſlands. And yet in very little time, partly by working on the Pope, to whom they quitted all their intereſt in the Towns aforeſaid; and partly by dividing the reſt of the confederates from one another; they recovered all that they had loſt, in a little time: except the Towns of Naples only, for which they were not willing to contend with the Crown of Spain.

The Government is Ariſtocratical, managed only by the principal men of all the City, both for birth and breeding; the common people having no authority in affairs of State. Their chief Officers at the firſt were many, whom they called Tribunes: but experience being had of that confuſion, which a multitude of Governors carrieth for the moſt part with it, in the year 709. they made choice of one chief Officer, whom they called their Duke. Under theſe Dukes they have gotten that great Dominion which they now injoy: The authority of which Dukes was at firſt more abſolute, but by degrees reſtrained and limited within narrower bounds. He that beholdeth him in his Robes, his gravity and outward Port, and the reſpect given him by the people, would think no Prince could be more abſolute and ſupreme. But look upon him in the exerciſe and powers of Government, and he is nothing in the world but an empty Title. For notwithſtanding that he injoyeth ſo great a dignity, yet hath he a full power in nothing, not being able to determine in any point, without the preſence of his Counſellors (being ſix in number) who alwaies ſit with him, and diſpatch affairs both publick and private; as namely, giving audience to Ambaſſadors from Forain States, receiving Letters from their own Miniſters, granting of Priviledges, and the like; in which the Duke can do juſt nothing, if four (at leaſt) of theſe Counſellors be not preſent with him. And yet theſe Counſellors without him may conclude of any thing. Nay he is ſo reſtrained in all things to the power of the Senate, and to three Officers called the Capi, that he may not go out of the Town without their conſent; and by them is preſcribed an Order in his own Apparel. So that he is but little better than a Priſoner, when within the City; and a Traytor, if he ſtir abroad: at the beſt but an honourable Servant. And his Revenue is as little as his Authority; as being allowed out of the common Treaſury, no more than 40000 Ducats a year, towards his expence and entertainment. As for the Soveraignty of the State, that reſides wholly in the Senate; but repreſentatively in the Duke, the ſix Counſellors, and the three Heads or Preſidents of the Forty; which are thoſe Officers (as I take it) whom they call the Capi. The Senate or Great Councel, conſiſts of all the Gentlemen of Venice, above five and twenty years of age, which may amount unto the number of 2500. though ſeldom half that number do aſſemble at once, by reaſon of their ſeveral imployments in affairs of the Common-wealth, in other places: who uſually do meet together every Sunday morning, and on the mornings of other Feſtivals, where they chooſe Magiſtrates, and diſtribute Governments, and order matters of the State. But becauſe ſuch great bodies move but ſlowly, and are not very capable of truſt and ſecrecy, they parcel this great Councel into leſſer Members; whereof the principal are the Pregadi, and the Councel of Ten. That of the Pregadi conſiſteth of 120 in which they treat of, and determine matters of the greateſt importance; and therein conclude commonly of ſuch principal points, as formerly have been propoſed and treated of in the great Aſſembly: And in this Councel, beſides the 120 before mentioned, the Duke, the ſix Counſellors, and the Councel of Ten, and all ſuch as have born any publick Office, have their voice or ſuffrage. This is that Councel which properly and more ſpecially is called the Senate; in which nothing is to be concluded or paſſed into Acts, except four of the ſix Counſellors be preſent at them, and that ſixty at the leaſt of the whole number, give their ſuffrage to it. Then for the Councel of Ten, their power is univerſal, over all affairs, ſuch as the other Councels may not meddle with, as to conclude of war, or peace, to put in execution what they think moſt neceſſary for the benefit of the Common-wealth, and other things of like weight and moment: which if they were firſt treated of in the General Councel or Aſſembly, and after in that of the Pregadi, as they ought to be in common courſe; could not be poſſibly managed with ſuch ſpeed and ſecrecy, as the exigencies of the State require. And in this Councel, with the Prince and his ſix Aſſiſtants, the Supreme Majeſty of the State doth reſide eſpecially. Some other Officers there are, and thoſe of great authority and reputation, as the Procurators of S. Mark, which have the charge of the publick Treaſures; and the Avogadori, or Tribunes (as one might call them) of the people, being three in all; one of which muſt be alwaies preſent in all conſultations, leſt any thing ſhould paſs to the prejudice, and infringement of the Priviledges of the common people. Venice.

For the whole body of the City conſiſteth either of the Gentlemen, or of Artificers and Commons. Theſe laſt are the deſcendants and progeny of ſuch as came to ſettle here when the State was fixed; invited to dwell here, and to follow their occupations, by ſeveral Priviledges and Immunities which were offered to them; and theſe they neither admit into any of their Councels, nor into any of the Offices of Truſt and Power, except it be two; that namely of the Chancellor, and the principal Secretaries, which pertain only to the people. The other are the iſſue or deſcendants of thoſe, who firſt laid the foundation of their City and Common-wealth: and theſe they have in ſuch reſpect, and ſo high eſteem, that to make any Stranger (how great and eminent ſoever) a Gentleman of the City, is the greateſt honour they can beſtow; and not beſtowed but upon the beſt deſerver. Henry the 3d of France taking this City in his way out of Poland, thought himſelf graced with this attribute, which they are very dainty and ſparing of, it being they higheſt honour which they vouchſafe to impart to ſuch commanders of their own, and Ambaſſadors of other Princes, as have well deſerved it. And that this honour may be kept up to the very height, and their nobility not grow too cheap, by being too numerous; neither the younger ſons of theſe Gentlemen within the City, or of the Noblemen in the Countrey, are permitted to marry. But otherwiſe the ſuffer them to ſatisfie their luſts, with too much impunity; and for their ſakes allow of Stews, as an evil not to be voided on the former grounds.

Now as Otho in Tacitus ſaid to the Pretorian Souldiers, Princeps è Senatu oritur, Senatus è vobis: ſo out of theſe Gentlemen are choſen the Senators, out of them the Duke. His election by Contarenus is deſcribed in this manner. In the vacancy of the place, all the Gentry above thirty years of age are aſſembled. So many as meet, caſt their names into a pot; and in another, are juſt ſo many bals, of which thirty only are gilt. Then a child draweth for each, till the thirty gilt ones be all drawn; for which thirty the child draweth again the ſecond time out of another pot, that hath only nine guilt bals. The nine ſo drawn, nominate forty, out of which forty are twelve again ſelected by the ſame kinde of lot. Theſe twelve nominate five and twenty, out of which five and twenty are nine again by lot ſet apart. Theſe nine nominate five and forty, who are by lot again reduced unto eleven. Theſe eleven chooſe forty one of the beſt and chiefeſt of the Senators; who after an oath taken ſeverally, to chooſe whom they judge worthieſt, write in a ſcrole every one whom he beſt liketh. The ſcrols are mingled together, and then drawn; the fitneſs of the perſons then drawn is diſcuſſed; and he that hath moſt voyces above five and twenty, is the man whom they pronounce to be elected, and adjudge with due ſolemnities to be created their Duke. By the like kinde of Lottery do the chooſe Gentlemen into the Senate, and make publick Officers; inſomuch that Contarenus, who hath committed unto writing theſe publick Forms, conceiveth (I will not ſay how rightly) that the Venetian Common-wealth was modelled by Plato's platform.

But whether this be ſo or not, certain it is, that this Commonwealth thus conſtituted, and modelled, as before is ſaid; hath laſted longer under one form of Government, than any Republick in the world, either Greek or Roman. Nor hath it only preſerved it ſelf in the ſame condition, but may moſt juſtly be accompted one of the ſtrongeſt Bulwarks of Chriſtendom againſt the incroachments of the Turks: the wars whereof hath procured peace, and the peace thereof procured plenty, to the reſt of Europe. Inſomuch, that it may well be ſaid, that as Europe is the Head of the World, and Italie the Face of Europe; ſo Venice is the Eye of Italie; the faireſt, ſtrongeſt, and moſt active part in that powerful Body. As if the Genius of old Rome by ſome Pythagorical tranſmigration had paſſed into the body of this powerful State; and animated it with all the vertues of that City, but knit with a more permanent and conſtant temper. From ſo baſe and abject a beginning, is this City grown to be one of the beſt Supporters of the Arms of Europe.

As for the Religion of this State, they tolerate that of the Greek Church, but they themſelves profeſs no other than that of the Church of Rome: yet with ſuch caution and reſpect to their own authority, that they ſuffer not the Clergy to injoy thoſe priviledges, which they poſſeſs in other Countreys, to the publick prejudice. Hence grew the quarrel betwixt them, and Pope Paul the fifth; in which the Signeury ſtood ſtifly to their ancient Rights, and cauſed Maſs to be duly ſaid, notwithſtanding all their Churches were under the Interdict; baniſhed the Jeſuites for ever out of their Dominions, for ſtickling too buſily in behalf of the Pope: and in the end prevailed ſo far by their conſtant courage, that the Pope was fain to give over the cauſe, and reconcile them to the Church, without any ſubmiſſion. A notable example to all Chriſtian Princes, how to behave themſelves towards thoſe of Rome; who are not to be gained upon, but by ſuch reſiſtances. So eaſie a thing it is for men of conſtancy and courage, to ſhake off that yoke, which Papal Tyranny and Superſtition hath impoſed upon them.

In managing their wars they anciently obſerved two Rules, which much conduced to the inlargement and ſecurity of their Common-wealth. The firſt was the exempting of their own Citizens from the wars (not out of jealouſie, but care of their preſervation) unleſs compelled to the contrary by extreme neceſſity: the body of their Armies being compounded out of the Provincial Subject, intermixt with Mercenaries. By means whereof, they did not only keep their City in the ſame condition, able at any

Venice. time, and at all times, to give Law to the reſt of their Dominions: but waſted the hot and boyling ſpirit of their Subjects, in the Wars abroad; which otherwiſe might have made too much work at home. The other was the entertaining of ſome neighbouring Prince to be the generall of their Forces; whom in the concluſion of the ſervice they diſmiſſed with honour and reward. And by this courſe they avoyded faction, and prevented ſervitude: Either or both of which might have happned by employing any of their own great ones in the chief command; who (after the example of Julius Cæſar in the ſtate of Rome) having a ſtrong party within the City, and an Army without, might perhaps have made himſelf their Prince. But this was only in the Conduct of their wars in Italy, and in ſuch times when the State was not ſo well ballanced as it hath been ſince.

As for the Forces of the State, we may behold them in relation to Sea, or Land. Their Land-forces which they have in continuall pay, for defence of their Dominion, conſiſt of 28000 Foot, with Captains, and all other Officers inrolled and paid; and beſides thoſe they have a choice band of 4000 Muſquetiers: for exerciſing of which they keep yeerly Muſters, as well to improve them in experience, as to proportion them ſome gratuities, according to their well-deſervings. And as for Horſe, they maintain conſtantly 6000 men at Arms, well appointed and paid; the like whereof is not to be found in all Italy. And yet beſides this conſtant and ordinary eſtabliſhment, they are able to bring great Forces into the field; as appeareth by their Army againſt Lewis the twelfth: in which without diſfurniſhing any of their Forts and Garriſons, they had 2000 men of Arms, 3000 light Horſe, 30000 Foot, moſt of their own naturall Subjects; ſaving that they were interlined with ſome bands of Switzers, to which people they give yeerly penſions, to be aſſured of their aid upon all occaſions. Then for the Sea-forces, beſides that they keep fifty Gallies in continuall action, for defence of the Adriatick, and that they have no leſſe then 200 more laid up in the Arſenall, with all manner of tackling and ammunition appertaining to them: they have 10000 men enrolled to ſerve at the Oar, and may raiſe as many as they pleaſe for thoſe kind of ſervices, out of thoſe parts of Sclavonia, which are ſubject to them. But the great evidence of the power they can make at Sea, was the great Fleet ſet out againſt the Grand Signeur for the War of Cyprus, An. 1570. in which they manned out one great Gallion, eleven great Gallies, five and twenty tall ſhips, and one hundred and fifty Gallies of leſſer burden; being in all one hundred and eighty ſeven ſail, fit for preſent ſervice. To give the totall ſum in brief, they held a war by Sea and Land for ſeven yeers together, againſt all the Princes of Chriſtendome (excepting England) confederated againſt them by the League of Cambray; in all which time they neither wanted men nor money; and in the end, were the leaſt loſers by the bargain.

By this we may conjecture alſo at the greatneſſe of the publique Treaſury, and of the yeerly income which ſupplies the ſame. For though it be conceived that their ordinary ſtanding Revenue be but four millions of Ducats yeerly (which yet is more than any Chriſtian Prince can boaſt of except France and Spain) yet they have many other ways to advance their Treaſury, by laying new Impoſts on Commodities, as they ſee occaſion; Which needs muſt riſe to vaſt and moſt conſiderable ſums, in a City of the greateſt Traffick of any in Europe; and perhaps in all the world beſides. And yet beſides ſuch Cuſtoms and Impoſts as they lay on Merchandize, there is nothing which the people do eat or drink, for which they pay not ſomething to the publick Treaſury: over and above which, the pooreſt Labourer in the whole Signeury payeth his Poll-money alſo. Inſomuch, that it is credibly affirmed, that the Chriſtians generally do live in a better condition under the Turk, than under the Venetians. Without ſuch helps, (though heavy and burdenſome to the Subject) they could not poſſibly have ſpent twelve millions in the war againſt Selimus the ſecond; and as many a little before that, in the enterprize of Ferrara, and the war raiſed againſt them by the League of Cambray, which was that formerly remembred.

As for the Dukes of Venice, though no Soveraign Princes, nor ſuch as do ſucceed each other in the right of inheritance: yet being they are alwayes men of moſt eminent note, and that in their names all the buſineſſe of State is acted, and all writings dated, I will ſubjoyn a Catalogue of them to this preſent time; to the end that meeting with their names in the courſe of Hiſtory, we may the better know in what times they lived.

The Dukes of Venice.

The principall Orders of Knighthood in this Republick are, 1 Of S. Mark, who is the Patron of this City, instituted in the yeer 1330. and renewed again (being grown somewhat out of use) An. 1562. The honour is commonly bestowed on the person present, sometimes by Letters Patents on a party absent; as lately upon Daniel Heinsius, one of great eminence for learning in the Netherlands. The person chosen is to be of noble blood, at the least a Gentleman; the Word or Motto of the Order, is Pax tibi Marce.

2. Of the glorious Virgin, first instituted by Bartholomew of Vincentia, An. 1222. Their charge is to defend Widows and Orphans, and to procure (as much as in them is) the peace of Italy. It was allowed of by Pope Urban the fourth, An 1262. The Arms of this Order, are a Purple Crosse, between certain Stars. The habit a white Surcote over a Russet Cloak; and seems to be as well a Religious, as a Military Institution, like to the Spanish Orders, and that of Malta.

There are in the Provinces of this Common-wealth, before described, Patriarchs 2 Bishops 16.

The great Dukedome of TVSCANIE.

HAving thus run along the Coast of the Adriatick, or upper Sea, from the Lands of the Church unto the Alpes, which divide Italy from Germany; let us next keep along the tract of the Tuscan or Lower Sea, from the said Lands of the Church, to that part of the Alpes which divide Italy from France. And in the first place we meet with the Dukedome of Florence, or the Estate of the great Duke of Tuscany; divided on the East from S. Peters Patrimony, by the River Pisco; on the West, from the Common-wealth of Genoa, by the River Macra, and the strong Fort of Sarezana; on the North from Romandiola, and Marca Anconitana, by the Apennine Hills; and on the South side it is bounded with the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Seas.

It taketh up the greatest and goodlyest part of all that which antiently was called Tuscany, from the Greek word θύειν, which signifieth to sacrifice; of which act of Religious Worship, or rather of some superstitious Ceremonies appertaining to it they are conceived to be the Authors. And to say truth, they were much given to Sooth-sayings, and Divinations, and such like vanities of Gentilism: Tages, that Merlin of the old World, first appearing here, from whom they learned the greatest part of their Superstitions. So that this name was adventitious and accidentall. For properly and originally it was called Tyrrhenia, from Tyrrhenus the sonne of Atys King of Lydia, who came and planted in these parts about the time that Gedeon judged the Tribes of Israel. But these names signified the same both Countrey and people, though in divers Languages, and with respect to different Originations: the name of Tyrrheni, and Tyrrhenia being most used by the Greeks; as that of Tusci, and Tuscia, by their neighbours of Rome, who also called the people Hetrusci, and the Countrey Hetruria, from a particular Province of it which was so entituled. Antiently it extended as far Eastward as the banks of Tiber, the other bounds being then as they are at the present; and in that tract gave dwelling to a potent Nation. Who not content to be restrained within the Apennine and the Tiber, wasted three hundred Towns of the Umbri, the next bordering Nation; and built twelve Cities on the other side of the Mountains; that is to say, Adria, Verona, Vincentia, Trent, Bergamo, Mantua, Como, Vercellæ, Novara, Parma, Bononia, and Rhegium; all of esteem and reputation to this very day. They were the first Nation that carryed an Offensive War to the Gates of Tuſcany. Rome, when they gave aid to the Tarquins under King Porſena; and held it out on the Defenſive as long as any: No people in all Italy ſtanding more ſtiffly in defence of their common Liberties, than the Faliſci, and Veientes, two Hetrurian Tribes. But nothing could withſtand the fortune of that growing Empire. Twelve Nations of them were brought under by Tarquinius Priſcus, who from hence brought to Rome, the Faſces and Triumphall Ornaments, and other embelliſhments of State: the Veii and Faliſci, by the Sword of Camillus; the Conqueſt perfected by the conduct of Valerius Corvinus, and Fulv. Centumalus A. V. C. 455. So the Tuſcans were ſubdued at laſt, after they had been governed by their own Kings 1132 years; that is to ſay, from Tarchon Priſcus their firſt King, A. M. 2550, to Turenus Ceſo their laſt King, A. M. 3668.

Rome,

The chief Towns of it in thoſe times were 1 Veii, and 2 Peruſia, ſpoken of before. 3 Feſulæ, then of very great fame, now a poor Village hard by Florence. 4 Agyllina, ſituate not far from the Lake of Thraſymene, which from hence was called Vadum Agyllinum: the chief Town of the Tuſcans at the coming of Æneas into Italy, and the Seat Royall of Mezentius that noted Tyrant, ſo often mentioned by Virgil. Firſt built by the Pelaſgi, a Greek people, and by them thus named; afterwards by miſtake called Cære: by like miſtake as Peru, Yucatan, and others of the American Provinces, got their preſent names: as ſhall there be ſhewn. For the Tuſcans, or the Romans as others ſay, demanding in their language of a Countrey fellow, the name of the place, was anſwered in his language, χαῖρε, that is to ſay, God ſave you, or God ſpeed you: which word they taking for the name of the Town, did ever after call it Cære. Memorable in old time for the Baths adjoyning, from hence called Balnea Cæretana; more for the preſervation of the Veſtal Fire, and the other holy things of Rome, when that Town was taken by the Galls. Rewarded hereupon with all the priviledges of Rome, except right of Suffrage: from whence the Tables, in which the Roman Cenſors uſed to inroll the names of thoſe, whom they deprived of their Votes in Senate, or any other publick Counſell, were called Carites Tabulæ. 5 Phalcria, on the ſea-ſide, the principall Town of the Faliſci, of which there is ſome remainder extant in the Village called Falaris. 6 Cluſium, the Seat-royall of King Porſena, for aiding which againſt the Galls, the Romans drew upon themſelves the fury of that turbulent people. Piſa, Aretium, and ſuch others as are ſtill in being, we ſhall ſpeak of afterwards.

The Rivers and the ſoyl do remain as formerly, though the firſt altered in their names. The principall of which are, 1 Arnus ſpoken of before, in the generall ſurvey of Italy. 2 Sercius, by Ptolemy called Boactus, a River which by the excellency of its Carps and Trouts, makes ſome amends unto the people for its violent Land-floods. 3 Palia, as violent and dangerous as the other, but not ſo profitable; which falleth into Tiber, neer Orviette. 4 Martha, by Ptolemy called Oſa. Here is alſo the Lake Volſinius, which is twenty four miles in compaſſe; and that called antiently Sabatinus, but now Laco Braciani, from which water was conveyed to Rome. By reaſon of theſe and other Lakes, and the frequent over-flowings of the Rivers, the Countrey in former times was full of Bogs, which made the air unhealthy, and the wayes unpaſſable; it being in the Flats and Mariſhes of Hetruria, that Annibal was ſo turmoiled, loſing herein the greateſt part of his Elephants, and one of his eyes. But ſince thoſe times partly by the induſtry of the people, and the great providence of the Princes; the Fens in moſt places are well drained, and the Bogs converted to firm land: whereby the air is rectified, and the wayes made pleaſant; care being alſo taken, by great banks and ramparts, to keep the Rivers for the moſt part within their channels. So that the Countrey is now full of very ſpacious fields, and fruitfull vallies, ſwelled here and there with pleaſant mountains, little inferior in fertility to the richeſt vales; abundantly well ſtored with delicious wines, and plentifull, in a word, of all the bleſſings of nature: ſave that the parts about Florence are defective in Wheat, the want of which is ſupplyed from the fields of Sienna, where there is plenty enough of it for themſelves and their neighbours; though no ſuch ſuperfluity, as to ſpare any of it unto other Provinces.

But to return unto the ſtory, Tuſcany being thus brought under the command of Rome, was made the ſecond of thoſe eleven Regions, into which Italy was divided by Auguſtus Cæſar. In the diviſion of it made by Antoninus, and in that of Conſtantine, it made with Umbria one of the ten Provinces, which was immediately ſubject to the Præfect of the City of Rome. Afterwards in the declination of the Roman Empire, it became a member of the Kingdome of Lombardy, then of the French, and finally of the German Empire: during which times it was governed by an Officer of truſt and power, whom I find ſometimes called the Marqueſſe, ſometimes Duke of Tuſcany; who had here more or leſs authority, as they could work on the neceſſities of their ſeverall Princes. Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards had been Duke of Tuſcany, and ſo was Albericus in the time of the Berengarii; and Guido is called Marqueſs of it, under the reign of Henricus Auceps the German Emperour. Afterwards as the Popes grew in power and greatneſſe, ſo they made bold to intermeddle in the affairs of this Province: giving it one while to the Kings of Naples; another while to the Dukes of Anjou, making ſome challenge to that Kingdome. In which diſtractions the Florentines firſt bought their own liberty, of the Emperour Rodolphus Habſpurgenſis; and after purchaſed the Town and Territory of Cortona, of Ladiſlaus King of Naples; that of Arezzo, for 40000 Florens, of Duke Lewis of Anjou. After this time they husbanded their affairs ſo well, that they became one of the moſt conſiderable Eſtates in Italy; and at the laſt by taking in Piſa and Sienna, they got the abſolute dominion of the beſt and largeſt part of Tuſcany: which now is under the command of the great Duke, and may be branched moſt fitly into theſe four parts; that is to ſay, the Cities and Territories of 1 Florence, 2 Piſa, 3 Sienna, and 4 the Iſlands ſituate in the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian ſeas.

1. And firſt the Territory or Eſtate of Florence, taketh up the North part of this great Dukedome, having the Apennine on the North, and the Eſtates of Piſa and Sienna on the South. So called from from the City of FLORENCE, ſituate nigh unto the conflux of the Rivers Arnus and Chianus; the former paſſing through the middeſt of the City, which is joyned together with four Bridges of ſtone: environed with mountains, which do ſerve as a Fortreſs againſt Invaſions, and for defence againſt the Winds. Firſt built by L. Sylla that bloody Dictator; afterwards made a Colony by the Triumviri, Auguſtus, Antony, and Lepidus; from the flouriſhing ſituation of it being called Florentia. The Lombards upon ſome diſpleaſure razed it to the ground, but it was rebuilt by Charlemagne; to whom and whoſe Succeſſors they continued faithfull, as long as they had any thing to do with the State of Italy: but after, they betook themſelves to the Papall faction, and were as rigid Guelfs as any. On this foundation it now ſtands, and is indeed a very fair and flouriſhing City, agreeable unto the name; the ſtreets being very ſtraight and large, paved with ſquare ſtone, and alwayes kept exceeding clean: the ordinary buildings beautifull above any in Italy, beſides many fair and ſtately Palaces adorned with Statua's. The principall of the Palaces is that of the Great Duke, taking up the room of 50 houſes which were wont to ſtand there; capable of a great retinue: and for the largeneſs of the building, the Architecture and Ornaments of it, as alſo for the Gardens, Fountains, Statues, and other Acceſſaries, equalling, if not ſurpaſſing the goodlieſt Palaces in all Europe. The like may alſo be affirmed of the Cathedrall, highly commended for the excellency of the Workmanſhip, but that eſpecially of the Steeple, which both for ſtuff and ſtructure is beyond compare. This Church is called commonly the Annunciata, and worthily accounted one of the chief Ornaments of Florence; in which City there are beſides ſo many excellent pieces and curious rarities, that the Arch-duke Charles was wont to ſay, that it was a City not to be ſeen but on Holy-dayes. As for the Inhabitants of this City and the parts adjoyning, they are a very induſtrious people, and generally ſaid to be of a very great wit, ſubtile heads and of much inſight into buſineſſe: and yet Count Imbalt, a French Gentleman, was uſed to ſay, Non ſapeve dove conſiſteſſe l'ingegne tanto celebrate di Fiorentini, that he could never find where that great wit of the Florentines lay. Guicciardine the Hiſtorian, was without doubt a notable Stateſ-man; and Machiavel, once the Recorder of this City, a man of as ſhrewd a brain as any; and ſo were the two Coſmo's of the houſe of the Medices: but whether all the Florentines, or the major part of them, be of ſuch extraordinary wits as they ſay they are, I am not very well reſolved of; nor is it much materiall to enquire into it. Florence.

The other Cities and chief places of this firſt diviſion, are 1 Feſulæ, once a Roman Colony, now a ſmall Village called Fieſoli; ſituate in the ſtraights of the Apennine, not far from Florence, which is thought to have riſen chiefly from the ruins of it: moſt memorable for the great defeat here given by Stilico, to the great Army of the Gothes, conducted into Italy under Rhadaguſus. 2 Pizoria, or Piſtoia, ſeated on the foot of the Apennine, but ruinated with its own diſſenſions: of which the greateſt and moſt laſting, were thoſe betwixt the Neri and Bianchi (or the black men and the white) which divided Florence; and that between the Guelfs and Gibellines, which here took beginning, and for a long time exerciſed the peace of Chriſtendome. This laſt began (as ſome ſay) upon the quarrel of two brothers, of which the one named Guelfo, ſtood for the Pope; the other named Gibellino, declared for the Emperour. The quarrel ſpreading into parties, called the Guelfs and the Gibellines, became at laſt the wonder and amazement of all good people: inſomuch as ſome are of opinion, that the fiction of the Elfs and Goblins, wherewith we uſe to fright young children, was derived from hence. As for the City it ſelf, it is ſeated in a fair and goodly plain, compaſſed with mountains; the ſtreets paved with free-ſtone, and the Church (which is Cathedrall) with Marble. It was firſt walled by Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards, when he was Governour of this Province; but for all that was forced to ſubmit it ſelf to the power of the Florentine, by whom it was ſubdued An. 1150. when as yet themſelves were not the abſolute Maſters of their own City. 3 Volterra built among the mountains, the birth-place of Linus ſucceſſor to St. Peter in the See of Rome. It ſtandeth on the top of an hill, the walls thereof made of ſquare ſtone ſix foot long, which are very neatly joyned together without Mortar: and in thoſe Walls five Gates for entrance, each Gate having neer unto it a very fair Fountain. The Marble Statues, and ſome Epitaphs in Tuſcan Letters, do evidently declare it to be very antient. In this Town was born Rodolphus Volterranus, one of the greateſt Reſtorers of Learning in the Weſt parts of the World. 4 Monte Pulciano, in Latin called Mons Politianus, a well fortified City, and the birth-place of Angelus Politianus, the Reviver of the Latin or Roman Elegancies. 5 Prato, another ſtrong piece of this part alſo. Neighboured by a retiring place of the Great Dukes, called Pratoline, a right pleaſant Village, beautified with a magnificent Palace; in which beſides many other ſingularities, are moſt curious Water-works, equall, if not ſuperior unto thoſe of Tivoli. 6 Cortona, an antient City of the Tuſcans, ſituate at the foot of the Apennine; ſold to the Florentines by Ladiſlaus King of Naples. 7 Aretium or Arezzo, one of the antient Cities of the Tuſcans alſo, and ſold to the Florentines as the other was; this being bought for 40000 Florins of Lewis of Anjou, then the Popes Vicegerent in this Countrey. 8 Borgo San Sepulcro, ſeated on the Tiber, neer, or within the Spoletan Dukedome; added to this Signeury by Coſmo de Medices, the firſt of that name: by whom bought of Pope Eugenius the fourth for the ſum of 25000 Florins, and laid unto the Patrimony of this Commonwealth; to which it ſerveth for a Bulwark on that ſide of this Countrey.

To this Diviſion alſo we may beſt refer the ſmall, but rich Signeury of Maſſa, ſituate on the borders of the ſtate of Genoa. Chief Towns whereof, 1 Maſſa it ſelf, which gives the title of a Marqueſs to the Lord hereof, of the Family of the Maleſpines. 2 Carara, three miles off from Maſſa, and more neer the Sea; of great fame for its Quarries of whiteſt Marble (much uſed in the time of the Roman greatneſs) and a breed of the faireſt Women in Italy. The Prince hereof a Feudatary to the Duke of Florence, but amongſt his own vaſſals abſolute enough.

Piſa and Sienna.

2. The ſecond member of this eſtate, is the City and Territory of PISA, lying towards the Sea, betwixt the Genoeſe on the Weſt, and the Territory of Sienna on the Eaſt. The City firſt built by the Piſæ, a people of Elis in Greece: who following old Neſtor from Troy, were by the violence of the wind driven upon this coaſt; and here upon the River Arno, where it meeteth with Serchius, did erect this Town. In the diſtractions of the Empire it ſtood up for it ſelf, and grew ſo potent, that at one time they waged War both with the Venetians, and Genoeſe. They were once Maſters of Sardinia, Corſica, and the Baleares; but finally being diſcomfited by the Genoeſe neer the Iſle of Giglio, An. 1369. they ſubmitted themſelves to the protection of Charles the fourth, by whom it was made free. Not long after, it was taken by John Galeaze the firſt Duke of Millain, (An. 1404. by John Marid his ſonne and Succeſſor ſold unto the Florentines; from whoſe command they freed themſelves by a popular violence. The Florentines upon this beſieged them, and brought them to ſuch extremity of hunger, that they were ready to be ſtarved. Yet ſuch was the humanity of the Beſiegers, that when they entred the Town, every man carryed victuals in his hand in ſtead of weapons, to beget as it were, new life in that rebellious people. This victory the Florentines got by the valour and conduct of Sir John Hawkwood, whom the Italians call Giovanni di Aguto; who being firſt a Taylor in Eſſex, aftewards ſerved Edward the third in his French wars, where he was knighted. And when, upon the peace concluded after the battel of Poictiers, he wanted employment; he entred with his Regiment into Italy, and put himſelf into the pay of the Florentines, then in war with this City: who for his valour, have honoured him with a very fair Tomb and Monument. When Charles the 8th. went into Italy, the Piſans again revolted; and were not without much labour and great charges, reduced to their former obedience. As for the City it ſelf, it is almoſt as big as Florence; this being five miles in compaſs, and that but ſix; but very ſhort of it in the numbers of people, Florence being ſaid to contain 90000 ſouls, Piſa not a third part of that proportion; yet hath it very good advantages to make it populous, that is to ſay, the publick Arſenal for ſhipping, an Univerſity for Students, and the See of an Archbiſhop: the Cathedrall Church of which is a very beautifull peece of work, the Gates thereof are braſs, and the Steeple of it of ſuch artificiall and exquiſite building, that it ſheweth as if it were always falling. But the unwholſomeneſs of the air over-ballanceth all theſe fair advantages.

The next place of importance within the Territory of this City, is the Town and Haven of Ligorn (Liburnum it is called in Latin) ſeated upon the influx of the River Arno; well fortified againſt the Genoeſe, by whom the works were once ſlighted, An. 1297. Upon a Reconciliation made between thoſe States it returned again to its old Maſters. And when the Piſans were ſold over to the Florentines, by the Duke of Millain; Thomas Fregoſa Duke of Genoa, ſeized upon this place, and ſold it alſo to the ſame Chapmen, for 120000 Ducats. By the care of Duke Coſmo and his two ſonnes, it is much improved in ſtrength and beauty; and ſo well fortified, that it is thought to be one of the ſtrongeſt Cities in Chriſtendome: Cities I ſay, and not Caſtles, the Caſtles of Stockholm in Sweden, and that of Millain, being held to be the ſtrongeſt Forts in the World. After this comes in 3 Peira Sancta, on the Weſt ſide of the Arnus, a place of great conſequence and ſtrength; one of the beſt pieces of the Piſans when a Free-eſtate, againſt their old enemies the Genoeſe, towards whom it ſtandeth. 4 Terraciola, Eaſtward of Ligorn, neighboured with a capacious Bay on the Mediterranean. 5 Caſtellona, an Epiſcopal See. And 6 Porto Berrata bordering on the Signeury of Sienna; now nothing but a ſtation for Ships (nor much uſed for that) but heretofore beautified with one of the beſt Cities of the Tuſcans, called Populonia.

3. The third member of this Dukedome is the City and Territory of SIENNA, lying betwixt the Eſtate of Piſa, and the land of the Church. The City ſaid to be built by Brennus, who did there put his old ſickly men to ſojourn, and called it Sena: the birth-place of Æneas Silvius, called afterwards Pope Pius the ſecond; of Francis Picolomini, after Pope Pius the third; and of Sixtus (hence ſurnamed) Senenſis, the greateſt Scholar of the three, if not of all the age he lived in. By Antonine in his Itinerarium called Senæ Juliæ; to difference it perhaps from another of that name neer the Adriatick, called Sena Gallica. Built neer the Spring, or Fountain of the River Arbia, now better known by the name of Treiſſa; but built (which makes the ſituation of it exceeding pleaſant) upon an high hill, on which there is a Caſtle that commands the Town; the ſtreets thereof even and very plain, centring in a large and ſpacious Market-place; neer to which is a very fair Palace, uſed for a Senate-houſe in the Free-Commonwealth: and on the South ſide neer the Walls, the Cathedrall Church, reputed to be one of the faireſt in Italy, having only one door into it, to which there is an aſcent by fair Marble ſtairs, of which the Pavement is made alſo. Having long held the Gibelline or Imperiall faction, it bought its liberty at an eaſie rate, of the Emperour Rodolphus the firſt. After it fell into the hands of the Spaniards, then of the French; and finally was made over to Coſmo de Medices Duke of Florence, by the King of Spain, An. 1558. in conſideration of the great charge he had been at to beat out the French; and other ſervices expected for the time to come. Coſmo being thus inveſted in it, deprived the people of their Arms, altered the Government, and was the firſt Prince who had the abſolute command of it, after the conſtitution of their Commonwealth: neither the French nor Spaniards ruling here as Lords, but only as called in by their ſeverall factions; and ſuffered to have Garriſons in it of their own people, by the agreement of their party. And to ſay truth, it ſtood with good reaſon of State, that the Florentine ſhould uſe all his wit to get this City; and having got it, uſe all means to aſſure it to him. For beſides that great acceſſion which it made unto his Eſtate; by adding thereunto the yeerly income of a hundred and fifty thouſand Ducats, above all expences: it was alſo to be carefully looked on as a Rivall, which had long time ſtood in competition with it, for the ſoveraign command of Tuſcany. Beſides there had been mighty animoſities be-between the Cities; the Florentine being alwayes of the Guelfes, and the Siennoys of the Gibelline faction. A faction at last so generally distasted in all Italy, and so abominable to the Popes, that on an Ashwednesday, when the Pope being to cast Ashes on the heads of the Cardinals, was to have said, Memento O homo quòd cinis es, & in cinerem converteris; according to the usage of the Church of Rome: seeing a Gibelline amongst them, he forgot himself, and said thus unto him, Memento O homo quòd Gibellinus es, & cum Gibellinis morieris. Of chief note next unto Sienna, are 1 Montalcino (Mons Alcinus in Latin) a place of great strength both by industry and situation. 2 Castro Cartaldo, seated upon a lofty Hill, most memorable for the Birth and Sepulchre of John Boccace, one of the best wits of his time, as his Decameron declareth; buried here with a sorry and unworthy Epitaph, not worth the labour of transcribing. 3 Soana, an Episcopall City; as also are 4 Pienza. 5 Crossetto, and 6 Chiusi; this last the Clusium of the antient Tuscans spoken of before. Besides these there are 26 walled Towns within this Signeury, but of no great observation in the course of businesse. The Tuscan Islands.

There belonged also unto this Common-wealth, when a State distinct, some Ports and Peeces on the Sea; which when it was consigned over to the Duke of Florence, were retained by the Spaniard: partly thereby to keep those Princes at his devotion; but principally that by holding so many places of importance in his own hands, he might carry at his Girdle the Keyes of Italy, and become Lord Paramont of those Seas. Of those the principall, if not all, 1 Piombino, in Latin called Plumbinum, from some Mines of Lead; adorned with a strong Castle, and a plentifull Territory: the Castle in the hands of the Spaniard, but the Town and Territory in possession of a Lord of its own, who receives the whole rents of the Estate. 2 Port Telamon, Eastward of Piombino, so called of old from Telamon an adjoyning Promontory, and known by this name in Plutarch, in the life of Marius. Accounted the chief City of Tuscany in those elder times, but most remarkable for the great battell fought neer unto it betwixt the Romans and the Galls, A. V. C. 529. the Army of the Galls consisting of 70000 Horse and Foot; that of the Romans little (if at all) inferior to it. A fight in which Attilius one of the Consuls being slain, the victory was gotten by Æmilius his Colleague, with the slaughter of 40000 of the Enemies, and the taking of 10000 Prisoners: Aneroestus and Congolianus two Kings of the Transalpine Galls being slain or taken. A victory which drew after it the totall subjugation of the Cisalpine Galls, which followed within three years after. 3 Orbitello, drawing more towards the East, the Cossa of the antient Writers. 4 Monte Argentorati, a Promontory or Peninsula, thrusting it self into the Sea, over against Orbitello; by the Latins called Mons Argentarius: and thought by some, who have observed the situation, strength and extent thereof, to be the fittest place for a Royall City to be built in, to command those Seas. 5 Port Hercule, which still retains its antient name, imparted to it from some Temple of Hercules, which was founded in it; situate neer the Eastern Isthmus of the said Peninsula. 6 Porto-Longone, a piece of speciall consequence for command of the Mediterranean; and for that cause of late times gotten by the French (then aiming at the conquest of Naples) but again recovered by the Spaniard, who doth now possess it.

The fourth and last member of this Estate, are the Islands in the Tuscan or Tyrrhenian Seas. The principall whereof is 1 Ilva, not above ten miles from Piombino; called antiently Æthalia, by the vulgar Elba. Pliny affirmed it to contain in compasse a hundred miles, but it proves upon a just ameasurement, to be but fifty. Not very well furnished with Corn, and less with fruits; but plentifull in Mines of Iron, as formerly for Steel and Copper: for which, especially for Steel, of great esteem in the time of Virgil; as appeareth by that passage in the tenth of the Æneids, where it is called

For unexhausted Mines of Steel.

But for all that, the Steel now failing, the want thereof is supplyed by Iron; which Iron is of so strange a nature, that every 25 yeer it renueth again upon the Mines, and will by no means melt whilst it is in the Island, but must be carryed somewhere else. It affordeth also Sulphur, Allom, Tin, Lead, Marble good plenty; and in some parts, the Loadstone also. Formerly it belonged to the Lords of Piombino, who not being able to defend it against the Turks, if they should at any time invade it; resigned it, by the Counsell of Charles the fifth, unto Cosmo di Medices the Duke of Florence: reserving to themselves the Revenues of it, and the Government of all the Towns and Villages therein, except those that were thought fit for Fortification. It hath a very fair Haven called Porto Ferrario, capable to receive any great Fleet that should come thither; and therefore if the Turks or Moors had been Masters of it, they might easily have commanded all the coasts adjoyning, as well in Provence as Italy. For the defence hereof, there are two strong Castles, situate on two little Mountains, on each side one; so fortified by Art and Nature, that they are held to be impregnable; having also good store of Canon, and all sorts of Warlike Ammunition. And not far off stands a strong Town built by the same Duke Cosmo, and by him called Cosmopolis; well fortified, and made the seat of his new order of St. Stephen, of which more hereafter.

The second Island of note is Giglio, called Iglium antiently, just opposite to Monte Argentorato, and having some 25 miles in compass; neer unto which the Genoese so discomfited the Pisans in a Fight at Sea, that they were never able to recover their former puissance. 3 Capraria not far from Ligorn, so called from its abundance of Goats; and for the same reason Ægilora, by the Greek Geographers:

as 4 Gallinaria not far off, took name from abundance of Hens. Of the reſt nothing memorable, but that ſome of them do occur in the antient Writers: of which ſort are Melorta, heretofore Lanellum, not far from Capraria. 2 Lanuſi, formerly Artemiſia, in which there is a very good Haven. 3 Gorgona, 4 Troia, and 5 the ſmall Illands which are called Formicæ. 6 To theſe we may adde alſo the Iſle of Planaſia, more memorable than the reſt, for the baniſhment and death of Agrippa Poſthumus, the Nephew of Auguſtus Cæſar by his daughter Julia; here murdered by the command of Tiberius, to prevent all future competition to the State Imperiall: ſituate ſomewhat nearer unto Corſica, than the reſt of theſe Iſlands.

As for the MEDICES, whoſe poſterity are now Dukes hereof, they were in the Free-ſtate (as Machiavil informs us in his Florentine Hiſtory) accounted in the chief rank of the Popular Nobility: thoſe being ſuch of the antient Nobles, as to be capable of the Magiſtracy, and publick Offices (then wholly ſhared among the Commons) had as it were degraded themſelves, and became part of the Commonalty. About the yeer 1410, John de Medices (the firſt great raiſer of this houſe) ſtoutly maintaining the Liberties of the people againſt the great ones; was by them ſo honoured and enriched, that he not only got a great party, but almoſt a Soveraignty in the City. To him ſucceeded his ſonne Coſmo, one of the greateſt Stateſmen of thoſe times; who did not only much reforme the civil Government, but enlarged the Territory of the State by the addition of Caſentino, Burgo St. Sepulchro, and ſome other pieces. Dying in the year 1464, he left the managery of the State to Peter de Medices his ſonne, whoſe whole time was conſumed in ſuppreſſing ſuch Factions, as had at home been raiſed againſt him: and at his death left all his power, and the great wealth which he had gotten (but with a greater meaſure of his Fathers vertues) to Lawrence, and Julian, his two ſonnes. The people after his deceaſe, either deſirous of Novelties, as moſt people are; or fearing to be made hereditary to this powerfull Family; ſeemed to incline to one of the Soderini, a man of plauſible deportment, and well beloved. But he judiciouſly conſidering, that new houſes as they are eaſily honoured, ſo are they as ſoon abandoned by the fickle multitude; conferred all the dependences which were caſt upon him, on theſe two young men of the Medices: as being deſcended from a Family which had long governed the City. Againſt theſe two, the Pazzi, a potent houſe in Florence, conſpired, and at Maſs they ſlew Julian, but Lorenzo eſcaped: the blows which were ſtruck at him, being received by one of his ſervants, whom two dayes before he had delivered out of priſon. For this fact the Pazzi were hanged at the Palace window, together with the Arch-biſhop of Piſa, who had been of the conſpiracy. To revenge the death of this Biſhop, Pope Paul the 2d. excommunicated the Florentines; and Ferdinand King of Naples warred upon them. Lorenzo to divert this miſchief, went in perſon to Naples; where he grew ſo much into the good liking of the King, that there was a perpetuall League made between them. After his death 1492, his ſonne Peter, having very improvidently delivered Piſa, and Ligorn, with other pieces, to the French King; was, together with his whole Family, baniſhed. John di Medices the ſonne of Lawrence, and Brother of Peter, being made Pope, by the name of Leo the 10th. reſtored again his Family; who not long after his death were again exil'd. This diſgrace Julio di Medices ſon to the above named Julian, and Pope of Rome, by the name of Clement the 7th. not enduring; procured Charles the fifth to beſiege it: which requeſt was granted, and the City after two yeers reſiſtance, yeelded. The Emperour then gave it to Alexander Medices (Grand-child to Peter, by his ſon Lawrence) An. 1531. And he to reſtrain the inſolencies of the people, built a ſtrong Citadell in the Town. This Alexander was a Prince of good parts enough, had he not been too much addicted to Luſt and Wantonneſſe; which being obſerved by Lawrence di Medices his own Couſen, he trained him to a ſecret place, under colour of bringing him to the bed of a beautifull Lady, and there baſely murdered him. Which done, in ſtead of calling the people to take Arms for recovery of their loſt Liberty, as he firſt intended; he fearfully left the City, and fled towards Venice. So that before the people had notice of the Accident, the heads of the Medices conſulted together, and ſent for Coſmo di Medices dwelling in the Countrey with his Mother (and then about 18 yeers of age) to be their Prince: as being the next Heir-male which was left of the Family, according to the Entail (as our Lawyers call it) made by Charles the Emperour. This Coſmo proving an excellent Stateſman, and a fortunate Commander, ſo ſwayed the affairs of Italy, that Philip the ſecond of Spain to be aſſured of his friendſhip, gave him the Signeury of Sienna, out of which he had lately driven the French; and Pius the 4th. had an intent to have crowned him King of Tuſcany. But Philip of Spain (though otherwiſe his ſpeciall friend) thwarted that intent, as loath to have in Italy any more Kings than himſelf. After in the yeer 1570. Pius the fifth crowned the ſaid Coſmo in the Court of Rome, with the title of Great Duke of Tuſcany, for him and his Heirs for ever. In the new Dukes Coronet he cauſed to be engraven theſe words, Pius quintus Pont. max. ob eximiam dilectionem & religionis catholicæ zelum, præcipuumque juſtitiæ ſtudium, donavit. Thus forward were theſe Popes to honour this Family; but their ſucceſſors have been otherwiſe affected to it. For when one of Duke Coſmo's ſucceſſors did ſince intreat a ſucceeding Pope, that he might be created King of Tuſcany; the Pope not liking ſo Lordly a title, made anſwer, that he was content, He ſhould be a King in Tuſcany, but not King of Tuſcany. A Scholar-like diſtinction, but not ſo ſatisfactory to the point propoſed.

The Dukes of Florence, and Great Dukes of Tuſcany.

1537 2 Coſmo II. the next heir of Alexander, deſcended from Lawrence, a brother of the firſt Coſmo; the wiſeſt Stateſman of his time.
1574 3 Francis di Medices, ſonne of Coſmo the 2d Father of Mary the French Queen.
1587 4 Ferdinand di Medices, the Brother of Francis.
1609 5 Coſmo III. ſonne of Ferdinand.
1621 6 Ferdinand II. ſonne of Coſmo di Medices, the twelfth of this Family, the ſixth Duke of Florence, and the fifth of Tuſcany.

The length of this Eſtate is 260 miles, the breadth in ſome places not much inferior, but growing narrower where it bordereth upon that of Genoa. In all which tract, the Great Duke hath but one conſiderable Port on the main land, which is that of Ligorn; ſo that his ſtrength in ſhipping is not very great: and yet might be greater than it is, if the Subjects did delight in Traffick, and not ſuffer their Commodities to be bought by Strangers (as generally they do in all this Countrey) and carryed thence in forain Veſſels. For otherwiſe being an induſtrious people, and well trained in Manufactures, their power at Sea muſt needs be greater than it is: the Great Dukes Fleet conſiſting ordinarily of no more than twelve Gallies, two Gallions, and five Galliaſſes. And for his power by land, he hath in readineſs ſixteen thouſand Foot, of his own ſubjects, well trained and muſtered under experienced Commanders, to ſerve him upon all occaſions; and a hundred men at Arms, and 400 Light-horſmen, well paid, as well in times of Peace, as in time of War. And beſides theſe, he keeps ſo many Forts and Towns in continuall Garriſon, that his Eſtate is ſaid to be made of Iron.

The only Order of Knighthood in this Eſtate is that of S. Stephen, inſtituted by Coſmo di Medices, An. 1561. and dedicated to S. Stephen, becauſe upon the Feſtivall of Stephen, Pope and Martyr, being the 6 of Auguſt, he won the famous battell of Marciano. Pope Pius the fourth confirmed it the ſame yeer, and granted them all the Priviledges which they of Malta enjoy: conditioned that thoſe of this Order ſhould make a vow of Charity, of conjugall Chaſtity, and Obedience. They are to be nobly born, and in lawfull Wedlock; of the Romiſh Church, and without note of infamy. Their Robe is of white Chamlet, with a red Croſs on their left ſide, as well upon their Military Garments, as their wearing Cloaks: intended principally againſt the Turks and Moors, for which cauſe ſetled firſt at Piſa, being neer the Sea; but after at Coſmopolis in the Iſle of Ilva. The number of them is uncertain, the Great Duke the Supreme Maſter of it. Other Orders are commonly ſimple, but this mixt; being partly religious, partly honourary.

What the Revenues of it were in the Free-Eſtate, I am not able to determine. That they were very great is manifeſt, in that having in thoſe five yeers, wherein they waged War againſt the Duke of Millain, ſpent three millions and an half of Florens; their Treaſury was ſo far from being exhauſted, that the next yeer they beſieged and endangered the City of Luca. Since the altering of the Commonwealth into a Dukedome, and the addition of the Territory and City of Sienna; the Revenues of the Duke are conceived to be a million and an half of Ducats yearly. Of which 600000 Crowns are raiſed yeerly out of the Dominion of the City of Florence; 150000 more out of that of Sienna, the cuſtoms ariſing out of the Port of Ligorn, amount yeerly to 130000 Ducats, the toll of Milſtones only unto 160000; that of Salt, Mines, and Iron, falls not ſhort of that: in all a million and 200000 Ducats. Then hath the Duke his ſtock going amongſt the Bankers, and trades as much as any, in the way of Merchandizing; whereas in other Countreys he loſeth the priviledges of a Nobleman, that betakes himſelf to Trade and Merchandize. He uſeth alſo to buy up almoſt all the Corn, which is brought into the Countrey out of other parts, and ſell it again at his own price: forbidding any to be ſold till all his be vended. The reſt is made up by Exciſe upon all Commodities, even unto very Herbs and Sallads, which lies very heavy on the Subject, the poor eſpecially: inſomuch, that is was tartly ſaid, and perhaps not untruly, Qui ſub Medicis vivit, miſerè vivit; applying an old Rule in a new ſenſe.

The Arms are Or, five Torteaux Gules, two, two, and one, and one in chief Azure, charged with three Flower de Lyces of the firſt.

The State of LVCA.

IN the Weſt part of Tuſcany, betwixt the Eſtate of the Great Duke, and the Common-wealth of Genoa, lieth the City of LVCA, ſo called from Lucamo, a King of the Tuſcans, who is ſaid to have built it: ſit ſate on the River Serchius, not far from the mountains of Luna, whence the Countrey Luca. is at this day called Lunagiana. It is about three miles in compaſſe, and contains about 24000 Inhabitants, who generally are a curteous and modeſt people, men of good judgement, and diſcreet, and by their wiſdoms have preſerved themſelves a free Common-wealth, notwithſtanding the attempts of more powerfull Neighbours: and they are very induſtrious alſo, and well ſeen in Manufactures, eſpecially in weaving ſilks and cloth of Gold, which they taught the Florentines. The City ſeated in a Plain, compaſſed with Mountains on all ſides except towards Piſtoia: ſo ſtrongly fortified by the help of Art and Nature, that this City, Zara in Dalmatia, Canea in the Iſle of Candy, and the Town of Ligorn, were thought in former times (when the Art of Fortification was leſs known) to be the four ſtrongeſt Towns in the Chriſtian World. The ſtreets thereof are narrow, but paved with broad free-ſtone, and moſt eaſie to walk on: the buildings very fair, built of free-ſtone alſo, and beautified with pleaſant Gardens. On the North-weſt ſtands a very ſtrong Caſtle, neer which lieth the Cathedrall, ſtately paved with Marble, but very dark, as moſt of the Popiſh Churches, to give the better colour to the burning of Tapers in the day.

In this Town was the meeting of the three great Captains, Cæſar, Pompey, and Craſſus, ſo pernicious to the Roman Republick. For Pompey deſirous to maintain his authority, Cæſar to get honour, and Craſſus to encreaſe his wealth, here united their Counſels: Pompey's authority to be upheld by Cæſar's Arms, and Craſſus his riches; Cæſar's continuance in his Province to be maintained by Pompey's power, and Craſſus his money; and Craſſus his eſtate to be ſecured by Pompey's greatneſſe, and Cæſar's military reputation. This done, they made a partition of the Roman Provinces among themſelves, aſſigning Gaul to Cæſar, Spain to Pompey, and to Craſſus, Syria: which ſtrong confederacy was the cauſe of that alteration which after followed in that State. For Craſſus being ſlain not long after, Pompey and Cæſar wanting a third man to poize the ballance, fell firſt to diſcontents, then to civil Wars; which at laſt made Cæſar Lord of Rome. Upon which meeting, and the breach which ſucceeded afterwards, was grounded that ſo memorated ſpeech of Cicero, that is to ſay, Utinam Pompeius cum Cæſare ſocietatem aut nunquam iniiſſet, aut nunquam diremiſſet.

But to return again to the affairs of Luca, in the declining of the Empire, it became poſſeſſed by the Gothes, from them recovered by Narſes with the reſt of Italy. After this it again followed the fortune of the Empire, till taken by Count Boniface, the Father of that notable Virago, the Counteſs Mathildis: who being deceaſed without iſſue, and the Emperours pretending to it as to an Eſcheat, the Citizens made a common purſe, and bought their Liberty of the Emperour Rodolphus for 10000 Crowns. Some ſay the money was diſburſed for them by a Cardinal. But notwithſtanding this purchaſe and their title by it, the Emperour Lewis of Bavaria ſeized upon it again; under pretence of freeing it from the faction of Caſtruccio, who had made himſelf abſolute Maſter of it. By a German Garriſon there left, it was ſold to the Genoeſe; and having paſſed through many hands, the Emperour Charles the fourth got it once again: of whom they once more purchaſed their deſired Liberties, for 25000 Florens of Gold; and to ſecure themſelves thereof, demoliſhed the Caſtle built by Caſtruccio. But being not able to maintain it by their proper ſtrength, they have put themſelves under the protection of their potent Neighbours; changing their Patrons, as conduced moſt to their preſervation: and finding no ſecurity from Genoa, and as little from Florence, both which they ſeverally tryed; they put themſelves at laſt into the protection of the Dukes of Millain, and in that right are patronized by the Kings of Spain.

The Territories of this City extend in compaſſe eighty miles, the chief Town next to Luca it ſelf, being that of Luna, a Biſhops See; all the reſt ordinary Farms and Villages, but of a good air, and very well peopled: which yeeld a Revenue to the publick Treaſury of 80000 Crowns per annum; and out of which the State is able to raiſe (if there be occaſion) about 15000 Foot, and 3000 Horſe. A great ſtrength for ſo ſmall a Signeury, but all too weak to ſave them from the Great Dukes clutches, if he did ſeriouſly attempt to force it, and would venture on the diſpleaſure of the Catholick King: beſides that it is thought, that he receives more profit thence in gifts and preſents, by letting it ſtand as it is; than it would yeeld (conſidering the charge of keeping it) if it were his own. As for the Government thereof, the principall Magiſtrate is called the Gonfalonere, changeable every ſecond moneth; aſſiſted by a certain and determinate number of Citizens, whom they change every ſixth moneth alſo; during which time they live together in the Palace, or Common-hall. Other inferior Officers I inſiſt not on. And for the Government of the Church, they have two Biſhops only, which acknowledge the Arch-biſhop of Florence for their Metropolitan.

The Common-wealth of GENOA.

DIrectly Weſt of Tuſcany, from which it is divided by the River Macra, lyeth the Countrey antiently called Liguria, now Riviere di Genoa, the coaſt of Genoa, becauſe it lyeth all along the Sea of Genoa; and by ſome Il Genovoſate, from Genoa, the Metropolis of this Countrey and Common-wealth. A common-wealth once of a larger reputation and authority, than it is at the preſent; commanding heretofore the Iſlands of Corſica, Sardinia, and the Baleares, in the Mediterranean; Lesbos, and Chio, with ſome others in the Greekiſh Seas; the Town of Caffa or Theodoſia, in the Taurican Cherſoneſe; Pera, on the other ſide of Conſtantinople; and a good part of Tuſcany.

It was alſo then ſo ſtrong both in men and ſhipping, that they ſent ſeven ſeverall Armies to the wars of of the Holy Land: and in the ſpace of three daies only armed once upon occaſion of preſent ſervice, eight and fifty Gallies, and eight Pamphyli (being veſſels of one hundred and forty, or one hundred and ſixty Oars apiece); and at another time, one hundred and ſixty ſixe Gallies, at a ſudden pinch. By the advantage of this ſtrength, they beat the Piſans out of Sardinia, Corſica, and the Baleares; compelling them to pay 135000 Crowns for their peace; they got a good ſhare in the diviſion of the Empire of Conſtantinople, when that City was taken by the Latines; and held a very ſtrong hand over the Venetians. Theſe laſt they had once in ſo great an exigence, having vanquiſhed their Fleet at Sea, and taken the Iſland of Chioggia, not far from Venice; that the Senate ſent them a blank Charter, bidding them write down what conditions they pleaſed, which ſhould be readily condeſcended to. But Peter Doria, Admiral of the Genoan Fleet, unſeaſonably proud of his advantage, would have the City of Venice wholly at his own diſpoſal. Whereupon the Venetians now made deſperate aſſault the ſecure Genoeſe, and took an hundred of their Boats and Gallies. After which they alwaies had the worſt, loſing their Iſlands in the Mediterranean to the Kings of Aragon; Capha, and Pera, with their Iſlands in the Greek Seas, to the great Turk; moſt of their holds in Tuſcany, to the Florentines: their power at the laſt being ſo broke by the Venetians, that in the end they were not able to ſet out a Navy fit for any enterprize. But theſe misfortunes were occaſioned principally by their own diviſions; the City being miſerably torn in pieces by continual factions: firſt betwixt the Dorii and Spinoli, on the one ſide, the Fliſci and Grimaldi on the other, An. 1174. Secondly, of the Negri, and Mollani, againſt the Salvatici and Embriaci, Anno 1289. Thirdly, between the Spinoli and Dorii themſelves, Anno 1336. And fourthly, between the Nobility and the Commons, Anno 1339. Which Factions did ſo weaken them both at home and abroad, that having loſt the greateſt part of their Eſtate, they were fain to put themſelves on the protection of their Neighbours to defend the reſt; having now nothing left them but Liguria, and the Iſle of Corſica.

1 LIGURIA hath on the Eaſt, the River Varus, riſing about the edge of Provence; on the Weſt, the River Magra, by which parted from Tuſcany; on the North, the Apennine hils; and on the South, the Ligurian or Tyrrhenian Seas. It is in length a hundred and forty miles; that is to ſay, from the Port of Luna in the Eaſt, to that of Monaco in the Weſt, which lyeth near to Provence; but the breadth not anſwerable to the length: and is divided generally into two parts or Provinces, the Eaſt, and the Weſt, both centring upon Genoa the principal City.

The old Ligurians were a ſtout and warlike Nation, light and ſwift of body, well practiſed in laying Ambuſhes, and not diſcouraged by any overthrow, but forthwith ready to fight again: to which the nature of their Countrey ſerved them very well, being rough, mountainous, and woody, and full of ſtraight and dangerous paſſages; and in this tract few open Towns, but many wel-fortified Caſtles; ſo that without much labour they could neither be taken, nor beſieged. And if at any time they were vanquiſhed in the open field, they had recourſe unto theſe Caſtles, and other Faſtneſſes, hemmed round about with Woods and Mountains; in which they plaid their after-game, and tired out their Enemies and Invaders. The principal of their Tribes were the Decenti, Oxilii, Eubariades, and Inganni; all at laſt vanquiſhed by the Romans, after the ſecond Punick war: but not without much labour and pains, by reaſon of the Woods, Mariſhes, and Mountains, within and behinde which they retired and ſaved themſelves. Inſomuch that it was held a matter of more difficulty, to find than to conquer them; Aliquanto major erat labor invenire quàm vincere, are the words of my Author. They did divers times after this, much moleſt the Romans, till at laſt Poſthumius ſo diſweaponed them, that he ſcarce left them inſtruments to plough the Earth. So in the end they grew obedient to their Maſters. In the diviſion of whoſe large Territories by Auguſtus Cæſar, Liguria was made one of the eleven Regions of Italie; as it was alſo one of the ſeventeen Provinces, into which Italie was divided by the Emperor Conſtantine: Millain at that time the Metropolis or Head-City of it. What kinde of men they were in the breaking of the Weſtern Empire, may be known by their actions both by Sea and Land, ſpoken of before: now more addicted to Merchandiſe than war, but moſt of all to uſury. A vice which the Chriſtians learned of the Jewes, and are now thought to equal, if not exceed their Teachers. It was the ſaying of a merry fellow, that in Chriſtendom there were neither Scholars enough, Gentlemen enough, nor Jews enough. And when anſwer was made, that of all theſe there was rather too great a plenty, than any ſcarcity; he replyed, that if there were Scholars enough, ſo many would not be double or treble beneficed; if Gentlemen enough, ſo many Peaſants would not be ranked among the Gentry; and if Jewes enough, ſo many Chriſtians would not profeſs Uſury. The women are very fair and comely, wearing for the moſt their hair in treſſes, which they caſt over their backs: they wear no upper garments but of cloth, as being only allowed by the Laws; but their under-garments of the pureſt ſtuffe. The women here are priviledged above all in Italie, having free leave to talk with whom they will, and be courted by any that will, both privately and publickly. Which liberty it is likely they gained at ſuch time as the French were Maſters of this Eſtate; who do allow their wives ſuch exceſs of liberty, as no Italian would allow of in a common Curtezan. And though it cannot be affirmed, that the women of the Countrey or the City it ſelf, do abuſe this Liberty; yet the Italians being generally of a different humour, reckon them to be paſt all ſhame; as they eſteem the Genoan Merchants, (who make little reckoning of their promiſes, if not bound by writing) to be men without faith. Of which, and other things concerning this Eſtate, they have made this Proverb, Montagne ſenza legni, &c. that is to ſay, Mountains without wood, Seas without fiſh, Men without faith, and Women without ſhame.

The Countrey, as beforeſaid, is very mountainous in the In-lands, and full of craggy rocks towards the Sea: ſo that by Sea and Land it is very ill travelling. But amidſt thoſe hils are vallies of as rich a vein, as moſt others in Italie, abounding in Citrons, Limons, Olives, Oranges, and the like fruits;

Genoa. with ſuch variety of Flowers at all times of the year, that the Markets are ſeldome unfurniſhed of them in the moneth of December. It yeeldeth alſo great plenty of moſt pleaſant wines, which the Inhabitants call La Vermozza; and another which they call Le lagrime di Chriſto, or Lachrymæ Chriſti: this laſt ſo pleaſing to the taſt, that it is ſaid, a Dutchman taſting of it as he travelled in theſe parts, fetch't a great ſigh, and brake out into this expreſſion; How happy had it been with us, Si Chriſtus lachrymatus eſſet in noſtris Regionibus, if CHRIST had ſhed ſome of his tears in the Countrey of Germany! Their greateſt want is that of Corn, and therewith do ſupply themſelves out of other places.

The principal Towns and Cities of it in the Eaſtern part, are 1 Sarezana, a ſtrong Fortreſs againſt the Florentines, and one of the beſt pieces of this Republick. 2 Pontremuli (Pons Remuli, as the Latines call it) of as great conſequence as that, but poſſeſſed by the Spaniard. 3 Lerigi, an Haven in the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Sea. 4 Seſtri, a reaſonable good place, remarkable for as white bread, and as pleaſant wine, as any in Italie. 5 Fino, an Haven or Port Town, not far from Genoa, antiently called Portus Delfinus. Few of the Towns in this part are of any greatneſs: but they are ſet ſo thick, and intermingled with ſo many goodly houſes both on the hils and the vallies, that for the ſpace of twenty miles, the whole Countrey ſeems to be one continual building.

In the weſt part the Towns of moſt importance are, 1 Monaco, of old called Monoecus, and Portus Herculis, beautified with a commodious Haven: belonging not long ſince to the Spaniard, who bought it for 100000 Crowns of its proper owner; but of late gotten by the French under colour of a later Contract. 2 Ventimiglio, a good Town, and ſweetly ſeated. 3 Savona, taken by the Genoeſe, Anno 1250. before which time it had a Prince of its own. Remarkable for the interview betwixt Ferdinand the Catholick, and Lewis the 12th of France, Anno 1507. Who having been deadly enemies, upon the taking of the Realm of Naples from the French by the Spaniard, met at this Town, and here moſt ſtrangely relied upon one another: Lewis firſt boording Ferdinands Gally; and Ferdinand for divers daies feaſting with Lewis in this Town then in his poſſeſſion, as Protector of the Eſtate of Genoa. Which kinde of interviews (I note this only by the way) as they chance but ſeldom; ſo when they do, they prove for the moſt part dangerous unto one of the parties: great enmities not being eaſily forgot by perſons of a publick Intereſs. Nay, that Notable Stateſman Philip de Comines utterly diſliketh all ſuch meetings of Princes, though in Amity and good correſpondence with one another; as many times producing effects quite contrary to their expectations. And this he proveth by the example of Lewis the 11th of France, and Henry of Caſtile; who meeting purpoſely, Anno 1463, to change ſome friendly words together, took ſuch diſlike at each others perſon, and behaviour, that they never loved one another after it. The like example he bringeth of an interview betwixt Edward the fourth of England, and the ſame King Lewis: and betwixt Frederick the Emperor, and Charles Duke of Burgundy; with divers others. His reaſons I purpoſely omit, as not pertinent to my preſent undertaking, and make haſt again unto the Town; which is about a mile and an half in circuit, and hath many ſtately buildings in it. It was called anciently Sabate or Sabatia, and hath been under the command of divers Lords: being taken from the Genoeſe by the Viſconti, and the Sforzas, Dukes of Millain, from them by the French, and at laſt recovered again by thoſe of Genoa. I further note, that this one Town hath yeelded to the Church of Rome three Popes, viz. Gregory the 7th, Julio the 2d and Sixtus the 4th, which is as much as Genoa it ſelf can brag of. 4 Nola, upon the Sea ſide, a commodious Haven, 5 Finali, a goodly Port-town alſo, and very well fortified; honoured of a long time with the title of a Marquiſate, one of the ſeven founded by the Emperor Otho (of which more hereafter): but taken from the laſt Marqueſs by the Count of Fuentes, then Governor of Millain for the King of Spain, and garriſoned immediately with 200 Spaniards; the poor Marqueſs being put off with an Annual Penſion, Anno 1602. 6 Mileſimo, a ſmall Town adjoyning, poſſeſſed upon the ſame right by the Spaniard alſo; who by theſe pieces hath a ſtrong command on the Trade of Genoa. 7 But the great Ornament of thoſe parts of Italie, is the City of Genoa, firſt built, ſay ſome, by Janus the ſon of Saturn; as others ſay, by Janus Genius Priſcus, an Italian or Tuſcan King. But by whomſoever it was built, certain it is, that it was miſerably deſtroyed by Mago the Brother of Annibal, repaired by Lucretius Surius, at the command of the Senate of Rome, for whoſe cauſe and quarrel it was ruined: once again ſpoiled and waſted by Rotharis a great Prince of the Lombards, Anno 660. or thereabouts; but built more beautiful than before by Charles the Great. On his Foundation it now ſtands, ſituate on the ſhore of the Liguſtick, or Ligurian Seas, to which, being partly built on the declivity of an hill, full of ſtately Palaces, it giveth a moſt pleaſant and magnificent proſpect. It is in compaſs ſix miles, of an orbicular form, fortified towards the Sea by Art; towards the Land, by Art and Nature, there being but one way to come to it by land, and that over ſteep and craggy Rocks. The ſtreets are narrow, paved with Flint, and moſt of them on the ſides of the hill; which is the reaſon that they uſe Horſe-litters here in ſtead of Coaches, and moſt of the better ſort are carried on mens ſhoulders in Sedans or Chairs: which from hence came hither into England. But that which they call La Strada Nueva, or the New-ſtreet, reaching from the Weſt to North-eaſt, is of a very fair breadth: each houſe whereof is built with ſuch Kingly magnificence, that it is thought to be the faireſt ſtreet in the World. In all the reſt, the buildings for the height of two ſtories are made of Marble, curiouſly wrought; but the Laws forbid Marble to be uſed any higher. The Haven of it is very fair and capacious, ſafe from the violence of Tempeſts, and well fortified: ſo that the Spaniards uſe to ſay, that were the Catholick King abſolute Lord of Marſeilles in Provence, and Genoa in Italie, he might command the whole World. After the re-edifying of it by Charles the Great, the people here continued ſubject to his ſucceſſors; till the Berengarii, as Kings of Italie, made them free, Anno 899. in which condition they remained till the year 1318, when being ſhrewdly weakned in their Eſtate, they were fain to give themſelves to Pope John the 22d; after to Robert King of Naples. But being ſoon weary of a forein Government, the people in a popular tumult made choice of one Simon Bocca negra, to be their Duke, Anno 1339. which Government continued till the French were called in by the Guelfian Faction, in the reign of Charles the 7th; under whom they continued thirteen years; and then expelling thence the French for their many inſolencies, they put themſelves under the protection of the Dukes of Millain, Anno 1403. Long time they lived under the protection of thoſe Princes, in great tranquillity, who never carried towards them any rigorous hand; ſave that once D. Lodowick Sforza exacted of them a great maſs of money. But, as the tale goeth, his Agent being invited to the houſe of a Genoeſe, and walking in a Garden with him, was ſhewed an herb growing there, called Baſil, which ſtroaking gently, he ſmelt thence a moſt pleaſing ſavour, but as unſavoury a ſmell, when he ſtrained it hard The Genoeſe hereupon inferred, Sir, if our Lord Duke Lodowick will gently ſtroke the hand of his puiſſance over this City, it will prove pliant to him by obedience; but may chance to prove rebellious, if he do oppreſs it. But Lodowick being taken priſoner by King Lewis the 12th, they firſt came under the command of the French, and then of the Spaniard; according as thoſe Nations had poſſeſſion of the State of Millain: and after many changes and alterations, obtained again their freedome of King Francis the firſt. Which being not able to preſerve by their proper ſtrength, they finally put themſelves under the ſhelter of the Spaniard, who is now their Protector, and that not for nought; he being indebted to them, Anno 1600, a Million and a half of Gold; that being the remainder of 18 Millions, cut off by the Popes authority; that ſo the King might be indebted to that See; for moſt of his Lands were formerly engaged to the Money-Maſters of this City. The ſame courſe of non-payment, the King took with the reſt of his Creditors in Florence, Ausburg, and the reſt, inſomuch that it was commonly ſaid in Italie, that the King of Spain had made more ill faces upon the Exchange in one day, then Michael Angelo the famous Painter, had ever made good in all his life. And thus you ſee this great City which commanded the Ocean, the Lady of ſo many Iſlands, and a great Moderator of the Affairs of Italie; fain to put her ſelf into the protection of a forein Prince; and that too at the charge of a great deal of Treaſure; which he continually raiſeth from them in the way of Loán, of which he often proves but a ſorry Pay-maſter. And if the Wars he had with England did ſo drain their Purſes (for it was that War, and the War which he had in the Netherlands, that made him ſo indebted to the Banks of Genoa) no queſtion but the revolt of Catalogne, and the laſting Wars made againſt him by the French, in ſo many places, have plunged him in as deep as ever. Which notwithſtanding this people do ſo thrive under his protection, and draw ſo great commodity from their Trade with Spain, that it is thought their private men were never richer, the publick Treaſury never fuller then it is at the preſent.

Corſica.

CORSICA is an Iſland in the Liguſtick or Ligurian Sea, oppoſite to the City of Genoa, from whence it is diſtant about ſixty miles; and lying juſt North of the Iſle of Sardinia, from which it is diſtant ſeven miles. It comprehends in length an hundred and twenty miles, ſeventy in breadth, and three hundred twenty five in circuit; and lyeth under the fifth Climate, the longeſt day being almoſt fifteen hours.

The people are ſtubborn, poor, unlearned; ſuppoſed to be more cruel than other Nations, and ſo affirmed to be by Cæſar in his Book of Commentaries; the Progeny, as ſome ſay, of the 52 daughters of Theſpius, who being all got with childe in one night by Hercules, were by their Father put to the mercy of the Sea; by which they were brought unto this Iſland, after peopled by them. From one of theſe ſons named Cyrnus, the Iſland had the name of Cyrnos, by which it oftentimes occurreth in ſome old Greek Writers. This is the conceit of Fabius Pictor, one of Annius his Authors. And that of Euſtathius, a far more credible Writer, is not much unlike, who will have it called Corſica from a woman ſo named, dwelling in the coaſt of Liguria; who following her Bull hither, was the firſt that diſcovered it. But theſe Originals I look on, the firſt eſpecially, as the worſt kind of Romances: the name of Cyrnos being more like to be derived from the Punick Keranoth, which ſignifies a horn or corner, by reaſon of the many Promontories with which it ſhoots into the Sea. Corſica inſula multis promontoriis anguloſa eſt, as it is in Iſidore, Lib. 14. cap. 6. And for the name of Corſica, I ſhould derive it rather from the Corſi by which name the inhabitants hereof are called in moſt Latin Writers) one of the two Nations of moſt note in the neighbouring Iſland of Sardinia. Celeberrimi in ea populorum Balari, & Corſi, as we finde in Plinie. Which Corſi, or ſome of them, being overborn by ſome new Invaders (which the Iſland of Sardinia was ſeldom free of) were fain to ſhift their ſeat, and came over hither.

This Countrey yeeldeth excellent Dogs for game, good Horſes, fierce Maſtiffs; and a beaſt called Mufoli, not found in Europe, excepting in this Iſland, and Sardinia only, but there called Mufrones, or Muſriones (for I conceive they are the ſame under divers names) ſaid to be horned like Rams, and skinned like Stags; which skin is of ſuch an incredible hardneſs, that the Beaſt being caſt headlong againſt a Rock, receives no hurt, but nimbly flies from his Enemy to his den.

The ſoyl by reaſon of the mountains (which every where are too thick and barren in it) is not very fruitful; producing Corn in leſs plenty, but the beſt Wines, and ſuch as the old Romans well reliſhed, in good meaſure. It produceth alſo Oyl, Figs, Raiſons, and Honey: the firſt three in a mediocrity of goodneſs, the laſt ſomewhat bitter, and by many deemed unwholeſom. It aboundeth alſo with Allom, Box-tree, Iron-mines; and the tree called Taxus; whoſe poyſonous Berries though in taſte pleaſing, are much fed on by Bees; and therefore thought to be the cauſe of the bitterneſs of the Hony. In ſome few places where the Rivers have their currents, eſpecially towards Liguria; it recompenſeth, by its fertility in bearing all manner of grain, the barrenneſs of the mountains. Which mountains cutting through the midſt of it, divide the whole Iſland into Ciſmontanum, being that towards Genoa; and Tranſmontanum, lying towards Sardinia; yet ſo, that the people on each ſide call themſelves the Ciſ- montanes,

Corſica. montanes, and the other the Tramontanes. Both of them ſpeak a corrupt Italian, in which there is not a little mixture of French and Spaniſh.

For Rivers, there are none of note, the principall of thoſe which the Iſland yeelds, being called Gelo and Travignano. And as for Cities, ſome of the Ancients reckoned 33, which Strabo doth conceive to be Caſtles only; there being but four Towns or Cities in it in his time: of which four, two were Roman Colonies, the one planted by Marius, called Mariana; the other by L. Sylla, in the Town called Alleria; a place of ſome Antiquity before that time, and at this day a Biſhops See. But now the place of moſt importance, is the Town of Baſtia, ſeated in the North-eaſt part of the Iſland, oppoſite almoſt unto Alleria; with a commodious Haven to it, and a ſtrong Garriſon to defend it: as being the ordinary ſeat of the Governor ſent hither from Genoa; and of the Biſhop of Alleria, who makes there his reſidence. 2 Aiazze, a reaſonable ſtrong Town, and a Biſhops See; and ſo is alſo 3 Nebbio, called Cherſunum by Ptolemy. Then there is 4 Porto Vrechio, built not long ſince in the place of an old decayed Haven, and peopled by a Colony ſent from Genoa. 5 S. Florence, a Port-town in the Northern part in the midſt betwixt Nebbio and Mariana: and 6 S. Boniface, called by Ptolemie Portus Syracuſanus, juſt oppoſite unto it in the South corner of the Iſle; both of them places of good ſafety, and capable of the greateſt veſſels that frequent thoſe Seas.

Who were the firſt Inhabitants is not eaſily known. That the Phœnicians or Tyrians had ſome footing here, is manifeſt by that of Callimachus an old Greek Poet, who calleth it Φοίνισσα Κύρνος, the Phœnician Cyrnus; and by that of Diodorus Siculus, affirming that the Carthaginians and Tyrrheni (which queſtionleſs he miſtook for Tyrii) caſt the Phocenſes out of this Iſland. But whether theſe Phocenſes did firſt inhabit it, or only had a Colony in ſome part thereof, is not demonſtrable from thoſe Authors. The Carthaginians after this made a conqueſt of it, and held it till the time of the firſt Punick War; when they were driven thence by the valour of Cornelius Scipio. Yet was it not totally ſubdued, nor brought into the form of a Roman Province, till ſome time after; when it was fully conquered by C. Papyrius, A.V.C. 541. This Iſland and Sardinia at the firſt being joyned together, and governed by one Prætor only; but afterwards made two diſtinct Provinces, immediately ſubject to the Præfect of the City of Rome, and conſequently members of the Roman Patriarchate. In the falling of the Roman Empire, it became a prey unto the Vandals, who uſed to ſend their condemned perſons out of Africk hither, to fell Timber for ſhipping; the Countrey even till then being very much over-grown with Woods. Afterwards with the reſt of the Iſlands of the Mediterranean, it was under the power of the Saracens, againſt whom Ademar the Count or Governor of Genoa armed a Fleet of Gallies, and vanquiſhed them in a fight at Sea, but loſt his life in the action: which notwithſtanding the Genoeſe followed their good fortune, ſeiſed on the Iſland, and carried thence 13 of the Enemies Ships. The Piſans after this got poſſeſſion of it, but being vanquiſhed by the Genoeſe in the fight near Giglio (before mentioned) they were fain to leave it to the Conquerors. Since that it hath alwaies followed the fortune of Genoa, ſave that it remained ſomewhat longer than that City did in the hand of the French, who in the year 1554, ſeized on it by the aid of the Turks, whom (to the great diſhonour of Chriſtianity) they entertained in their wars againſt Charles the fifth; but in the end, reſtored it to the Common-wealth, upon the peace made betwixt France and Spain, Anno 1559. And for ſecuring of this Iſland to the State of Genoa, they fell upon this handſom project: imploying none but natural Genoeſe to ſerve in the Garriſons of the Iſland, the better to keep under this untractable people; and filling all their Garriſons upon the Continent with natural Corſicans, whereby the Iſland is unfurniſhed of its ableſt men, who alſo ſerve for hoſtages of the publick Faith.

Having thus took a brief view of the ſeveral parts and members of this Common-wealth, let us next look upon the whole, as to the Government, Forces, and Revenue of it. Firſt for the Government, the principal of their Magiſtrates hath the name of Duke; as titular as the Duke of Venice, but of leſs eſteem: that Duke continuing in his Office for term of life, but this being alterable and removed at the two years end. So that he may be called moſt properly the Mayore of Genoa. For thoſe two years he dwels in the publick Palace, and hath 500 Germans for the guard of his perſon; in nothing like a Prince but that: and for that time, he alone hath the power of propounding any thing to the Senate, which carrieth ſome reſemblance of a Negative voice. His time expired, he returns unto his houſe as a private perſon, but ſo, that during life he hath the office of a Procurator in the Common-wealth. To him there are aſſiſtant eight principal Officers, who ſit upon the ſame fourm with him, and continue in their office for two years alſo; which eight, together with the Duke, are called the Signeurie: but he and they in matters of moſt weight and moment, ſubordinate to the General Councel, conſiſting of 400 perſons, all of them Gentlemen of the City; who with the nine before remembred do conſtitute the body of the Common-wealth. Under this form they have continued, ever ſince by the power and goodneſs of Andreas Doria (who might have made himſelf their Prince) they were diſcharged of their ſubjection to the French, Anno 1528, never in danger of relapſing to their former ſervitude, but in the treaſonable practiſe of the Fliſchi, a remarkable Family of the City; who hoping to poſſeſs themſelves of the Principality under protection of the French, had ſo laid their plot, that Auguſtine di Fliſchi, who was deſigned to be their Duke, had in the night time ſeiſed on the Navie, and ſlain John Doria who had the command thereof. But leaping from one Gallie to another to make ſure of all, ſtumbled and fell into the Sea; where he and his ambitious treaſons were both drowned together.

As for their Forces, there are within the Signeurie 10000 men ready to arm at any time, as they ſee occaſion; 25 Gallies alwaies ready in the publick Arſenal, and four continually at Sea for defence of their Trading. Sufficient ſtrength to ſave them from a petit force, though not to guard them from the power of a ſtrong Invader. But the chief ſtrength which they relie on is the King of Spain; whose protection, though it costs them dear, is worth their money; and they have prospered so well by it, that notwithstanding all the losses which they have sustained, it is supposed that the Revenue of the Common-wealth (besides the Treasury of S. George, which is very rich, and managed as a distinct body from the publick, by its own Officers) amounteth to no less than 430000 Crowns per ann. Lombardy.

As for the Treasury of S. George, though it contain no part of the publick Patrimony, but be governed by its own Officers, as a State distinct: yet is it of such ready use, so able at all times to furnish the Republick with vast sums of money; that the security and preservation of this Common-wealth depends much upon it. The Institution and Administration whereof, together with the benefit which from hence redoundeth unto this Estate, I cannot better represent to the Readers view, than in the words of Machiavel the greatest Politick of his times; who in his History of Florence hath expressed it thus. "Post diuturnum illud bellum quod Genoenses multis abhinc annis cum Venetis gessere, &c. After that "tedious war between the Genoese and Venetians was ended in the year 1381. and that the Genoese found "themselves unable to repay those moneys, which they had taken up of their private Citizens in pur-"suit thereof; they thought it best to assign their ordinary Taxes over to them, that so in tract of "time the whole debt might be satisfied; and for that end allotted them a Common-hall, there to de-"liberate and determine of their affairs. These men thus made the Masters of the publick Taxes, elect "among themselves a Common-Councel of an Hundred; and over them eight Officers of especial "power, to order and direct the rest, and to dispose of the Intrado: which Corporation so established, "they entituled S. Georges Bank. It happened afterward, that the Republick wanting more moneys, "was glad to have recourse unto S. George; who growing wealthy by the orderly managing of his "stock, was best able to relieve them in their necessities: and as before they assigned their Taxes over "to him, so now, ditionem suam oppignorabant, they Mortgaged also their Demain. So that S. George "continually waxing richer, and the State poorer; this Corporation became possessed at last, of al-"most all the Towns and Territories of the Common-wealth: all which they governed by their own "Magistrates, chosen by common suffrage from among themselves. It followed hereupon, that the "common people bearing less respect unto the publick, applyed themselves unto S. George: this "being alwaies orderly and prudently governed, that many times inclining to Tyranny: this never "changing Officers, or form of Government, that subject to the proud and ambitious lusts of each "Usurper, whether Domestical or Forein. Insomuch that when the two potent Families of the Fre-"goси and Adorni, contended for the Soveraignty in this Estate; most of the People looked upon it as "a Quarrel which concerned them not: S. George not medling more in it, than to take an Oath of "the prevailing Faction, to preserve his Liberties. Rarissimo sanè exemplo, &c. A most excellent and "rare thing (saith he) never found out by any of the old Philosophers, in their Imaginary Forms of a "Common-wealth: that in the same State, and the same People, one may see at the same time, both "Tyranny and Liberty, Justice and Oppression, Civility and Misgovernments: This only Corporation "preserving in the Common-wealth its ancient lustre. So that in case S. George should in the end be-"come possessed of the remainder of the Patrimony and Estate thereof, as it is possible it may; the "State of Genoa might not alone be equalled with that of Venice, but preferred before it. So far, and to this purpose, that great Master of State-craft; a man of less impiety, and more regular life, than some of those who have traduced him for an Atheist.

The Estates of LOMBARDY.

LOMBARDY is bounded on the East, with Romandiola, and the Estate or Territory of Ferrara; on the West, with that part of the Alpes, which divides Italie from France; on the North, (reckoning Marca Trevigiana within the bounds hereof) with that part of the Alpes which lyeth towards Germany; and on the South, with the Apennine, which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa.

It was called anciently Gallia Cisalpina, whereof we shall speak more anon; and took this new name from the Lombards, or Longobardi, a people of Germany (of whom we have already spoken, but shall speak more at large when we come to Hungary;) who coming out of Pannonia possessed themselves of a great part of Italie, but left their name to this Tract only. A tract of ground of which it may be truly said, that as Italie is the garden of Europe, so Lombardy is the garden of Italie, or the fairest flower in all that garden. A Countrey of so rich a mixture, that such another piece of ground for beautiful Cities, goodly Rivers, for fields and pastures shaded with such excellent fruits, for plenty of fowl, fish, corn, and wine, cannot be found again in our Western World. So that it is no wonder, that the two great Kings of France and Spain, have strived so eagerly and with such effusion of Christian bloud for the Dutchy of Millain, a part only (though the richest part) of this goodly Countrey; and but a spot of earth compared to their own Dominions.

Anciently it was of more extent than now it is, containing besides the principalites hereafter mentioned, the Provinces of Romandiola, and Trevigiana; even all, which in the infancy and growth of the Roman Empire, had the name of Gallia Cisalpina: called Gallia from the Galls, who being drawn over Lombardy. over the Alpes by the taſte of the ſweet Julian Wines, in the time of Tarquinius Priſcus King of Rome, under the conduct and command of Belovesus ſon of Ambigatus King of the Celtæ, ſubdued the Natives, and poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Countrey, from the Weſt parts of the Tuſcan Sea and Apennine hils to the Adriatick; and from the Alpes to the River Rubicon on the North-eaſt, and the River Arnus on the South-eaſt. Ciſalpina it was called becauſe it lay on that ſide of the Alpes which was next to Rome, to difference it from Gallia on the other ſide of the Mountains, which had the name of Tranſalpina. It was alſo called Gallia Togata, becauſe the people of it being civilized, conformed themſelves to the Roman habit: that on the other ſide of the Alpes being called Braccata, becauſe they kept themſelves to their former Mantles (reſembling thoſe now worn by the vulgar Iriſh) which by the Latines were called Braccæ. For though the word Braccæ in ſome of our common Dictionaries be rendred Gally-ſlops or Breeches (and poſſibly the word Breeches may be thence derived) which made me heretofore conceive that the habit of thoſe Galls was a kinde of Trouzes, ſuch as thoſe uſually worn by the Iriſh Foot-men: yet when I finde in approved Authors, that it was Tunica Sago impoſita, a Garment which they wore over their Coats and Caſſocks, I conceive I had good reaſon to tranſlate it otherwiſe.

They were generally divided into four great Nations, that is to ſay, 1 The Inſubres, inhabiting from the Alpes to the River Arnus, and conſequently ſpreading over the Dukedoms of Millaine, Parma, Modena, Mantua, Piemont, and ſome part of the Dukedom of Florence: 2 The Cenomani who lay next the Inſubres poſſeſſing the greateſt part of Trevigiana: 3 The Boii, taking up the reſt of Trevigiana, with the Dukedom of Ferrara, and ſo much of Romandiola as lyeth on the North-weſt See of the River Rubicon: 4 the Senones who paſſing over the Rubicon inhabited the reſt of Romandiola and the Dukedom of Urbine. Of theſe the Senones (or Semnones as Ptolemie cals them) were of greateſt fame. Theſe were the men that under the conduct of Brennus, having defeated the Roman Armies at the battle of Allia, followed their victory unto Rome, which they ſacked and burned: nothing made good in all the City but the Capitol only, which alſo had been taken by them, ni Anſeres diis dormientibus vigilaſſent, as S. Auguſtine ſcoffs it, if the Geeſe had not been more watchful then their gods, or Guards. Failing herein they compounded for 1000 pound weight of gold to forſake the City: but before the money was received, they were aſſaulted by Camillus, driven out of the Town and vanquiſhed in a ſet battel, about eight miles off; who is therefore called Rome ſecond Founder. This happned An. V. C. 364. Vanquiſhed again at the River Aniene, by T. Quinctius the Dictator; and after that An. V. C. 404. by the ſaid Camillus, being then 80 years of Age, in the Pontine fields: they got the Boii to aſſiſt them: and after joyned with the Samnites, Tuſcans, and other Nations in a common war. But being for the moſt part beaten, and the war carried to their own doors a little before the coming of Pyrrhus into Italie, by M. Curius the Conſul: they were by him driven out of their own Countrey; and finally ſo ſlaughtered by Dolabella at the Lake of Vadimon, An. V. C. 470. that there was ſcarſe any left of all that Nation, to brag that any of their Anceſtors had ſet fire on Rome.

The Senones being thus deſtroyed, the Romans ſuffered the reſt of the Gallick Nations to remain in quiet, till the end of the firſt Punick War, when being grown of more ſtrength, and at very good leiſure, they took up Armes againſt the Boii, who fearing the like fortune as the Senones had found before, called to their aid both the Inſubrians and Tranſalpines; making in all an Army of 50000 Foot, and 20000 Horſe. An. V. C. 528. Diſcomfited by Aimilius the Roman Conſul, near Telamon a City of Tuſcanie, with the ſlaughter of 40000 of their men; they were ſet upon in their own Countrey ſhortly after by the Conſul Flaminius, vanquiſhed and mulcted with the loſſe of one half thereof: moſt of them after this dyſaſter paſſing into Germany, where we are like to hear more of them. And for the Inſubres and the Cenomani, being thus left unto themſelves (the remainders of the Tranſalpines excepted only) they were invaded the next year after, (An. V. C. 431.) under the Conſuls M. Claudius Marcellus and Cornelius Scipio: to whom upon the loſs of their Armies, and ſome of their beſt Towns, they did yeeld themſelves: the Romans ſo becoming Maſters of all this Countrey. And yet it was accompted as a Province diſtinct from Italie, until the ſetling of the Empire in Auguſtus Cæſar, who dividing Italie into eleven Regions, made three of them out of this Ciſalpina; that is to ſay, Gallia, Venetia, and Italia Tranſpadana: as afterwards it made up four of the ſeven Provinces of the Dioceſe of Italie, according to the diſtribution of it which was made by Conſtantine. How it came with the reſt of Italie into the power of the Lombards, and how from them taken by the French, with the reſt of that Kingdom; hath been ſhewen already. Won by the French, and from the French transferred with the Empire to the Kings of Germany, it did ſo far preſerve the reputation of a Kingdom, that the Emperors were ſometimes crowned at Millain with an Iron Crown for the Kingdome of Lombardy: as at Aken (a Town of Cleveland) with a ſilver Crown, for the Realm of Germany; and with a golden Crown at Rome, for the ſacred Empire. But the Empire being weakned by the Artifices of the Popes of Rome, this goodly Countrey was torn from it; and parcelled in concluſion, amongſt many Princes, as it ſtill continueth.

The Lombards being maſters of it, and having given it their own name, divided it by the River Po, into Longobardia Ciſpadana, lying betwixt the Po and the Apennine Mountains: and Tranſpadana, lying betwixt the Po and the Alpes: the firſt of which the old Romans called Æmilia, from Æmilius Lepidus, the Founder of the City of Regio (then called Regium Lepidi) once Proconſul of it. In the diviſion of Italie by Aug. Cæſar it had the name of Gallia. The other was by him honoured with the name of Italia Tranſpadana, by which name it was known in the times of Tacitus; and by him called, Florentiſſimum Italiæ latus, the moſt flouriſhing part of all Italie. But this diviſion being long ſince worn out of uſe, and the whole Countrey being cantoned into many Eſtates, as before was ſaid;

we will conſider it at the preſent as it ſtands divided into the Dukedoms of Millain and Mantua, which with Trevigiana, deſcribed already, make up Transpadana: and thoſe of Modena, Parma, and Montferrat, which with the Principate of Piemont, make up Cispadana. Millain.

The Dukedom of MILLAIN.

THe Dukedom of MILLAIN hath on the Eaſt, the Eſtates of Mantua, and Parma; on the Weſt, Piemont, and ſome part of Switzerland, one of the Provinces of the Alpes; on the North, Marca Trevigiana; and on the South, the Apennine, which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa. In elder times the habitation of the Inſubres, originally a Tribe of the Hedui inhabiting in thoſe parts of the Gallia beyond the Alpes, which now make up the Dukedome of Burgundie: but croſſing the Mountains with the reſt of the Gallick Nation ſpoken of before, they ſetled here, built the City of Millain, and finally became one of the greateſt Tribes of the Ciſalpine Galls: from thence this Countrey hath the name of Inſubrium Ducatus in ſome of the neater Modern Writers; but commonly is called Ducatus Mediolanenſis, from Mediolanum, or Millain, the chief City of it.

Principal Rivers of it, 1 Padus, 2 Addua, 3 Ollius, and 4 Ticinus; of which ſomewhat hath been ſaid already; and beſides thoſe it hath alſo in it the Lake called anciently Lacus Larius, but now Lago di Come (from the City of Como which it neighboureth) 60 miles in length.

The chief Cities and places of note are, 1 Modoecum, not far from Millain, of more fame than greatneſs; the fame thereof ariſing from the Iron Crown (kept in a Monaſtery here) wherewith ſome of the Emperors have been crowned by the Arch-biſhops of Millain. A cuſtome taken up from the Kings of the Oſtrogothes, who are ſaid to have firſt uſed the ſame, in teſtimony that they had won their Eſtates by Iron. 2 Pavie, or Papia, ſeated on the Floud Ticinus, united to Millain by John Galeaze, the firſt Duke thereof; made an Univerſity by Charles the fourth, Anno 1361. and famous for the Battel, in which Francis the firſt of France was taken priſoner by Charles the fifth, Anno 1525. It is ſeated, as before was ſaid, on the Floud Ticinus, about four miles from the Po or Padus: the River carrying at this City ſo great a breadth, that the bridge over it is no leſs than 200 walking paces long, built of Free-ſtone, and covered over head with a roof ſupported all along with pillars. From this River the City it ſelf was anciently called Ticinum; and took the name of Papia from its great affection to the Popes; or, as ſome ſay, quaſi Patria piorum (the two firſt ſyllables of thoſe words being joyned together) by reaſon of the many godly men it did produce. It lyeth in length from Eaſt to Weſt, a new fair ſtreet dividing it in the very midſt: on the Weſt ſide whereof are two handſom Market-places, and a ſtrong Caſtle built by Galeaze the firſt Duke of Millain; whoſe Tomb, together with that of Luitprandus King of the Lombards, are here ſtill remaining; the Kings of Lombardy being ſo pleaſed with the ſituation of the place, that they made it the Seat-royal of their Kingdom. The Cathedral here is one of the beſt indowed in Italie, if not in Europe; the Revenues of it amounting to 300000 Crowns per annum. 3 Como, the Birth-place of both the Plinies; a rich and handſom Town, ſituate on the South-ſide of the Lacus Larius, which from this Town hath now the name of Lago di Como: into which Lake and through it runs the Addua, and yet the waters do not mingle; that of the River paſſing over thoſe of the Lake. About this Lake are many fair houſes, and handſom Villages, which do much beautifie the place; and in the midſt thereof an Iſland called Comacina, in which there was a ſtrong Fortreſs in former times, wherein the Longobardian Kings did preſerve their Treaſury. 4 Lodi, or Landa in the Latin, ſeated in a proſperous ſoyl, and bleſſed with a painful and induſtrious people. 5 Novara, ſituate upon an high hill, in which live many ancient and noble Families: of right belonging to the Spaniard, as Dukes of Millain; but at the time when Maginus wrote, conſigned over upon ſome conditions to the Dukes of Parma. But this Town though it appertained to the Dukes of Millain, is ſituate within the Dukedom of Mont-ferrat; and ſo is 6 Alexandria alſo, once a poor ſmall village, known by the name of Roboretum, from a Grove of Oakes adjoyning to it: afterwards being raiſed to its preſent greatneſs, by the joynt purſes of the Citizens of Cremona, Millain, and Placentia, in honour of the Emperour it was called Cæſarea. But in ſhort time theſe people ſiding with the Popes, drew on themſelves the anger of the Emperor Frederick Babaroſſa: who having in a manner deſolated the City of Millain, the people thereof at the deſtruction of the City, retired to this Town; calling it in honour of Pope Alexander the third, whoſe part they then took againſt the Emperor, by the name of Alexandria, which it ſtill retaineth. It is now the ſtrongeſt outwork of the whole Dutchy, well fortified againſt all aſſaults and batteries, which may come from France. 7 Marignan, ſituate South from Millain, remarkable for the great defeat here given the Switzers, by King Francis the firſt; and now the title of a Marqueſs. 8 Cremona, ſituate on the Banks of the River Po, in a very rich and healthy ſoyl; an ancient Colony of the Romans, but a beautiful City to this day; and of ſuch fidelity to its Prince, that it hath got the name of Cremona the faithful. It was built in the firſt year of the ſecond Punick War, and burnt to the ground by Veſpaſians ſouldiers, after the defeat of Vitellius his forces: which defeat was given under the wals of this Town. For when Antonius, Veſpaſians General, firſt after his victory entered into it, he went into a Bath to waſh away the ſweat and bloud from his body: where finding the water ſomewhat too cold, he ſaid by chance, that it ſhould anon be made hotter. Which words the ſouldiers applying to their greedy deſires, ſet fire on the Town, and ſpent four daies in the pillage of it. By the encouragement of Veſpaſian it was

Millain again re-edified, and is now grew famous for the high Tower; from which the by-word, Una turris in Cremona, unus Petrus in Roma, unus portus in Ancona. 9 Millain, a fair Town, once the Metropolis of the Province of Liguria, and afterwards of the whole Dioceſe of Italie; called therefore Μητρόπολις τῆς Ἰταλίας, the Metropolis or Mother City of Italie, as Dionyſius one of the Biſhops hereof is called the Metropolitan of Italie, by S. Athanaſius. At this time the faireſt and the biggeſt of all Lombardy, having a Caſtle ſo ſtrongly fortified, with natural and artificial Ramparts, that it is deemed impregnable. A City very populous, containing 200000 perſons; and of great Trade, here being private ſhops equalling the publick ſtore-houſes of other places; the people conſequently ſo rich, that the wife of every mechanick will flant it in her ſilks and taffeties. This City is ſaid to have been built by the Galls, 359 years before Chriſt. It is ſeven miles in circuit, and honoured with an Univerſity, wherein flouriſhed Hermolaus Barbarus, Cælius Rhodiginus, and Cardanus. Seated it is in as commodious a ſoyl as any in Italie, environed with water by two great channels; the one drawn from the River of Addua, the other from the Teſis or Atheſis: which run hard by it, and convey all things to the City in ſo great abundance, that things there are at very cheap rates; and add much alſo to the induſtry of the inhabitants in the vending and diſperſing of their Manufactures, which are of great eſteem in moſt parts of the World. The buildings of the City generally are fair and ſtately, but three eſpecially commended for their magnificence; that is to ſay, the Caſtle, the Hoſpital, and the Cathedral. For matter of Religion it doth uſe to glory, that Barnabas the Apoſtle was its firſt Biſhop, and St. Ambroſe one of his Succeſſors; that formerly their Biſhop ſtood on even terms with the Popes of Rome, and their Church as much priviledged as that; and that ſince thoſe times they have given unto the world four Popes, that is to ſay, Alexander the 2d, Urban the 3d, Celeſtine the 5th, and of late, Gregory the 14th.

As for the fortunes of it, it continued in the power of the French, and the Kings of Italy of that Nation, from the deſtruction of the Lombards, till the Kingdom of Italie fell from the houſe of Charles the Great, and came at laſt into the hands of the German Emperors. Under them it continued till the time of Frederick Barbaroſſa, from whoſe obedience it revolted Anno 1161, in behalf of Pope Alexander the third; the Emperor divers times defacing the City, and the people ſtill miniſtring freſh occaſions of diſlike and quarrel. Beatrix the wife of Frederick coming to ſee the City, without any ill intentions to it; was by the irreverent people firſt impriſon'd, and then moſt barbarouſly uſed. For ſetting her upon a Mule, they turned her face towards the tail, which they made her hold in ſtead of a bridle; and having thus ſhewed her up and down the City, they brought her unto one of the gates, and there kicked her out. To revenge this horrible affront, the Emperor beſieged and forced the Town; adjudging all the people to die without mercy, but ſuch as would undergo this ranſome. Between the Buttocks of a skittiſh and kicking Mule, there was faſtned a bunch of figs; one or more of which, ſuch as deſired to live muſt ſnatch out with their teeth, their hands bound behind them, as the Mule was pacing through the ſtreets. A condition which moſt of them accepted; and thereupon gave occaſion to the cuſtome uſed among the Italians: who when they intend to ſcoff or diſgrace a man, are wont to put their thumb betwixt two of their fingers, ſaying Ecco la Fico; a diſgrace anſwerable to that of making horns (in England) to him that is ſuſpected to be a Cuckold. The City after this, rebelling and again taken by the Emperor, he levelled it unto the ground, pulled down the wals; and cauſed the whole ground on which it ſtood, to be ploughed up, and ſowed with ſalt; ſeeming to threaten by that Emblem, that it ſhould never be re-edified. Which notwithſtanding, the City was not only new built again, but the Pope with the help of theſe Millaneſe and the Venetians, had at laſt the better of the Emperor; whom he enjoyned, after a vile ſubmiſſion, to undertake a journey to the Holy-land. Freed from the Emperor, they began to live after the form of a Republick; in which condition they continued about 56 years: when Otho, ſurnamed Viſconti (quaſi bis Comes, becauſe he was Lord of Millain, and Angerona) aſſumed the title to himſelf, and ſetled it upon that Family after his deceaſe; but ſo, that for the moſt part they were under the command of the German Emperors, and to them accomptable. Galeaz the firſt, ſo called (as ſome write) becauſe the Cocks crowed more than ordinarily at the time of his birth, added to the Eſtate hereof the Cities of Crema, and Cremona. In the perſon of John Galeazo it was advanced unto a Dukedom by the Emperor Wenceſlaus, for 100000 Crowns in ready Money; which John increaſed ſo mightily in wealth and power, that he had 29 Cities under his command; and dyed as he was going to Florence, to be crowned King of Tuſcany. To him ſucceeded John Maria, and after him his brother Philip: who in his life had maried his only daughter (but illegitimate) to Franciſco Sforza, the beſt commander of his times; and at his death, appointed Alfonſo of Aragon, King of Naples, for his heir and ſucceſſor. Before Alfonſo could take any benefit of this deſignation, Sforza was quietly poſſeſſed both of the City and the loves of the people. This Francis Sforza (I muſt needs crave leave to tell this ſtory) was the ſon of James Altendulo, a plain Countreyman, who going to his labour with his Axe in his hand, whileſt a great Army was paſſing by him, compared the miſery and unpleaſingneſs of his preſent condition, with thoſe fair poſſibilities which a martial life did preſent unto him. And being in a great diſpute within himſelf what were beſt to do, he preſently fell upon a reſolution of putting the queſtion to the determination of the Heavenly Providence; by caſting his Axe unto the top of a tree next to him: conditioning with himſelf, that if the Axe came down again, he would contentedly apply himſelf to his wonted labour; but if it hung upon the boughs, he would betake himſelf unto higher hopes, and follow the Army then in paſſage. He did ſo, the Axe hung upon the boughs, he went after the Army, and thrived ſo well in that imployment, that he became one of the beſt Captains of his time; ſurnamed de Cetoniogla from the place of his dwelling, and Sforza from the greatneſs of his noble courage. By Antonia the Daughter of Francis di Caſalis, the Lord of Cortona, he was the father of this Francis

Sforza

Sforza whom now we ſpeak of; who was ſo fortunate a Commander in the wars of Italie, that to oblige him to his party, Philip the Duke of Millain beſtowed his daughter upon him, and thereby a fair title to this great Eſtate, which he ſucceſſively obtained againſt all pretenders. In his line it continued till the coming of Lewis the twelfth of France, the ſon of Charles, and nephew of Lewis, Dukes of Orleans, by Valentina the ſole daughter of John Galeaze the firſt Duke: who getting Duke Lodowick Sforza (betrayed by the Switzers) into his hands, carried him priſoner into France, and poſſeſſed himſelf of the eſtate. Outed not long after by the confederate Princes of Italie, who were jealous of ſo great a neighbour; he left the cauſe and quarrel unto Francis the firſt, his next ſucceſſor in that Kingdom: in purſuance whereof, it is ſaid by Bellay a French Writer, that the uſe of Muskets was firſt known. But Francis being in concluſion taken at the battel of Pavie, and carried priſoner into Spain; for his releaſe, was forced to releaſe all claim unto this Eſtate. A releaſe long before endevoured by ſome French Politicians, becauſe the pretenſions hereunto had brought ſuch damage to that Crown: and no leſs eagerly oppoſed by Chancellor Prat (on the ſame reaſon that Scipio Naſica did oppoſe the deſtruction of Carthage, that is to ſay) becauſe it did not only keep the French Nation in continual diſcipline of War; but ſerved for a purgation of idle and ſuperfluous people. Yet notwithſtanding this releaſe, Francis renewed the War again; and laid ſiege to Millain, then under the command of Antonio di Leva, and a Spaniſh Garriſon: during which war, the wretched Millaneſe endured the worſt of miſeries. For firſt the Governor, under colour of Providing pay for his ſouldiers, got all the victuals of the Town into the Caſtle, to be ſold again at his own price: which many of the poorer ſort not able to pay, periſhed of famin in the ſtreets. And on the other ſide, his ſouldiers which were quartered in moſt parts of the City, uſed when they wanted money, to chain up their Hoſts, and then to put them to a ranſom. Such as upon this barbarous uſage fled out of the City, had their Goods confiſcate: on which there followed ſuch a diſconſolate deſolation, that the chief ſtreets were over-grown with nettles and brambles. In this miſerable eſtate it continued, till Charles the Emperor having totally driven out the French, reſtored it to Francis Sforza; brother to the laſt Duke Maximilian, and ſon of that Ludowick, who to advance himſelf unto this Eſtate, had moſt improvidently taught the French the way into Italie. But this Francis dying without iſſue, and the houſe of Sforza failing in him; the Emperor entred on the Dukedom as right Lord thereof, and left the ſame to his ſucceſſors in the Realm of Spain. This ſaid, we will ſum up the whole ſtory of this Eſtate, in the enſuing Catalogue of Millain.

The Lords and Dukes of Millain.

1277 1 Otho, Archbiſhop of Millain.
1295 2 Matthew, Brothers ſon to Otho, confirmed in his command of Millain, by Albertus the Emperor.
1322 3 Galeaze Viſconti, ſon of Matthew, diſſeized of his command by Lewis of Bavaria Emperor.
1329 4 Actio Viſconti, ſon of Galeaze, confirmed in his Fathers power by the ſame Lewis the Emperor.
1339 5 Luchino Viſconti, brother to Galeaze.
1349 6 John Viſconti, the brother of Luchino.
1354 7 Galeaze II. ſon of Stephen the brother of John.
1378 8 John Galeaze, ſon of the firſt Galeaze, created by the Emperor Wenceſlaus, the firſt Duke of Millain, Ann. 1395.
1402 9 John Maria, ſon of John Galeaze, ſlain by the people for his horrible tyrannies.
1412 10 Philip Maria, the laſt of the Viſconti, which commanded in Millain; a Prince of great power in ſwaying the affairs in Italie. He died Anno 1446; the Millaneſe for ſome years reſuming their former liberty.
1461 12 Galeaze Sforze, a valiant, but libidinous Prince, cruelly murdered by his own Subjects.
1477 13 John Galeaze Sforze, privately made way (as it was ſuppoſed) by his Unkle Lodowick.
1494 14 Lodowick Sforze, the ſon of Francis, and brother of Galeaze, who to ſecure himſelf of his ill-got Dukedom, drew the French into Italie.
1501 15 Lewis the XII. of France, ſon unto Charles, and nephew to Lewis Duke of Orleans, by Valentina daughter to the firſt Duke of Millain; vanquiſhed Ludowick, carried him priſoner into France, and took the Dukedom to himſelf.
1513 16 Maximilian Sforze, the ſon of Ludowick, reſtored to the Dukedom by the power of the Switzers, and Venetians; but again outed of it by Francis the firſt, Son-in-law and Succeſſor to King Lewis the 12th in the Kingdom of France.
1529 17 Francis Sforze, brother of Maximilian, reſtored to the Eſtate, and the French expelled by the puiſſance of Charles the 5th; who after the death of this Duke Francis (the laſt of the Sforzes) Anno 1535, united it for ever to the Crown of Spain.

This Dukedom is not now of ſuch great extent, and power, as in former times; there being but nine Cities remaining of thoſe 29, which were once under the command of the Dukes hereof; the reſt being gotten in by the State of Venice, the Florentines, the Dukes of Mantua, and Parma. And yet is this accompted the prime Dukedom of Chriſtendom (as Flanders was accompted the prime Earldom of it) affording the Annual Revenue of 800000 Ducats to the King of Spain. A good Revenue, might it Mantua. come clear unto his Coffers. But what with the discharge of his Garrison-souldiers, the defraying of his Vice-roy, the Salaries of Judges and inferior Ministers; it is conceived that he spends more on it than he getteth.

The Armes hereof are Argent, a Serpent Azure, Crowned Or; in his Gorge an Infant Gules. Which was the Coat-Armour of a Saracen, vanquished by Otho the first of the Visconti, in the Holy-land.

There are in this Dukedom,
Archbishop 1. Bishops 6.

The Dukedom of MANTVA.

THe Dukedom of MANTVA, is bounded on the West, with Millain; on the East, with Romandiala; on the North, with Marca Trevigiana; and on the South, with the Dukedom of Parma.

The Countrey about Mantua is reasonably good, and yeeldeth all sorts of Fruits being well manured: plentiful in Corn and Pastures, the very High-waies by the fields being planted with Elms, to train up the Vines which grow there intermingled in every place; as generally it is in all parts of Lombardy. But the Inhabitants are conceived not to be so civil, and well-bred, as the rest of Italie; childish in their apparel, without manly gravity, poor in the entertainment of their friends, and exacting all they can from strangers.

The places in it of most note are, 1 Mercaria, bordering next to Millain. 2 Bozilia, a small, but pleasant habitation, belonging to some Princes of the Ducal family; built with fair Cloysters towards the street, in which passengers may walk dry in the greatest rain. 3 Petula, a smal Village, but as famous as any, in regard it was the place wherein Virgil was born: but generally said to be born in Mantua (Mantua Virgilio gaudet, as the old Verse is) because this Village is so near the City of Mantua (being but two miles distant) that his birth might very well be ascribed unto it. 4 Mantua, seated on the River Mincius, now called Sarca; which coming out of Lago di garda falleth not far off into the Po, from whence there is a passage unto Venice. By nature strong, environed on three sides with a running water, half a mile in breadth; and on the fourth side with a Wall. The Dukes to take their pleasure on the Lakes and Rivers, have a Barge called the Bucentaure, five stories high, and capable of two hundred persons (whence it had the name) furnished very richly both for state and pleasure. Ocnus the son of Manto the Propheteſs, the daughter of Tiresias, is said to have been the founder of it, and to have given unto it his Mothers name; but I more than doubt it, though Virgil a Native of those parts do report it so; this City being one of those which the Tuscans built beyond the Apennine, as the soundest Antiquaries do affirm. Made memorable (by whomsoever built at first) in the declining times of Christian purity, for a Councel holden in it, Anno 1061, wherein it was decreed, that the choosing of the Pope should from thenceforth belong unto the Cardinals. A Prerogative which of old belonging to the Emperors, was first by Constantine the third surnamed Pogonatus, given to the Clergy and people of Rome, in the time of Pope Benedict the second, Ann. 684. resumed by Charles the Great, when he came to the Empire; and now appropriated only to the Colledge of Cardinals. But to return unto the Town; on the East-side of a bridge of about 500 paces long, covered over head, and born up with Arches, stands the Dukes Palace for the City; and not far thence the Domo, or Cathedral Church of S. Peter. The Palace very fair and stately, but far short for the pleasures and delights thereof, of his Palace at Mirmirollo, five miles from the City: which though it be of a low roof (after the manner of ancient buildings) yet it is very richly furnished, and adorned with very beautiful Gardens; able to lodge, and give content to the best Prince in Christendome. Here are also many other Towns, as 5 Caprena, and 6 Lucera, of which nothing memorable.

As for the fortunes of this Dukedom, it is to be observed that Mantua followed for long time the fortunes of the Western Empire; till given by Otho the second to Theobald Earl of Canosse for the many good services he had done him. Boniface who succeded him, had to Wife Beatrix the sister of Henry the second; and by her was the Father of Mathildis, that famous Warrioures, who carried so great a stroke in the State of Italie. Being dispossessed of her Estate by Henry the third, she joyned in faction with the Popes, recovered all her own again, and dismembred from the Empire many goodly Territories; which at her death (having had three husbands, but no issue) she gave it in fee for ever to the See of Rome, Anno 1115. After her death Mantua continued under the protection of the Empire. But that protection failing them, by little and little it was brought under by the family of the Bonacelsi: who Lording it over a Free-people with too great severity, contracted such a general hatred, that Passavino the last of them, was slain in the Market-place by the people, under the command and conduct of Lewis de Gonzaga, a noble Gentleman; who presently with great applause took to himself the Goverment of the Estate, Anno 1328, which hath continued in his house to this very day, with a great deal of lustre. Whose successors take here as followeth, under the several titles of

The Lords, Marquesses, and Dukes of Mantua.

A. Ch.
1328 1 Lewis Gonzaga, the first of this Line, Lord of Mantua.
1366 2 Guido, son of Lewis.

1369 3 Ludowick, or Lewis II. son of Guido.
1382 4 Francis Gonzaga, son of Lewis 2d, highly extolled by Poggie the Florentine for his Wisdom and Learning; who valiantly repulsed the attempts made against his Estate, by John Galeaze, the first Duke of Millain.
1407 5 John Francisco Gonzaga, created the first Marques of Mantua, by the Emperor Sigismund.
1444 6 Lodowick, or Lewis III. son of John Francisco, who entertained the Emperor Frederick, and the King of Danemark, with great magnificence.
1478 7 Frederick son of Lewis the third.
1484 8 Francis II. son of Frederick.
1519 9 Frederick II. Commander of the Armies of the Pope, and Florentines, entertained Charles the fifth with great solemnity; by whom he was made Duke of Mantua, 1530, and declared Marques of Montferrat, in right of his wife.
1540 10 Francis III. son of Frederick the second, Duke of Mantua, and Marques of Montferrat.
1550 11 William the brother of Francis the third, created the first Duke of Montferrat.
1587 12 Vincent, son of William, Duke of Mantua and Montferrat.
13 Francis IV. son of Vincent, had to wife Margaret the daughter of Charles Emanuel Duke of Savoy, and by her a daughter named Mary; in whose behalf, the Duke of Savoy undertook the war against her Uncle, for Montferrat.
1613 14 Ferdinand, the brother of Francis the fourth, succeeded him in both Estates, notwithstanding the opposition of the Duke of Savoy.
15 Vincent II. the brother of Ferdinand and of Francis the fourth.
1628 16 Charles Gonzaga, Duke of Nevers in France, by his Mothers line; and of Mantua and Montferrat by his Father Lewis Gonzaga, the third Son of Frederick the first Duke of Mantua; succeeded on the death of Vincent the 2d: but not without great opposition of the Spanish Faction, who sacked Mantua, distressed Casal, and much impoverished both Estates. But the business was at last composed by the power of the French, and the investiture conferred upon him, by the hands of the Emperor.

The chief order of Knighthood in these Dukedoms, is, of the The bloud of our Lord JESUS Christ, instituted An. 1608. The Author of it was Duke Vincent Gonzaga, when the Mariage was solemnized between his son Francis, and the Lady Margaret daughter to the Duke of Savoy. It consisteth of twenty Knights, whereof the Mantuan Dukes are Soveraigns; and was allowed by Pope Paul the fifth. The Collar hath threads of Gold laid on fire, and inter-woven with these words, Domine probasti. To the Collar are pendent two Angels, supporting three drops of bloud, and circumscribed with, Nihil isto triste recepto. It took this name, because in St. Andrews Church in Mantua, are said to be kept as a most precious Relique, certain drops of our Saviours Bloud (thou canst not, O Reader, but beleeve it) with a piece of the sponge.

The Territories of this Duke (reckoning in that of Montferrat also) are in circuit nigh unto those of Florence; but his Revenues fall much short, which amount to about 500000 Ducats only; but might be greater, if either the Duke would be burdensom to his subjects, as Florence is; or if he were not on all sides land-locked from navigation and traffick.

The Arms of Mantua are Argent, a Cross Patee Gules, between four Eagles Sable, membred of the second, under an Escocheon in Fesse, charged quarterly with Gules a Lion Or, and Or three Bars Sable.

There are in this Dukedom.

The Dukedom of MODENA.

THe Dukedom of MODENA containeth the Cities of Modena and Reggio, with the Territories adjoyning to them: both of them situate in that part of Lombardy which is called Cispadana; and consequently partake of the pleasures and commodities of it.

The people of this Dukedom are said to be better-natured than most of Italie: those of Modena being quick in their resolutions; easie to be pacified when wronged, and friendly in their entertainment of Strangers; the Reggians being affable, of present wits, and fit for any thing they can be imployed in: the women in both Towns of a milde disposition, neither too courtly, nor too froward, as in other places.

The first and principal City is that of Modena, anciently better known by the name of Mutina, and famous in those times for the first battel betwixt Antony and Augustus Cæsar; this latter being then not above eighteen years of age, and yet made head of a new League against Antonius, whom the Senate and people looked upon as a common Enemy. The managing of the War was left to Hirtius and Pansa then Consuls; the fortune of the day so equall, that Antony left the field, and the Consuls their lives; leaving Augustus the absolute command of a powerful Army, into whose favours he so cunningly did work himself, that he made them the foundation of his future greatness. It was at that time a Roman Colony, but being ruined by the fury of the Gothes and Lombards, was afterwards new built at the charge of the Citizens, situate near the Apennine in a very good Parma. ſoyl, and of indifferent fair buildings. In the diſtractions of Italie betwixt the Emperors and the Popes, Guido the Popes Legat, and then Biſhop thereof, conſigned it over to Azo of the houſe of Eſte, Lord of Ferrara, Anno 1304; the Pope himſelf conſenting to it, upon the payment of a yearly tribute of 10000 Crowns: ſince which time it hath been for the moſt part in the power of that houſe: Borſius the Marqueſs of Ferrara, being by Frederick the third made Duke of Mutina. 2. Reggio, the ſecond Town of note, hath taſted much of the ſame fortune; at firſt a Roman Colony called Regium Lepidi, afterwards ruined by the Gothes when they came firſt into Italie; repaired and compaſſed with a Wall by its own inhabitants, and for a time under the command of the Earls of Canoſſe. But being weary of that yoke, they recovered their liberty; which being unable to maintain in thoſe buſtling times, they gave themſelves unto Obizo the Father of Azo, Anno 1292, and after that in the year 1326 to the See of Rome. Paſſing through many other hands, it was at laſt ſold for 60000 Ducats to the Viſconti, Lords of Millain, Anno 1370, and in the end recovered by the houſe of Eſte, Anno 1409, and gave the title of a Duke to the aforeſaid Borſius, whom Frederick the third made Duke of Modena, and Reggio, 1452.

The ſucceſſors of this Borſius are before lad down in the ſucceſſion of Ferrara; who held the whole eſtate together till the death of Alphonſo the laſt Duke. He dying without lawful iſſue, Anno 1595, left his eſtate to Ceſar de Eſte, his Nephew by a baſe ſon, called Alphonſo alſo; betwixt whom and Pope Clement the 8th a war was threatned for the whole: but at laſt compromiſed upon theſe conditions, that the Church of Rome ſhould have Ferrara, with all the lands and territories appertaining to it, as an Eſtate anciently holden of that See; and that Modena, and Reggio, being Imperial Feifes, ſhould remain to Cæſar; but to be held in fee of the Papal Throne. Duke Cæſar to have leave to carry away all his movable goods, to ſell ſuch of his lands as were not of the ancient domain of the Dukedom; and to have one half of the Ordnance and Artillery. By which agreement the Cities of Modena and Reggio, became a new erected State, diſtinct, and independent of any other: each City being well fortified, and garriſoned, and furniſhed with Ordnance for defence thereof. But what they yeeld unto the Prince in the way of Revenue, and what Forces he is able to raiſe out of his Eſtates, I cannot poſitively determine: but by the Tribute formerly paid unto the Popes for the City of Mutina, and the rich territory of both Towns, and the great Revenues of the Dukes of Ferrara; I conceive they cannot yeeld leſs than 100000 Crowns of yearly in-come. The Armes of this Duke the ſame with thoſe of Ferrara, before blazoned.

The Dukedom of PARMA.

THE Dukedom of PARMA hath on the North the Dukedoms of Millain and Mantua, from which it is parted by the Po; on the South, the Apennine, which divideth it from Liguria; on the Eaſt, the Countrey of Modena, and Romandiola, from which laſt parted by the River Scultenna now called Panaro; on the Weſt, Montferrat: ſituate, as Modena is, in Lombardia Ciſpadana; and much of the ſame nature both for ſoyl, and air, and other the commodities of thoſe parts of Italie.

The principal Cities of it are, 1 Parma, an ancient City, and made a Colony of the Romans at the end of the ſecond Punick War; as Mutina and Aquileia at the ſame time were. It is ſeated on a ſmall River of the ſame name, which runneth almoſt through the midſt of it; beautified with very handſom buildings, and peopled by a race of ingenious men, whether they do betake themſelves unto Arts or Arms. The grounds about this City are of excellent paſturage, and yeeld great plenty of the Cheeſe which is called Parmeſan. 2 Placentia, ſeated on the Po, one of the firſt Colonies which the Romans planted amongſt the Ciſalpine Galls; and famous for the reſiſtance which it made both to Annibal, and Aſdrubal, who ſeverally in vain beſieged it: made afterwards the Metropolis of the Province of Æmilia, yet nothing the leſs beautiful for ſo great an age. The fields adjoyning have the ſame commendation with thoſe of Parma, for moſt excellent Cheeſe; but go beyond for Salt-pits and Mines of Iron, which the other wanteth. 3 Mirandula, a proper Town built in the time of Conſtans the ſon of Conſtantine the Great: the Patrimony of the noble Family of the Pici (of which was Picus de Mirandula that renowned Scholar) but held by them as Feudataries to the Dukes of Parma. 4 Briſcello, called anciently Brixellum, not far from the chief City Parma; of no great note at the preſent time, but memorable in the Roman ſtory for the death of the Emperor Otho, who here killed himſelf. For hearing here that his Forces were overthrown by Valens, and Cecina, Commanders of the Forces of Vitellius, then his Competitor for the Empire; he rather choſe to fall by his own ſword, than that the Romans ſhould be forced, for his ſake, to renew the war. And this he did with ſo much honour to himſelf, that many of his ſouldiers ſlew themſelves at his Funeral Pile; not out of conſciouſneſs of crime, or for fear of puniſhment, but to teſtifie their affections to him, and to follow ſuch a brave example as was laid before them. So as we may truly ſay of him, as he is ſaid by Tacitus to have ſaid of himſelf, viz. Alii diutius imperium tenuerunt, nemo tam fortiter reliquit. 5 Monticella, in the middle way almoſt between Parma and Placentia, and oppoſite unto Cremona, a chief Town of the Dutchy of Millain, from which parted by the River Po.

Theſe Towns (as others in theſe parts) have been partakers of the diverſities of fortune, as being (after the declining of the Weſtern Empire) ſometimes under the Venetians, moſt times under the Millanoys; and at laſt conquered by Pope Julius the 2d in the confuſions and diſtractions of the Duke-

dom of Millain, under the two laſt Princes of the houſe of Sforza. By Paul the third, being of the houſe of the Farneſis, the Cities of Parma and Placentia with their Appendixes, were given unto his ſon Petro Aluigi (or Petrus Aloyſius, as the Latins call him) with the title of Duke, Anno 1549. The Signeury of Camerine, which he had lately taken from the Dukes of Urbin, being given in recompence to the Church. This Petro being a man of moſt vicious life, had amongſt other villanies committed an unſpeakable violence, on the perſon of Coſmus Chirius the Biſhop of Janum; and ſoon after poyſoned him. For which moſt deteſtable fact, he received no other chaſtiſement of his Father than this, Hæc vitia me non commonſtratore didicit, that he was ſure he had not learnt thoſe vices by his example. But going on in theſe wicked courſes, he was ſlain at laſt by Count John Aguzzola; and Placentia, after a ſhort ſiege, yeelded to Ferdinand Gonzaga (Vice-roy in Millain for the Emperor Charles the fifth) conceived to be privy to the murder. Octavian the ſon of Petro Luigi, hearing what had happned, fortified himſelf in Parma as well as he could: but being hated by the new Pope, and diſtruſtful, not without good cauſe, of the Emperors purpoſes, he had quite loſt all, if Henry the ſecond of France, had not taken him into his protection. For the Emperor Charles fully determined (notwithſtanding that Octavian had maried his baſe daughter) to have made himſelf Lord of the Town: and the French King was loth to ſee ſo great a ſtrength added to the Emperors poſſeſſions in Italie. When the war had now laſted four years, Philip the ſecond which ſucceeded Charles, conſidering how neceſſary it was for his affairs in Italie, to have this Octavian his friend; reſtored unto him the City of Plaiſance or Placentia, and ſo withdrew him from the French faction, Anno 1557. Yet becauſe he would be ſure to keep his houſe in a perpetual dependence on Spain, he reſtored it not abſolutely at the preſent, but held the Citadel thereof with a Spaniſh Garriſon, till the year 1583: when in regard of the good ſervices, which Alexander Prince of Parma had done him in his Wars againſt the Hollanders, and others of the revolted Provinces; he cauſed it to be ſurrendred into the hands of his Father Octavian. By which, and by his ſetling upon this houſe the Town and Territory of Novara, in the Dukedom of Millain, and other perſonal favours which they have conferred on the Princes of it; the Kings of Spain ſeem to have given ſome ſatisfaction to this houſe for ſtepping betwixt them and the Kingdom of Portugal; to which they might have made ſuch a probable title, as would have troubled his Eſtate, had they ſtood upon it. Parma.

The Dukes of Parma.

1550 2 Octavian Farneſis, ſon to Petro Luigi, maried Margaret baſe daughter to Charles the fifth; afterwards Governeſs of the Netherlands.

1592 4 Rainutio Farneſis, ſon of Alexander and Mary of Portugal, eldeſt daughter of Edward ſon to King Emanuel; one of the competitors for that Crown.

5 Edoardo Farneſis, ſon of Rainutio.

Of the Revenues and Forces of theſe Princes I have little to ſay, but think them to be of good conſideration in both reſpects: their Territories lying in the beſt and richeſt part of Italie, and their Eſtates, environed by more puiſſant neighbours; which both neceſſitate and inable them, to defend their own.

The Dukedom of MONTFERRAT.

THe Dukedom of MONTFERRAT, is ſituate betwixt Lombardy and Piemont, on the Rivers of Tenarus and Po, on the Eaſt, and Weſt: extended North, and South, in a line or branch, from the Alpes to the borders of Liguria; of which laſt it was ſometimes counted part, and called Liguria Ciſapennina for diſtinction ſake.

It took this name either à Monte ferrato, from ſome mountain of it ſtored with Iron; or elſe à Monte feraci, as ſome rather think, from the fertility of the Mountains. And to ſay truth, though the whole Countrey ſeem to be nothing elſe than a continual heap of Mountains; yet are they Mountains of ſueh wonderfull fruitfulneſs, that they will hardly give place to any Valley in Europe.

The principal River of it is the Tenarus, above mentioned, which ſpringing out of the hils about Barceis, a Town of the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, falleth into the Po not far from Pavie. The principal Cities of it are, 1 Alba, called by Plinie, Alba Pompeia, ſituate on the banks of the ſaid River, in a rich and fertil ſoyl, but a very bad air: near to which, in a poor village called Zobia, the Emperor Pertinax was born. Who being of mean and obſcure parents, after the death of Commodus, was called by the Conſpirator to the Roman Empire. But being over-zealous to reform the corruptions of the Souldiers, he was by the Prætorian Guards (hating their Princes for their vertues, as much as formerly for their vices) moſt cruelly murdered; and the Imperial dignity ſold to Julianus, for 25 Seſter-

Montferrat tiems a man. 2 Caſal, vulgarly called Saint Vas, from the Church there dedicated to Saint Evaſius (or Saint Vas, as they ſpeak it commonly) the ſtrongeſt Town in all this Countrey; well built, and peopled with many ancient and noble Families, of which the Family of St George is one of the principal; and made a Biſhops See by Pope Sixtus the fourth, Anno 1474. It was in former times, the chief ſeat of the houſe of Montferrat, and for that cauſe compaſſed with a ſtrong wall, and a fair Caſtle: but of late fortified after the modern manner of Fortifications, and ſtrengthned with an impregnable Citadel by Duke Vincent Gonzago, as the ſureſt Key of his eſtate; in which new Citadel the Governor of the Province holds his uſual reſidence. 3 Aique, in Latin Aquenſis, famous for its Baths or Fountains of hot and medicinal waters. 4 Saint Saviours, where there is a very ſtrong Fortreſs, as there is alſo in 5 Ponſture, or Pont di Stura, ſo called of the River Stura. 6 Oſoniano, anciently Occimianum, the old ſeat of the firſt Marqueſſes of this Montferrat. 7 Villa nova. 8 Belzale. 9 Liburn, and many others of leſs note.

Here are alſo within the limits of this Kingdom, the Towns of Aſt, Cherian, and Chivaſco, belonging to the Dukes of Savoy, in the deſcription of whoſe Countrey we may ſpeak more of them; together with Novara and Alexandria, appertaining to the Dukedom of Millain, which we have ſpoken of already. And hereunto alſo I refer the ſtrong (and in thoſe times) impregnable Fortreſs, by the Latin Hiſtorians called Fraxinetum, from ſome Grove of Aſhes near unto it: ſituate in the advantages of the Mountains, and not far from the ſea, by conſequence better able to defend it ſelf and admit relief; and therefore made the receptacle or retreat of the Saracens, at ſuch time as they had footing in theſe parts of Italie. Firſt took and fortified by them in the year 891, recovered afterwards by the proweſs and good fortune of Otho the Emperor, deſervedly ſurnamed the Great, about ſixty years after. Of great note in the ſtories of thoſe middle times. By Luitprandus placed near the borders of Provence; by Blondus, and Leander near the River Po, and the Town of Valenza, once called Forum Fulvii; and finally by Sigonius in the Cottian Alpes: and ſo moſt fit to be referred unto this Countrey, though now ſo deſolated that there is no remainders of the ruins of it.

This Countrey was made a Marquiſate by Otho the ſecond, Anno 985. one of the ſeven by him erected and given to the ſeven ſons of Waleran of Saxonie, who had maried his daughter Adelheide. A Military Family, conſpicuouſly eminent in the Wars of Greece, and the Holy-land; where they did many acts of ſingular merit: inſomuch as Baldwin and Conrade, iſſuing from a ſecond branch hereof, were made Kings of Hieruſalem; and Boniface one of the Marqueſſes, got the Kingdom of Theſſaly, and many fair Eſtates in Greece. But the Male-iſſue failing in Marqueſs John, the Eſtate fell to Theodorus Palæologus, of the Imperial family of Conſtantinople, who had maried the Heir-general of the houſe; continuing in his name till the year 1534, when it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Mantua. In the perſon of Duke William Gonzaga raiſed to the honour of a Dukedom, as it ſtill continueth; the beſt and richeſt part of that Dukes Eſtate, and the faireſt flower in all his Garden. The reſidue of the ſtory may be beſt collected out of the following Catalogue of

The Marqueſſes of Montferrat.

A. C.
985	1	William, one of the ſons of Waleran and Adelheide, made the firſt Marqueſs of Montferrat.
	2	Boniface, the ſon of William.
	3	William II. who accompanied the Emperor Conrade the III. and St. Lewis of France, to the Holy-land.
1183	4	Boniface II. ſon of William the II. his younger Brother William being deſigned King of Hieruſalem, and Reyner another of them made Prince of Theſſaly; ſucceeded his Father in Montferrat. Aiding his Nephew Baldwin, the ſon of William, in recovering the Kingdom of Hieruſalem; he was took priſoner by Guy of Luſignan: Competitor with him for that title.
	5	William III. ſon of Boniface, poyſoned in the Holy-land, where he endevoured the reſtoring of his Brother Conrade, to that languiſhing Kingdom.
	6	Boniface III. ſon of William the third, for his valour in taking of Conſtantinople, made King of Theſſalie.
1254	7	Boniface IV. ſon of Boniface the third, added Vercelli and Eporedium unto his Eſtate.
	8	John, ſurnamed the Juſt, the laſt of this houſe.
	9	Theodore Palæologus, ſon of the Emperor Andronicus Palæologus the elder, and Yoland his wife, daughter of Boniface the fourth.
	10	John Palæologus, ſon of Theodore.
	11	Theodorus II. ſon of John, a great builder and endower of Religious houſes.
	12	Jacobus Johannes, ſon of Theodore the ſecond.
	13	John III. eldeſt ſon of Jacobus Johannes.
1464	14	William IV. brother of John the third, founder of the City and Monaſtery of Caſal.
1487	15	Boniface V. brother of John and William, the two laſt Marqueſſes, inveſted by the Emperor Frederick the fourth, Blanca Maria the daughter of William ſurrendring her Eſtate unto him.
	16	William V. ſon of Boniface the fifth.
1518	17	Boniface VI. ſon of William the fifth.
1530	18	John George, brother of William the fifth, ſucceeded his Nephew in the Eſtate; which he held held but four years. After whose death, Anno 1534, this Marquisate was adjudged to Frederick the first Duke of Mantua, who had maried Margaret daughter of William the fifth, and next heir to George. Whose successors may be seen in the former Catalogue of the Dukes of Mantua.

And now according to my method, I should proceed to the description and story of the Principality of Piemont, the last and most Western part of Italy. But being it lieth partly in, and partly at the foot of the Alpes, was anciently a part of the Province called Alpes Cottiæ, and is now part of the Estate of the Duke of Savoy: we will defer it till we come to those Alpine Provinces, which are next to follow. And so much shall suffice for Italie, in which there are, besides those of Piemont,

ALPES.

BEfore we can come out of Italy into France, we muſt croſſe the Alpes; a ridge of Hills wherewith (as with a ſtrong and defenſible Rampart) Italy is aſſured againſt France, and Germany. They are ſaid to be five dayes journey high, covered continually with ſnow, from the whiteneſſe whereof they took this name: that in the Sabine Dialect being called Alpum, which in the Latine was called Album.

They begin about the Mediterranean or Liguſtick Seas, and croſſing all along the borders of France and Germany, extend as far as to the Gulf of Cornero, in the Province of Iſtria; and are in ſeverall parts called by ſeverall names, which we will muſter up as they lie in order from the Mediterranean to to the Adriatick. And firſt thoſe which lie neereſt to the Mediterranean, are for that cauſe called Maritimæ from their neerneſſe to Liguria, called by ſome Liguſticæ. 2 Then follow thoſe called Cottiæ, from Cottius, a King of the Allobroges: And 3 thoſe named Graiæ, from the paſſage of Hercules and his Græcian followers; of which, both amongſt the Poets and Hiſtorians, there is very good evidence. 4 After we come to the Pœninæ, ſo named from the march of Annibal and his Carthaginians, whom the Latine Writers call by the name of Pœni; or from the Mountain-God Pœninus, worſhipped by the Veragri, the Inhabitants of it. 5 Next come we to the Lepontiæ, ſo named from the Lepontii, who did there inhabit: As 6 the Rhæticæ, which lie next to them, from the Rhæti, once a powerfull people of that mountainous tract. 7 Then follow thoſe called Juliæ, from the paſſage of Julius Cæſar over them, in his march towards Gaul: and ſo at laſt we come unto thoſe called Carnicæ, extending to the ſhores of the Adriatick; denominated from the Carni who did here inhabit, and who gave name alſo to Carniola, an adjoyning Province.

The antient Inhabitants of theſe mountainous Countreys, beſides the Allobroges, Veragri, Lepontii, Rhæti, and Carni, ſpoken of before; were the Sedani, Salii, Valenſes, Vacontii, and divers others of leſſe note and eſtimation: all vanquiſhed by the indefatigable induſtry of the Romans. After whoſe ſubjugation, and the ſettlement of the Roman Empire, theſe Mountains, and ſome part of the vales adjoyning, made five ſeveral Provinces; viz. The Province of the Cottian Alpes, containing Walliſland, and Piemont. Secondly, of Rhætia Prima, comprehending the Griſons, and part of the Dukedome of Millain, now in poſſeſſion of the Switzers; both which were members of the Dioceſe of Italy. Thirdly, of the Alpes Maritimæ, now part of Daulphine and Provence. Fourthly, of the Graiæ and Pœninæ Alpes, and the greateſt part of Maxima Sequanorum, including ſome part of Savoy, and moſt part of Switzerland; both which were members of the Dioceſe of Gaul. And fifthly, of Noricum Mediterraneum; comprehending Carniola, Carinthia, and the parts neer hand; which were members of the Dioceſe of Illyricum Occidentale. The people antiently, as now, by reaſon of their drinking ſnow-water, diſſolving from the tops of the hills, and ſometimes falling thence with as great a violence as the Cataracts of Nilus are ſaid to do; were generally troubled with a ſwelling in the throat, which the Latines call Struma: being the ſame with that, which we call the Kings Evil; becauſe by ſpeciall priviledge curable by the Kings of France, and England. Quis tumidum guttur miratur in Alpibus? as the Poet hath it.

Of theſe vaſt hills, the loweſt are the Carnicæ and Maritimæ, lying neereſt to the ſeverall Seas before remembred: The Cottiæ and the Graiæ not ſo high, but that the paſſages lie open for the moſt part of the year. The reſt, by reaſon of their deep and dreadfull præcipices, their tedious and ſteep aſcents, narrow wayes, dangerous craggy Rocks, fierce whirlwinds, and huge balls of ſnow, tumbling with an incredible violence from the tops of the Mountains; are hardly paſſable by horſe, not at all by Waggon. And yet amongſt theſe dreadfull hills, there are obſerved to be ſome Vallies of great fertility, not giving ground for fruitfulneſſe to the beſt in Europe; and for the ſweetneſs of the temperature going much beyond them. With ſuch an equal hand, doth the heavenly providence diſpenſe the benefits of Nature to his whole Creation; that plenty bordereth upon want, and pain on pleaſure.

And

And yet for all the difficulty and danger of these Alpine passages, covetousness, or curiosity, or desire of conquest, have found a way to make them passable in many places; and that not only for private and particular passengers, but for vast multitudes and numerous Armies, such as those led by Annibal and Julius Cæsar. But especially the barbarous people found out five waies to break into Italie, which have been since much travelled by divers Nations; of which three be out of France, and two out of Germany. The first from France is through Provence, and so close to the Ligustick Seas; easiest for private Passengers, but too strait and narrow for great Armies: there being many passages in the Countrey of Nizze, so narrow, that ten men may make head against ten thousand; as in that called the Pace of the Virgin, for one. The second is over the hils called Geneure, into the Marquisate of Saluzzes, and so to the other parts of Lombardie; which was the way that Charles the eighth marched towards Naples; and by the Italians is called commonly Strada Romana, because the ordinary passage betwixt France and Rome. The third way is over the greater Cenis (which some call the lesser S. Bernard) to Aost, or Turin; which (if we may believe Antiquity) was first opened by Hercules, and after followed by Annibal: who found the passages so closed up, that he was forced to break his way (as Plutarch telleth us) with fire and vinegar; whence that so memorable saying, Viam Annibal aut inveniet aut faciet. From the passage of those Worthies, this tract, and that adjoyning were called Alpes Graiæ, and Pœninæ. Or if (as others think) Annibal took the former way, and came directly upon Turin, which Town it is most certain that he took in his march; then these Pœninæ must take name from the passage of Asdrubal, or of some part of Annibals Army, which probably was too great to go all one way: or else from the Mountain-God Pœninus, as before was said.

The first way out of Germany into Italie, is through the Countrey of the Grisons, by the Valtolin, which the Spaniard seized into his hands. So that by the keeping of the Veltlyn, or Valtolin, and manning of the Fort Fuentes, which he also erected; he was in a manner the Lord of this passage: not only to the discontent of the Natives, but to the distast of his neighbours the Savoyards, and Venetians. The other way out of Germany into Italie, is through the Countrey of Tirolis, by the Towns of Inspruch and Trent. This passage is commanded by the Castle and Fort of Eresberg, seated on the confines of this Countrey towards Suevia, and from Inspruch, is two daies journey distant. Which Fort, in the War which the Protestant Princes made against Charles the fifth, was surprized by Captain Scherteline, so to hinder the coming of the Popes Forces into Germany: for which the Emperor so hated him, that when all the rest of that faction were pardoned, he only continued a Proscript, his head being valued at 4000 Crowns. The taking also of this Fort, and the Castle adjoyning, by D. Maurice of Saxony, made the said Charles then being in Inspruch, to fly out of Germany; and shortly after to resign his Empire to his brother Ferdinand.

Out of these Mountains rise the springs of many of the most renowned Rivers in these West parts of the world; as, 1 The Rhene, which springeth from two several Fountains, the one which they call the Neerer Rhine, out of the Lepontiæ; and the other which they term the Vorder, or further Rhine, out of the Rheticæ; which meet together about a Dutch mile from Chur the chief Town of the Grisons, and so go on by Constance to Germany. 2 Rhosne, which riseth in that part of the Lepontiæ, which is called Die Furchen, about two Dutch miles from the head of the Neerer or Hinder Rhine, and so through Wallisland into France. 3 Padus, or Po, which hath his head in a branch of the Cottian or Coctian Alpes, heretofore called Mons Vesulus, and so through Piemont into Italie. Out of them also spring the Rivers of Russe, Durance, and Athesis; the first a Dutch, the second a French, and the third an Italian River also; not to say any thing of others of inferior note. The great Lakes which are found in this mountainous Tract, we shall hereafter meet with in their proper places.

Let us next look upon the Countreys and Estates here situate, which bordering upon Italie, France, and Germanie, and partaking somewhat of them all, do belong to neither; but reckon themselves to be free and absolute Estates, Supreme, and independent upon any others, as indeed they are. Such other of these Alpine Countreys, which are under the command of the German Princes, as some parts of Schwaben and Bavaria, together with Tirol, Carniola, and the rest which belong to Austria, shall be considered in the History of those States and Princes, to which of right they do belong. But for the rest, which as they lie intire together without intermixture, so they are absolute in themselves, and owe nor suit nor service unto any other; we will consider them in this place, under the name of the Alpes, or the Alpine Provinces.

The ALPES then, or the Alpine Provinces, call them which you will, are bound on the East with Tirol in Germany, and the Dukedoms of Millain and Montferrat in Italie; on the West with Provense, Daulphine, and La Bresse, parts of the Continent of France; on the North, with the County of Burgundy in France, and Suevia or Schwaben in High Germany; and on the South, with Lombardy, and a branch of the Mediterranean Sea. Called in the middle times by the name of Burgundia Transjurana, because it contained that part of the Kingdome of Burgundy, which lay beyond the Mountain Jour. A Mountain which beginning near the City of Basil, and not far from the Rhene, passeth South-westward by the Lakes of Bieler-Zee, Nuwenburger-Zee, and that called Lemane, till it come almost unto the Rhosne: dividing by that means the Provinces of Switzerland, and Savoy, from the County of Burgundy.

It lieth under the sixth Climate, and some part of the seventh: so that the longest day in Summer is fifteen hours, and three quarters. Of different nature in regard both of Soyl and People; which will best shew it self in the Survey of the several Provinces, into which divided; that is to say, 1 the Dukedom of Savoy, 2 the Signeury of Geneva, 3 the Resorts of Wallisland, 4 the Cantons of the Switzers, and 5 the Leagues or the Grisons. Which several States, though they be reckoned to be-belong to the German Empire, and that the Biſhops of Chur, Sion, and Baſil are generally accounted for Princes of it: yet they neither come unto the Diets, nor are ſubject to the publick Taxes; nor comprehended within any of thoſe ten Circles into which the Empire is divided.

The Language herein ſpoken, partakes ſomewhat of all three, as before was ſaid: the French being wholly ſpoke in Savoy, the lower Walliſland, and generally by the Switzers bordering on the Lake Lemane; the Dutch being common to the greateſt part of the Switzers, the Griſons about Chur, and the upper Walliſland: and finally the Italian, uſed by the generality of the Griſons, the Præfectures appertaining unto them and the Switzers both, in Piemont, and thoſe parts of Savoy which lie next unto it.

The principall Souldiers of theſe mountainous Provinces, 1 Rodolph, Earle of Habſpurg, the Founder of the preſent Auſtrian Family. 2 Thomas, and 3 Peter, Earles of Savoy, this laſt ſurnamed Charlemain the ſecond. 4 Emanuel Philibert, one of the later Dukes hereof, Commander of the Armies of the King of Spain. 5 John Tzerclas, commonly called Count Tilly, Generall of the Imperiall Armies in the War of Germany. For Scholars of more ſpeciall note for which we are beholding to theſe Countreys, we have 1 Philip Theophraſtus Bombaſtus à Boenham, commonly called Paracelſus, the Author, or Inſtaurator of Chymicall Phyſick; born in the Mountains of Helvetia, as he ſaith himſelf: a man of moſt prodigious parts, and of no mean vices. 2 Zuinglius one of the chief Agents in the Reformation. 3 Muſculus, and 4 Oecolampadius, two Divines, his ſeconds. 5 Henry Bullinger, one of the ſame profeſſion alſo. 6 Sebaſtian Caſtellio, of as much Learning as the beſt of them, though of different judgement. 7 Dan. Toſſanus the Hebrician. To which we may adde 8 Calvin alſo, who though he had his birth in France, had his being here; and never grew to any eminency in Fame or Learning, till he was ſetled in Geneva.

For matter of Religion, it is of a very mixt condition alſo, in all theſe Countreys: that of the Romiſh only having publick countenance in the Dukedome of Savoy, and Piemont; but ſo that the Reformed is tolerated in ſome parts thereof, eſpecially in the parts next Dauphine, to which the neighbourhood of Geneva gives a great encreaſe. In Switzerland there are four Cantons which are wholly for the Reformation, viz. Zurich, Bern, Baſil, and Schaffhauſen: Seven that ſtand wholly for the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, i. e. Uren, Switz, Underwalden, Lucern, Zug, Friburg, and Solothurn: in Apenzel, and Glaris, they allow of both. The Griſons are confuſedly divided betwixt both Religions; but the Italian Præfectures admit no other but the Romiſh. The cauſe of which diviſion came upon the preaching of Zuinglius, a Canon of the Church of Zurich: who being animated with Luther's good ſucceſſe in Germany, began about the year 1519 to preach againſt the Maſs, and Images, and other the corruptions of the Church of Rome. In which, his party ſo increaſed, that on a publick Diſputation which was held at Zurich, the Maſſe was abrogated in that Canton by the authority of the Senate, Anno 1526. and Images deſtroyed at Bern, 1528. After which proſperous beginnings, the Reformation began to ſpread it ſelf amongſt the Confederates; and had prevailed further both in France, and Germany, but for a difference which aroſe betwixt him and Luther about the Sacrament of the Supper: in which Luther did not only maintain a Reall preſence, but a Conſubſtantiation alſo in the ſacred Elements; which Zuinglius maintained to be only a bare ſign and repreſentation of Chriſts bleſſed body. For reconciling of this difference, wherein the enemies of both did extremely triumph; a conference was held between them at Marpurg, a Town of Haſſia, by the procurement of that Lantgrave, but without ſucceſſe: Luther profeſſing that he durſt not agree in that point with Zuinglius, ne Principes ſuos interpretatione tantopere Pontificiis exoſa, magis inviſos redderet; for fear of drawing too great hatred, on the Princes of his own profeſſion. From this time forwards all brake out into open flames, the names of Ubiquitarians, and Sacramentarians, being reciprocally caſt upon one another; to the great hinderance of the cauſe, which they had in hand: yet ſo that the Lutheran opinions got ground in Germany, the Zuinglians amongſt theſe Mountains, and in France it ſelf; and finally prevailed by the means of Calvin in many parts of Germany alſo. But hereof more hereafter in convenient place.

As for the ſtory of thoſe Countreys, before they were divided into ſo many hands, we are to know that the old Inhabitants hereof (mentioned before) were conquered ſeverally by the Romans: as ſhall be ſhewen in the deſcription of the ſeverall Provinces. Won from the Romans by the Burgundians, in the time of Honorius the Weſtern Emperour, they became a member of their Kingdome; except the Countrey of the Griſons, and ſome parts of Switzerland, which fell under the Almans: united afterwards in the new Kingdome of Burgundy, of the French erection, when ſubdued by that Nation. But Charles the Bald, the laſt of the French Kings of Burgundy, having united it to the Kingdome of France, divided that Kingdome into three Eſtates; that is to ſay, the Dukedome of Burgundy on this ſide of the Soaſne, the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Soaſne, and the Dukedome of Burgundy beyond the Jour. This laſt containing the greateſt part of all theſe Alpine Provinces (except Piemont only) was by the ſaid Charles given to Conrade, a Saxon Prince; the ſonne of Witikind the third, and younger brother of Robert, the firſt Earle of Anjou; by the name of Earl of Burgundy Transjurane, or Burgundy beyond the Jour. Rodolph his ſonne and ſucceſſor, by Eudes the King of France, his Couſin German, was honoured with the title of King: to make him equall at the leaſt, with Boſon Earle of Burgundy beyond the Soaſne, whom Charles the Groſſe, about the ſame time had made King of Arles. But Rodolph finding it offenſive to the German Emperours, abandoned it on the death of Eudes, and took to himſelf the title of Duke. The reſidue of the ſtory we ſhall have in the following Catalogue of 890 2 Rodolph, Earle, King, and Duke of Burgundy Transjurane.

912 3 Rodolph II. elected King of Italy againſt Berengarius; which title he exchanged with Hugh de Arles, who was choſen by another Faction, for the poſſeſſion of the Kingdome of Arles and Burgundy; on the aſſuming of which Crown, he reſigned this Dukedome to his Brother Boſon.

4 Boſon the Brother of Rodolph the ſecond, ſucceeded his brother in the Dukedome of Burgundy, beyond the Jour; as afterwards he ſucceeded Rodolph, his Brothers ſonne, in the Kingdome of Arles and Burgundy.

965 5 Conrade II. ſonne of Boſon, King of Arles and Burgundy, and Duke of Burgundy Transjurane.

The Dukedome of SAVOY.

THE Dukedome of SAVOY is bounded on the Eaſt, with Millain and Montferrat, in Italy; on the Weſt, with Dauphine in France; on the North, with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva; and on the South, with Provence, and the Mediterranean. The Countrey of ſo different nature, that it cannot be reduced under any one character: and therefore we muſt look upon it in the ſeverall parts into which divided; that is to ſay, 1 the Principality of Piemont, and 2 Savoy, ſpecially ſo called.

1 PIEMONT, in Latine called Regio Pedemontana, becauſe ſituate at the foot of the Mountains (as the name in both Languages imports) is bounded on the Eaſt, with Millain, and Montferrat; on the Weſt, with Savoy; on the North, with the Switzers; and on the South, it runneth in a narrow valley, to the Mediterranean, having Montferrat on the one ſide, Provence and a part of the Alpes upon the other. The Countrey wonderfully fertile compared with Switzerland, and Savoy, which lie next unto it; but thought to be inferior to the reſt of Italy. It containeth, beſides Baronies, and Lordſhips, 15 Marquiſates, 52 Earldoms, 160 Caſtles or walled places: and is ſo populous withall, that once a Piemonteſe being demanded the extent of his Countrey, made anſwer, thas it was a City of 300 miles compaſſe.

The principall Cities of it are, 1 Turin, called of old Auguſta Taurinorum, becauſe the head City of the Taurini, once the Inhabitants of this Tract: from which Taurini it deriveth the name of Turin, and not as ſome conceive from the River Duria, on whoſe banks it ſtandeth. In this City is the Court and Palace of the Duke of Savoy, (who is the Lord of this Countrey) the See of an Arch-biſhop, and an Univerſity, in which the renowned Scholar Eraſmus took his degrees in Divinity. It is ſituate on the River Po, in a place very important for the guard of Italy; for which cauſe the Romans ſent a Colony hither, and the Lombards made it one of their four Dukedoms. Adjoyning to it is a Park of the Dukes of Savoy, watered with the Duria, Sture, and Po, ſix miles in circuit, full of Woods, Lakes, and pleaſant Fountains; which make it one of the ſweteſt ſituations in Europe. 2 Mondeni, ſeated on the ſwelling of a little hill, with very fair Suburbs round about it; in one of which the Dukes of Savoy built a Church and Chappell to the bleſſed Virgin; intended for the buriall place of the Dukall Famly. It is the beſt peopled Town, for the bigneſſe of it, of any in Italy. 3 Auguſta Prætoria, now called Aoſt, ſituate in the furtheſt corner of Italy to the North and Weſt. 4 Vercelli, a ſtrong Town bordering upon Millain, to which it formerly belonged; and was given firſt in Dower with Blanch the daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Millain, to Amadee the third Duke of Savoy; antiently the chief Town of the Libyci, who together with the Salaſſi and Taurini, were the old Inhabitants of this Countrey. 5 Inuria called by Ptolemy Eporedia, ſituate at the very jaws of the Alpes, an Epiſcopall City. 6 Nicæa, or Nizze, an Haven on the Mediterranean, at the influx of the River Varus, which divides it from Provence; beautified with a Cathedrall Church, the Biſhops Palace, a Monaſtery of Nuns, and an impregnable Citadel. A place ſo naturally ſtrong, that when as yet the Fortifications were imperfect, it reſiſted the whole Forces of Barbaroſſa the Turkiſh Admiral, An. 1543. lying before it with a Navy of two hundred ſayl, and battering it continually with incredible fury. Firſt fortified by Duke Charles, upon occaſion of ſome words of the Duke of Burbon; who paſſing this way with his Army, Behold, ſaith he, a ſituation of which they know not the importance: the Citadel being after added by Emanuel Philibert, and garriſoned for the moſt part with 400 ſouldiers. 7 Suſe, ſeated in the ordinary thorough-fare betwixt France and Italy, called of old Segovio; and honoured in thoſe times with a ſtately Sepulchre of K. Coctius, King of the Allobroges:

Savoy. one of the seven Marquisates in the middle times erected by the Emperour Otho. 8 Pignarolle, fortified with a Castle of great importance, which commandeth all the adjoyning vallies; sold by Duke Charles Emanuel to Lewis the 13th of France, together with the Fort and vally of Perousa, (and in them both to the number of ten or twelve Towns and Villages) for the summe of 44000 Crowns, to be for ever in the propriety and Soveraignty of the Kings of France; and thereby giving to the French commodious passe from Daulphine into Italy upon all occasions, and no small influence and command on his own Estates. 9 Quiers, adorned with many goodly Churches, fair Convents, and noble Families. 10 Ville Franche, a place of great strength, more towards the sea. 11 Savillan, seated in so pleasant a Countrey, that Duke Emanuel Philibert had once a purpose to settle his abode in it, and make it the chief of his Estate. 12 Busque, a Marquisate, another of the seven erected for the sons of Waleran. 13 Hereunto we may adde the City of Ast (though properly within the limits of Montferrat) antiently a Colony of the Romans; and now to be compared, for the greatness and beauty of her Palaces, to the most stately Cities of Lombardy; situate betwixt the two Rivers of Po and Tenarus, very rich, and populous.

Here is also in this Countrey the Marquisate of Saluzzes (of the same erection as the former, but a greater Estate) the cause of so many differences betwixt France and Savoy. The principall Town whereof is called also Saluzze (from the Salassi questionless who dwelt hereabouts) seated about the Spring of the River Po: reasonably big, and fortified with a very large Castle, fitted with rooms for all uses, and for every season. 2 Carmanlogla, which gave name to that famous Captain who carryed so great a sway in the Wars of Italy. A Town so fortified and stored with all sorts of Ammunition, that it is thought impregnable. 3 Ravelle, a well-fortified place. 4 Doglian, the thorowfare for the greatest part of the trade which is driven betwixt Piemont, and the River of Genoa. The Arms hereof Argent, a Chief Gules.

The antient Inhabitants of this Countrey were the Salassi, Libyci, and Taurini, as before is said; all vanquished by the Romans, and their Countrey made a Province of that Empire, by the name of the Province of Alpes Coctiæ, in the time of Nero; of which Genoa was the Metropolis or principal City. The present are descended, for the most part, of the Heruli, who under the Conduct of Odoacer conquered Italy; whereof he was proclaimed King by the Romans themselves, but Odoacer being vanquished neer Verona, by Theodorick King of the Gothes, the Heruli had this Countrey allotted to them by the Conquerer, for their habitation. They had not held it long when subdued by the Lombards, of whose Kingdome it remained a part, till given by Aripert the seventeenth King of the Lombards, to the Church of Rome; affirmed by some to be the first temporall Estate, that ever the Popes of Rome had possession of. But lying far off, and the donation not confirmed by the Kings succeeding, the Popes got little by the gift: so that in the subverting of the Kingdome of the Lombards, it was at the devotion of the Kings of Italy, of the house of Charles the Great; and afterwards of his successors in the Empire, by whom distracted into severall Estates and Principalities. Thomas, and Peter, Earls of Savoy, made themselves Masters of the greatest part of it, by force of Arms: the former in the year 1210. the later in the year 1256. Since that time the first sonne of Savoy is styled Prince of Piemont. The Marquisate of Saluzzes, containing almost all the rest, was added by the marriage of a daughter of this Marquisate, with Charles Duke of Savoy, An. 1481. Of which marriage though there was no issue, yet the Savoyard alwayes held it as their own; till the French upon as good a title possessed themselves of it: Recovered by the Savoyard, An. 1588. the Civil Wars then hot in France. But finding that he was not able to hold it against Henry the fourth (who looked upon it as a door to let his forces into Italy) he compounded with him, An. 1600. the Countrey of Bresse being given in exchange for this Marquisate: Of which, together with the residue of Piemont, and some pieces of importance in the Dukedome of Montferrat; that noble Family of Savoy doth now stand possessed.

The Arms of this Principality are Gules, a Crosse Argent, charged with a Label of three points Azure.

2 SAVOY, strictly and specially so called, is bounded on the East with Wallisland, and part of Piemont; on the West, with Daulphine, and La Bresse; on the South, with some parts of Daulphine only; and on the North with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva.

The Countrey is for the most part hilly and Mountainous, overspread with the branches of the Alpes, healthy enough, as commonly all Hill-countreys are, but not very fruitfull; except some of the vallies which lie neerest to the Western Sun, and the plain tract about the Lemanian Lake, lying towards Geneva. By reason of the difficult and narrow wayes, and those full of Theeves, it was once called Malvoy: but the passages being opened by the cost and industry of the people, and purged of theeves by good Laws and exemplary justice, it gained the name of Savoy, or Salvoy, quasi salva via: as Maleventum, a Town of the Realm of Naples, on the like considerations got the name of Benevent. By the Latins of these later times it is called Sabaudia, a name not known to any of the antient Writers; who knew it by no other name then that of the Allobroges, or Allobrogum Regio.

The Common people are naturally very dull and simple, so grosse of understanding for all their continuall converse with other Nations, who take this Countrey in their way to Italy; that they beleeve the Duke of Savoy to be the greatest Prnce in the World: and so unwarlike, that a few men of another Nation well trained and disciplined, will make a great number of them flie. But on the other side, the Gentry are of a very pleasing conversation, civil, ingenious, and affecting all good exercise: so as there may be dayly seen in Chambery as much good company, and as well appointed and behaved, as in many of the best Towns of France or Italy. The number of both sorts taking in Piemont (who are not interessed in the first part of this character) are thought to be 800000.

The

The chief Cities are, 1 Chambery, ſituate on the banks of the River L' Arch, in a very pleaſant valley, compaſſed round with Mountains; the principal of the Dukedome on that ſide of the Alpes: honoured with the Dukes Court when he reſideth in this Countrey, the ordinary ſeat of Juſtice, and many neat houſes which belong to the Gentry: fortified of late with a ſtrong Caſtle and ſufficient Outworks; but not recovered of the damage it received An. 1600. when it was forced by King Henry the fourth of France, in his Wars with Savoy. 2 Tarentuiſe, an Arch-biſhops See, ſituate in the middeſt of the Mountains; heretofore the Metropolis of the Province of the Alpes Graiæ, and Pœninæ; and called by Antoninus, Civitas Centronum, from the Centrones who inhabited about this Tract. 3 Lunebourg, in the Countrey of the old Medulli; betwixt which and Suſe, a Town of Piemont, lyeth the moſt ordinary road betwixt France and Italy. 4 Aque belle, ſituate at the foot of a craggy Rock. 5 Rapaille, a ſweet and fruitfull ſituation, on the South-ſide of the Lake Lemanus, the chief Town of the Signeury of Foſſigny: where Amadee the firſt Duke of Savoy, having given over his Eſtate, lived a Monaſtick life, and was thence choſen Pope by the Fathers of Baſil, An. 1440. 6 Nun or Nevidum, (by ſome of the old Latins called Noviodunum) an antient City, layd deſolate, in, or before the time of Julius Cæſar, repaired again in the Empire of Veſpaſian; the ſeat of late times of the Biſhops of Geneva, ſince their expulſion out of that City. 7 Bele, on the Rhodanus, or Rhoſne. 8 Albon, founded about the year 456. 9 Conflans, fortified by the late Dukes of Savoy, but otherwiſe of ſmall importance. 10 Annunciada, not much obſervable, but for being the ſeat or place of Solemnities, for an order of Knights called by that name. 11 Maurienne, or St. John de Maurienne, an Arch-biſhops See, ſituate in a valley of the Alpes ſo called; the chief City of the old Medulli, who dwelt hereabouts; from whence the Princes of this houſe were firſt entituled Earls of Maurienne only. 12 Charboneers, a well-fortified place. Here is alſo the ſtrong Town and Fort of Montmelian, which held out four moneths againſt Henry the fourth, and many thouſand ſhot of French Cannon, An. 1600. and the impregnable Fortreſs of St. Catharines, which yet ſubmitted to that King; the Government whereof being denyed to the Duke of Byron, plunged him in diſcontent and treaſon, to the loſſe of his head.

Savoy.

The many Tribes in and about this mountainous Countrey, of which we have mentioned ſome before, paſs generally in moſt antient Writers, by the name of Allobroges; becauſe the moſt powerfull of them all. Of whom the firſt mention which we find in ſtory, is the Atonement made by Annibal in his paſſage this way, between Bruncus and his Brother, about the ſucceſſion of the Kingdome. Afterwards ſiding with the Salii a Gallick Nation, in a War againſt Marſeilles, then a confederate of the Romans, they drew that people on their backs: by whom they were in fine ſubdued, with the loſs of no leſſe than 120000 Galls, under the ſeverall conducts of Cn. Domitius Ænobarbus, and Qu. Fabius Maximus; by which laſt, Bituitus, or Bitultus King of the Auverni, one of the confederates, was led in triumph unto Rome. The Countrey and people at that time were much alike, Cœlum atrox pervicaci ingenio, a ſharp air, and a ſtubborn people, as it is in Florus: not without commendation in the following Ages, for diſcovering Catilines conſpiracy, by which the whole Roman State was in danger of ruin. After which we find Cottius one of the Kings of theſe Allobroges, to have been in ſpeciall favour with Auguſtus Cæſar: affirmed to be the founder of twelve Cities in this mountainous tract, whence it had the name of Alpes Cottiæ; and by that name reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperour Nero. In the declining of that Empire, this Province became a part of the Kingdome of Burgundy; and paſſed with other rights of that falling Kingdome, to the Emperours of Germany, by the gift of Rodolph the laſt King. To them it did continue ſubject til the year 999. in which Berald of Saxony, brother to Otho the third, for killing Mary the laſcivious Wife of his Unkle, fled from Germany; and ſetled himſelf here, neer France. His ſonne Humbert, (ſurnamed Blanchmanis, that is White-hand) was by the ſpeciall favour of the Emperour Conradus Salicus, made Earl of Maurienne; which is a Town of this Countrey, An. 1027. And by this marriage with Adela, the daughter and heir of the Marqueſs of Suſe, added that noble Marquiſate (one of the ſeven erected by Otho the ſecond, and given amongſt the ſonnes of Waleran) unto his eſtate. Humbert the ſecond gained by conqueſt the Town and Territory of Tarentaiſe; as Ame, or Amadee the third did the Counties of Vaulx, and Chablais, An. 1240. or thereabouts. Ame, or Amadee the fourth, by the Mariage of Sibille daughter and ſole heir of Ulric Earl of Breſſe, added that Earldom to his houſe: as Ame, or Amadee the ninth, did the Town and Territory of Vercelli; upon the contract betwixt Philibert his ſonne and Succeſſor, with Blanch the baſe daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Millain, who afterwards was marryed unto Francis Sforza. Ame, or Amadee the ſecond Earle of Maurienne was by the Emperour Henry the fifth, inveſted with the title of Earl of Savoy; and Amadee the eighth, created the firſt Duke, by the Emperour Sigiſmund, An. 1397. But the main improvement of the power and patrimony of this Houſe, came by the valour and good ſucceſs of the two Earls, Thomas, who in the year 1210. and Peter one of his ſonnes and ſucceſſors (for his manifold Conqueſts, ſurnamed Charlemaine the Junior) An. 1256. by conqueſt got a great part of Piedmont; to which the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, containing almoſt all the reſt, was united by a Marriage of the daughter of the Marquiſate, to Charles Duke of Savoy: And though he dyed without iſſue by her, An. 1489. yet his ſucceſſors ſtill kept the poſſeſſion of it, till Francis the firſt, pretending ſome title to it in the right of his Mother (a daughter of the houſe of Savoy) laid it unto the Crown of France: from which it was again recovered by the Savoyard, during the French Civil Wars, An. 1588. and now is peaceably poſſeſſed. The Countrey of Breſſe being given to the French, for their pretenſion to the Marquiſate, An. 1600. Theſe Dukes of Savoy have a long time been devoted to the faction of Spain, eſpecially ſince the French Kings took in the leſſer ſtates

Savoy. bordering on them, as Burgundy, Bretagne, &c. Charles the third ſided ſo conſtantly with the Emperour Charles the fifth, that denying Francis the firſt a paſſage for his Army through the Countrey into Italy; he was by the ſaid King diſpoyled of his Eſtates, An. 1536. The Emperour to recover it left nothing undone, but in vain; for the French encountring his force in the open field, vanquiſhed them, with the ſlaughter of fifteen thouſand of his men. In the year 1558. peace being made between Henry, and Philip, ſucceſſors to thoſe great Princes; Emanuel Philibert, ſonne to Duke Charles, was reſtored to all his Rights. His ſonne and ſucceſſor having marryed Catharine the daughter of King Philip the ſecond, depended wholly upon Spain, notwithſtanding many quarrels which did grow betwixt them; his ſonnes receiving thence many great penſions and preferments. For at the ſame time Prince Amadee Victorio the ſecond ſonne, during the life of Philip his elder Brother, was chief Commander of that Kings Gallies; and had in penſion a hundred thouſand Crowns per annum; Philibert the third ſonne, was Vice-roy of Sicil; Maurice the fourth a Cardinall, had a moity of the Revenues of the Arch-biſhoprick of Toledo; and Don Thomazo, though then young, had his penſions alſo. But Amadee Victorio, who ſucceeded him, marrying Madam Chriſtiane, a daughter of King Henry the fourth of France, changed his dependences; and held more cloſe to France than any of his Predeceſſors: but whether to the hurt or benefit of his Eſtates, future times will ſhew. For leaving his Heir a Minor, in the hands of his Mother; the French upon pretence of preſerving the Countrey for him, againſt the incroachments of the Spaniard, have made themſelves maſters of the greateſt parts of it; which when they will reſtore to the proper owner, is beyond my cunning to determine. But now behold the Catalogue of the

1475	20	Philibert, ſonne of Ame 9th.
1481	21	Charles, brother of Philibert.
1489	22	Charles II.
1495	23	Philip II. ſonne of Lewis, the ſecond Duke.
1496	24	Philibert II.
1504	25	Charles III. the brother of Philibert, outed of his Eſtate by King Francis the firſt.
1559	26	Emanuel Philibert, reſtored upon his Marriage with Margaret the daughter of King Francis the firſt, made Knight of the Garter by Qu. Mary.
1580	27	Charles Emanuel.
	28	Ame X. called alſo Amadee Victorio, ſonne of Charles Emanuel, marryed Chriſtiane the daughter of King Henry the fourth.
1637	29	Charles Emanuel II. ſonne of Amadee Victor, or Ame the 10th. at the age of three years ſucceeded his Father.

The Forces of this Duke conſiſt eſpecially in his Forts, and Garriſons, whereof he hath good ſtore in Savoy, and Piemont, well fortified and plentifully furniſhed with all manner of Ammunition. And it concerneth him ſo to have, conſidering what dangerous neighbours he hath neer him, and that his Countrey is a continuall thorow-fare, for the Armies both of France, and Spain, upon all occaſions. Nor doth it leſſe conduce to his preſervation, that he hath ſo many retreats of naturall ſtrength, as are not eaſily acceſſible by a conquering Army: of which laſt ſort is, amongſt many others, the valley of Aoſt (which ſome reckon for a part of Savoy, and ſome of Piemont) ſo ſtrong by reaſon of the narrow entries, the uneaſie paſſages, and the great multitudes of the people which inhabit in it; that thoſe who have made themſelves maſters of the reſt of the Countrey, durſt never attempt it. And of the firſt, beſides thoſe formerly deſcribed, is the Town of Nizze, ſo fortified and flanked upon all acceſſes, that it ſeems rather to be an aſſembly of Forts, than a ſingle Fortreſſe. Out of which Garriſons, the Duke is able to draw great Forces for preſent ſervice; ſervice, beſides the readyneſſe of the Piemonteſe upon all occaſions, which are for the moſt part given to Arms. Geneva.

The ordinary Revenue of this Dukedome (taking Piemont in) are ſaid to be above a Million of Crowns per Annum. But his extraordinary is ſo great, that Duke Charles Emanuel, during his Wars with Henry the fourth, in a very few years drew out of Piemont only eleven Millions of Crowns; beſides the charge which they were put to in quartering of Souldiers. By which it may appear, that the Dukes are not like to want money to ſerve their turns, when they ſhall deſire it of the Subject; and yet not charge them more then they are able to bear.

The only Order of Knighthood in this Dukes Eſtate is that of the Annunciada ordained by Amade the firſt Duke, at what time he defended Rhodes from the Turks, An. 1409. Their Collar is of fifteen Links, to ſhew the fifteen myſteries of the Virgin: at the end is the portraiture of our Lady, with the hiſtory of the Annunciation. In ſtead of a Motto, theſe letters, F. E. R. T, id eſt, Fortitudo Ejus Rhodum Tenuit, are engraven in every plate or link of the Collar: each link being interwoven one within the other, in form of a True-lovers knot. The number of the Knights is fourteen, beſides the Duke, who is the Soveraign of the Order: the ſolemnity is held annually on our Lady-day, in the Caſtle of Saint Peter in Turin. So from this victory (for every repulſe of the beſieger, is a victory to the beſieged) there aroſe a double effect; firſt, the inſtitution of this Order; ſecondly the aſſumption of the preſent Arms of this Dutchy, which are G. a Croſs A. This being the Croſs of Saint John of Hieruſalem, whoſe Knights at that time were owners of the Rhodes. Whereas before, the Arms were Or, an Eagle diſplayed with two heads, Sable, Armed Gules ſupporting in Feſſe, an Eſcotchion of Saxony, that is Barrewiſe ſix pieces Sable and Or, a Bend flowred Vert. A Coat belonging to the Emperours of the houſe of Saxony, from whom the firſt Earls of Savoy did derive themſelves.

3. The Signeury of GENEVA.

GENEVA is a City in the Dukedome of Savoy, formerly ſubject to its Biſhops, acknowledging the Dukes of Savoy for the Lord in chief: now reckoned as a Free-Eſtate, bordering cloſe upon the Switzers, and with them confederate; and ſo more properly within the courſe and compaſſe of theſe Alpine Provinces. It is ſituate on the South-ſide of the Lake Lemane, oppoſite to the City of Lozanne in the Canton of Bern, from which it is diſtant ſix Dutch miles: the River Rhoſne (having paſſed through the Lake with ſo clear a colour, that it ſeemeth not at all to mingle with the waters of it) running through the lower part thereof, over which there is a paſſage by two fair Bridges. This lower part is ſeated on a flat or level, the reſt on the aſcent of an hill: the buildings fair and of free-ſtone, well fortified on both ſides both by Art and Nature; in regard of the pretenſions of the Duke of Savoy (whom they ſuffer not to arm any Gallies upon the Lake) and other jealouſies of State. The compaſs of the whole City is about two miles, in which there are ſuppoſed to be about ſixteen or ſeventeen thouſand ſouls. One of their Bridges is more antient, and better fortified than the other, belonging antiently to the Switzers (or Helvetians, the old inhabitants of that tract) but broken down by Julius Cæſar, to hinder them from paſſing that way into France.

The people of the Town are generally of good wits in the managery of publick buſineſs, but not very courteous towards ſtrangers, of whom they exact as much as may be; modeſt and thrifty in apparell, and ſpeak for the moſt part the Savoyard, or worſt kind of French. So that the great reſort of young Gentlemen thither, is not ſo much to learn that Language (which is no where worſe taught) as out of an opinion which their parents have, that the Reformed Religion is no where ſo purely practiſed and profeſſed as there. By means whereof, the frie or ſeminary of our Gentry being ſeaſoned in their youth with Genevan Principles; have many times proved diſaffected to the forms of Government (as well Monarchicall as Epiſcopall) which they found eſtabliſhed here at home: to the great imbroilment of the State, in matters of moſt near concernment. The women are ſaid to be more chaſt (or at leaſt more reſerved) than in any other place in the World: which poſſibly may be aſcribed to that ſeverity, with which they puniſh all offenders in that kind. Dancing by no means tolerated in publick, or private; Adultery expiated by no leſſe than death: Fornication, for the firſt offence with nine dayes faſting upon bread and water in priſon; for the ſecond, with whipping; for the third with baniſhment. But notwithſtanding this ſeverity, they make love in ſecret, and are as amorous in their daliances, as in other places.

The Territories of it are very ſmall, extending not above two Leagues and an half from any part of the Town: but the ſoyl, if well manured, bringeth Grain of all ſorts, and great ſtore of Wine. There is likewiſe plenty of paſture and feeding grounds, which furniſh the City with fleſh-meats, butter and cheeſe, at very reaſonable rates: the neerneſs of the Lake affording them both Fiſh, and Wild-fowl in good meaſure; and amongſt others (as ſome ſay) the beſt Carps in Europe.

But the main improvement of this State is by the induſtry of the people, and the convenient ſituation of the City it ſelf: the City being ſituated very well for the trade of Merchandiſe, in regard it is the ordinary paſſage, for tranſporting Commodities out of Germany, to the Marts at Lyons; and from thence back again to Germany, Switzerland, and ſome parts of Italy. And for the induſtry

Geneva. of the people, it is discernable in that great store of Armour, and Apparel and other necessaries, brought from hence yearly by those of Bern; and their Manufactures in Satten, Velvet, Taffata, and some quantities of Cloth, (fine, but not durable) transported hence yearly into other places.

The Soveraignty of this City was antiently in the Earls hereof, at first Imperiall Officers only, but at last the hereditary Princes of it. Betwixt these and the Bishops (Suffragans to the Metropolitan of Vienna in Dauphine) grew many quarrels for the absolute command thereof. In fine, the Bishops did obtain of the Emperour Frederick the first, that they and their successors should be the sole Princes of Geneva; free from all Taxes, and not accomptable to any but the Emperour. Which notwithstanding, the Earls continuing still to molest the Bishops, they were fain to call unto their aid the Earl of Savoy; who took upon him first as Protector only, but after by degrees as the Lord in chief. For when the rights of the Earls of Geneva, by the Mariage of Thomas Earl of Savoy, with Beatrix a daughter of these Earls, fell into that house; then Ame or Amadee the sixth of that name, obtained of the Emperour Charles the fourth, to be Vicar-generall of the Empire in his own Countrey, and in that right superior to the Bishop in all Temporall matters: and Ame, or Amadee the first Duke, got from Pope Martin (to the great prejudice of the Bishops) a grant of all the Temporall jurisdiction of it. After which time, the Bishops were constrained to do homage to the Dukes of Savoy, and acknowledge them for their Soveraign Lords: the Authority of the Dukes being grown so great (notwithstanding that the people were immediately subject to their Bishop only) that the Money in Geneva was stamped with the Dukes name and figure: Capitall Offenders were pardoned by him; no sentence of Law executed till his Officers were first made acquainted; nor League contracted by the people of any validity, without his privity and allowance: and finally the Keyes of the Town presented to him as often as he pleased to lodge there; as once (for instance) to Duke Charles the third, coming thither with Beatrix his Wife, a daughter of Portugall. And in this state it stood, till the year 1528. the Bishop being all this while their immediate Lord, and having jus gladii & alias civilis jurisdictionis partes, as Calvin himself confesseth in an Epistle to Cardinal Sadolet. But in that year, Religion being then altered in the Canton of Bern, near adjoyning to them, Viret, and Farellus did endeavour it in Geneva also. But finding that the Bishop and his Clergy did not like their doings, they skrewed themselves into the people, and by their aid in a popular tumult, compelled the Bishop and his Clergy to abandon the Town. And though the Bishop made them many fair overtures, out of an hope to be restored to his Estate; yet would they never hearken to him, nor admit of him any more being once thrust out. Nor did they only in that tumult alter the Doctrine, and Orders of the Church before established; but changed the Government of the State also: disclaiming all allegiance both to Duke and Bishop, and standing on their own Liberty, as a Free-Commonwealth. And though all this was done by Viret and Farellus, before Calvin's coming to that City, which was not till the year 1536. yet being come, suffragio meo comprobavi, as he saith himself, no man was forwarder than he to approve the Action.

But Calvin being come amongst them, made their Divinity Reader, and one of the ordinary Preachers, he first negotiated with them to abjure the Papacy, and never more admit their Bishop; to which he found a cheerfull and unanimous consent in all the people. Then finding that no Ecclesiasticall Discipline was in use among them, he dealt with them to admit of one of his own composing: which at last he obtained also, but with very great difficulty; and got it ratified by the Senate July the 20th. 1537. The next year after, the people weary of this new yoak, and he and his Colleagues (Farellus, and Coraldus) as resolute to hold them to it; they were all three banished the Town in a popular humor; and with like levity sued to, to return again: to which he would by no means yeeld, except they would oblige themselves by a solemn Oath, to admit of such a Form of Discipline, as he with the advice of the other Ministers, should prescribe unto them. This being condescended to by that fickle multitude, he returns in triumph to Geneva, September the thirteenth, 1541. and got his new Discipline established on the twentieth of November following. The sum of the device was this. All Ministers to be equall amongst themselves; two Lay-men to be super-added unto every Minister; the Minister to continue for term of life; the Lay-Elders to be annually chosen: these being met together to be called the Presbytery; and to have power of Ordination, Censures, Absolution, and whatsoever else was acted by the Bishop formerly. Hitherto it related to Geneva only, which being but one City, and a small one too, was not capable of more than one Presbytery. The names and notions of Classicall, Provinciall, and Nationall Assemblies, came not in till afterwards; as it got ground in Kingdomes, and larger Provinces. This Platform though of purpose framed to content the people; yet since the Lay-officers were to be but annuall, and after subject to the lash like other Mortals; it gave but sorry satisfaction unto wiser men. And being built withall on a false foundation, was for a long time hardly able to stand alone, and fain at twelve years end to borrow a support from Zurich, and others of the Protestant Cantons: whom Calvin earnestly solicited to allow his project, against which one Perinus, and some principall Citizens, had begun to spurn. And so we have the true beginning of the Genevian Discipline, begotten in Rebellion, born in Sedition, and nursed up by Faction.

Being born into the World by the means aforesaid, some other helps it had to make it acceptable, and approved of, in other Churches. As first the great content it gave to the common people, to see themselves entrusted with the weightyest matters of Religion; and thereby an equality with, if not (by reason of their number, being two for one) a superiority above their Ministers: Next, the great reputation, which Calvin for his diligence in Writing and Preaching, had attained unto; made all his Dictates as authentick amongst some Divines, as ever the Popes Ipse dixit in the Church of Rome.

Whereby

Whereby it came to paſſe, in a little time, that only thoſe Churches which embraced the Doctrines and Diſcipline authorized by Calvin, were called the Reformed Churches: thoſe in high Germany, and ellewhere, which adhered to Luther, being generally called by no other name than the Lutherans, or the Lutheran Churches; as not reformed enough from the dregs of Rome. Then comes in his endeavours to promote that Platform, in all other Churches, which he had calculated for the Meridian of Geneva only: commending it to Gaſper Olevianus, Miniſter of the Church of Triers, as appears by his Letters dated April the twelth 1560. congratulating the reception of it in the Churches of Poland, as appeareth by others of his Letters. And for the laſt help, comes in Beza, who not content to recommend it as convenient, for the uſe of the Church (beyond which Calvin did not go) impoſed it as a matter neceſſary upon all the Churches: ſo neceſſary, ut ab ea recedere non magis liceat, quam ab ipſius Religionis placitis; that it was utterly as unlawfull to recede from this, as from the moſt materiall points of the Chriſtian Faith. So he Epiſt. 83. By means whereof their followers in moſt of the Reformed Churches drove on ſo furiouſly, that rather than their Diſcipline ſhould not be admitted, and the Epiſcopall Government deſtroyed in all the Churches of CHRIST; they were reſolved to depoſe Kings, ruin Kingdoms, and to ſubvert the fundamentall conſtitutions of all civil States. And hereunto their own Ambition gave them ſpur enough, affecting the ſupremacy in their ſeverall Pariſhes; that they themſelves might Lord it over Gods Inheritance, under pretence of ſetting CHRIST upon his Throne. Upon which love to the preheminence, they did not only prate againſt the Biſhops, with malitious words, (as Diotrephes for the ſame reaſon did againſt the Apoſtles) but not therewith content, neither would they themſelves receive them, nor permit them that would, caſting them out of the Church, with reproach and infamy. Which proud ambition in the ordinary Parochiall Miniſter, was cunningly fomented by ſome great perſons, and many Lay-Patrons in all places, who under-hand aimed at a further end: the one to raiſe themſelves great fortunes, out of Biſhops Lands; the other to keep thoſe Tithes themſelves, to which by the Law they only were to nominate ſome deſerving Perſon. Such were the helps, by which this new device of Calvin was diſperſed and propagated. Geneva.

But to return unto Geneva, though Calvin for his time did hold the Chair as a perpetuall Moderator, and Beza too, untill Danæus ſet him beſides the Cuſhion: yet after that the power of the Presbytery was ſhrewdly leſſened in Geneva, and the good Members ſo reſtrained in the exerciſe of it; that they have no power to convent any man before them, but by the authority of a Syndick or Civil Magiſtrate. And as for maintainance, they hold their Miniſters ſo ſtrictly to a ſorry pittance, as would be ſure to keep them from preſuming too much on their power in Conſiſtory. Tithes of all ſorts were to be taken up for the uſe of the State, and laid up in the publick Treaſury; and ſtipends iſſued out to maintain the Miniſtry: but thoſe ſo mean, that Bezaes ſtipend whilſt he lived, hardly amounted to eighty pound per annum, the reſidue of the City-Miniſters not to ſixty pound, thoſe of the Villages adjoyning, having hardly forty pound; enough to keep them alwayes poor, and miſerably obnoxious to the wealthier Citizen. And that they may not ſteal the Gooſe, and not ſtick up a feather, the State doth uſe to make ſome poor allowance to the wives and daughters of their deceaſed Miniſters, if they die poor, or leave their children unprovided; or otherwiſe have deſerved well in the time of their lives. In reſpect hereof though the Miniſters are very ſtrict in forbidding Dancing, and have writ many Tracts againſt it; yet to give ſome content to the common people (who have not leaſure to attend it at other times) they allow all Man-like exerciſes on the Lords-day, as ſhooting in pieces, long-bows, croſs-bows, and the like, and that too in the morning, both before and after the Sermon; ſo it be no impediment to them, from coming to the Church at the times appointed.

As for the Government of the State, it is directed principally by the Civil or Imperial Lawes; the Judge whereof is called the Lievtenant-criminall; before whom all cauſes are tryed, and from whom there lyeth no Appeal; unleſs it be unto the Councell of two hundred, whom they call the Gredt Councell, in which the ſupreme power of the State reſideth. Out of this Councell of two hundred, there is choſen another leſſer Councel of five and twenty, and out of them four principall Officers whom they call the Syndicks; who have the ſole managing of the Common-wealth; except it be in ſome great matter, as making Peace or War, offenſive or defenſive Leagues, hearing Appeals, and ſuch like generall concernments; which the great Councell of two hundred muſt determine of. They have a cuſtom ſuperadded to the Civil Law, that if any Malefactor from another place fly to them for refuge, they puniſh him after the cuſtome of the place in which the crime was committed. Otherwiſe, their Town being on the borders of divers Princes, would never be free from Vagabonds. Examples hereof I will aſſign two: the firſt of certain Monks, who robbing their Convents of certain Plate, and hoping for their wicked pranks at home to be the welcomer hither, were at their firſt acquaintance advanced to the Gallows. The ſecond is of a Spaniſh Gentleman, who having fled his Countrey for clipping and counterfeiting the Kings Gold, came to this Town, and had the like reward. And when for defence he alleadged, that he underſtood their City being free, gave admiſſion to all Offenders; True (ſaid they) but with an intent to puniſh them that offended: a diſtinction which the Spaniard never till then learned, but then it was too late.

As for their ordinary Revenue, it is proportionable to their Territory, if not above it, conceived to amount to ſixty thouſand pound per annum; which they raiſe upon the demain of the Biſhop, and the Tithes of the Church, and on ſuch impoſitions as are laid upon fleſh and Merchandiſe. But they are able to raiſe greater ſums if there be occaſion, as appears plainly by the ſending of 45000 Crowns to King Henry the third, before they had been long ſetled in their own eſtates.

And as for Military forces, they are able to impreſs two thouſand men, and have Arms of all ſorts for ſo many in the publick Arſenall: as alſo twelve or fourteen peeces of Ordnance, with all man-

Wall ſland. ner of Ammunition appertaining to them; and on the Lake ſome Gallies in continual readineſs, againſt the dangers threatned them from the Dukes of Savoy. And for the greater ſafety of their Eſtate, and the preſervation of their Religion, they joyned themſelves in a conſtant and perpetual League with the Canton of Bern, Anno 1528, communicating to each other the Freedom of their ſeveral Cities; and by that means, are reckoned for a member of the Common-wealth of the Switzers, which is no ſmal ſecurity to their affairs. But their chief ſtrength, as I conceive, is that the neighbour Princes are not willing to have it fall into the hands of that Duke; or any other Potentate, of more ſtrength than he. Inſomuch that when that Duke beſieged it, Anno 1589, they were aided from Venice with four and twenty thouſand, and from England, with thirteen thouſand Crowns, from Florence with Intelligence of the Enemies purpoſes. Another time, when the Pope, the French King, the Spaniard, and Savoyard had deſigns upon it; the Emperor offered them aſſiſtance both of Men and Money: yea and ſometimes the Dukes of Savoy have aſſiſted them againſt the others, as being being more deſirous that the Town ſhould remain as it doth, than fall into any other hands than his own. So ordinary a thing it is for ſuch petit States, to be more ſafe by the intereſs of their jealous neighbours, than any forces of their own.

The Armes of Geneva, when under the command of the Earls thereof, were Or, a Croſs Azure. But for the title of Geneva after it had been born a while by the Earls of Savoy, it was given to Philip youngeſt ſon of Ame or Amadee the firſt Duke, to Janus the third ſon of Lewis the ſecond Duke; and finally to Philip Duke of Nemours, the fourth ſon of Philip the ſeventh Duke of Savoy, in whoſe poſterity (Dukes of Nemours) it doth ſtill continue.

EAſtward from Savoy, in a long and deep bottome of the Alpes Pœninæ, lyeth the Countrey of WALLISLAND: ſo called either quaſi Wallenſland, or the land of the Valenſes, once the inhabitants of the Countrey about Martinacht, a chief Town hereof; or quaſi Vallis-land, or the Land of Vallies, of which it totally conſiſts. It reacheth from the Mountain de Furcken, to the Town of St. Maurice, where again the hils do cloſe, and ſhut up the valley; which is ſo narrow in that place, that a bridge laid from one hill to another (under which the River Rhoſne doth paſs) is capable of no more than one Arch only, and that defended with a Caſtle and two ſtrong Gates. On other parts it is environed with a continual wall of ſteep and horrid Mountains, covered all the year long with a cruſt of Ice; not paſſable at all by Armies, and not without much difficulty by ſingle paſſengers; ſo that having but that one entrance to it, which before we ſpake of, no Citadel can be made ſo ſtrong by Art, as this whole Countrey is by Nature. But in the bottom of thoſe craggy and impaſſable Rocks, lies a pleaſant Valley, fruitful in Saffron, Corn, Wine, and moſt delicate fruits; and happily enriched with Meadows, and moſt excellent Paſtures, which yeeld a notable increaſe of Cheeſe and Butter: And in the Countrey about Sion they diſcovered in the year 1544 a Fountain of Salt; and have alſo many hot Bathes, and medicinal waters very wholſom. Of Springs, and River-water, they are very deſtitute; having ſcarce any but what they fetch from the Rhoſne, with a great deal both of charge and trouble (the common people uſing ſnow-water for the moſt part for domeſtick uſes): which made one pleaſantly obſerve, that they pay there dearer for their Water, than they do for their Wine. Cattel they have ſufficient to ſerve their turn, and amongſt others, a wild Buck, equal to a Stag in bigneſs, footed like a Goat, and horned like a fallow Deer, leaping with wonderful agility from one precipice to another, and ſo not eaſily caught but in Summer time; for then the heat of that ſeaſon makes him blinde.

It is divided into the Upper and the Lower Walliſland; the Upper lying towards the Mountain de Furcken, in the very bottom of the Valley; and the Lower ſtretching out to the Town of St. Maurice, which is at the opening of the ſame: the length of both ſaid to be five ordinary daies journey, but the breadth not anſwerable. The Upper Walliſland containeth the ſeven Reſorts of 1 Sion, or Sedune, 2 Leuck, 3 Brig, 4 Nies, 5 Rawren, 6 Sider, 7 Gombes; in which are reckoned thirty Pariſhes: the Lower comprehending the ſix Reſorts of 1 Gurdis, 2 Ardoa, 3 Sallien, 4 Martinacht, 5 Jutremont, and 6 St. Maurice; in which are 24 Pariſhes. The people in both parts ſaid to be courteous towards ſtrangers, but very rough and churliſh towards one another.

The ſeveral reſorts before mentioned, are named according to the names of their principal Towns; which according to their reckoning are thirteen in number. The chief of which are 1 Sedunum, Sittim or Sion, a Biſhops See, ſuffragan to the Metropolitan of Tarentuiſe; the chief of all this little Countrey: of no great beauty in it ſelf, but neat and gallant in reſpect of the Towns about it. Situate in a Plain on the River of Rhoſne, under a Mountain of two tops; on the one of which, being the lower, is ſeated the Cathedral Church, and the Canons houſes; and on the other, looking downwards with a dreadful precipice, a very ſtrong Caſtle, the dwelling place of the Biſhop in the heats of Summer: which being built upon an hill of ſo great an height, and of ſo hazardous an aſcent, is impoſſible almoſt to be took by force; the ſharpneſs of the Rocks keeping it from the danger of aſſaults, and the highneſs of the hill from the reach of Gun-ſhot. 2 Marchinacht, by Cæſar called Octodurus, and Civitas Valenſium by Antoninus, remarkable for its antiquity only. 3 Saint Maurice, or Saint Morits, anciently Augaunum, the Key of the whole Countrey; but in Winter eſpecially, when all the other other paſſages are ſo frozen up, that there is no other entrance but by the Bridge at this Town: which for that cauſe is very well manned and fortified to avoid ſurpriſal; and therefore alſo choſen for the ſeat of the Governor of the Lower Walliſland

Switzerland.

This Countrey now called Walliſland, is in moſt Latin Writers called by the name of Valeſia, but corruptly, as I think, for Valenſia, as the Dutch or Engliſh name for Wallinſland: which name I ſhould conceive it took from the Valenſes, the old inhabitants of this valley, of whom Octodurus (now called Marchinacht) is by Antoninus made to be the Metropolis, or principal City. It was made ſubject to the Romans by Julius Cæſar, at ſuch time as the Helvetians were conquered by him: and falling with the Weſtern parts of the Roman Empire unto Charles the great, was by him given to Theodulus Biſhop of Sion, Anno 805. Under his ſucceſſors they continue to this very day; but ſo, as that the Deputies of the ſeven Reſorts have not only voices with the Canons in his Election, but being choſen and inveſted into the place, they joyn with him alſo in the Diets for chooſing Magiſtrates, redreſſing grievances, and determining matters of the State. The Lower Walliſland obeyeth the upper, made ſubject by long War, and the chance of Victory, and hath no ſway at all in the publick Government, but takes for Law that which their Governors agree of. The ſame Religion is in both, being that of Rome. For maintenance whereof they combined themſelves with the ſeven Popiſh Cantons of Switzerland, Anno 1572, or thereabouts: as alſo for their mutual defence and preſervation againſt Forein Enemies, and keeping amity and concord amongſt one another.

5. SWITZERLAND.

NExt unto Walliſland lyeth the Countrey of the SWITZERS, having on the Eaſt, the Griſons, and ſome part of Tirol, in Germany; on the Weſt, the Mountain Jour, and the Lake of Geneva, which parts it from Savoy, and Burgundy; on the North, Suevia or Scwaben, another Province alſo of the upper Germany; and on the South, Walliſland and the Alpes, which border on the Dukedom of Millain.

The whole Countrey heretofore divided into three parts only, that is to ſay, 1 Argow, ſo called from the River Aar, whoſe chief Town was Lucern: 2 Wiſliſpurgergow, ſo called from Wiſliſpurg an old Town thereof, the chief City whereof is Bern: And 3 Zurichgow, ſo named from Zurich, both formerly and at this preſent the Town of moſt note in all this Tract; but ſince the falling off of theſe Countreys from the houſe of Auſtria, divided into many Cantons, and other members; of which more anon.

It is wholly in a manner over-grown with craggy Mountains, but ſuch as for the moſt part have graſſie tops, and in their bottoms afford rich Meadows, and nouriſhing paſtures, which breed them a great ſtock of Cattel, their greateſt wealth. And in ſome places yeelds plenty of very good Wines, and a fair increaſe of Corn alſo, if care and induſtry be not wanting on the Husband-mans part; but neither in ſo great abundance, as to ſerve all neceſſary uſes, which want they do ſupply from their neighbouring Countreys. And though it ſtand upon as high ground as any in Chriſtendom, yet is no place more ſtored with Rivers, and capacious Lakes; which do not only yeeld them great abundance of Fiſh, but ſerve the people very well in the way of Traffick, to diſperſe their ſeveral Commodities from one Canton to another. Of which the principal are, Bodenſee, and the Lake of Cell, made by the Rhene; Genſor-ſee, or the Lake of Geneve, by the Rhoſne; Walldſtet-ſee, and the Lake of Lucern, made by the Ruſſe; Namonburger and Bieter-ſees, by the Orbe; and Zurich-ſee, by the River of Limat, or Limachus.

It is in length two hundered and forty miles, an hundred and eighty in breadth; conceived to be the higheſt Countrey in Europe (as before is ſaid) the Rivers which do iſſue from it running through all quarters of the ſame; as Rhene, through France and Belgium, North; Po, through Italie to the South; Rhodanus, through part of France, to the Weſtern Ocean; and the Inn, which falling into the Danubius paſſeth through Germany, and Hungary, into Pontus Euxinus.

And as the Countrey is, ſuch are the Inhabitants, of rude and rugged diſpoſitions, more fit for Armes than any civil occupations; capable of toyl and labour, which the neceſſities of their Countrey do inure them to, not able otherwiſe to afford them an hungry livelihood: the poverty whereof makes them ſeek for ſervice, which they ſhift and change according as they like the conditions of their entertainment; and having no way to vent their ſuperfluous numbers by Navigation, are able to ſpare greater multitudes to a Forein War, than a man would eaſily imagine. In a word, the people are naturally honeſt, frugal and induſtrious, impartial in the adminiſtration of Juſtice, and great lovers of Liberty.

In matters of War, they were once of ſuch a reputation, on the defeats given by them to Charles of Burgundy, that no Prince thought himſelf able to take the field, or ſtand his own ground in defence of his Dominions if he had not Switzers in his Army: And to advance their reputation, the Wars which followed in Italie about the Dutchy of Millain, ſerved exceeding fitly. For being borderers on that Countrey, they could be hired better cheap by the French, or Spaniards, than any Army could be brought out of France, or Spain. And having had ſome good ſucceſſes to increaſe their fame, they grew ſo terrible at laſt; that the Spaniards in the War of Guien were more afraid of one band of Suiſſe, than of all the reſt of the French Army. But being found withall to be falſe and treacherous, and eaſily brought off by the better purſe (which they moſt evidently diſcovered in betraying Duke Lodowick Sforze, who had put himſelf and his eſtate into their hands); and thoſe Italian Wars growing unto an end, they did decay ſo faſt in their reputation, that firſt the neighbouring Princes could do well without them; and at laſt uſed them not at all, or at leaſt very ſparingly. And now it is their honour that they are choſen of the Guard to the French King, and the Popes of Rome, and the Dukes of Genoa; and that the greateſt Princes of Europe give them yearly penſions. Which penſions were given heretofore to be aſſured of their aid upon all occaſions, but now to keep them from engaging on the other ſide.

For matter of Religion it is proportionably mixt, ſome of the Cantons being wholly Popiſh, ſome wholly Proteſtant; in others both Religions uſed promiſcuouſly. At firſt the differences were ſo eagerly purſued on both ſides, that notwithſtanding the mediation of ſome potent neighbours, it broke out into a Civil War; the Cantons of Switz, Uren, Underwald, Lucern, and Zug (which the Latin Writers of this ſtory call the Quinquepagici) arming againſt Urich, Bern, and others which adhered to Zuinglius. In the beginning of which War, the Proteſtant party was diſcomfited, Zuinglius himſelf ſlain in the head of the battel, and his body burnt: his heart remaining in the midſt of the fire, whole and untouched (as Archbiſhop Cranmers alſo did) when all the reſt of his body was conſumed to aſhes. But thoſe of the Reformed party would not ſo give over. Another field they fought for it, and therein had the better of the adverſe party. Wearied at laſt with reciprocal defeats, they agreed the buſineſs, indulging each to other the free exerciſe of their own Religions. So it continueth at this day, diverſity of opinions not drawing them from a due care of the publick intereſs, nor giving any interruption to that bond of peace which was ſo firmly knit amongſt them in their firſt confederacies.

Now for the body of their State, it conſiſts of three diſtinct parts, or members, which are to be conſidered in this diſcourſe; viz. the Swiſſe themſelves, the Præfectures which are ſubject to them, and the States that are confederate with them. The Swiſſe are ſubdivided into thirteen Cantons, that is to ſay, Swits, Uren, Underwald, Lucern, Zug, Bern, Zurich, Baſil, Friburg, Soloturn, Apenzel, Glaris and Schaffhauſen. Theſe properly make the body of that Common-wealth, enjoying many rights, priviledges and preheminences which the others do not; as power to determine of war and peace, to diſpoſe of the Præfectures, and divide amongſt themſelves the ſpoyl of the Enemy. The firſt confederacy was made betwixt the Cantons of Switz, and Underwald, Anno 1315. Of which the Switz being the moſt potent, the moſt exaſperated, and that which did moſt hotly proſecute the combination, gave to the reſt the name of Switzers, firſt made for ten years only, in defence of themſelves againſt the violences of Albert the firſt, Emperor and Duke of Auſtria; intending to alienate them from the Empire, and add them by ſtrong hand to his own Eſtates, Anno 1309. but made perpetual after their great victory obtained againſt Duke Leopold, the ſon of Albert, in the fields of Mortgarten, of which more anon. Lucern was added to the three, Anno 1332. Zug, Zurich, and Glaris, came not into the confederacy till the year 1352; nor Bern untill the year next after. Friburg and Soloturn came in Anno 1481. Baſil and Schaffhauſen united with them in the year 1501. and Apenzel, which was the laſt which was admitted into their confederacy, Anno 1511. So that there paſſed within little of two hundred years, from the firſt beginning of theſe Leagues, to the finiſhing of them.

The ſecond Member of this body, are the Towns and States, Confederates with them, for the preſervation of their common Liberties, viz. the Town and Abbot of Saint Gall, the Towns of Rotwell, Mulhaſen, Nuenberg, and Biel, ſituate on the Lake thence named: (of which the firſt belonged heretofore to the Earls of Longeville in France, the latter to the Biſhops of Baſil) with the City and Signeury of Geneva: And of theſe, Rotwell and Mulhaſen are confederate with all the Cantons; the reſt, with ſome particulars only. The Abbot of Saint Gall firſt entered into League with Zurich, Lucern, Swiz, and Glaris, for the preſervation of his Lands and Towns then revolting from him: and the Town following his example, confederated with Zurich, Bern, Switz, Lucern, Zug, and Glaris, the better to preſerve themſelves from the power of their Abbot; who was before their natural and immediate Lord. This was in Anno 1452. Rotwell, and Mulhauſen, two Imperial Towns in the Province of Schawben, confederated in a perpetual League with all the Cantons; the firſt, Anno 1515. the other, Anno 1519. Newenberg, Biel, and Geneva, with Bern only.

As for the Præfectures of the Switzers, they are ſuch leſſer parcels and additaments, as have accrewed to their Eſtate, and are ſubject unto their authority; either by gift, purchaſe, or the chance of war: ſome lying in Switzerland it ſelf, ſome amongſt other parts of the Alpes, and ſome in Italie. Theſe are the Towns and Countreys of Baden, Brengarten, Millingen, Rappenſwyll, Wagenthall, interpoſed here and there amongſt the Switzers: the Town and Countrey of Sargans, lying amongſt the Rhætian Alpes, not far from the Griſons; and Rhineck, lying in a valley of the Alpes, on the left ſhore of the Rhene, near the Lake of Conſtans; and finally the valleys of Locarno, Magia, and Lugano, Mendriſio, and Belinzano, ſituate in and amongſt the Alpes, near the Dukedom of Millain, to which they formerly belonged. Of which the Præfectures of Baden and Mellingen appertain to the eight firſt Cantons: Wagenthall, the Sargans, and Rheineck to the ſeven firſt Cantons: Rappenſwill to Uren, Swits, Underwald, and Glaris; and Turgow, unto the ten firſt Cantons; Belinzano to the three firſt only; and all the reſt of the Italian Præfectures to the Cantons generally, excepting Apenzell, which was not entred into the confederacy when theſe Præfectures were given unto the Switzers by Maximilian Sforza Duke of Millain; which was in Anno 1513, ſome moneths before the taking in of Apenzell to the reſt of the Cantons.

Such is the number of the Cantons, Præfectures, and States confederate, amongſt all which there are few Towns or Cities of any note: there being no City nor walled Town in the Cantons of Swits, Uren, Underwalden, Glaris, Apenzel, nor in any of the States confederate ſituate amongſt the Switzers, but Saint Gall only; nor in any of the Præfectures but that of Baden. So that the places worthy of conſi-deration are not like to be many. Of thoſe that are, the principall are, 1 Zurich, a large City, and a renowned Univerſity, ſituate on both ſides of the River Limat, where it iſſueth out of the Lake called Zurich-See. It had anciently two Monaſteries in it, in one of which Huldericus Zuinglius was a Canon, ſlain near this Town in the battel ſpoken of before, Anno 1531. now giving name to the moſt honourable of the Cantons, to which belongeth the authority of ſummoning the general Diets, as of thoſe alſo of the Proteſtants; the Legats thereof preſiding in both Aſſemblies. 2 Friburg, ſituate on the River Sana, on the declivity of an uneven and rocky hill, founded by Bertold the fourth Duke of Zeuringen. 3 Solothurn, (the Solothurum of Antoninus) on the River of Aar, famous for the Martyrdom of S. Urſus, and his 66 Theban Souldiers, in the time of the Emperor Diocletian. A Town of great Antiquity, but not ſo old by far as the people make it; who would have it to be built in the time of Abraham. 4 Baſil, ſo called either of a Baſilisk ſlain at the building of the City; or of the German word Paſel, ſignifying a path; or of Βασιλεία ſignifying Kingly. It was built Anno 382, and is famous for an Univerſity founded by Pius the ſecond, Anno 1459. It was made a Canton Anno 1501; and is honoured with the Sepulchres of Oecolampadius, Eraſmus, Pontanus, Glarienus, and Hottoman, the famous Civilian. In this City, Anno 1431, was held that notable Councel, wherein though the Papall authority was then at the height, it was decreed that a general Councel was above the Pope. What was then enacted, was immediately put in practiſe; the Councel depoſing Pope Eugenius the fourth, and placing in his room Amadeus Duke of Savoy, afterward called Felix the fourth; who having held the See nine years in a time of Schiſm, did willingly in order to the peace of Chriſtendom, reſign the Popedom to Nicolas the fifth, who had before been choſen by the oppoſite Faction. The City is great, rich, and populous, ſometimes a Town Imperial, ſtill a Biſhops See; the Biſhop being ſubject to the Archbiſhop of Beſanſon, in the County of Burgundie: ſeated upon the River Rhene (where it receiveth Weis and Byrſa, two leſſer brooks) by which it is divided into the greater Baſil lying towards France, and the leſſer lying towards Germany. 5 Lucern, ſituate on both ſides of the Ruſſe, where it iſſueth out of the Lake of Lucern; ſo called from Lucerna, i. e. the Lantern, which was placed here on an high Tower, to give light to Water-men in the night. A City well traded and frequented by ſtrangers, becauſe the ordinary road from Germany into Italie, paſſing from hence through the Countrey of the Griſons; and in regard that the Diets for the Popiſh Cantons, which heretofore were held at Uren, are removed hither. Not far from this Town is the Mountain called Pilates hill, of Pontius Pilate, whoſe ghoſt (as the common people are made to believe) doth walk once a year on the banks of this Lake, in his Judges Robes. And to be ſure the fiction ſhall not be confuted, they add, that whoſoever ſeeth him ſhall die that year. 6 Bern, compaſſed almoſt round with the River Aar, and taking up the whole extent of a little mountain; the houſes of free-ſtone, neatly and uniformly built. A Town which gives name to the largeſt and moſt potent of all the Cantons; one of the firſt which did embrace the Reformation, and the firſt of all which purged it ſelf of Images, thoſe excellent Inſtruments of Superſtition and Idolatry; defaced here in a popular tumult, Anno 1548. 7 Lauſanna, in the Canton of Bern, a Biſhops See, Suffragan to the Archbiſhop of Beſanſon; ſeated on the banks of the Lake of Lemane, and compaſſed with mountains alwaies covered with ſnow, which open themſelves on the Eaſt ſide only, which is towards Italie. 8 Schaffhauſen, the only Town of all the Cantons, which lyeth on the other ſide of the Rhene; of right belonging unto Sueva, or Scawben, a Province of Germany, and reckoned as a part thereof, before it was incorporated into this Confederacy.

Switzerland.

Next for the Præfectures, and confederate States, they have not many Towns of note (excepting Rotwell, and Mulhuſen, two Imperial Cities, which properly belong to another place.) Of thoſe which be, the principal amongſt the Confederates, lying within the bounds of this Countrey, is the Town of Saint Gall (Sengall as they corruptly call it) an Imperial City, ſituate amongſt the Mountains near the Boden-See. A rich, populous, and well-governed Town, taking name from the Monaſtery of S. Gall, a famous Scot, and the Apoſtle of thoſe parts, Anno 630, or thereabouts; the Abbot of which having great poſſeſſions in this tract (before Apenzell, and this Town revolted from him) was a Prince of the Empire. The Anabaptiſts were once very prevalent here, inſomuch that one of them cut off his brothers head in the preſence of his Father and Mother, and ſaid (according to the humour of that ſect, who boaſt much of dreams, viſions, and Enthuſiaſms) that God commanded him ſo to do. The principal amongſt the Præfectures is the Town of Baden, or (to difference it from Baden a Marquiſate in Germany) the Upper Baden: ſeated on a little Mountain near the River Limat, almoſt in the middle of the Countrey; and for that cauſe the place of meeting for the Councel of Eſtate of all the Confederates. It taketh name from the Bathes here being, two of which only are publick, the reſt in private houſes: conſcious, as it is thought, to much laſciviouſneſs. For whereas it is ſaid of Adrian, that Lavacra pro ſexibus ſeparavit; here men and women promiſcuouſly bathe together; and which is worſt, in private: where, as Munſter telleth us, Cernunt viri uxores tractari, cernunt cum alienis loqui, & quidem ſolam cum ſolo; and yet are not any of them diſturbed with jealouſie. Theſe Bathes are much frequented, yet not ſo much for health as pleaſure. Their chiefeſt vertue is the quickning power they have upon barren women. But as the Friers uſe to ſend men whoſe wives are fruitleſs, in pilgrimage to Saint Joyce, the Patroneſs of fruitfulneſs; and in the mean time to lie with their Wives: ſo it may be with good reaſon thought, that in a place of ſuch Liberty as this is, the luſty and young gallants that haunt this place, produce greater operation of barren women, than the waters of the Bath it ſelf. No other Town of eminent note amongſt the Præfectures of the Swiſſes, except Rhineck it ſelf, the ſeat of the Governor for the Switzers, ſituate near the Lake of Conſtance: and none of any note at all amongſt the Italian Præfectures, except Belinzana, and Locarno, neither of them containing 400 Houſes, and thoſe none of the handſomeſt.

Within

Switzerland.

Within the limits of this Countrey, and in that part thereof which was called Argow, containing the now Cantons of Uren, Swits, Underwald, Glarona, and Lucern; with some of the adjoyning parts of Germany, and some part of the Dukedom of Savoy; did sometimes stand the famous and renowned Castle of HABSPURG: from the Lords whereof the house of Austria, and most of the Kings and Princes of the Christian World do derive themselves. First founded, as some say, by Ottopert the third Prince of this line, at or before the year 700; as others say, by Rapato the son of Betzeline, about the year 1020. Situate on the River Aar (by the Latins called Arula) near a Town called Bruck; now so decayed, that there is no tracing of the ruins. Preserved in memory by the Lords and Princes of it, descended in a direct line from Sigebert the eldest son of Theodebert King of Mets, or Austrasia; first setled in these parts by Clotaire the second, King of the French, with the title, as some say, of Duke of Upper Almain (the Lower Almain being that which is now called Suevia or Schwaben, an adjoyning Province of Germany) Being soon weary of that empty, but invidious title, they were sometimes called Earls of Habspurg, by the name of this Castle; sometimes Earls of Altemburg, another Castle not far off, of their own foundation. And after closing in with the Kings of Burgundy Transjurane, and the German Emperors, they received of them a great part of the Countrey of Argow; from which some of them were called Earls of Argow. Not known distinctly by the title of Earls of Habspurg, till the time of Rapato above-mentioned; when those of Altemburg and Argow became discontinued. However we will here lay down the whole succession of this famous family, either Earls, or the Progenitors of

The Earls of Habspurg.

635 1 Sigibert, son of Theodebert King of Mets, by Clotaire the second of that name, French King, dispossessed of the Kingdom of his Father; and afterwards by him indowed with a great part of those Countreys, which are now called Switzerland, with the title of Duke of Upper Almain.

2 Sigibert II. son of Sigibert the first, Duke of Upper Almain.

3 Ottopert, or Otbert, the son of Segibert the second, the founder, as some say, of the Castles of Altemburg, and Habspurg, of which promiscuously called Earl.

4 Bebo, the son of Ottopert, the last Duke of Upper Almain; which title he exchanged for that of Earl of Altemburg, and Habspurg.

5 Robert, or Rother, as some call him, the son of Bebo, Earl of Altemburg.

766 6 Hertopert, the son of Robert, who added unto his Estate that part of Schwaben, or Suevia, which is called Brisgow.

7 Rampert, the son of Hertopert, who flourished Anno 814, at what time he procured the Canonization of S. Trutpertus.

8 Guntram, the son of Rampert, Earl of Altemburg.

9 Luithard, the son of Guntram.

909 10 Luitfride, the son of Luithard.

929 11 Hunifride, the son of Luitfride, who added unto his Estates the Territory now called Sungow, bordering on Alsatia, a Province of Germany; recovered after his decease by the Dukes of Schwaben.

950 12 Guntram II. son of Hunifride, the first who took unto himself the title of Earl of Argow: from whose second son named Berthilo, descended the Dukes or Earls of Zeringen, possessed of almost all Brisgow, and good part of Switzerland, which they inherited from Berthold, the son of Gebiro the third son of Guntram. Who having founded the Castle of Zeringen, and acquired great possessions in the adjoyning parts of Schwaben, left them at his decease (being childless) to Berthold the son of Berthilo, and his Cousen German.

13 Betzo, or Betzeline, the eldest son of Guntram the second, Earl of Argow.

14 Rapato, son of Betzeline, the founder or repairer of the Castle of Habspurg, from whence both he and his successors were constantly called Earls of Habspurg. Great Grand-father, by Theodorick his youngest son, of Rodolph Earl of Rhinefelden, and Duke of Schwaben, elected Emperor (at the instigation of the Pope) against Henry the fourth.

15 Warner, by some called Berengar, or Berengarius, the son of Rapato.

1096 16 Otho, the son of Warner or Berengar.

1108 17 Warner II. son of Otho, enriched by the Emperor Henry the fourth, with some fair Estates belonging to the Dukes of Schwaben.

18 Albert, the son of Warner the second, surnamed the Rich.

19 Albert II. surnamed the Wise, son of Albert the first, added to his Estates a great part of the Upper Alsatia; which he had by the right of Heduigis his wife, one of the daughters and heirs of Simon the last Earl thereof.

1238 20 Rodolph, the fortunate son of Albert the second, added to his estate the rest of the Upper Elsate, elected Emperor of the Romans, Anno 1273. Of which he made so good advantage, that he added unto his Estates the great Dukedom of Austria, with all the incorporate Provinces thereunto belonging, and laid the first foundation of the Austrian greatness; of which more in Germany. Here only note, that besides the following Princes of the house of Austria, those of the line Collateral still retained the title of Earls of Habspurg (according to the ill custome of Germany) increased with the addition of the Earldome

Earldom of Kyburg, of which more hereafter: and ſo continued till the expiring of that line in the perſon of Rodolph the fourth, the laſt that bare the title of Earl of Habſpurg, Anno 1356. by whoſe death many fair Eſtates were added to the Auſtrian Family. Switzerland.

Having on the occaſion of theſe Earls of Habſpurg, beheld ſo much of the affairs of this Countrey, as related to that puiſſant and illuſtrious family, let us go forward to the reſt: firſt taking in our way the ancient Eſtate hereof in the time of the Romans. At what time this whole mountainous tract, containing many ſeveral Nations (ſome of them ſpoken of before) was comprehended under the general name and notion of the Helvetii; the greateſt and moſt populous of all the reſt: ſo called, as Verſtegan will have it, quaſi Hil-vites, or the Vites of the Mountains, to difference them from the Vites of the lower parts, inhabiting in that part of Cimbrick Cherſonneſe, which is now called Juitland. Grown by long peace, and want of opportunity by traffick into forein parts, to ſo great a multitude, that the Countrey, barren of it ſelf, was no longer able to maintain them; they ſet fire on their Towns and Houſes, and with a general reſolution went to ſeek new dwellings. The total number of men, women and children, which went upon this deſperate action, are ſaid to have amounted to the number of 3680000, whereof 900000 were fighting men. They had not long before overthrown L. Caſſius a Roman Conſul, ſlain the Conſul himſelf, and ſold his Souldiers for Bond-ſlaves: upon the apprehenſion of which good ſucceſs, they thought no body able to withſtand them. But they found Cæſar of a ſtronger metal than L. Caſſius. Who having ſtopped their paſſage by hewing down the bridge of Geneva, till he was grown ſtrong enough to bid them battel; ſo waſted them in ſeveral skirmiſhes and defeats, that they were forced to crave leave of him to go home again, and to rebuild thoſe Towns and Villages which they had deſtroyed before this enterpriſe: which he upon delivery of Hoſtages, did vouchſafe to grant. It is conceived, that at the leaſt two Millions of them periſhed in this journey, not ſo much by the ſword (though that ſpared them not) as for want of neceſſaries. After this they continued Members of the Roman Empire, till conquered in the times of Honorius and Valentinian the third, by the Burgundians and Almans, betwixt whom divided; the River Ruſs parting their dominions. From them being taken by the French, it was made a part of the Kingdom of Burgundy; ſome parts firſt taken out, and given to the Progenitors of the Earls of Habſpurg, as before was noted. Given with the reſt of that Kingdom to the Emperor Conrade the ſecond, by Rodolph the laſt King thereof: parcelled out by the German Emperors (as their cuſtome was) into divers States; moſt of the which were drawn in by the Dukes of Schwaben, the Earls of Habſpurg, Kyburg, Werdenberg, &c. and the Dukes of Zeringen; as afterwards in the fall of the one, and as heirs to many of the other, by the Dukes of Auſtria. By means of which united titles the Auſtrian family was poſſeſſed of ſo much of this Countrey, as now make up five Cantons, and as many of the principal Præfectures: that is to ſay, the Cantons of Zug, Glarona, Lucern, Friburg, and Schaffehauſen; the Præfectures of Baden, Brengarten, Mellingen, Wagenthall, Roperſwyll; together with a great part of the Countrey of Targow, wherein ſtands the City of S. Gall, now a Confederate with the Switzers; ſome of the reſt, as Uren, Switz, Underwalden, being brought under by the power of the Emperor Albert, the ſon of Rodolph, who had a purpoſe to unite them to the houſe of Auſtria; became obnoxious alſo to the power of thoſe Princes. But the People being at laſt over-burthened by the tyranny of thoſe Governors, whom the Dukes of Auſtria and their other Lords had ſent among them; ſeeing withall the Empire by the Popes Fulminations diſtracted into many Factions, and the Auſtrian Family weakned by a ſub-diviſion of that great Eſtate into many parcels; they contracted an Offenſive and Defenſive League amongſt themſelves, for defence of their Liberty: into which firſt entred thoſeof Switz, Uren and Underwald, Anno 1387. Not all united into one Confederation till the year 1511, as before was noted. At their firſt beginning to take Armes, Frederick, one of the many Dukes of Auſtria (to whoſe ſhare they fell) ſent his Brother Leopald againſt them with a puiſſant Army; which they encountred with near Mortgarton a village of the now Canton of Underwalden, and there overthrew him: but more by the convenience of thoſe narrow paſſages, through which his Army was to march, than by any valour. In which it was no ſmall help to them, that the waies were all ſo filled with Ice, that he was able to do no ſervice with his Horſe; and his Souldiers ſo amazed at the preſent difficulties, that the Confederates only caſting ſtones on them from the tops of the Mountains, made them leap into the Lakes adjoyning. This hapned in the year 1315. Grown confident by this ſucceſs, they brought the new Canton of Lucern into their confederacy by force of Armes, Anno 1332. and that of Zurich by their reputation and like hope of Liberty, Anno 1351. in which year thoſe of Zug, and Glaris invaded by the former five, and willing to diſcharge themſelves of their Lordly Maſters, were united to them, as was the new Canton of Bern in the year next following. In the year 1381. the Towns of Solothurn and Friburg, deſcending from the houſe of Zeringen, (at the expiration of that line) upon thoſe of Habſpurg, revolted from their natural Lords and admitted Cantons, occaſioned Leopold ſon of Albert the ſhort, and brother of Albert the fourth, Dukes of Auſtria, to make war upon them: in which war being vanquiſhed and ſlain neer Sempacha a village of the Canton of Lucern, with the Flower of his Nobility and Gentry, Anno 1386, and the ſucceeding Dukes not venturing any more againſt them, the reſidue of the Cantons and Confederates were in time made up.

Having thus cleared themſelves of the Houſe of Auſtria, they continued free and unmoleſted, but never came to any reputation for their valour, till the war made upon them by Charles Duke of Burgundy, whom they diſcomfited in three great battels, and ſlew him alſo in the third. A war commenced by him at the firſt on ſmall occaſions, and leſs hopes: the Countrey being ſo barren and the people people so poor; that their Ambassador to the Duke (as Comines reporteth) protested, that if all their Country-men were taken; they would not be able to pay a ransome, to the value of the spurs and bridle-bits in his Camp. Certainly at that time they were so poor, that they knew not what riches was. For having won the first battel at Granson (the other two were those of Morat and Nancy) one of the goodliest Pavilions in the World was by them torn in pieces, and turned into breeches and side-coats: divers silver plates and dishes they sold for a French Sous (each Sous a little more than an English penny) supposing them to be but pewter; and a great Diamond of the Dukes, which was the goodliest Jewel in Christendom, was sold to a Priest for a Guilder; and by him again to some of the Lords of the Countrey, for three Franks. After their valour shewed in these battels, Lewis the 11th took them into pension, giving them yearly forty thousand Crowns, viz. twenty thousand to the Cities, and twenty thousand to particular persons: and bowed so much beneath the Majesty of the most Christian King, as to term himself one of the Bourgesses of their Corporation; and to contend with the Duke of Savoy, which of them should be held for their first Allie. By these arts, and the nearness of their Forces for those occasions, he wrested Burgundy out of the hands of Mary the daughter of Charles; and Lewis the twelfth won Millain from Ludowick Sforze, whom they perfidiously betrayed, as was said before. Upon the merit of these services, they required an augmentation of their pensions: which when this Lewis the twelfth denyed, they withdrew themselves from the Amity of the French, and entred into the service of Pope Julio the second; who therefore stiled them the Defenders of the Church, Anno 1510. The fruits of which entertainment was the defeat of the whole forces of King Lewis, and the loss of Millain; into which Maximilian Sforze, the son of Ludowick, was solemnly re-instated by the Confederates: who to oblige the Switzers more firmly to him, gave them those Towns and Valleys in the Alpes of Italie (formerly members of that Dukedom) which now belong unto the Switzers; reckoned amongst the Præfectures of their Common-wealth. Francis the first in pursuance of his claim to Millain, gave them a great and memorable overthrow at the battel of Marignan. Yet afterwards considering what damage his Realm had sustained by the revolt of these Auxiliaries to his Enemies, he renewed the Confederation with them; on condition that he should restore the ancient pension of forty thousand Crowns; secondly, that he should pay unto them at certain terms, six hundred thousand Crowns; thirdly, that he should entertain four thousand of them in his pay continually; fourthly, that for the restoring of such places as they had taken from the Dutchy of Millain, he should give unto them thirty thousand Crowns: fifthly, that he should give them three moneths pay before-hand; sixthly and lastly, that Maximilian Sforze, whom they had estated in Millain, and were now going to dispossesse, might by the King be created Duke of Nemours, endowed with twelve thousand Frankes of yearly revenue, and maried to a daughter of the bloud royal. On these conditions, as honourable to them as burdensom to the King, was the League renewed Anno 1522. since which time, they have obtained, that six hundred of their Countrey are to be of the French Kings Guard; five hundred of which wait without at the gates of the Court, the other hundred in the great Hall. And yet the French Kings did not so ingross the Market, though they raised the price of the commodity, but that all other Princes might have them also for their money: the Kings of Spain and other bidding fair for them, but never going so high as the French had done. At last, upon the differences which grew amongst themselves in point of Religion, they grew to be divided also in point of Pension: the Popish Cantons taking pensions of the Pope, and the King of Spain; the Protestants of the French; the mixt of both; and all of the Venetians. By which means, being bribed and corrupted by all, they came in very little time to be trusted of none. Which sudden sinking of that fame and reputation which they had attained to, together with the reasons of it; that notable Statesman and Historian Guicciardine doth describe as followeth: "The name "(saith he) of this wilde and uncivil Nation hath got great honour by their concord, and glory by "Arms. For being fierce by nature, inured to war, and exact keepers of Military discipline, they have not "only defended their own Countrey, but have won much praise in forein parts: which doubtlesse had "been greater, if they had sought to inlarge their own Empire, and not for wages to inlarge the Em-"pire of others; and if nobly they had propounded unto themselves any other ends, than the gain of "money, by the love whereof being made abject, they have lost the opportunity of becoming fearful "to Italy. For since they never came out of their confines, but as mercenary men, they have had no "publick fruit of their Victories: but by their covetousness have become intolerable in their exactions "where they overcame, and in their demands with other men; yea, at home froward and obstinate in "their conclusions, as well as in following their commands under whose pay they serve in War. Their "chief men have pensions of several Princes to favour them in their publick meetings: and so private "profit being preferred before the good of the publick, they are apt to be corrupted, and fall at dis-"cord amongst themselves, with great lessening of the reputation which they had gotten amongst "strangers. So he, relating the affairs of the year 1511. which the following issue of affairs hath fully verified.

As for the Government of this State, it is meerly popular, and that not only in the particular Cantons, but the aggregate body of their Councel: the Gentry and Nobility being either rooted up in those long Wars which were betwixt them and their Vassals, justly provoked by those intolerable pressures and exactions which they laid upon them; or else worn out of memory and observation, for want of sway and suffrage in the Councels of the Common-wealth. Only in Schaffehausen, Basil and Zurich, are some Gentry left, not capable of any place or suffrage in the Senate of the said Cantons (from which they are excluded by the Common people, because they joyned not with them in their first revolt) unless they wave their Gentry, and be enrolled amongst the number of Plebeians. The rest they have (it seemeth) in so poor esteem, eſteem, that Porters and Mechanicks of the meaneſt Trades, in all occaſions of War are numbred with, and amongſt theſe Gentlemen; making up one ſociety only, and joyning with them in electing the Maſter of their Company, who is one of the Senate. But becauſe that every Canton hath its proper Magiſtrates, but more or fewer, according as it is in greatneſs, or in the number of its ſeverall Reſorts, or ſub-diviſions; it will not be amiſſe to ſhew what number of Reſorts are in every Canton: that is to ſay, in Underwalden only two, in Switz ſix, in Uren ten, in Zug five, in Glaris or Glarona fifteen, in Apenzel ſix, in Lucern ſeven, in Solothurn no more than one, in Friburg nineteen, in Baſil and Schaffhauſen but one apiece (the Cantons there and in Solothurn, reaching but little further than the Towns themſelves) in that of Zurich thirty one, and thirty in that of Bern; in all one hundred forty and eight. Of theſe conſiſts the body of this Common-wealth. In ordering whereof, every particular Canton hath its proper Magiſtrate, choſen by the commonalty of that Canton (whom they call the Wuaman) together with a ſtanding Councel aſſiſtant to him, choſen out of the people, for the directing and diſpoſing of their own affairs; which meet and ſit in the chief Town or Village of that Diſtrict. But if the cauſe concern the Publick, then every Canton ſendeth one or more Commiſſioners to the general Diets; where they determine of the buſineſs which they meet about, according to the major part of the Votes: the Commiſſioners of every Canton having one Vote only, though many may be ſent from each, to adde the greater weight to their conſultations. The place of meeting is moſt commonly at the Town of Baden, in reſpect of the commodity of the Inns and houſes, the pleaſant ſituation and famous Medicinal Bathes: and becauſe it is ſeated in the very centre of Switzerland, and ſubject to the eight firſt Cantons. And here they do determine of War, Peace, and Leagues; of making Laws, of ſending, receiving, and anſwering Ambaſſadors; of Governments, and diſtributing the publick Offices; and finally of difficult cauſes and Appeals, referred unto the judgement of the great Councel. In which the City Zurich, chief of the Cantons, hath the firſt place, not by antiquity, but dignity, and of old cuſtom hath the greateſt authority of calling together this great Councel, ſignifying by letters to each Canton, the cauſe, time, and place of meeting: yet ſo, that if any Canton think it for the publick good, to have an extraordinary meeting of their Commiſſioners, they write to them of Zurich to appoint the ſame. That which the greater number do reſolve upon, is without delay put in execution.

The Forces of theſe Suiſſe conſiſt altogether of Foot, Horſe being found unſerviceable in this Mountainous Countrey. And of theſe Foot, Boterus reckoneth that they are able to raiſe ſixſcore thouſand. Which poſſibly may be true enough, if it be underſtood of all that be able to bear Arms. For otherwiſe de facto, the greateſt Army that ever they brought into the field, conſiſted but of one and thirty thouſand men, which was that wherewith they aided the confederate States of Italie againſt the French, and reſtored Maximilian Sforze to the Dukedome of Millain. Their ordinary ſtanding Forces are conceived to be ſixteen or ſeventeen thouſand, which they may bring into the field, leaving their Towns and Forts well furniſhed. And for their Revenue, it is not like to be very great, conſidering the poverty of their Countrey, and their want of traffick with other Nations. That which is ordinary and in common, ariſeth out of the Annual penſions which they receive from Forein States; the profits ariſing out of their Dutch and Italian Præfectures, the Impoſt laid on Wines ſold in Taverns, and Corn uſed by Bakers; and the Rents of a diſſolved Monaſtery called Kings field (or Conings field) becauſe many Kings and Queens have been cloyſtered there, amounting to forty thouſand Guldens yearly. Which Monaſtery was built in the year 1380, in memory and honour of the Emperour Albertus, ſlain by his Nephew at Spantback not far from Baſil. Their extraordinary doth conſiſt of ſpoyls that be gotten in the War; which if it be managed in common, are divided in common; but if by two or three of the Cantons only, the reſt can claim no ſhare in the booty gotten.

But this is only in relation to the Switzers themſelves. For otherwiſe taking in the Confederate States, as well without as within the bounds of that Countrey, they are able to raiſe fifty or threeſcore thouſand men: that is to ſay, the Switzers themſelves ſeventeen thouſand men, the Griſons ten thouſand, thoſe of Walliſland ſix thouſand, the Abbot and Town of S. Gall four thouſand, the City of Geneva two thouſand; beſides what Rotwell and Mulhuſen, two Imperiall Cities, are able to contribute towards it; the Dukes of Savoy being bound by their antient Leagues to aid them with ſix hundred Horſes at his own charges; beſides two thouſand ſix hundred Crowns in Annual penſions. But the Revenue of thoſe States is ordered by it ſelf apart, and never comes within the computation of the publick; unleſs it be on the repulſing of a common Enemy, in which they are equally concerned. In which caſe, and others of a general intereſſe, they communicate both heads and purſes: the Delegates and Commiſſioners of all the States of this Confederacy, meeting together to conſult of the common cauſe, which meeting they entitle the greateſt Councel. But this is very ſeldome held, publick affairs being generally ordered by the Commiſſioners of the Switzers only: though they themſelves diſclaim that name of Switzers as too mean and narrow, and call themſelves Eidienoſſen, that is to ſay, Partakers of the ſworn Leagues. More of this Common-wealth he that liſts to ſee, may ſatisfie himſelf in Simler, who purpoſely and punctually hath deſcribed the ſame.

Griſons.

The Leagues of the GRISONS.

THe Countrey of the GRISONS comprehendeth all that part of the Alpes, which lieth between the Springs of the Rivers Rhene, Inn, Adice or Atheſis, and Adua: being bounded on the Eaſt, with the Countrey of Tirol; on the Weſt, with Switzerland; on the North, with Suevia or Schwaben, and a part of the Switzers; on the South, with Lombardy. A Countrey far more mountainous than any of this Alpine tract, and having leſs natural commodities to boaſt it ſelf of, more than the Fountains of thoſe Rivers before mentioned.

The people of it by moſt Latin Writers of theſe times, are called by the name of Rhæti, the Countrey Rhætia: and ſo far properly enough, as that the ancient Rhæti did inhabit all the lands poſſeſſed by the Griſons: though the Griſons do not inhabit a fourth part of thoſe lands, which were poſſeſſed heretofore by the ancient Rhæti: For anciently the Rhæti did extend their dwellings as far as from the Alpes of Italie, to the River of Danow; comprehending beſides this of the Griſons, a great part of Suevia or Schwaben, Tirol, Bavaria, and ſo much alſo of the Switzers as was not in poſſeſſion of the old Helvetii. Within which tract there were not only many rich valleys and fruitful fields; but a moſt pleaſant race of Wines called Vina Rhætica, much drank of by Auguſtus Cæſar, and by him preferred before all others; which no man can conceive to grow in this barren Countrey. More properly Ammianus Marcellinus calleth this Tract by the name of Campi Canini, mountainous fields, which the continuall ſnow made look of an hoary hue: and by alluſion thereunto, the Dutchmen call this Nation at the preſent by the name of Graunpuntner, that is to ſay, the hoary or gray Confederates.

As for the Rhæti, take them in the former latitude, they were ſubdued by Druſus and Tiberius the ſons-in-law, and adopted children of Auguſtus Cæſar, A. V. C. 739. And in the time of Antoninus made up two Provinces of the Empire, viz. Rhætia prima, and Rhætia ſecunda, both of them appertaining by Conſtantines new model, to the Dioceſe of Italie. A Nation in the firſt original, of Italian race, and ſo more properly to be aſſigned to that Dioceſe; but had inhabited this tract, from the time that Belloveſus the Gall ſeiſed on part of Tuſcany, expelling thence the ancient inhabitants thereof: who under the conduct of Rhætus, a great man amongſt them, poſſeſſed themſelves of theſe mountains, and afterwards of the vales adjoyning, which they called Rhætia, by the name of their Captain General. This hapned in the time of Tarquinius Priſcus, in the firſt cradle as it were of the Roman Empire: in the declining age whereof, during the reign of Valentinian the third, and Anaſtaſius, thoſe parts which lay neareſt unto Germany, and were worth the conquering, were ſubdued by the Almains, and Boiarians; by them incorporated with the reſt of their ſeveral States. The reſidue of this mountainous tract, as not worth the looking after, continued a member of the Empire; till given by Charles the Great to the Biſhop of Chur; whoſe ſucceſſors, being ſeveral waies moleſted by their potent neighbours, confederated with the Switzers for their mutual aid and preſervation, Anno 1497. By whoſe aid they ſo valiantly made good their ground againſt the Auſtrians, that at the laſt, after the loſs of 20000 men on both ſides, the points in difference were accorded, and a peace concluded.

This is the ſubſtance of this ſtory, as to former times; to which there cannot much be added in the way of Hiſtory; little or no alteration hapning in their affairs, but a more perfect ſetling of them in a form of Government. Concerning which we muſt obſerve that this whole Tract is caſt into three Diviſions; that is to ſay, the Upper League or Liga Griſa; 2 Liga Cadi Dio, or the League of the houſe of God; 3 The Lower League, called alſo Liga Ditture, or the League of the ten Commonalties. The eight Italian Præfectures will make a fourth. Their buildings generally in the three firſt being cold and mountainous, are of free-ſtone, but low, and for three parts of the year covered with ſnow: the windows thereof glazed and large, of which for the ſaid three parts of the year they only open a little quarry of glaſs, and preſently ſhut it cloſe again; the outſide of the windowes having leaves of wood, to keep the heat of their ſtowes from going out, or any cold from comming in. And as for travelling, the waies are for the moſt part unſafe and dangerous, by reaſon of the ſtraight paſſages, dreadful precipices, and thoſe almoſt continuall bridges which hang over the terrible falls, and Cataracts of the River Rhene, deſcending with great violence from the higheſt mountains: huge hils of ſnow tumbling into the valleys, with a noiſe as hideous as if it were a clap of thunder.

For the particulars, the Upper League lieth in the higheſt and moſt mountainous parts of the Alpes of Italie, having therein thoſe vaſt mountains of Locknannier, and Der Vogel; out of which the two ſtreams of the Rhene have their firſt original. By the French it is called Liga Griſe, or the Gray League (the word Gris, or Griſe, in that language, being Gray in ours) in the ſame ſenſe as the Dutch call it Graunpuntner, that is, Confœderati cani, which we may render properly the Confederate Griſle-pates: either becauſe the mountains are continually covered with a perriwig of hoary Iſicles, or from the heads of this people, Gray before their time. It conſiſteth of nineteen Reſorts or Commonalties, according to the number of their Vales and Villages; of which four only ſpeak the Dutch, all the reſt a corrupt Italian: and was the firſt which did confederate with the Switzers, from whence the name of Griſons came unto the reſt, who after joyned with them in the ſame con-confederacy. It hath no City nor Town of note. The principal of thoſe that be, are 1 Ilanter, the place ſometimes of the General Diets for theſe Leagues. 2 Diſentis, where is a very rich Monaſtery. 3 Saint Bernardino, ſituate at the foot of the Mountain Vogel. 4 Maſox, ſometimes an Earldom, giving name to the Valley of Maſoxer-tal. 5 Galanckter, whence the vale ſo named, inhabited by none but Basket-makers. 6 Ruffla, ſituate on the River Mueſa, near Belinzano, on the skirts of Italie. Griſons.

2 The ſecond League, is Liga Cadi Dio, or the League of the houſe of God, ſo called becauſe it was the proper Patrimony of the Biſhop and Church of Chur: and may be called the middle League, as being ſituate between the Upper League on the Weſt, and the Lower League upon the Eaſt. It is the greateſt of the three, containing twenty one Reſorts or Commonalties: of which nine lie on this ſide the tops of the Mountains, towards Germany, the reſt towards Italie: and yet two only ſpeak the Dutch, the others a corrupt Italian. The places of moſt note are, 1 Tintzen, the Tinnetio of Antoninus, ſeated amongſt high and inacceſſible Mountains, betwixt Chur and the Valley of Bergel. 2 Mur (called Murus by the ſame Antoninus) in the valley of Bergel; a valley extending from the head of the River Maira, towards Chiavenna, one of the Italian Præfectures. 3 Stalla, called Bevio by the Italians, becauſe the way doth in that place divide it ſelf. 4 S. Jacomo (in the valley of Compoltſchin) called Travaſede by Antoninus. 5. Sinnada, in the valley of Engadin. And 6 Chur, by ſome Ccira, but more truly Curia, ſo called from the long ſtay that Conſtantine the great made here with his Court and Army, in a War intended againſt the Germans; built afterwards by ſome part of his forces which continued here, Anno 357. about half a Dutch mile from the meeting of the two ſtreams of the Rhene; in form triangular, the buildings indifferent in themſelves, but not uniform with one another. High on a Hill, in one corner of which ſtandeth the Cloſe, and therein the Cathedral Church, a ſtately Edifice, but more in accompt of the Natives who have ſeen no fairer, than it is with ſtrangers: and near the Church, the Biſhops Palace, and the Houſes of the Canons, all well built, and handſomly adorned. The Biſhop of this City, and of all the Countrey of theſe Leagues (for they received their Biſhop and the Faith together, Anno 489) acknowledgeth the Archbiſhop of Mentz for their Metropolitan; is reckoned for a Prince of the Empire, and the rightful Lord both of this City and the whole League: but on the introduction of the Reformed Religion, which they had from the Switzers and Genevians, the Citizens withdrew themſelves from their obedience to the Biſhop, and govern the City in the manner of a Free-ſtate. So far conformable to him, for their own preſervation, that as the Biſhop and his Canons, with the reſt of this League, upon occaſion of the wrongs done them by the houſe of Auſtria, Lords of the neighbouring Tirol; joyned in confederacy with the ſeven firſt Cantons of the Switzers (which was in the year 1498): So did the Citizens of Chur, after they had withdrawn themſelves from the command of their Biſhops, concur with them at laſt in that mutuall League.

3 The third League of theſe Griſons, is the Lower League, called alſo Liga Ditture, or the League of the ten Juriſdictions; ſituate cloſe upon Tirol, in the North-eaſt part of the whole Countrey. Of all the ten, two only, which are thoſe of Malans and Meienfeld, obey the joynt commands of the three Leagues of the Griſons: the other eight being ſubject to the Arch-Duke of Auſtria, under whom they are ſuffered to enjoy their ancient priviledges, for fear of uniting with the Switzers; which hitherto they have not done. Only they did unite together in one common League, Anno 1436: conditioning their mutual defence againſt all Enemies, preſervation of their peace, and maintenance of their priviledges; reſerving notwithſtanding their obedience to their natural Lords. In which reſpect, and by reaſon of the intereſs and ſociety which they have with the reſt of the Griſons, they are in friendſhip with the Swiſſe, but in no confederacy. City or Walled-town they have none. The chief of thoſe they have, are 1 Caſtels, the ſeat of the Governor for the Arch-Duke of Auſtria. 2 Malans, and 3 Meienfeld, both bordering upon the Rhene. 4 Tanaas, giving name to the firſt and greateſt of the ten Juriſdictions, the chief Town of this League, in which are held the General Diets for the ſame; and where are kept Muniments and Records which concern their Priviledges. In this League is the Mountain called Rhætico-mons, by Pomponius Mela, but now Prettigower-berg, becauſe it is at the end of the valley which the Dutch call Prettigow.

4 As for the Italian Præfectures, they are eight in number, and were given unto the Griſons by Maximilian Sforze Duke of Millain, Anno 1513. at ſuch time as he gave the like preſent to the Cantons of Switzerland. Of theſe the firſt is called Plurs, ſo called from the chief Town of the ſame name, in Latin Plura, once ſeated in a plain at the foot of the Alpes, near the River Maira, the chief of ſundry villages lying in the ſame bottome; now nothing but a deep and bottomleſs Gulf. For on the 26 of Auguſt 1617. an huge Rock falling from the top of the Mountains, overwhelmed the Town, killed in the twinkling of an eye 1500 people, and left no ſign or ruin of a Town there ſtanding; but in the place thereof a great Lake of ſome two miles length. 2 Chiarama, ſituate in a pleaſant vally ſo called, near the River Maira, and ten Italian miles from the Lake of Como. Antoninus calleth it Clavenna, and the Dutch Clevener-tal, or the valley of Cleven, more near unto the ancient name. 3 The Valtoline, Vallis Telina in the Latine, a pleaſant Valley, extending threeſcore miles in length, from the head of the River Aada, unto the fall thereof in the Lake of Como: the Wines thereof are much commended, and frequently tranſported on this ſide the Alpes. It is divided into ſix Præfectures, according to the names of the principal Towns. The chief whereof are 1 Bormio, ſeated near the head of the River Aada. 2 Teio, the chief Fortreſs of the whole Valley. 3 Sondrio, the chief Town, and the ſeat of the Governor, or Lieutenant General of the whole Countrey. This Valley lying opportunely for the paſſage of the King of Spains Forces, out of Millain into Grisons. Germany, by the practices and treasons of Rodolfus Planta, one of the natives of it, and of the Romish Religion; was delivered to the Duke of Feria, being then Governor of Millain, Anno 1622. the whole Countrey brought under the obedience of that King, Chur it self forced and taken by them, and the Religion of Rome setled in all parts thereof. But two years after, by the joynt Forces of the French, Venetians, and Savoyard, the whole Valley was recovered from the Spaniards, and after a long treaty between France and Spain, the Grisons re-estated in their just possessions, Anno 1630. save that the Spaniard still holds the Fort of Fuentes, for the safer passage of his Forces, if occasion be.

Such is the state of the three Leagues, considered severally and apart from one another. In reference to the whole, they make up one Government, or Common-wealth; for ordering whereof they hold a general Diet, once in every year, consisting of threescore and three Commissioners: that is to say, 28 from the Upper League, 23 from the League of the house of God, and 14 from the League of the ten Jurisdictions. These have authority to determine of Appeals from the common Præfectures, to conclude of Peace and War, Confederacies, Ambassies, and Lawes, which concern the publick: yet so, that in a point of Judicature, it is lawful to Appeal unto the Commonalties of every League, who have authority, if need be, to reverse the sentence; the causes being severally proposed, and passed by the major part of voyces. The Government of each League, popular, as amongst the Switzers.

FRANCE.

HAving thus croſſed the Alpes, we may indifferently diſpoſe our ſelves for France or Germany. But we will follow the courſe and fortunes of the Roman Empire, which firſt paſſed into France, before it medled with the Germans; and had brought Spain, and Britain, under the form of Roman Provinces, when Germany was looked on at a greater diſtance.

FRANCE then according to the preſent dimenſions of it, is bounded on the Eaſt with a branch of the Alpes, which divide Dauphine from Piemont; as alſo with the Countreys of Savoy, Switzerland, and ſome parts of Germany and the Netherlands; on the Weſt with the Aquitain Ocean, and a branch of the Pyrenean Mountains, which divide it from Spain; on the North with the Engliſh Ocean, and ſome parts of Belgium; and on the South, with the reſt of the Pyrenean Mountains, and the Mediterranean.

The Figure of it is almoſt ſquare, each ſide of the Quadrature being reckoned 600 miles in length. But they that go more exactly to work upon it, make the length hereof to be 660 Italian miles, the breadth 570 only, the whole Circumference to amount to 2040. Seated in the Northern temperate Zone, between the middle Parallel of the fifth Clime, where the longeſt day is 15 hours, and the middle Parallel of the eighth Clime, where the longeſt day is 16 hours and an half.

It hath this preſent name of France from the Franci or Frankes, a people of Germany, who ſeized upon thoſe parts of it which lay neareſt to the Rhene, in the time of Valentinian the third; and having afterwards ſubdued Paris, and made it the Seat-royal of their growing Empire, they cauſed the Countrey thereabouts to be called France. Which name, as they enlarged their borders, they impoſed on, or communicated rather to the reſt of this Countrey; and to thoſe parts of Germany alſo which were conquered by them. At which time, for diſtinction ſake, they called the Eaſt parts of their whole Empire by the name of Ooſten-reich or Auſtraſia, lying now wholly out of France, in Germany, and that part of Belgium which is ſubject to the King of Spain: and for the Weſt parts thereof, they had the name of Weſten-reich, or Weſtraſia (in the barbarous Latin of that Age) Weſt France, or Francia Occidentalis; to which the name of France was at laſt appropriated, according to the limits before laid down.

Anciently it was called Gallia, and the people Galli, and by that name occurs moſt commonly in the Writers of the Roman ſtory; and Gallia Tranſalpina, becauſe ſituate on the further ſide of the Alpes from Italie, to difference it from the Countrey of thoſe Gauls, which being planted in thoſe parts which we now call Lombardy, was called Ciſalpina. Sometimes it was called Galatia alſo, and by that name known amongſt the Greeks: by Ptolemy called Celto-Galatia, or the Galatian of the Celtæ, a potent nation of old Gaul; to diſtinguiſh it from Galatia, one of the Provinces of Aſia minor, denominated from the Galatians or Gauls of this Countrey. Whence it became ſo named is not yet determined. Some think it was called Gallia, from the Greek word Γάλα, (Gala) ſignifying milk, quia Lacteos, i. e. albos homines producebat, for the milky and white complexion of the people, compared to the Greeks and Romans who firſt impoſed it. Others, and amongſt them Diodorus Siculus, derive the name from Galata, a ſon of Hercules; to which that of Galatia comes as near as may be. That Hercules was ſometimes in this Countrey, is affirmed alſo by Ammianus Marcellinus; who further addes, That after he had ſuppreſſed thoſe Tyrants which oppreſſed the People, he begat many Children on the principal Women; Et eos, partes quibus imperitabant nominibus ſuis appellaſſe. Lib. XL. Who gave their own names to thoſe parts over which they ruled. But in another place acknowledging that the Grecians call this People Galatæ (ita enim Gallos ſermo Græcus appellat) he telleth us from Timogenes an ancient Author, one very diligent in the ſearch of the Gallick Antiquities, that the Aborigines or firſt Inhabitants hereof, called themſelves Celtæ, by the name of one of their Kings, whom they highly honoured. Et matris ejus vocabulo Galatas, and Galatæ from the name of his Mother Galata: who probably enough might be a daughter of Hercules, miſtook by Diodorus for one of his ſons.

Of the Original of this People more anon. In the mean time we may take ſo much notice of the ancient Gaul, as to affirm him (out of Cæſar and other Authors) to be quick witted, of a ſudden and nimble apprehenſion, but withall very raſh and hare-braind, (ut ſunt ſubita Gallorum ingenia, is a note ſet upon them by the pen of Cæſar:) ſo full of Law-ſuites and contentions, that their Lawyers never wanted work. Gallia Cauſidicos, &c. this Poet hath it: of vehement affections, and precipitate in all their actions, as well Military as Civil; falling on like a Clap of Thunder, and preſently going off in Smoke. Primus impetus major quam virorum, ſecundus minor quam fœminarum, was a part alſo of their Character in the time of Florus the Hiſtorian. And though the preſent French be generally of another Original; yet there is ſo much of the old Gaul ſtill left among them, either by the Impreſſion of the Heavenly Bodies, or by inter-mariages with the Gauls, as they overcame them, that all theſe qualities are ſtill predominant in the French, not differing from the ancient Gaul, but in Name and Habit. For further evidence whereof, take with you a Compariſon, homely I muſt confeſs, but to the life expreſſing the nature of the French, compared with the Dutch and Spaniſh, in matters of War. The French is ſaid to be like a Flea, quickly skipping into a Countrey, and ſoon leaping out of it, as was the Expedition of Charles the eighth into Italie. The Dutch is ſaid to be like a Lonſe, ſlowly maſtering a place, and as ſlowly (yet at laſt) driven out of their hold, as was their taking and loſing of Oſtend, and Gulick. The Spaniard is ſaid to be like a Crab or Pediculus inguinalis, which being once crept into a place, is ſo rooted there, that nothing but the extremity of violence can fetch him out again. In which I think I need not inſtance, it being generally obſerved, that the Spaniards will endure all poſſible hardſhip, before they will part with any thing that they are poſſeſſed of. It is uſed alſo for a By-word, that the Italian is wiſe before-hand, the Dutch in the time of action, and the French after it is done; a wiſdome much like that of the ancient Gauls. Nor are they leſs Litigious than the old Gauls were: Inſomuch as it is thought that there are more Law-ſuites tryed among them in ſeven years, than have been in England from the Conqueſt till the time of King James. They are great Scoffers, yea even in matters of Religion, as appeareth by the ſtory of a Gentleman lying ſick on his death-bed; who when the Prieſt had perſwaded him that the Sacrament of the Altar was the very Body and Bloud of CHRIST, refuſed to eat thereof becauſe it was Friday. Nor can I forget another in the ſame extremity, who ſeeing the Hoſt (for ſo they call the Conſecrated Elements) brought unto him by a lubberly Prieſt, ſaid that CHRIST came to him, as he entred into Hieruſalem, riding upon an Aſſe. As for the Women, they are ſaid to be witty, but Apiſh, wanton, and incontinent: where a man at his firſt entrance may finde acquaintance, and at his firſt acquaintance may finde an entrance. So Dallington in his View of France, deſcribeth them. But I have ſince heard this Cenſure condemned of ſome uncharitableneſs, and the French Gentlewomen highly magnified for all thoſe graces which may beautifie and adorn that Sex. And it is poſſible enough that it may be ſo in ſome particulars, though it be more than any man would gueſſe at, that cometh amongſt them. For generally at the firſt ſight, you ſhall have them as familiar with you, as if they had known you from your Cradle; and are ſo full of Chat and Tattle, even with thoſe they know not, as if they were reſolved ſooner to want breath than words, and never to be ſilent but in the Grave.

As to the perſons of this People, they are commonly of a middle ſtature, and for the moſt part of a ſlight making; their complexion being generally hot and moiſt, which makes them very ſubject to the heats of luſt, and eaſily inclinable unto thoſe diſeaſes which are concomitants thereof. Their conſtitution ſomewhat tender, if not delicate, which rendreth them impatient of Toil and labour; and is in part the cauſe of thoſe ill ſucceſſes which have hapned to them in the Wars; in which they have loſt as much for want of conſtancy, and perſeverance in their enterpriſes, as they have gained by their Courage in the undertaking. And for the Women, they are for the moſt part very perſonable, of ſtraight bodies, ſlender waſts, and a fit Symmetry of proportion in all the reſt; their hands white, long, and ſlender, and eaſily diſcernable to be ſo; for either they wear no Gloves at all, or elſe ſo ſhort, as if they were cut off at the hand-wriſt. To theſe the Complexion of their faces, and the colour of their hair, too much inclining to the black, holds no true Decorum. 'Tis true the Poets commend Leda for her black hair, and not unworthily; Leda fuit nigris conſpicienda comis, as it is in Ovid. But this was ſpecially, becauſe it ſet off with the greater luſtre, the amiable ſweetneſs of her Complexion: For in that caſe the Hair doth ſet forth the Face, as ſhadows commonly do a picture; and the Face ſo becometh the Hair, as a Field Argent doth a Sable bearing, which kinde of Coat our Critical Heralds, call the moſt fair. But when a Black hair meets with a Brown or ſwarthy Complexion, it fals ſhort of that attractiveneſs of beauty, which Ovid being ſo great a Crafts-maſter in the Art of Love, did commend in Leda.

The chief exerciſes they uſe, are 1 Tennis; every Village having a Tennis-court, Orleans 60. Paris many hundreds. 2 Dancing, a ſport to which they are ſo generally affected, that were it not ſo much enveighed againſt by their ſtrait-laced Miniſters, it is thought that many more of the French Catholicks had been of the Reformed Religion. For ſo extremely are they bent upon this diſport, that neither Age nor Sickneſs, no nor poverty it ſelf, can make them keep their heels ſtill, when they hear the Muſick. Such as can hardly walk abroad without their Crutches, or go as if they were troubled all day with a Sciatica, and perchance have their rags hang ſo looſe about them, that one would think a ſwift Galliard might ſhake them into their nakedneſs, will to the Dancing Green howſoever, and be there as eager at the ſport, as if they had left their ſeveral infirmities and wants behinde them. What makes their Miniſters (and indeed all that follow the Genevian Diſcipline) enveigh ſo bitterly againſt Dancing, and puniſh it with ſuch ſeverity when they finde it uſed; I am not able to determine, nor doth it any way belong unto this diſcourſe. But being it is a Recreation which this people are ſo given unto, and ſuch a one as cannot be followed but in a great deal of company, and before many witneſſes and ſpectators of their carriage in it; I muſt needs think the Miniſters of the French Church more nice than wiſe, if they chooſe rather to deter men from their Congregations by ſo ſtrict a Stoiciſm, than indulge any thing unto the jollity and natural gaiety of this people, in matters not offenſive, but by accident only.

The Language of this people is very voluble and pleaſant, but rather Elegant than Copious, and there-therefore much troubled for want of words to find out Periphraſes; beſides that very much of is expreſſed in the action; the head and ſhoulders move as ſignificantly toward it, as the lips and tongue; and he that hopeth to ſpeak with any good grace, muſt have ſomewhat in him of the Mimick. A Language enriched with great plenty of Proverbs, conſequently a great help to the French humor of Scoffing: and ſo naturally diſpoſed for Courtſhip, as makes all the people complementall; the pooreſt Cobler in the Pariſh hath his Court-cringes, and his Eau beniſte de Cour, his Court-holy-water (as they call it) as perfectly as the beſt Gentleman-Huiſher in Paris. Compared with that of other Nations, the Language of the Spaniards is ſaid to be Manly, the Italian Courtly, and the French Amorous. A ſweet language it is without queſtion, the people leaving out in their pronunciation many of their Conſonants, and thereby giving occaſion to this By-word, that the Frenchman pronounceth not as he writes, ſingeth not as he pricketh, nor ſpeaks as he thinketh. In the Originall thereof it is a compound of the old Gallick, German, and Latin Tongues: the old Gallick being queſtionleſs the ſame with the Welſh or Britiſh, as appeareth clearly by theſe reaſons. 1 The Latin words are known to have been received from the Romans; and the German words at the coming in of the Franks and Burgundians; but of the Welch words which they have, we can give no reaſon, but that they are the remainder of their antient Language; of which Welch words which ſtill continue in that Language, Camden in his Britannia reckoneth not a few. 2 It is ſaid by Tacitus that the Britans were the Deſcendants of the Gauls, and this he proveth as by other Arguments, ſo from the identity or neer reſemblance of the Language which both Nations ſpeak. Utriuſque ſermo haud multum diverſus, as his own words are. And 3 it is ſaid by Cæſar, That the Gauls uſed to paſſe into Britain, to be inſtructed in the Rites and learning of the Druides; which ſheweth that both People ſpake but one common tongue, there being in thoſe times no one learned Language, which other Nations ſtudyed beſides their own.

The Soyl is extraordinary fruitfull, and hath three Load-ſtones to draw riches out of other Countreys, Corn, Wine, and Salt; in exchange for which, there is yearly brought into France 1200000 li. Sterling, the cuſtome of Salt only to the King being eſtimated at 700000 Crowns per annum. And indeed the benefit ariſing on this one commodity is almoſt incredible, it being conſtituted by the Kings Edict (which is all in all) that no man ſhall have any Salt for Domeſtick uſes (except by ſpeciall priviledge, and that dearly paid for) but what he muſt buy of the Kings Officers, and that upon ſuch prices too as they pleaſe to ſell it. Nor can it but be very well ſtored with Fiſh; for beſides the benefit of the Seas, their Lakes and Ponds belonging to the Clergy only, are ſaid to be 135000. Their other Merchandiſes are Beeves, Hogs, Nuts, Woad, Skinnes, vaſt quantities of all ſorts of Linnen. And to ſay truth, there are not many Countreys in the Chriſtian World, to which Nature hath been ſo prodigall of her choiceſt bleſſings, as ſhe hath to this; the fields thereof being large and open, and thoſe ſo intermingled with Corn and Vines, and every hedge-row ſo beſet with choice of fruits, that never any covetous or curious eye had a fairer object. And yet ſo miſerable is the condition of the common Paiſant, partly by reaſon of the intolerable Taxes laid upon him by the King, and partly by thoſe great, but uncertain Rents which are ſet upon him by his Landlord (for the poor Husbandman is Tenant only at the will of his Lord) that there is many one amongſt them, who farmeth yearly thirty or forty Acres of Wheat and Vines, that never drinks Wine, or eats good Bread, from one end of the year unto the other.

The Chriſtian Faith was planted firſt amongſt the Gauls, by ſome of St. Peters Diſciples, ſent hither by him at his firſt coming to Rome: Xyſtus, Fronto, and Julianus, the firſt Biſhops of Rhemes, Perigort, and Mants, (Cenomanenſium in the Latine) being ſaid to be of his ordaining in the Martyrologies. The like may be affirmed (but on ſurer grounds) of Trophimus the firſt Biſhop of Arles. For on a controverſie betwixt the Arch-biſhops of Vienna, and Arles, for the dignity of Metropolitan, in the time of Pope Leo the firſt; it was thus pleaded in behalf of the Biſhop of Arles, quod prima inter Gallias, &c. That Arles of all the Cities of Gaul, did firſt obtain the happineſs of having Trophimus, ordained Biſhop thereof by the hands of St. Peter. Nor is St. Paul to be denyed the honour, of ſending ſome of his Diſciples thither alſo to preach the Goſpel: Creſcens ſent by him, as he telleth us 2 Tim. 4. into Galatia, being the firſt Biſhop of Vienna, ſpoken of before; as not the Martyrologies only, but Ado Viennenſis, an antient Writer of that Church, doth expreſly ſay. And that it was into this Countrey, that he ſent that Creſcens at that time, and not unto Galatia, in Aſia minor; the teſtimonies of Epiphanius and Theodoret which affirm the ſame, and that which hath been ſaid before of this name of Galatia, may confirm ſufficiently. But Chriſtianity being deſtroyed by the French at their firſt coming hither, was again planted by the induſtry of S. Remigius the firſt Biſhop of Rhemes; Clovis or Clodivæus the fifth King of the French, giving way unto it for his Wives ſake, who was zealous in it; and after taking on himſelf that holy calling, on a great victory which he won againſt the Almains: By whom being overlaid in the day of battel, he made his prayers to CHRIST, whom his Wife Crotilda worſhipped; vowing to be of that Religion if he gat the victory; which vow he had no ſooner made (as the ſtory telleth us) but Alemannos invaſit timor, a ſudden fear fell upon the Almains, and the French were Conquerours.

At this time they are divided in Religion, as in other places; ſome following the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, and others that of thoſe Reformed Churches, which adhere to Calvin. But this diviſion is more antient than Calvin's dayes; the ſame opinions (as they relate unto the Errors in the Romiſh Church) being maintained formerly by the Albigenſes, the Waldenſes, or Pauperes de Lugduno (the Vaudoys, as the French Writers call them) of whom we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Lyons. Suffice it in this place to note, that the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches was not new in France, when Zuinglius firſt preached againſt the ſuperſtitions of the Maſs, and the worſhip of Images, and Calvin travelled in advancing the Reformation; though much ſuppreſſed as to the outward profeſſion of it. But being revived by their endeavours, it ſprung out again, and ſpread it ſelf ſo ſpeedily in this Kingdome; that there were reckoned in the year 1560. above 1250 Churches of them; which cannot in ſuch a long time, but be wonderfully augmented, though ſcarce any of them have ſcaped ſome maſſacre or other. Of theſe maſſacres, two are moſt memorable, viz. that of Merindoll and Chabriers, as being the firſt, and the maſſacre at Paris, as being the greateſt. That of Merindoll hapned in the year 1545. The inſtrument of it, being Minier, the Preſident of the Councell of Aix. For having condemned this poor people of hereſie, he muſtered a ſmall Army, and ſet fire on the Villages. They of Merindol, ſeeing the flame, with their Wives and Children fled into the woods; but were there butchered, or ſent to the Gallies. One boy they took, placed him againſt a tree, and ſhot him with Calivers; 25 which had hid themſelves in a Cave, were in part ſtifled, in part burned. In Chabriers they ſo inhumanely dealt with the young wives and maids, that moſt of them dyed immediately after. The men and women were put to the Sword; the children were rebaptized; 800 men were murdered in a Cave, and 40 women put together in an old Barn, and burned. Yea ſuch was the cruelty of theſe Souldiers to theſe poor women, that when ſome of them had clambred to the top of the houſe, with an intent to leap down, the Souldiers beat them back again with their Pikes. The Maſſacre of Paris was more cunningly plotted. A Peace was made with the Proteſtants; for the aſſurance whereof, a mariage was ſolemnized, between Henry of Navarre, chief of the Proteſtant party, and the Lady Marguerite the Kings ſiſter. At this Wedding there aſſembled the Prince of Conde, the Admirall Coligni, and divers others of chief note; but there was not ſo much wine drank, as Blood ſhed at it. At midnight the Watch-bell rung, the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde are taken Priſoners, the Admiral murdered in his bed; and 30000 at the leaſt of the greateſt and moſt potent men of the Religion, ſent by the way of this Red Sea to find the neereſt paſſage to the Land of Canaan, An. 1572. Yet notwithſtanding theſe Maſſacres, and the long and frequent Wars which were made againſt them by their Kings, they grew ſo numerous, and got unto ſo great a power; that partly by Capitulations with the French Kings at the end of every Civil War, but principally by the connivence of K. Henry the fourth, who was ſometimes the Head of their party, they had gotten above three hundred walled Towns and Garriſons; and were abſolute maſters in effect of all thoſe Provinces which lie along the Aquitain ſhoare, and the Pyrenees, from the Mediterranean Sea to the River of Loyre. But being grown too inſolent by reaſon of ſo great a ſtrength, and ſtanding upon terms with the King as a Free Eſtate (the Common-wealth of Rochell, as King Henry the fourth was uſed to call it) they drew upon themſelves the jealouſie and fury of King Lewis the thirteenth. Who ſeeing that he could not otherwiſe diſſolve the knot of their combination, than by the Sword, drew it out at laſt: And was ſo fortunate in the ſucceſs of his Undertakings, that in two years (viz. An. 1621. 1622.) he ſtripped them of all their walled Towns, except Montalban, and Rochel only; and thoſe two he reduced not long after by the power of his Arms: Leaving them nothing to relie on for their future ſecurity, but the grace and clemency of their King, promerited by their obedience and integrity. And it hath ſped ſo well with them ſince that time, that they never had the exerciſe of their Religion with ſo much freedome, as they have hitherto enjoyed, ſince the reducing of their Forts and Garriſons to the Kings obedience.

The other Party in Religion, having the Countenance of the State, and the preſcription and poſſeſſion of ſo many yeers to confirme the ſame, is in as proſperous a condition both for power and patrimony, as any that acknowledgeth the Authority of the Popes of Rome. In point of Patrimony, the Author of the Cabinet computes the Tythes and Temporall Revenues of the Clergy, beſides proviſions of all ſorts, to 80 millions of Crowns; but this Accompt is diſallowed by all knowing men. Bodin reporteth, from the mouth of Monſieur Alemant, one of the Preſidents of Accompts in Paris, that they amount to 12 millions, and 300000 of their Livres, which is 1200000 l. of our Engliſh money; and he himſelf conceiveth that they poſſeſſe ſeven parts of twelve, of the whole revenues of that Kingdome. The Book entituled Comment d' Eſtat gives a lower eſtimate: and reckoning that there are in France 200 millions of Arpens (which is a meaſure ſomewhat bigger than our Acre) aſſigneth 47 millions, which is neer a fourth part of the whole, to the Gallican Clergy. And then it is reſolved by all, That the Baiſemain, (as they call it) which conſiſts of Offerings, Churchings, Burialls, Dirigies, and ſuch like Caſualties, amounteth to as much per annum, as their ſtanding Rents: Upon which ground Sir Edwin Sandys computeth their Revenue at ſix millions yearly. And to ſay truth, there needs a very great Revenue to maintain their numbers; there being reckoned in this Kingdome, 13 Arch-biſhops, 104 Biſhops, 1450 Abbies, 540 Arch-Priories, 12320 Priories, 567 Nunneries, 700 Convents of Friers, 259 Commanderies of Malta; beſides the Colledges of the Jeſuits, which being of a late foundation are not here accompted. And for the Pariſh-Prieſts, they are reckoned at 130000 of all ſorts, taking in Deacons, Sub-deacons, and all thoſe of inferior Orders, which have ſome Miniſtery in their Churches: the number of which was reckoned in the time of King Lewis the 11th. to be little leſſe than 100000. But then 'tis like that Chanteries and Free Chappels went in that Accompt; or elſe the Hugenots in the Wars, have deſtroyed more Churches, than they are like to build again in haſt; there being found in France on a juſt Accompt, no more than 27400 Pariſh Churches, beſides Oratories and Chappels of Eaſe appertaining to them. In which, there are ſuppoſed to live 15 millions of people, whereof the Clergy and the Miniſters depending on them do make up up three millions, which is a fifth part of the whole. And for their power, the Gallican Clergy ſtands more ſtoutly to their naturall rights, againſt the uſurpations and encroachments of the ſee of Rome, than any other that live under the Popes Authority: which they acknowledge ſo far only as is conſiſtent with their own priviledges, and the rights of their Soveraign. For neither did they in long time ſubmit to the Decrees of the Councell of Trent; nor have they they yet admitted of the Inquiſition; nor yeeld ſuch ſtore of Griſt to the Popes Mill, as probably might redound to him from ſo rich a Clergy. And for his Temporall power over Kings and Princes, it is a doctrine ſo averſe from the Poſitions and Principles of the Gallican Church; that in the year 1610. the Divines of Paris publiſhed a Declaration, in which it was affirmed, That the doctrine of the Popes Supremacy was an Erroneous doctrine, and the ground of that helliſh poſition of depoſing and killing Kings. And this indeed hath conſtantly been the Doctrine of the Gallican Church, ſince the time of Gerſon, maintaining the Authority of a Councell above that of the Pope.

But to proceed. The men moſt eminent for learning of either ſide have been (beſides thoſe mentioned in the Alpine Provinces) Peter du Moulin, highly commended for his Eloquence by the pen of Balſac; Fr. Junius, a moderate and grave Divine, Chamier the Controverſer, and Philip de Morney Lord of Pleſſis. Of the other party Claudius Eſpencæus a Sorbon Doctor, the famous Cardinall of Peron, Genebrard the Hiſtorian, Petavius a learned Jeſuite, &c. In the middle times S. Bernard Abbot of Clarevalle, Pet. Lombard Biſhop of Paris, John Gerſon Chancellor of that Univerſity. More antiently Proſper of Aquitain, Caſſianus the Hermit, Irenæus the renowned Biſhop of Lyons (though not here a Native.) And as to men of other Studies, Auſonius the Poet, Hottoman and Gotfredus the Civilians, Duarenus the Canoniſt, Barn. Briſſonius the great Antiquary, Iſaac Caſaubon that renowned Philologer, Budæus that great Maſter of the Greek Language, Thuanus the Hiſtorian, Laurentius the Anatomiſt, &c. And as for Military men, it hath been famous for the valour of Clovis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French, Charles Martell that ſtout Champion of the Church againſt the Saracens; and Charles the great, the Founder of the Weſtern Empire: In the middle times for Godfrey of Bovillon, one of the Nine Worthies (as they call them) the ſonne of Euſtace Earl of Boulogn in Picardy; and in theſe later dayes for King Henry the 4th. Francis and Henry Dukes of Guiſe, Charls Duke of Mayenne, Charles Duke of Biron, &c.

The Laws of this Kingdome are either Temporary, and alterable at pleaſure; or Fundamentall, which neither King nor Parliament (as they ſay) can alter. Of this laſt ſort the principall are the Salique Law, and the Law of Apennages. By that of the Apennage, the younger Sonnes of the King are not to have partage in the Kingdome with their Elder-brother; which Law was made by Charles the Great, before whoſe time we find the Children of the Kings eſtated in their ſeverall Thrones, and the Realm parcelled out among them into many Kingdomes. But by this Law they are to be entituled to ſome Dutchy or County (though they are content ſometimes with Annual penſions) with all the rights and profits thereunto belonging; all matters of Regality (as Levying Taxes, Coynage, and the like) excepted only; which upon the failing of the maſculine line, do return again unto the Crown. The name thereof derived from Abannage, a German word ſignifying a portion.

But the main Law they ſtand on is the Salique Law, by which the Crown of France may not deſcend unto the Females, or fall from the Lance to the Diſtaff, as their ſaying is: Which Law one undertaking to make good out of holy Writ, urged that Text of St. Matthew, where it is ſaid, Mark the Lillies, (which are the Arms of France) and ſee how they neither labour nor Spin. This they pretend to have been made by Pharamond the firſt King of the French, and that the words Si aliqua ſo often uſed in it, gave it the name of the Salique Law. But Haillan one of their beſt Writers affirms, That it was never heard of in France till the time of Philip the Long, An. 1315. and that it could not poſſibly be made by Pharamond, who though he was the firſt King of the French, had not one Foot of Land in France; Clodion the ſonne of Pharamond being the firſt of the French Kings which paſſed over the Rhene; their third King Merovee, the firſt that ever fixt his ſeat in the modern France. Others ſay it was made by Charles the Great, after the Conqueſt of Germany: where the incontinent lives of the Women living about the River Sala (in the modern Miſnia) gave both the occaſion and the name. De terra verò Salica, nulla portio hæreditatis mulieri veniat, ſed ad virilem Sexum tota terræ hæreditas perveniat, are the words thereof. This Terra Salica, the learned Selden in his Titles of Honour, Engliſheth Knights Fee, or Land that is holden by Knights Service, as our Lawyers call it; and proveth this Interpretation by a Record of the Parliament of Bourdeaux cited by Bodinus; where an old Will or Teſtament being once produced, in which the Teſtator had bequeathed unto his Sonne all his Salique Land, it was reſolved by the Court, that thereby was meant his Land holden in Knights Service. And then the ſenſe thereof muſt be, that in Lands holden of the King by Knights Service, or the like Military tenure, the Male Children ſhould inherit only: becauſe the Females could not perform thoſe ſervices for which thoſe Lands were given, and by which they were holden. And for this there may be good reaſon; though in England we deal not ſo unkindly with the Female Sex, but permit them after the Age of 15 years to enjoy ſuch Lands; becauſe they may then take ſuch Husbands as are able to do the King thoſe ſervices, which the Law requireth. But this Interpretation (how good and genuine ſoever indeed it be) cannot ſtand with the French Gloſs. For then the Crown being held of none but God, and ſo not properly to be called a Fee or Feife, could not be brought within the compaſſe of the Salique Law, becauſe not to be counted for Salique Land. Give them therefore their own Gloſs, their own Etymology, and Originall; and let us ſee by what right their Kings Daughters are excluded from their ſucceſſion to the Diadem. For firſt, ſuppoſing that to be the Salique Land which lyeth about the River Sala, in the modern Miſnia: I would fain know how it could reach unto the Kings Daughters in France, ſo far diſtant from it; or with what honeſty they can lay on them the like brand of incontinency, as was ſuppoſed to have been found in thoſe Women of Germany. And next, ſuppoſing that the Law had been made by Pharamond, I would fain learn how it can be applyed to the Crown of France, to which Pharamond had then no title, nor ſo much as one foot of Land on that ſide of the Rhene. And finally, ſuppoſing that the Law was made in ſuch generall terms, as to extend to all the Countreys, which the French in time to come ſhould conquer, and conſequently unto France when once conquered by them: I would then ask, Whether it did extend to the Crown alone, or to all ſubordinate Eſtates which were holden of it. If unto all Eſtates holden of that Crown, I would fain know with what pretence they could give ſentence in behalf of Charles of Blais, againſt John de Montfort, in the ſucceſſion to the Dukedome of Bretagne: Charles of Blais claiming by his Mother, the Neece of Arthur the ſecond, by his ſecond Sonne Guy: Whereas John de Montfort was the third Sonne (and the next Heir-male) of the ſaid Duke Arthur. If only to the Crown of France, it would be known by what right they detain that Dukedome from the true Heirs of Anne the Dutcheſſe: whoſe Daughter and Heir the Lady Claude, being marryed unto Francis the firſt, had iſſue Henry the ſecond, and other Children. Which Henry, beſides Francis the ſecond, Charles the ninth, Henry the third, and Francis Duke of Anjou, all dying without iſſue, had a Daughter named Iſabel or Elizabeth marryed to Philip the ſecond King of Spain, by whom ſhe was made the mother of Iſabella, the late Arch-dutcheſs, and of Katharine the Wife of Charles Emanuel the late Duke of Savoy. Not to ſay any thing of the pretenſions of the houſe of Lorrein, deſcending from the Lady Claude, the ſecond Daughter of King Henry the ſecond, and Siſter of Iſabel, or Elizabeth Queen of Spain. Nor do we find that the French ſo ſtand upon this Law, as not to think that a Succeſſion by and from the Females, is in ſome caſes their beſt Title. For thus we read, That Pepin having thruſt his Maſter Childerick into a Monaſtery, to make good his Title to the Crown (or ſome colour for it) derived his Pedegree from Plythilda, one of the Daughters of Clotaire the firſt, maryed to Anſpert the Grandfather of that Arnulphus, who was the firſt Mayer of the Palace of Pepins Family. As alſo how Hugh Capet, putting aſide Charles of Lorrein the right Heir of this Pepin, to make his lawleſs Action the more ſeemingly lawfull, drew his deſcent from ſome of the Heirs Generall of Charles the Great; his Mother Adeltheid, being the Daughter of the Emperour Henry the firſt, ſurnamed the Fowler; who was the ſonne of Otho Duke of Saxony by Luitgardis the Daughter of the Emperour Arnulph, the laſt Emperour of the Romans (or Germans) of the houſe of Charles. And it is ſaid of Lewis the ninth, ſo renowned for ſanctity amongſt them, that he never enjoyed the Crown with a quiet Conſcience, till it was proved unto him that by his Grandmother, the Lady Iſabel of Hainalt, he was deſcended from Hermingrade the Daughter of Charles of Lorrein. Adde here, that this ſuppoſed Salique Law not only croſſeth the received Laws of all Nations elſe, which admit of Women to the Succeſſion in their Kingdomes, where the Crown deſcends in a Succeſſion: and have a great reſpect both unto their perſons and poſterities in ſuch Kingdomes alſo, where the Kings are ſaid to be Elective, as in Poland, Hungaria, and Bohemia: but that even France it ſelf hath ſubmitted to the Imperious command of two Women of the Medices; and at the preſent, to the Government of a Spaniſh Princeſs. So that it is evident that this Law by whomſoever made, and how far ſoever it extended, is of no ſuch force, but that the Labels of it may be eaſily cut in pieces by an Engliſh ſword well whetted; if there were no other bar to the title of England, than the authority and antiquity of the Salique Law.

But for my part (if it be lawfull for me to diſpute this point) I am not ſatisfied in the right of the Engliſh title; ſuppoſing the Salique Law to be of no ſuch force, as the French pretended; and meaſuring the ſucceſſion in the Crown of France, to be according to ſucceſſions in the Realm of England, on which King Edward the third ſeemed to ground his claim. For if there were no Salique Law to exclude ſucceſſion by the Females, as the Engliſh did pretend there was not: yet could not Edward coming from a Siſter of the 3 laſt Kings, which reigned ſucceſſively before Philip of Valois, againſt whom he claimed, be ſerved in courſe, before the Daughters of thoſe Kings (or the Males at leaſt deſcending of them) had had their turns in the ſucceſſion of that Kingdom. Of the three Brethren, two left iſſue, viz. Lewis, and Philip. Lewis ſurnamed Hutin, Son of Philip the fair, and Joan Queen of Navarre, had a Daughter named Joan, maryed to Philip Earl of Eureux, who was King of Navarre in right of his Wife; from which mariage iſſued all the ſucceeding Kings of that Realm, the rights whereof are now in the houſe of Burbon. Philip, the ſecond Brother, ſurnamed the Long, by Joan the Daughter of Othelin Earl of Burgundy, had a Daughter named Marguerite, maryed to Lewis Earl of Flanders; from whom deſcended thoſe great Princes of the race of Burgundy, the rights whereof are now in the houſe of Spain. If then there were no Salique Law to exclude the Women and their ſons, Charles King of Navarre the ſon of Queen Joan and of Philip de Eureux, deſcended from Lewis Hutin the elder brother; and Lewis de Malaine Earl of Flanders and Burgundy, the ſon of Lewis Earl of Flanders, and of Marguerite the Daughter of Philip the Long the ſecond Brother; muſt have precedency of title before King Edward the third of England deſcended from a Siſter of the ſaid two Kings; their iſſue, ſeverally and reſpectively, before any claiming or deſcending from the ſaid King Edward. So that K. Edward the third had ſome other claim than what is commonly alledged for him in our Engliſh Hiſtories; or elſe he had no claim to that Crown at all: and I conceive ſo wiſe a King, would not have ventured on a buſineſs of ſo great conſequence, without ſome colourable Title; though what this title was is not declared for ought I know, by any Writers of our Nation. I believe therefore that he went upon ſome other grounds, than that of ordinary ſucceſſion by the Law of England, and claimed that Crown, as the eldeſt heir-male and neereſt Kinſman to the laſt King. For being Siſters ſon to the King deceaſed, he was a degree neerer to him than either the King of Navarre, or the Earl of Flanders, who were the Grand-children of his Brethren: and having priority of either in reſpect of age, had a fair Title, before either, to the Crown of that Kingdom. And on theſe grounds King Edward might the rather go, becauſe he found it a ruled caſe, in the diſpute about the ſucceſſion in the Kingdom of Scotland. For though King Edward the firſt meaſuring the order of ſucceſſion by the Laws of England, and perhaps willing to adjudge the Crown to one who ſhould hold it of him; gave ſentence in behalf of John Baliol, the Grand-child of the eldeſt daughter of the Earl of Huntingdon:

yet was this ſentence diſavowed, and proteſted againſt by the other Competitors. Robert Bruce Son of the ſecond Daughter of the ſaid Earl of Huntingdon, as a degree neerer to the laſt King, though deſcended from the younger Siſter, not only thought himſelf wronged in it, but had the whole Scottiſh Nation for him to aſſert his right: by whoſe unanimous conſent his ſon was called to the Government of the Realm of Scotland, during the life of Baliol and his Patron both. Proximity in blood to the King deceaſed, was meaſured by neerneſs of degrees, not deſcent of birth; and on this Plea, though different from the Laws of England, as Bruce had formerly poſſeſſed himſelf of the Crown of Scotland; ſo on the ſame, though different from the Laws of Caſtile, did Philip the ſecond ground his claim to the Crown of Portugal. For being eldeſt ſon of Mary, the Siſter of Henry the laſt King (and this was juſt King Edwards caſe to the Crown of France) he thought himſelf to be preferred before the Prince of Parma, and the Duke of Bragance, deſcended from the Daughters of Edward the ſaid Kings Brother; becauſe the eldeſt Male of the Royal blood, and neerer to the ſaid King Henry by one degree. In the purſuance of which title, as Philip openly avowed, that the Laws of Portugal were more favourable to him than the Laws of Caſtile: ſo in like caſe, the Laws of France might be more favourable to King Edward, than the Lawes of England. In claims to Crowns, the Rules of Regall Succeſſion differ in many Countreys; and in few Countreys are the ſame with that of the Succeſſion into mean Eſtates: as may be proved by many particulars in the Realm of England, in which the Law of the Crown differeth very much from the Law of the Land; as in the Caſe of Parceners, the whole blood, (as our Lawyers call it) the Tenure by courteſie, and ſome others; were this a time and place fit for it. But to return again to France; whether the Salique Law were in force or not, it made not much unto the prejudice of King Edward the third; though it ſerved Philip the Long to exclude the Daughter of King Lewis Hutin; and Charles the fair to do the like with the Daughter of Philip; as it did Philip of Valoys, to diſpoſſeſs the whole Linage of King Philip le Bel.

Machiavel accounteth this Salique Law to be a great happineſs to the French Nation, not ſo much in relation to the unfitneſs of Women to Govern (for therein ſome of them have gone beyond moſt men) but becauſe thereby the Crown of France is not endangered to fall into the hands of ſtrangers. Such men conſider not how great Dominions may by this means be incorporate to the Crown. They remember not how Maud the Empreſs being maryed to Geofry Earl of Anjou, Tourain, and Maine, conveyed thoſe Countreys to the Diadem of England; nor what rich and fertile Provinces were added to Spain, by the Match of the Lady Joan, to Arch-duke Philip: neither do they ſee thoſe great advantages of power and ſtrength which England now enjoyeth by the conjunction of Scotland, proceeding from a like mariage. Yet there is a ſaying in Spain, that as a man ſhould deſire to live in Italy, becauſe of the civility and ingenious natures of the People; and to die in Spain, becauſe there the Catholique Religion is ſo ſincerely profeſſed: ſo he ſhould wiſh to be born in France, becauſe of the nobleneſs of that Nation, which never had any King but of their own Countrey.

The chief enemies to the French have been the Engliſh and Spaniards. The former had here great poſſeſſions, divers times plagued them, and took from them their Kingdome; but being called home by civil diſſenſions, loſt all. At their departure, the French ſcoffingly asked an Engliſh Captain, When they would return: Who feelingly anſwered, When your ſins be greater than ours. The Spaniards began but of late with them, yet have they taken from them Navarre, Naples, and Millain: they diſplanted them in Florida; poyſoned the Dauphin of Viennois (as it was generally conceived;) murdered their Souldiers in cold bloud, being taken priſoners in the Iſles of Tercera; and by their Faction, raiſed even in France it ſelf, drave Henry the third out of Paris, and moſt of his other Cities; and at laſt cauſed him to be murdered by Iaques Clement, a Dominican Frier. The like they intended to his ſucceſſor King Henry the 4th. whoſe coming to the Crown they oppoſed to their utmoſt power, and held a tedious War againſt him. Concerning which laſt War, when they ſided with the Duke of Mayenne, and the reſt of thoſe Rebels, which called themſelves the Holy League (of which the Duke of Guiſe was the Author) againſt the two Kings Henry the third and fourth; a French Gentleman made this excellent alluſion. For being asked the cauſe of theſe civil broils, he replyed they were Spania and Mania; ſeeming by this anſwer to ſignifie Σπανία, penury, and Μανία, fury, which are indeed the cauſes of all inteſtine tumults: but covertly therein implying the King of Spain, and the Duke of Mayenne: ſince which time the French, upon the turn of Fortune, (notwithſtanding the croſs mariages between the Kings of both Kingdoms, and their ſeveral Siſters) have had as great a hand upon the Spaniards; outing them by their plots and practices of the whole Kingdome of Portugal, and the Countrey of Catalogne in the main land of Spain it ſelf, and of many of the beſt parts of Artois, Hainalt, and other of the Belgick Provinces, by the force of Arms. So little conſtancy there is, either in the affairs of Fortune, or the affection of great Princes, that no wiſe man can truſt the one, or depend ſafely on the other. For in the former times, as we read in Cominæus, there were no Princes more friendly than theſe two, the Kings of Caſtile and France being the neereſt confederated Princes in Chriſtendome. For their league was between King and King, Realm and Realm, Subject and Subject; which they were all bound under great curſes to keep inviolable. But of late times, eſpecially ſince the beginning of the Wars between Charles the fifth, and Francis the firſt, for the Dukedome of Millain; there have not been greater animoſities, nor more implacable enmities betwixt any Nations, than betwixt France and Spain. Which ſeconded by the mutuall jealouſies they have of each other, and the diverſity of Conſtellations under which they live: hath produced ſuch diſſimilitude betwixt them in all their wayes, that there is not greater contrariety of temper, carriage and affections, betwixt any two Nations in the World, than is between theſe Neighbours, parted no otherwiſe from one another, than by paſſable Hills. Firſt in the Actions of the Soul, the one Active and Mercurial, the other Speculative and Saturnine; the one ſociable and diſcourſive; the other reſerved and full of thought; the one ſo open, that you cannot hire him to keep a ſecret; the other

ſo cloſe, that all the Rhetorick in the world cannot get it out of him. Next in their Faſhion and Apparel, the French wears his hair long, the Spaniard ſhort; the French goes thin and open to the very ſhirt, as if there were continuall Summer, the Spaniard ſo wrapt up and cloſe, as if all were Winter; the French begins to button downward, and the Spaniard upwards; the laſt alwayes conſtant to his Faſhion, the firſt intent ſo much on nothing as on new Fancies of Apparell. Then for their Gate, the French walk faſt, as if purſued on an Arreſt, the Spaniard ſlowly, as if newly come out of a Quartane Ague; the French go up and down in cluſters, the Spaniards but by two and two at the moſt; the French Lackqueys march in the Rere, and the Spaniſh alwayes in the Van; the French ſings and danceth as he walks the ſtreets, the Spaniards in a grave and ſolemn poſture, as if he were going a Proceſſion. The like might be obſerved of their tune, their ſpeech, and almoſt every paſſage in the life of Man: for which I rather chooſe to refer the Reader to the ingenious James Howel's Book of Inſtructions for Travell, than inſiſt longer on it here. Only I adde, that of the two ſo different humours, that of the Spaniard ſeems to be the more approveable. Inſomuch as the Neopolitans, Millanois, and Sicilians, who have had triall of both Nations, chooſe rather to ſubmit themſelves to the proud and ſevere yoke of the Spaniards, than the luſts and inſolencies of the French, not ſufferable by men of even and well-ballanced ſpirits. And poſſible enough it is, that ſuch of the Netherlands as have of late been wonne to the Crown of France, will find ſo little comfort in the change of their Maſters; as may confirm the reſidue to the Crown of Spain, to which they naturally belong.

The chief Mountains of this Countrey, next to the Pyrenees which part France from Spain; the Jour or Jura, which ſeparates it from Savoy and Switzerland; and the Vauge or Vogeſus, which divides it from Lorrein; are thoſe which Cæſar calleth Gebenna, Ptolemy Cimmeni; being the ſame which ſeparate Auvergne from Languedoc, called therefore the mountains of Auvergne; the only ones of note which are peculiar to this Continent of France, which for the moſt part is plain and champain; the others before mentioned, being common unto this, with the bordering Provinces.

This Countrey is wonderfully ſtored with Rivers, the chief whereof, 1 Sequana or Seine, which ariſing in Burgundy, watering the Cities of Paris and Roane, and receiving into it nine navigable ſtreams, diſburdeneth it ſelf into the Britiſh Ocean. 2 Some, in Latine called Samona, which riſing neer the Town of St. Quintin, firſt cutteth between Picardy and Artoys, afterwards paſſeth through the fair City of Amiens, and the goodly Town of Abbeville, and finally having received eight leſſer ſtreams, loſeth it ſelf into the ſame Sea alſo. 3 Ligeris, or Loyre, on which are ſeated Nantes, and Orleance. It riſeth about the mountains of Auvergne, (being the greateſt in France) and having runne 600 miles, and augmented his channel with the entertainment of 72 leſſer rivulets, mingleth his ſweet waters with the brackiſh Aquitane Ocean. 4 Rhodanus, or the Rhoſne, which ſpringing from the Alpes, three Dutch miles from the head of the Rhene, paſſeth by Lyons and Avignon; and having taken in thirteen leſſer Brooks, falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Arles. 5 The Soaſne, by the old Latins called Araris, which riſing out of the Mountain Vogeſus or Vauge, in the borders of Lorrein and Alſatia, divideth the two Burgundies from each other; and falleth into the Rhoſne at the City of Lyons. 6 Garumna, or the Garond, which iſſuing out of the Pyrenean Mountains, paſſing by Iholouſe and Burdeaux, and having ſwallowed up ſixteen leſſer Rivers (of which the Dordonne is the chief) diſburdeneth it ſelf into the Aquitane Ocean, neer the Town of Blay: that part hereof which is betwixt the main Ocean, and the influx of the River Dordonne, being called the Giarronne. Of theſe it is ſaid proverbially, that the Seine is the richeſt, the Rhoſne the ſwifteſt, the Garond the greateſt, and the Loyre the ſweeteſt. And by theſe and many other Rivers this Kingdome is enriched with 34 excellent Havens, having all the Properties of a good Harbour; that is to ſay, 1 Room, 2 Safety, 3 Eaſineſſe of defence, 4 Reſort of Merchants.

As for ſo much of the ſtory hereof as concerneth the whole, it was firſt peopled, if we may give credit to Annius, (as I think we may not in this point) by Samothes the ſixth Sonne of Japhet (affirmed by them, and ſuch as adhere unto them, to be that ſonne of his, who in the Scripture is called Meſech) in the year of the World 1806. But thoſe which are better converſant in the courſe of Hiſtory, have utterly laid aſide this deviſe of Annius. Even Funccius, though a great Beroſian, doth confeſſe ingenuouſly, Quis hic Samothes fuerit incertum eſt, that it is unreſolved who this Samothes was. And Vignier a French Antiquary doth confeſs with Funccius, Mais un ne ſcay qui il eſtoit, that no body can tell us who he was. They who have better ſtudyed this point than Annius, derive the Gauls from Gomer, Japhets eldeſt ſonne, whoſe off-ſpring were firſt called Gomerians, afterwards Cimmerians, at laſt Cimbri: firſt planted (as before was ſaid) in the Mountainous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Cimmerini long preſerved his memory; and after changing that unfruitfull and unpleaſant dwelling for the Plains of Phrygia, wherein the City Cimmeris did retain ſomewhat of his name, in the times of Pliny. Afterwards his poſterity proceeded further in the leſſer Aſia, and in long tract of time filled Germany, and Gaul, and Britain with his numerous iſſues: the Gauls and Cimbri being clearly of the ſame Originall, though known amongſt the Romans by two different names. From whence they had the names of Gauls, and Celtes, and Galatæ, hath been ſhewn before. It ſhall ſuffice us now to adde, that being originally of the Cimbri, and having ſomewhat in them of the blood of Hercules; they proved a very valiant and warlike Nation, without whoſe love, no King could ſecure himſelf from imminent dangers. They were very ſparing in their diet, and uſed to fine any one that outgrew his girdle. With theſe men the Romans fought at firſt for their own preſervation, rather than out of any hope by the conqueſt of them to improve either their fame or their Dominions. Inſomuch that when they had invaded Italy with a numerous Army, in favour of the Ciſalpine Galls, under the conduct of Aneroeſtus and Congelianus, two of their Kings, and pierced as far as Telamon a City of Tuſcany; the Romans thought they had had done enough in diſcomfiting their Forces, and cleering their own Provinces of them; holding it for a point of Wiſdome to purſue them, or invade their Countrey; though by the conqueſt of Liguria but few years before, they had enlarged their Dominions to the borders of it. But to enumerate more particularly their great Atchievments in the Warres, theſe were they who under the conduct of Belloreſus, paſſing over the Alpes, conquered the neereſt parts of Italy, called afterwards Gallia Ciſalpina; and under that of Segoveſus, over-run all Germany; and following their ſucceſſes as far as Scythia, founded the potent Nation of the Celto-Scythæ. Theſe were the men, whoſe iſſue under the command of Brennus, diſcomfited the Romans, at the River Allia; ſacked the City, and beſieged the Capitoll, An. M. 3577. V. C. 365. In which action they ſo terrified the Romans, that after their expulſion from Rome by Camillus, there was a Law made that the Prieſts, though at all other times exempted from Military employments, ſhould be compelled to the War, if ever the Gauls came again. And finally theſe were the men, who under the command of Belgius and another Brennus, ranſacked Illyricum, Pannonia, Thrace, and Greece, in which they ſpoyled and plundered the Temple of Delphos; for which ſacriledge they were viſited with the Peſtilence. Such as ſurvived this Plague, went into Aſia, and there gave name to that Countrey now called Galatia; of whom thus Du Bartas:

The ancient Gaul in roving every way,
As far as Phœbus darts his Golden Ray;
Seiz'd Italy; the Worlds proud Miſtreſs ſackt,
Which rather Mars than Romulus compact.
Then ſpoyls Piſidia, Myſia doth inthrall;
And mid'ſt of Aſia plants another Gaul.

Yet at laſt the Romans undertook the War, but not till they had conquered almoſt all the reſidue of the (then known) World. Attempted firſt by Fulvius Flaccus, a Roman Conſul, called in by the Maſſilienſes to aſſiſt them againſt the Salii their unquiet Neighbours, A. V. C. 628. that part hereof which afterwards was called Narbonenſis, being brought into the form of a Roman Province at the concluſion of the War againſt the Allobroges, and Arverni (undertaken on the like complaint of the Hedui) about five years after. Not totally ſubdued untill the time of Julius Cæſar, and not eaſily then. For though the War was managed then by the ableſt Captain that ever the State of Rome gave life to; yet was it not more eaſily vanquiſhed, by the valour and fortune of the Romans, than by want of good intelligence and correſpondence among themſelves. Nor did they ſell their liberty ſo good cheap, as thoſe other Nations, with whom the Romans had to deal; Cæſar himſelf affirming, that he had ſlain 1192000 of them, before they would ſubmit to the Roman yoak. But at the laſt they were brought under the power of Rome, by whom the whole Countrey was divided into theſe four parts, viz. 1 Narbonenſis, called ſo from the City of Narbon, then a Roman Colony, containing Languedoc, Provence, Daulphine, and ſome part of Savoy; called alſo Braccata at the firſt conqueſt by the Romans, from the uſual habit of the People (reſembling the Mantles uſed by the wild Iriſh) called in Latine Braccæ: attempted firſt by Fulvius Flaccus, in his War againſt the Salii, as before is ſaid; and finally ſubdued, A. V. C. 633. by Fabius Maximus, and Cn. Domitius Ænobarbus, in their War againſt the Allobroges, and their confederates before mentioned, about 70 years before the coming in of Julius Cæſar. 2 Aquitanica, ſo called from the City of Aquæ Auguſtæ (now D' Acqs, in Guienne) lying upon the Pyrenees, and the wide Ocean; which comprehended the Provinces of Gaſcoyn, Guienne, Xaintoygne, Limoſin, Quercu, Perigort, Berry, Bourbonoys, and Auvergne; extending from the Pyrenees to the River of Loyre, and conſequently ſtretching over all the middle of Gaul. 3 Celtica, ſo named from the valiant Nation of the Celtæ; (called alſo Lugdunenſis, from the City of Lyons; and Comata from the long hair worn amongſt this people) extending from the Loyre to the Britiſh Ocean, and comprehending the Provinces of Bretagne, Normandy, Anjou, Tourin, Main, La Beauſſe, the Iſle of Frante, part of Champagne, the Dukedome of Burgundy, and the County of Lyonnoys. 4 Belgica, from the Belgæ, a potent Nation of that tract, taking up all the Eaſt parts of Gaul, viz. Picardy, the reſt of Champagne, the County of Burgundy, together with ſo much of Germany and the Netherlands, as lyeth on this ſide of the Rhene, belonging now unto the Empire and the Kings of Spain. In the new modelling of the Empire by Conſtantine the Great, Gaul was appointed for the ſeat of one of the four Præfecti Prætorio, deſigned for the four quarters of it. His title Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum; his Government extending over the Dioceſes of Gaul, Spain, and Britain: this Dioceſe of Gaul being caſt into ſeventeen Provinces, that is to ſay, Lugdunenſis Prima, 2 Secunda, 3 Tertia, 4 Quarta, 5 Belgica Prima, 6 Secunda, 7 Germania Prima, 8 Secunda, 9 Narbonenſis Prima, 10 Secunda, 11 Aquitania Prima, 12 Secunda, 13 Novempopulonia, 14 Viennenſis, 15 Maxima Sequanorum, 16 Alpes Graiæ & Pœninæ, 17 Alpes Maritimæ. Of theſe ſeventeen, Germania Prima & Secunda, all Belgica Prima, and a great part of Secunda, all that of the Alpes Graiæ & Pœninæ, and ſo much of Maxima Sequanorum, as lyeth in Switzerland; are now diſmembred from the name and accompt of France. What principall Nations of the Gauls, and what Provinces of the preſent France, the reſt contained; ſhall be declared in our Survey of the particulars.

But long it ſtood not in this ſtate. For within ſixty years after the death of Conſtantine, during the Reigns of Honorius and Theodoſius, the Burgundians, a great and populous Nation, were called in by Stilico, Lievtenant to Honorius the Weſtern Emperour, to keep the borders of the Empire againſt the French; then ready with ſome other of the barbarous Nations to invade the ſame. The Gothes not France. long after by agreement with the ſame Honorius, leaving their hold in Italy, were veſted in Gaul Narbonoys, by the gift of that Emperour; with a good part of Tarraconenſis, one of the Provinces of Spain: Aquitain being after added, in regard of the ſervice they had done the Empire, in driving the Alani out of Spain, then likely to have made a great impreſſion on that Countrey. And in the reign of Valentinian the third, the French who had long hovered on the banks of the Rhene, taking advantage of the diſtractions of the Empire, ventured over the River; firſt made themſelves Maſters of Gaul-Belgick; and after ſpread themſelves over all the reſt of the Provinces which had not been ſubdued by the Gothes, and Burgundians: excepting a ſmall corner of Armorica, then poſſeſſed by the Britans. So that the Romans being outed of all the Countrey, it was divided between the Nations above mentioned, and that with more equality then could be imagined: The Gothes poſſeſſing all Aquitaine, and Narbonenſis, containing now the Provinces of Provence, Languedock, Gaſcoigne, Guienne, Xaintoigne, Poictou, Berry, Limouſin, Perigort, Quercu, and Auvergne; the Burgundians having for their ſhare the Alpine Provinces, together with Nivernois, Bourbon, Beau-Jolais, Forreſt, the Countreys of Lyonois, La Breſſe, Daulphine, and both the Burgundies, from them ſo denominated. The reſt (except that part thereof which we now call Bretagne) was poſſeſſed by the French, who in ſhort time repulſed the Viſigoths or Weſtern Gothes (then buſie in the Conqueſt of Spain) out of all the Provinces of the Roman Aquitain, by the valour of Clovis the Great, their firſt Chriſtian King, before they could challenge a Proſcription of 60 years. Nor was it long before Provence alſo was reſigned to Theodorick the French King, of Mets by Amalaſunta, Q. of the Oſtro-Gothes, or Gothes of Italy, nothing being left unto that Nation of all their Gallick Conqueſts but Languedock only. In which reſpect, the Gothiſh Provinces of Gall (except Provence only) together with ſo much of the Burgundians which was after layd to Weſt France, ſhall paſſe in the accompt of the French part of this Countrey; the reſt of the Burgundian Conqueſts which lie within the bounds of the modern France, (having Provence added to them) ſhall be conſidered by themſelves in the deſcription and affairs of the Kingdome of Burgundy; a diſtinct Realm from that of France, and not reduced but piece-meal, and by ſeverall titles (and yet not wholly ſo neither) to the Crown thereof. Finally, of the French themſelves, and the ſucceſſion of their Kings, we will ſpeak at laſt, when we have brought all the chief parts and Provinces of this flouriſhing Countrey, into their poſſeſſion. The principall Provinces are, 1 France, ſpecially ſo called, 2 Champagne, 3 Picardy, 4 Normandy, 5 Bretagne, 6 The Eſtates of Anjou, with its members, 7 La Beauſſe, 8 Nivernois, 9 The Dukedome of Bourbon, with the Provinces dependent on it, being all (excepting Bretagne) the firſt acqueſts of the French. Then follow the chief Provinces of the Gothiſh Kingdom, that is to ſay, 10 Berry, 11 Poictou, 12 Limoſin, 13 Perigort, and 14 Quercu, 15 Aquitain, with the members of it, and 16 Languedoc: And laſt of all the Burgundian Kingdom, of which there now remain in France, the Counties of 17 Provence, 18 Daulphine, 19 La Breſſe, 20 Lionnois, 21 The Dutchy, and 22 the County of Burgundy, 23 The Iſlands in the Aquitain, and Gallick Ocean, in the cloſe of all. Of ſome of which La Nove, a French Author hath paſſed this cenſure: The men of Berry are Leachers, they of Tourein Theives, they of Languedoc Traytors, they of Provence Atheiſts, they of Rhemes (or Champagne) ſuperſtitious, they of Normandy inſolent, they of Picardy proud, & ſic de cæteris. But here we are to underſtand, that all theſe Provinces (though paſſing by the name and accompt of France) are not under the command of the French King; the Iſles of Jarſey and Guernzey being poſſeſſed by the Engliſh; the Counties of Burgundy, and Charolois by the King of Spain; the Dutchy of Bar, belonging to the Dukes of Lorrein; the Principality of Orange, to the houſe of Naſſaw; and Avignon, to the Popes of Rome. And on the other ſide, the French Kings are poſſeſſed of ſome Towns and Cities, not lying within the bounds of France, as the Imperiall Cities of Mets, Toul, and Verdun; lying within the Dukedome of Lorrein, the Fort and Paſſe of Pignerolle in the Dukedome of Savoy: and the Port of Monaco, in Liguria; Baſe Navarre, in Spain: not to ſay any thing of their late acqueſts in Spain, and Flanders; which I look not on as parts of the French Dominions.

FRANCE, ſpecially ſo called.

THE firſt place which the Franks or French had for their fixt habitation, was by that people honoured with the name of FRANCE; the firſt green turf of Gallick ground, by which they took livery and ſeiſin of all the reſt. A Province now bounded on the Eaſt with Champagne, on the North with Normandy, on the Weſt and South with La Beauſſe. To difference it from the main Continent of France, it is called the Iſle of France; as being circled almoſt round with ſeverall Rivers: that is to ſay, the Oiſe on the North, the Eure on the Weſt, the Velle on the Eaſt, and a vein-riveret of the Sein, towards the South. A Countrey not ſo large as many of the French Provinces, but ſuch as hath given name unto all the reſt; it being the Fate of many ſmall, but puiſſant Provinces, to give their name to others others which are greater then they, if conquered and brought under by them. For thus we see the little Province of Poland, to have mastered and given name to the Mazovii, Pruteni, and other Nations of Sarmatia Europæa; as that of Mosco, to the Provinces of Asiatica. And thus have those of Sweden conquered, and denominated almost all the great Peninsula of Scandia, whereof it is one of the smallest Provinces. And thus this Island being the seat Royall of the French, in Gallia, gave name to all the residue of it, as they made it theirs. A Countrey generally so fruitfull and delectable, (except in Gastinois) that the very Hills thereof are equall to the Vallies in most places of Europe; but the vale of Montmorency (wherein Paris standeth) scarce to be fellowed in the World. An Argument whereof may be, that when the Dukes of Berry, Burgundy, and their Confederates, besieged that City with an Army of 100000 men; neither the Assailants without, nor the Citizens within, found any scarcity of victuals; and yet the Citizens, besides Souldiers, were reckoned at 500000. The Isle of France.

It was formerly part of the Province of Belgica secunda, and Lugdunensis quarta, the chief Inhabitants thereof being the Parisii, the Bellovaci, and the Silvanectes: and is now divided into four parts, that is to say, the Dukedome of Valois, 2 Gastinois, 3 Heurepoix, and that which is properly called the Isle of France, by some the Prevoste, or County of Paris.

1 The Dukedome or County of VALOIS, lyeth towards Picardy, the principall Cities of it, 1 Senlis, (in Latin Silvanectum) a Bishops See. 2 Compeigne (Compendium) seated on the River Oise; a retiring place of the French Kings, for hunting, and other Countrey pleasures. 3 Beauvois, the chief City of the Bellovaci, by Ptolemy called Cæsaromagus, a fair, large, well-traded Town, from which the Countrey round about hath the name of Beauvoisin. The Patrimony in former times of Roger, the third son of Theobald, the second Earl of Blais, and younger Brother of Odon the first Earl of Champagne, who enjoyed it with the Title of Earl of Beauvois: and at his death gave it for ever to the Bishops hereof; for antiently this City was a See Episcopall; the Bishop whereof is one of the twelve Peers of France. Philip one of the Bishops here in times succeeding, a military man, and one that had much damnified the Englisb Borders, was fortunately taken by King Richard the first. The Pope being made acquainted with his Imprisonment, but not the cause of it, wrote in his behalf unto the King, as for an Ecclesiastical person, and one of his beloved Sonnes: The King returned unto the Pope the Armour which the Bishop was taken in, and these words engraven on the same, Vide an hæc sit tunica filii tui, vel non; being the words which Jacobs children spake unto him, when they presented him with the Coat of their brother Joseph: Which the Pope viewing, swore, That it was rather the Coat of a Sonne of Mars, than a Sonne of the Church; and so left him wholly to the Kings pleasure. 4 Clermont, a Town of good note in the County Beauvoisin: memorable for giving the title of Earl of Clermont, to Robert the fifth Sonne of the King St. Lewis, before his marriage with the Daughter and Heir of Bourbon; afterwards to the eldest Sonnes of that Princely Family: and finally to Catharine de Medices, created Countesse of Clermont and Boulogne, at her maryage with Henry Duke of Orleans, Successor to King Francis the first in the Realm of France. 5 Luzarch, a Town belonging to the Count of Soissons. 6 Brenonville. 7 St. Loup, on the Confines of Picardy, so called from a Monastery dedicated to S. Lupus, Bishop of Troys in Champagne, sent into Britain with Germanus to suppress the Pelagian Heresies, which were there beginning. But of this part of France nothing more observable, then that it gave denomination to the Royall Family of the French Kings (13 in number) from hence entituled de Valois: beginning in Philip de Valois, An. 1328. and ending in Henry the third, An. 1589. As for the Earls hereof (from whom that Adjunct or denomination had it's first Originall) the first who had the title of Earle of Valois, was Charles, the second Sonne of Philip the third; in right of his Wife, Earl of Anjou also: After whose death it descended upon Philip de Valois his eldest Sonne, who carryed the Crown of France from our Edward the third. On his assuming of the Crown, it fell to Lewis his second Brother: and he deceasing without issue, An. 1391. to Lewis Duke of Orleans, Sonne of Charles the fifth, amongst the titles of which house it lay dormant, till the expiring of that Line in King Lewis the twelfth; and lately given unto the Monsieur, or Duke of Orleans, Brother to Lewis the 13th, and Unkle to K. Lewis the 14th, now reigning, upon the first reconciliation made betwixt him and his Brother: adding thereby to his Estate no lesse than 10000 pounds sterling of yearly rents, which make up 100000 Franks or Livres in the French accompt. I only adde that Charles the first Earl of this Family, as he was the Son of Philip the third, Brother of Philip the fourth, surnamed the Fair; and Father of Philip de Valois: So was he Unkle to Lewis Hutin, Philip the Long, and Charles the Fair, all in their order Kings of France. In which regard, it was said of him, that he was the Sonne, Brother, Father, and Unkle of Kings, yet no King himself.

2 The second part of this Province is called HEVREPOIX, beginning at the little Bridge of Paris on the River of Sein, and going up along the River, as far as the River of Verine, which divides it from Gastinois. The chief Towns of it are, 1 Charenton, three miles from Paris, where the French Protestants of that City have their Church for Religious exercises; it being not permitted them to hold their Assemblies in any walled Cities, or Garrison Towns, for fear of any suudden surprize, which so great a multitude might easily make. Which Church (or Temple, as they call it) being burnt down by the hot-headed Parisians, on the newes of the Duke of Mayennes death, slain at the siege of Montalban, An. 1622. was presently reedified by the command of the Duke of Mombazon, then Governour of the Isle of France, at the charge of the State: to let those of the Reformed party understand, that it was their disobedience and not their Religion, which caused the King to arm against them. 2 Corbeil, seated on the confluence of Sein, and Essons. 3 Moret, which gives the Title of an Earle to one of the naturall ſonnes of Henry the fourth, begotten on the Daughter and Heir of the former Earl. 4 Melun, by Cæſar called Melodunum, the principal of this Heurepoix, and the ſeat of the Bailif for this Tract. Here is alſo in this part the Royall Palace of Fountain-bel-eau, ſo called from the many fair Springs and Fountains amongſt which it ſtandeth; but otherwiſe ſeated in a ſolitary and woody Countrey, fit for hunting only: and for that cauſe much viſited by the French Kings in their times of leaſure; and beautified with ſo much coſt by King Henry the fourth, that it is abſolutely the ſtatelyeſt and moſt magnificent pile of building in all France.

3 GASTINOYS, the moſt drie and barren part of this Province, but rich enough if compared with other places; lieth between Paris and the Countrey of Orleanoys. The chief places of it are, 1 Eſtampes, in the middle way betwixt Paris and Orleans, on the very edge of it towards La Beauſſe, a fair large Town, having in it five Churches, and one of them a College of Chanoins, with the ruines of an antient Caſtle: which together with the Walls and demoliſhed Fortifications of it, ſhew it to have been of great importance in the former times. Given with the title of an Earl by Charles Duke of Orleans, then Lord hereof, to Richard the third ſonne of John of Montfort, Duke of Bretagne, in mariage with his Siſter the Lady Marguerite; from which mariage iſſued Francis Earl of Eſtampes, the laſt Duke of Bretagne. 2 Montleherry, famous for the battle betwixt King Lewis the eleventh, and Charls Earl of Charolois (after Duke of Burgundy) in which both ſides ran out of the field, and each proclaimed it ſelf the Victor. It ſtandeth in the road betwixt Paris and Eſtampes. And ſo doth 3 Caſtres, of the bigneſſe of an ordinary Market-Town; not to be mentioned in this place, but for a Chamber or Branch of the Court of Parliament, here ſetled by King Henry the 4th, for the uſe and benefit of his Subjects of the Reformed Religion; in Latin called Camera-Caſtrenſis. 4 Nemours upon the River of Loing, the chief of Gaſtinoys in name, but not in beauty, (wherein inferior to Eſtampes) a Town which hath given the title of Duke to many eminent perſons of France. Here is alſo in this part the County of Rotchfort, and the Towns of Milly. 2 Montargis, &c. More there occurreth not worth the noting, in this part of the Countrey, but that being part of the poſſeſſions of Hugh the Great, Conſtable of France, and Earl of Paris: it was given by him together with the Earldome of Anjou, to Geofry ſurnamed Gryſogonelle, a right Noble Warrier, and a great ſtickler in behalf of the houſe of Anjou, then aiming at the Crown it ſelf, which at laſt they carryed. Continued in his line till the time of Fulk the ſecond (the fifth Earl of Anjou of this Family) who gave it back again to King Philip the firſt; that by his help he might poſſeſſe himſelf of the Earldome of Anjou, from his part wherein he was excluded by his elder Brother. Never ſince that diſmembred from the Crown of France, in Fact or Title.

4 But the great glory of this Province, is that which is more properly called the ISLE OF FRANCE, and ſometimes κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the Iſle, cauſed by the Circlings and embracements of the Rivers of Sein and Marn; the abſtract of the whole beauties, and glories of France, which in this rich and pleaſant Valley are ſummed up together.

Chief places in it, S. German, ſeated on the aſcent of an hill, ſeven miles from Paris, down the water: a pretty neat and handſome Town, honoured with one of the faireſt Palaces of the French Kings; which being built (like Windſor) on the top of a fine mountainet on the Rivers ſide, affordeth an excellent proſpect over all the Countrey. The excellent water-works herein, have been deſcribed on occaſion of thoſe of Tivoli, ſo much extolled by the Italians. It was firſt built by Charles the fifth, ſurnamed the Wiſe; beautified by the Engliſh when they were poſſeſſed of this Countrey; but finally re-edified and enlarged by King Henry the fourth, who brought it into that magnificence in which now we ſee it. It took name from S. German Biſhop of Auxerre, companion with S. Lupus before mentioned, in the Britiſh journey againſt Pelagius. 2 Poiſſie upon the ſame River, or rather on the confluence of it, and the Marn which falleth into the Sein; ſituate not far from S. Germans, a Bayliwick belonging to the Provoſt of Paris, and one of his ſeven daughters, as they uſe to call them. 3 Chantilly, the chief ſeat of the Dukes of Montmorency, the antienteſt and moſt noble Family of all Chriſtendome: whoſe Anceſtors were the firſt fruits of the Goſpel in this part of Gaul, and uſed to ſtyle themſelves Les primiers Chriſtiens et plus veilles Barons de la France, i. e. The firſt Chriſtians and moſt antient Barons of France. A Family that hath yeelded unto France, more Admiralls, Conſtables, Marſhalls, and other like Officers of power, than any three in all the Kingdome: now moſt unhappily extinct in the perſon of Henry the laſt Duke, executed by the command of the late Cardinall of Richelieu, for ſiding with the Monſieur (now Duke of Orleans) againſt King Lewis the thirteench, his Brother. The Arms of which illuſtrious and moſt noble Family (for I cannot let it paſſe without this honour) were Or, a Croſs Gules, cantonned with ſixteen Allerions Azure, four in every Canton. What theſe Allerions are we ſhall ſee in Lorrein; take we notice now, that from the great poſſeſſions which this noble Family had in all this tract, it was, and is ſtill called the Vale of Montmorencie. 4 S. Denis, ſome three miles from Paris, ſo called of a Monaſtery built here by Dagobert King of France, about the year 640. in memory of S. Denis, or Dionyſe, the firſt Biſhop of Paris, martyred (on Mont-martyr an hill adjoyning) in the time of Domitian. Some of the French Kings, becauſe it lay ſo neer to Paris, beſtowed a Wall upon the Town, now not defenſible: nor otherwiſe of any conſideration, but for a very fair Abby of Benedictines, and therein the Sepulchres of many of the French Kings and Princes; neither for workmanſhip, nor coſt, able to hold compariſon with thoſe at Weſtminſter. But being their ſepulture of their Kings, the French-men uſe to ſay facetiouſly, that to this place none of their Kings do ever go with a good will. In this Town alſo is the Church of S. Maclou, where the Kings with a Faſt of nine dayes, and other Penances uſe to receive the famous gift of healing the Kings-evil, with nothing but a Touch; a priviledge enjoyed only by thoſe Kings, and the Kings of England. 5 St. Cloud (or the Town of St. Claudus) un-unfortunately memorable for the murder of King Henry the third: who lying here at a ſiege of Paris, from whence he was compelled to flie by the Guiſian Faction, was wretchedly aſſaſinated by Jaques Clement a Monk, employed in that ſervice by the heads of the Holy League. 6 PARIS, the chief City not of this Iſle alone, but of all the Kingdom. By Cæſar, and Ammianus Marcellinus, called Civitas Pariſiorum, from the Pariſians, a Nation of Gaul-Celtick, whoſe chief City it was: by Strabo called Lutetia, Lucotetia by Ptolemy, quaſi in Luto ſita, as ſome conjecture, from the dirtineſs of the ſoyl in which it ſtandeth. A ſoyl ſo dirty (as commonly all rich Countreys are) that though the ſtreets hereof are paved, (which they affirm to be the work of King Philip Auguſtus) yet every little daſh of rain makes them very ſlippery; and worſe than ſo, yeelds an ill ſavour to the noſe. The Proverb is, Il deſtaint comme la fauge de Paris, it ſtaineth like the dirt of Paris: but the Author of the Proverb might have changed the word, and turned it to Il peut, &c. It ſtinks like the dirt of Paris; no ſtink being more offenſive than thoſe ſtreets in Summer. It is in compaſſe about eight miles, of an Orbicular form, pleaſantly ſeated on the diviſions of the Sein: a fair, large, and capacious City, but far ſhort of the brags which the French make of it. It was thought in the time of King Lewis the eleventh to contain 500000 people of all ſorts and Ages; which muſt be the leaſt: the ſame King at the entertainment of the Spaniſh Ambaſſadors, ſhewing 140000 of this City in Arms, all in a Livery of red Caſſocks with white Croſſes. A gallant ſight, though poſſibly the one half of them were not fit for ſervice: The Pariſians being for the moſt part an effeminate people, wanton enough, and apt to mutiny upon all occaſions, but little addicted to the Wars, as appears plainly by their ſuffering K. Henry the 4th. to hold S. Dennis ſo long againſt them, with no conſiderable Garriſon, and by that means to ſhut them up from all relief on that ſide of their City. And yet their multitudes, which ſince the time of that King, muſt needs be very much encreaſed, are the chief ſtrength of the Town; the fortifications being weak and of ill aſſurance: Inſomuch, that when once a Pariſian bragged that their Town was never took by force; an Engliſh man returned this Anſwer, That it was, becauſe on the leaſt diſtreſs it did uſe to capitulate. It is ſeated (as before was ſaid) on the River Sein, which ſerveth it with Boats and Barges (as the Thames Weſtward doth London) the River ebbing and flowing no nigher than Pont del' Arche, 75 miles diſtant from the City.

We may divide it into four parts, the Town, the City, the Univerſity, and the Suburbs. La Ville, or that part of it which is called The Town, is ſituate on the North ſide of the River; the biggeſt, but pooreſt part of the four, inhabited by Artizans and Tradeſmen of the meaner ſort. In this part are the Hoſtell de Ville, or the Guild-hall for the uſe of the Citizens; the Arſenall, or Armory for the uſe of the King; and that magnificent building called the Place Royall, new built and beautified at the charges of King Henry the fourth for Tilts and Turnaments, and ſuch ſolemnities of State. And in this alſo, neer the banks of the River, ſtands the Kings Palace of the L'ouvre, a place of more fame than beauty, and nothing anſwerable to the report which goes commonly it. A building of no elegance or uniformity, nor otherwiſe remarkable but for the vaſt Gallery begun by King Henry the 4th. and the fine Gardens of the Tuilleries adjoyning to it. The City is that part of it which takes up the circumference of a little Iſland, made by the embracements of the Sein; joyned to the other parts on both ſides, by ſeverall Bridges. The Paris or Lutetia of the old Gauls was no more than this: the Town on the one ſide, and the Univerſity on the other, being added ſince. This is the richeſt part, and beſt built of the whole Compoſitum. And herein ſtand the Palace, or Courts of Parliament; the Chappel of the Holy Ghoſt, and the Church of Noſtre-dame, being the Cathedrall; of antient times a Biſhops See, but of late raiſed unto the dignity of a Metropolitan. On the South-ſide of the River lyeth that part which is called the Univerſity, from an Univerſity here founded by Charles the Great, An. 792. at the perſwaſion of Alcuinus an Engliſhman, the Scholar of Venerable Bede, and the firſt Profeſſor of Divinity here. It conſiſteth of 52 Colleges or places for ſtudy, whereof 40 are of little uſe; and in the reſt the Students live at their own charges, as in the Halls at Oxon, or Innes of Court or Chancery at London; there being no endowment laid unto any of them, except the Sorbonne, and the Colledge of Navarre. Which poſſibly may be the reaſon why the Scholars here are generally ſo debauched and inſolent: a ruder rabble than the which are hardly to be found in the Chriſtian World. Senſible of this miſcheif and the cauſe thereof, Francis the firſt, whom the French call the Father of the Muſes; at the perſwaſion of Reuchline and Budæus, thoſe great reſtorers of the Greek and Hebrew Languages, intended to have built a College for 600 Student; and therein to have placed Profeſſors for all Arts and Sciences, endowing it with 50000 Crowns of yeerly Revenue, for their conſtant maintenance. But it went no further than the purpoſe; prevented by the inevitable ſtroak of death from purſuance of it. In bigneſſe this is little inferior to the Town or Ville, and not ſuperior to it for wealth or beauty; few men of any wealth and credit, affecting to inhabit in a place of ſo little Government. The fourth and laſt part is the Suburbs, (or the Faux-bourgs as the French call them) the principall whereof is that of S. Germans (ſo called from an antient Abby of that name:) the beſt part of the whole body of Paris, for large Streets, ſweet Air, choice of the beſt Company, magnificent Houſes, pleaſant Gardens; and finally, for all thoſe contentments which are wanting commonly in the throngs of moſt populous Cities.

Here are alſo in this Iſle the Royal houſe of Madrit, a retiring place of the Kings, built by King Francis the firſt, at his return from his impriſonment in Spain. 2 Ruall, a ſweet Countrey houſe of the late Queen Mothers: And 3 Boys de Vincennes, remarkable for the untimely death of our Henry the 5th. I adde this only and ſo end, That this Iſle hath alwayes followed the fortune of the Crown of France; never diſmembred from the Soveraignty of the ſame, though ſometimes out of the poſſeſſion of the Champagn. French Kings; as when the Engliſh kept it againſt Charles the 7th, and the Leaguers againſt Henry the 4th. A thing which hardly can be ſaid of any other of the Provinces of this flouriſhing Countrey: the French Kings of the race Merovee, and Charles the great, alienating from the Crown many goodly Territories; contented only with a bare and titulary Homage from them. By means whereof, more than three parts of the whole Kingdom was ſhared firſt amongſt the great Princes of the French: which afterwards by inter-marriages, and other titles fell into the hands of ſtrangers; moſt of them enemies of this Crown, and jealous of the Grandour and power thereof. Which kept the French Kings generally very low and poor, till by Arms, Confiſcations, Mariages, and ſuch other means, they reduced all theſe Riverets to their firſt and original Channel; as ſhall be ſhewn in the purſuance of this work.

2. CHAMPAGNE.

CHAMPAGNE is bounded on the North, with Picardie; on the South, with the Dukedom of Burgundie; on the Eaſt, with Lorrein; on the Weſt, with France ſpecially ſo called.

The Countrey for the moſt part very plain and pleaſant (whence it had the name) adorned with ſhady Woods and delectable Meadows, fruitful in Corn, and not deficient in Wines. The Seat in elder times of the Tricaſſes, Catalauni, Rhemi, the Lingones, and Senones, (of which laſt Tribe or Nation were thoſe Ciſalpine Gaules, who ſacked Rome under the conduct of Brennus;) part of them Celts, and part Belgians, and ſo accordingly diſpoſed of: the Belgians into the Province of Belgica ſecunda, the Metropolis whereof was Rhemes; the Celts into Lugdunenſis quarta, of which the Metropolis was Sens; both Cities ſeated in this Countrey. The chief Rivers of it Bloiſe, 2 Marne, 3 Yonne, 4 Sault.

Chief places of that part hereof which belonged to Belgica ſecunda, or the Province of Rhemes, are 1 Chalon on the River Marne, an Epiſcopal See, Suffragan to the Archbiſhop of Rhemes; called anciently Civitas Catalaunorum. 2 Joinville, ſituate on the ſame River, belonging to the houſe of Guiſe; the eldeſt ſon of which Family is called Prince of Joinville: in the Caſtle whereof ſeated upon an high and inacceſſible Hill, is to be ſeen the Tomb of Claude the firſt Duke of Guiſe; the richeſt Monument of that kinde, in all France. The Barony of William Lord Joinville, third ſon of Euſtace Earl of Boulogne, and of Ida his wife, who brought the Dukedom of Bovillon, for her Dower or portion; and brother of Godfrey and Baldwin Dukes of Lorrein and Kings of Hieruſalem. But whether it came to him by the gift of his Mother, as part of the Dukedom of Bovillon, or that he had it by his wife, a daughter of Theobald Earl of Champagne, I am not able to determine. Left by him after his deceaſe to Godfrey his youngeſt ſon (Thierry the eldeſt ſon ſucceeding his Uncle Baldwin in the Dukedom of Lorrein): upon the failer of whoſe line, it fell unto the Dukes of Lorrein as next heirs thereof, and ſo unto the Dukes of Guiſe as deſcended from them. 3 St. Urben, a Town of the Territory of Joinville, from which it is about two leagues diſtance. 4 Pierre-Fort, defended with a Caſtle of ſo great ſtrength, that in the civil Wars of France, Anno 1614. it indured 1100 ſhot of Canon, and yet was not taken. 5 Vaſſey, upon the River Bloiſe, a Town of as ſweet a ſituation as moſt in France. Theſe laſt ſituate in that part of Champagne which is called Vallage: ſo named, as I conceive, from the River Vaſle. 6 Vitrey, upon the confluence of the Sault and Marne, the chief Town and Balliage of that part, which is named Parthois (Ager Pertenſis in the Latine); ſo called of 7 Perte another Town thereof, but now not ſo eminent. 8 Chaumont upon the Marne, the chief Town of Baſſigni; and ſtrengthned with a Caſtle mounted on a craggie Rock. 9 Dedior, or St. Deſier (Fanum Sancti Deſiderii) royally fortified after it had been ruined, Anno 1544. 10 Rhemes (Durocortorum Rhemorum) an Archbiſhops See, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France, ſituate on the River of Vaſle. At this City the Kings of France are moſt commonly crowned, that ſo they may enjoy the Unction of a ſacred Oil, kept in the Cathedral Church hereof, which, as they ſay, came down from Heaven, and never decreaſeth. How true this is may be eaſily ſeen, in that Gregory of Tours, who is ſo prodigal of his Miracles, makes no mention of it: but ſpecially (for Argumentum ab autoritate negativè parum valet) ſince the Legend informeth us that this holy Oil was ſent from Heaven, at the annointing of Clovis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French. Whereas Du. Haillan, one of their moſt judicious Writers, affirmeth Pepin, the Father of Charles the great, to have been their firſt anointed King; and that there was none de la primiere lignee cinct, ny ſacre à Rhemes, ny allieurs, none of the firſt or Merovignian line of Kings, had been anointed at Rhemes or elſewhere. But ſure it is (let it be true or falſe, no matter) that the French do wonderfully reverence this (their ſacred) Oil; and fetch it with great ſolemnity from the Church in which it is kept. For it is brought by the Prior, ſitting on a white ambling Palfrey, and attended by his whole Convent: the Archbiſhop hereof (who by his place is to perform the Ceremonies of the Coronation) and ſuch Biſhops as are preſent, going to the Church-doors, to meet it, and leaving for it with the Prior, ſome competent pawn; and on the other ſide, the King when it is brought unto the Altar, bowing himſelf before it with great humility. But to return unto the Town: it took this name from the Rhemi, once a potent Nation of theſe parts, whoſe chief City it was; and now an Univerſity of no ſmall eſteem: in which among other Colledges there is one appointed for the education of young Engliſh Fugitives. The firſt Seminary for which purpoſe (I note this only by the way) was erected at Doway, Anno 1568. A ſecond at Rome, by Pope Gregory the thirteenth. A third at Valladolid in Spain, by K. Philip the ſecond; A fourth in Lovaine, a Town of Brabant; and a fifth, here (ſo much do they affect the gaining of the Engliſh to the Romiſh Church) by the Dukes of Guiſe. 11 Ligni, upon the River Sault.

In that part of it which belonged to Lugdunenſis quarta, or the Province of Sens, the places of chief note note are, 1 Sens, Civitas Senonum in Antoninus, anciently the Metropolis of that Province, by consequence the See of an Archbishop also. The Countrey hereabouts called Le Pais Senonois, was part of the habitation of the ancient Senones, some of which passing over the Alpes with other nations of the Galls, planted those parts which afterwards were for long time called Gallia Cisalpina. Of which the Senones were the most valiant, though far less in numbers: as those which had not only the honour of sacking Rome, but of managing an offensive War against that State for the space of 100 years and upwards. What afterwards became of them hath been shewn already, when we were in Lombardie. 2 Langres, or Civitas Lingonum, (by Ptolemy, called Audomaturum) situate in the confines of Burgundy, not far from the fountain or spring-head of the Seine: the See of a Bishop, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France. 3 Troys, Civitas Tricassium, seated on the Seine, a fair, strong, and well traded City, honoured with the title of the Daughter of Paris; a See Episcopal, and counted the chief of Champagne, next Rhemes. A City of great note in our French, and English Histories, for the meeting of Charles the sixth, and Henry the fifth, Kings of France, and England; in which it was agreed, That the said King Henry espousing Catharine Daughter of that King, should be proclaimed Heir apparent of the Kingdom of France; into which he should succeed on the said Kings death, and be the Regent of the Realm for the time of his life: with divers other Articles, best suiting with the will and honour of the Conqueror. 4 Province (by Cæsar called Agendicum) seated upon the Seine, in a pleasant Countrey, abounding in all fragrant flowers; but especially with the sweetest Roses, which being transplanted into other Countreys are called Province Roses. 5 Meaux, seated on the River Marne, anciently the chief City of the Meldi, whom Pliny and others of the old Writers mention in this tract: now honoured with a Bishops See, and neighboured by 6 Monceaux, beautified with a magnificent Palace built by Catharine de Medices, Queen Mother of the three last Kings of the house of Valois. 7 Montereau, a strong Town on the confluence of the Seine and the Yonne. 8 Chasteau-Thierri, (Castrum Theodorici, as the Latins call it) situate on the River Marne. These five last situate in that part of Champagne, which lieth next to France specially so called, known of long time by the name of Brie: which being the first or chief possession of the Earls of Champagne, occasioned them to be sometimes called Earls of Brie, and sometimes Earls of Brie and Champagne. Add here, 9 Auxerre, in former time a City of the Dukedom of Burgundy, but now part of Champagne, of which more hereafter. And 10 Fontenay, a small Town in Auxerrois in the very borders of this Province; memorable for the great battel fought near unto it, Anno 841. between the sons and Nephews of Ludovicus Pius, for their Fathers Kingdoms. In which so many thousands were slain on both sides, that the forces of the French Empire were extremely weakned; and had been utterly destroyed in pursuit of this unnatural War, if the Princes of the Empire had not mediated a peace between them; alotting unto each some part of that vast estate, dismembred by that means into the Kingdoms of Italie, France, Germany, Lorrein, and Burgundy; never since brought into one hand, as they were before.

Champagne

Adjoyning unto Champagne also where it looks towards Lorrein, lies the Countrey and Dutchy of BAR; belonging to the Dukes of Lorrein, but held by them in chief of the Kings of France. The Countrey commonly called BARROIS, environed for the most part with the two streams of the River Marne; of which the one rising in the edge of Burgundy, and the other in the Borders of Lorrein, do meet together at Chalons a City of Champagne. Places of most importance in it, 1 Bar le Duc, so called to distinguish it from Bar on the River Seine, and Bar upon the River Albi; a well fortified Town. 2 La Motte. 3 Ligni. 4 Arqu, of which nothing memorable, but that they are the chief of this little Dukedom. Of what Antiquity this Dukedom is, and by whom first founded and made an absolute Estate, I am yet to seek, though probable it is that it might take its first rise (as many other petit Signeuries did) out of the ruin and dismembring of the Kingdom of Lorrein; or otherwise might be erected by the Earls Palatines of Champagne, out of some part of that Estate. But whether it were so or not, certain it is, that it came first to the present house of Lorrein, by the gift of Rene Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Naples, Sicil, &c. who succeeded in it in the right of Yoland or Violant his Mother, Daughter of Don John the first King of Aragon and of Yoland or Violant the Heir of Bar: and dying gave the same, together with the Towns of Lambesque and Orgon, to Rene Duke of Lorrein his Nephew, by the Lady Violant his Daughter. From this Rene, it was taken by Lewis the eleventh, who having put a Garrison into Bar, repaired the Wals, and caused the Arms of France to be set on the Gates thereof. Restored again by Charles the eighth, at his going to the Conquest of Naples: to buy him out by that means (if I guesse aright) of his pretensions to that Kingdom, which were fair and specious; since which time quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Lorrein, til the year 1633. when seized on by Lewis the thirteenth, upon a Judgement and Arrest of the Court of Parliament in Paris, in regard the present Duke had not done his Homage to the King, as he ought to have done.

The Arms hereof are Azure, two Barbels back to back, Or; Seme of Crosse Crossets Fitche, of the second.

But to return again to Champagne, it pleased Hugh Capet at his coming to the Crown of France, to give the same to Eudes or Odon, Earl of Blais, (whose Daughter he had married in his private fortunes, before he had attained the Kingdom) with all the rights and priviledges of a County Palatine. Which Eudes, or Odon, was the Son of Theobald Earl of Blais, and Nephew of that Gerlon, a noble Dane, to whom Charles the Simple gave the Town and Earldom of Blais, about the year 920. and not long after the time, that he conferred the Countrey of Neustria upon Rollo the Norman, whose Kinsman and assistant this Gerlon was in harassing and wasting the coasts of France. In the person of Theobald the third, the Earls hereof became Kings of Navarre, descended on him in right of the Lady Blanch his Mother, Sister and Heir of King Sancho the eighth. Anno 1234. By the Marriage of Joan Queen of Navarre, and Countess of Champagne, to Philip the fourth of France, surnamed the Fair, both these Estates were added to

Picardie. the Crown of France: enjoyed by him and his three Sons one after another, though not without ſome prejudice to the Lady Joan, Daughter and Heir of Lewis Hutin. But the three Brethren being dead, and Philip of Valois ſucceeding in the Crown of France, he reſtored the Kingdom of Navarre to the ſaid Lady Joan: and for the County of Champagne (which lay too near the City of Paris to be truſted in a forein hand) he gave unto her and her poſterity, as in the way of exchange, ſome certain Towns and Lands in other places; though not of equal value to ſo rich a Patrimony.

Count Palatines of Champagne.

999	1	Odo, Earl of Champagne, Brie, Blais, and Toureine, Son of Theobald the elder, Earl of Blais.
1032	2	Stephen, Earl of Champagne, and Blais, Father of Stephen Earl of Blais, and King of England.
1101	3	Theobald, eldeſt Son of Stephen.
1151	4	Henry, Son of Theobald, a great adventurer in the Wars of the Holy Land.
1181	5	Henry II. an Aſſociate of the Kings of France, and England in the Holy Wars; King of Hieruſalem, in right of Iſabel his Wife.
1196	6	Theobald II. Brother of Henry, added unto his houſe the hopes of the Kingdom of Navarre, by his Mariage with the Lady Blanche, ſiſter and Heir of Sancho the 8th.
1201	7	Theobald III. Earl of Champagne, Son of Theobald the 2d, and the Lady Blanche, ſucceeded in the Realm of Navarre, Anno 1234.
1269	8	Theobald IV. Son of Theobald the 3d, King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne and Brie.
1271	9	Henry IV. Son of Theobald the 4th, King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne, &c.
1284	10	Philip IV. King of France, in right of Joan his Wife King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.
1313	11	Lewis Hutin, Son of Philip, King of France and Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.
1315	12	Philip the Long, Brother of Lewis Hutin, King of France and Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.
1320	13	Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip King of France and Navarre, and the laſt Earl of Champagne; united after his deceaſe by Philip de Valois to the Crown of France: the Earldom of March, near Angoleſme, being given for it in exchange to the Lady Joan, Daughter of King Lewis Hutin, and Queen of Navarre; maried to Philip Earl of Eureux, in her right honoured with that Crown, from whom deſcend the Kings of France and Navarre of the Houſe of Bourbon.

The Arms of theſe Palatines of Champagne, were Argent, two Bends cotized, potencee and counter-potencee of three pieces, Or.

3. PICARDIE.

PICARDIE hath on the Eaſt, the Dukedoms of Luxemburg, and Lorrein; on the Weſt, ſome part of Normandie, and the Engliſh Ocean; on the North, the Counties of Artois, and Hainalt; and on the South, Champagne, and France ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called. A Countrey ſo well ſtored with Corn, that it is accounted the Granarie or Store-houſe of Paris; but the few Wines which it produceth are but harſh, and of no good reliſh, eſpecially in the Northern and colder parts of it.

The ancient Inhabitants of it were the Sueſſiones, Ambiani and Veromandui, conſiderable Nations of the Belgæ; and therefore reckoned into the Province of Belgica ſecunda: but why they had the name of Picards, I am yet to ſeek. Omitting therefore the conjectures of other men, ſome of the which are groundleſs, and the reſt ridiculous; I only ſay, as Robert Biſhop of Auranches hath affirmed before me, Quos itaq; ætas noſtra Picardos appellat, verè Belgæ dicendi ſunt, qui poſtmodum in Picardorun nomen tranſmigrarunt.

The whole Countrey as it lieth from Calais to the Borders of Lorrein, is divided into the Higher and the Lower: the Lower ſubdivided into Sainterre, Ponthieu, Boulognois, and Guiſnes; the Higher into the Vidamate of Amiens, Veromandois, Rethelois, and Tieraſche; in every of which there are ſome places of importance and conſideration.

In LOWER PICARDIE and the County of GUISNES, the chief Towns, 1 Calais, by Cæſar called Portus Iccius (as the adjoyning Promontorie, Promontorium Itium, by Ptolemie) a ſtrong Town cloſe upon Artois, at the entrance of the Engliſh Channel: taken by Edward the third after the ſiege of 11 moneths, Anno 1347. and loſt again by Queen Mary in leſs than a fortnight, Anno 1557. So that had Monſieur de Cordes then lived, he had had his wiſh; who uſed to ſay, that he would be content to lie ſeven years in Hell, on condition that Calais were taken from the Engliſh. The loſs of which Town was a great blow to our Eſtate, for till that time we had the Keyes of France at our Girdles: and as great a grief unto Q. Mary, who ſickning preſently upon it, ſaid to thoſe which attended her, that if ſhe were opened, they ſhould finde Calais next her heart. 2 Hamme, a ſtrong piece, one of the beſt Out-works of Calais. 3 Fiennes, on the borders toward Artois, which with the Countrey joyning to it made an ancient Barony; the Patrimony in times part of the Earls of S. Paul, by whom given to Theobald the younger Brother of Lewis Earl of S. Paul and Conſtable of France, (of whom more hereafter) and from that family conveyed to the houſe of Egmond by the mariage of Francis heir hereof to John Earl of Egmond, who died in the year 1528. and was the Father of that Earl, who after was beheaded by the Duke of Alva, Alva. Anno 1568. 4 Ardres, more towards the Borders of Boulognois, memorable for the interview of Henry the eighth, and Francis the first; and many meetings of the Engliſh and French Commiſſioners. 5 Guiſnes, which gives name to this Diviſion, called the County of Guiſnes, (of which the Land of Oye whereon Calice ſtood (by the French called commonly Pais de Calais) was eſteemed a part.) The Earldom anciently of the illuſtrious houſe of Craie, of which more anon. Picardie.

2. In BOULOGNOIS, neighbouring on the Countrey of Guiſnes, the places of moſt note, 1 Blackneſs, a ſtrong Fort on the Sea ſide, betwixt Calice and Boulogne. 2 Chaſtillon, oppoſite to Boulogne on the other ſide of the water. 3 Bonllenberg, more within the Land, an Out-work to Boulogne. 4 Boulogne, by Plinie called Portus Geſſoriacus, part of the Countrey of the Morini, ſpoken of by Cæſar; divided into the Baſe or Low Town lying on the ſhore ſide, well built, and much frequented by Paſſengers, going to, or coming out of England; and the High Town, ſtanding on the riſe of an Hill, well garriſoned for defence of the Port beneath it, and honoured with a Biſhops See, tranſlated hither from Tourney when that City was taken by the Engliſh. The Town and Countrey taken by King Henry the eighth, with infinite expence of treaſure, Anno 1544. but yeelded not long after by K. Edward the ſixth: the French redeeming it at leſs then a fourth part of the money, which the gaining of it had coſt the Crown of England. As for the fortunes of this Countrey, it was once an Earldom of it ſelf, during which time it gave one King unto Hieruſalem, and another to England. The firſt Earl of it which we meet with, was that Euſtace, who by his mariage with Ida, the daughter of Geofrie or Godfrey the ſecond, Duke of Lorrein, added the Dutchy of Bouillon in Gaul-Belgick to his Earldom of Boulogne. To him ſucceeded in both theſe Titles and eſtates, Godfrey, ſurnamed of Bovillon his eldeſt ſon: who after the death of Godfrey the third his Couſen-german attained unto the Dukedom of Lorrein, and finally was the firſt and moſt renowned King of the Weſtern Chriſtians reigning in Hieruſalem. Godfrey being dead, Euſtace the youngeſt of his Brethren became Earl of Boulogne: whoſe daughter Maud brought this eſtate and title to Steven of Blais, who afterwards was King of England. Euſtace the only ſon of Steven dying without iſſue, the rights hereof remained in his ſiſter Mary, the Abbeſſe of Ramſey, married to Matthew Brother of Philip of Elſats Earl of Flanders. And though Matthew was commanded by the Pope to reſtore her again unto the Abbey out of which he had taken her; yet he kept this Countrey for her children. Conveyed by Ida the eldeſt daughter of this bed to Reginald of Chaſtris her third husband; by Maud his daughter to Philip ſecond ſon of Philip Auguſtus K. of France, by another Maud (he dying without iſſue) to Alfonſo of Portugal, who ſucceeding after in that Kingdom, ſent her back to Boulogne: and finally by Joan daughter and heir of William, this Alfonſus Grandchilde to Philip Earl of Artois, the ſon of Eudes Duke and Earl of Burgundie; to whom ſhe brought Philip their only ſon, ſucceſſor to his Grandfather in the ſaid Eſtates, and to his Mother in this Earldom. But he deceaſing without iſſue, Anno 1361. and Joan not leaving any children by King John of France, whom ſhe maried after the death of her firſt Husband, it fell by ſome other of the Heirs General to the De la Tours of Auvergn (the Anceſtors of the now Dukes of Bovillon) continuing in that family till the year 1477. when bought by Lewis the 11th of France of Bertrand de la Tour, the better to aſſure his Kingdom on that ſide againſt the Engliſh then poſſeſſed of the Countrey of Guiſnes. The purchaſe being made, Lewis the now Proprietar, did Homage for it to the Virgin Mary, in the chief Church thereof called Noſtre Dame, bareheaded, on his knees, without ſpurs or girdle: and offered to her Image a maſſie Heart of gold of 2000 ounces; capitulating that from thenceforth he and his Succeſſors would hold that Earldom of her only, in perpetual Homage; and at the change of every Vaſſal preſent her with a golden heart of the ſame weight. Since which time never aliened from the Crown of France; nor giving title unto any but to Catharine de Medices wife of Henry the 2d, created Counteſs of Boulogne and Clermont, when firſt maried to him, he being then Duke of Orleans only.

The Armes hereof under the ancient Earls of Boulogne were Or, a Banner Gules, tuffed Purple: thoſe of De la Tour, being a Tower embattelled Sable; but the colour of the Field I do no where finde.

3. PONTHEIU, ſo called from the Bridges, built for conveniency of paſſage over the mooriſh Flats thereof, belonged formerly to the Engliſh; To whom it came by the Mariage of Eleanor, Daughter of Ferdinand of Caſtile, by Joan the daughter and heir of Simon the laſt Earl hereof, to King Edward the firſt. Towns of moſt note in it, 1 Abbeville, ſeated on the Some, well fortified, and as ſtrongly garriſoned, as a Frontier Town upon Artois: on one ſide unaſſaultable by reaſon of a deep and mooriſh Fen, which comes up cloſe to it; beautified with a fair Abbey, whence it had the name (Abbatis Villa in the Latin) and the See of a Biſhop. 2 Monſtreuille, a well fortified Town, in the way betwixt Abbeville and Boulogne, and a ſtrong out-work unto Paris. 3 Crecie, where King Edward the 3d defeated the great Army of Philip de Valois, in the firſt onſets for that Kingdom, Anno 1343. And 4 Treport, a ſmall Haven on the Eaſt of S. Valeries. Some place the Earldom of S. Paul in this Countrey of Ponthieu; others more rightly in Artois, where we mean to meet with it. The Armes hereof were Or, three Bends Azure.

4. And as for the SAINTERRE, which is the fourth part of the Lower Picardie, the chief Towns of it are 1 Peronne, upon the River Some, where Lewis the 11th, the greateſt Maſter of State-craft for the times he lived in, put himſelf moſt improvidently into the hands of Charles of Burgundie, who as improvidently diſmiſſed him. 2 Roy, and 3 Mont didier, (Mons Deſiderii in Latin) both of them ſtrong Towns upon the Frontier; but otherwiſe of little fame in former Stories.

In the Higher Picardie being that part of this Countrey which lieth furtheſt from the Sea, the firſt diviſion which occurreth, is the Vidamate of AMIENS, ſo called of the fair City of Amiens, and the Vidame or chief Governor of it. Which honour as it is peculiar to the French only; ſo Milles in his Edition of Glovers Catalogue of Honour, will have but four at all in France, viz. this of Amiens, Chalons, Gerber y, Picardie. beroy, and that of Chartroy. But certainly in France there are many more of them; as at Rhemes, Mans, &c. and formerly as many as it had Bishops; the Vice-dominus or Vice-dame, being to the Bishop in his Temporals, as the Chancellor in his Spirituals; or as the Vice-comites (Viscounts) were anciently to the Provincial Earls in their Courts of Judicature; or to give you an example nearer home and of more resemblance, these French Vidames were unto their several and respective Bishops, as the Temporal Chancellor (in this Realm) of the Bishoprick of Durham, or the High Steward of the Bishoprick of Ely, to those several Bishops.

Places of most note herein, 1 Corbie, a Town of great importance and strongly Garrisoned, situate on the Frontier towards the Netherlands; 2 Chaune, on the same Frontier also, but of less consideration, the Honorary seat and title of the present Vidame; 3 Piquigni, situate on a pretty ascent of ground overlooking the Some, on the left hand of the River, betwixt Amiens and Abberville, the ordinay seat of the former Vidames; more famous for the enterview of Edward the 4th of England, and Lewis the 12th, than for giving the name of Picardie to all the Province; which Mercator only of all Writers, doth ascribe unto it. 4 Crouy, an obscure village now, but formerly of special note for a goodly Castle, commanding over the adjoyning Territory, and giving name to the illustrious Family, hence surnamed of Crouy, descended from the Kings of Hungarie, and the Progenitors of the Dukes of Arschoh and Princes of Chimay in the Netherlands; before their translating to which Countreys by the Dukes of Burgundie, they were entituled Earls of Guisnes. 5 Amiens it self, seated upon the Some above Piquigni, the River being there divided into many Streams for the use and service of the Town; well built, with very strong wals and deep ditches: the loss whereof, when taken by Archduke Albert, much hazarded the affairs and reputation of King Henry the 4th; and therefore when he had regained it, he added to the former Works an impregnable Citadel. But the chief glory of this City is in the Cathedral, the faireſt and most lovely structure in the West of Europe: so beautified within, and adorned without, that all the excellencies of Cost and Architecture, seem to be met together in the composition. The Fronts of our Cathedrals of Wells and Peterburgh, the rich Glass in the Quire at Canterbury, the costly Imagery, and arched Buttresses in the Chappel at Westminster (before the late defacements of those Cathedrals) might serve as helps to set forth the full beauties of it. The Town and Territories, anciently under the command of the Bishops of it, whose Officers for the Temporal government hereof called Vice-domini or Vidames, were at first eligible by the Bishops, and accomptable to them, but by degrees engrossing all power unto themselves, they became Hereditary, and gave the name of the Vidamate of Amiens to this part of Picardie. The present Vidame of it is the Duke of Chaune, who being one of the younger Brothers of Monsieur de Luyne (chief favourite to King Lewis the 13th) obtained in mariage the daughter and heir of the former Vidames, with whom he had the Town and Castle of Piquigni, the chief command of these parts, and a rent of 9000 l. per annum; honoured thereupon by the power and favours of his Brother with the title of the Duke of Chaune and Peer of France, Anno 1620. or thereabouts.

II. But not to dwell on this place too long, pass we on next to VEROMANDOIS, the ancient habitation of the Veromandui: the faireſt and largest part of both Picardies; and not a whit inferiour to the best of France, in the number of neat and populous Cities.

The principal Towns hereof are, 1 Scissons, called anciently Augusta Suessionum, the chief City of the Suessones or Suessiones: and the last Hold which the Romans had in all Gaul; lost by Siagrius, Governor for the Western Emperor, to Clovis the fifth King of the French. In the division of his Kingdome, made the Seat Royal of Clotair the son of this Clovis; and of Aripert, and Chilperick, the sons of Clotair, from hence entituled Kings of Scissons; their Kingdom containing the whole Province of Belgica secunda, or the Provinces of Artois, Picardie and Champagne, as we call them now. But Scissons having long since lost the honour of a Regal Seat, hath of late times been made the honourarie Title of the Counts of Scissons, a branch of the royal stock of Bourbon; a Bishops See, and situate on the River of Aisne. 2 Laon, a Bishops See also, the Bishop whereof is one of the Twelve Peers of France, and Earl of Laon; the Town in Latine, Laodunum. 3 Noyon, in Latine, Noviodunum, an Episcopal See also. 4 Chapelle, a strong piece, one of the best outworks of Paris against the Netherlands. 5 D' Ourlans, 6 La Fere and Han, places of great strength also, but more near the Frontiers. And 7 S. Quintin, anciently the chief City of the Veromandui, then called Augusta Veromanduorum: called afterwards S. Quintin, from that Saint here worshipped, as the Patron and Deus tutelaris of it. A place of great importance for the Realm of France; and so esteemed in the opinion of the Earl of Charolois, (after Duke of Burgundie) and King Lewis the 11th: the first of which never digested the restoring of it to that King, being pawned unto his Father (together with Corbie, Amiens, and Abbeville) for no less then 400000 Crowns; the later never would forgive the Earl of S. Paul for detaining it from him, though under colour of his service. A Town of greater note in succeeding times, for the famous battel of S. Quintins, Anno 1557. wherein King Philip the second of Spain, with the help of the English, under command of the Earl of Pembroke; overthrew the whole Forces of the French, made themselves Masters of the Town, and thereby grew so formidable to the French King, that the Duke of Guise was in post haste sent for out of Italie, (where his affairs began to prosper) to look unto the safety of France it self. As for the fortunes of this part, it was once an Earldom of it self, and an Earldom of as great Antiquity as the most in France; it being by one Heribert or Hebert Earl of Veromandois, who in pursuance of the quarrel of the house of Anjou surprised Charles the Simple, and carried him prisoner to Peronnes, where he after died; for which deservedly hanged by Lewis surnamed Transmarine the son of Charles, when he became possessed of his Fathers Kingdom; by the daughter and heir of another Hebert, conveyed in mariage unto Hugh surnamed the Great, one of the younger sons of King Henry the first of France, succeeding in her right into the title and Eſtate of Earl of Vermandois, and by that name renowned in the firſt wars for the Holy Land. By Elizabeth the Neece of this Hugh, the daughter of Rodolphus his eldeſt ſon maried to Philip of Elſatz Earl of Flanders, it was added unto that Eſtate; but ſhortly after given by the ſame Philip (having no children of his own) in Dower with Iſabel his Neece, daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainalt, unto Philip Auguſtus King of France, and ſince united to that Crown; not giving ſince that time the title of Earle or Duke to any, for ought I can finde. Normandy.

III. More towards Hainalt and Lorrein lieth the Countrey of RETHELOIS, ſo called of Rethel the chief Town: well fortified as the reſt of the Frontier places; but of moſt note amongſt the French, in that the eldeſt ſons of the Dukes of Nevers, have uſually been entituled Earls and Dukes of Rethel; united to that Family by the mariage of Lewis of Flanders, Earl of Nevers, with the daughter and heir of James Earl of Rethel, Anno 1312, or thereabouts. 2 St. Monhaud, a Town of conſequence and ſtrength. 3 Sygni, a ſtrong piece belonging to the Marqueſs of Vieu-ville. 4 Chaſteau-Portian, of more beauty but of like importance. The Armes of the Earls and Dukes of Rethel were Gules, three Rakes-heads indented Or.

IV. Finally in the Dutchy of TIERASCHE, the laſt part of the higher Picardie, we have the Town of Guiſe, of ſome note for the Caſtle, but of more for the Lords thereof, of the Ducal Family of Lorrein (on the borders whereof it ſtandeth) from hence entituled Dukes of Guiſe. A Family which within a little compaſs of time produced two Cardinals, the one entituled of Guiſe, the other of Lorrein; ſix Dukes, that is to ſay, the Dukes of Guiſe, Mayenne, Aumal, Elbeuf, Aguillon, and Cheureuſe; the Earl of Samarive; and beſides many daughters maried into the beſt houſes in France, one maried to James the 5th King of the Scots. The firſt, and he that gave the riſe unto all the reſt of this potent Family, was Claud, ſon to Rene the ſecond, Duke of Lorrein, and husband to Antoniette Daughter to the Duke of Vendoſme; in reſpect of which alliance, he was honoured with this title. The Father (amongſt other children) of Mary Q. of Scots, Wife of James the fifth, and Grandmother of James the ſixth, the firſt Monarch of Britain. The ſecond was Francis, who endangered the Realm of Naples, reſiſted the ſiege of the Emperor Charles at Mets, drove him out of Provence, took Calice from Q. Mary, and was at laſt treacherouſly ſlain at the ſiege of Orleans, by one of the Hugonots named Poltrot, (on the inſtigation of ſome of the chiefs of that faction) Anno 1563. The third was Henry that great enemy of the Proteſtants, who contrived the great Maſſacre at Paris, and almoſt diſpoſſeſſed Henry the third, of all France; He began the holy league, and was finally ſlain at Blois, by the command of King Henry the third. But we muſt know that this Town did anciently belong to the Dukes of Lorrein: and had given the title of Earl of Guiſe to Frederick the ſecond ſon of John, and Charles the third ſon of Rene, both the firſt of thoſe names; before Claud of Lorrein was advanced to the title of Duke: as being part of the Eſtate and Patrimony of the Barons of Join-ville, of whom we ſpake before when we were in Champagne. Of moſt note next to Guiſe it ſelf, is 2 Ripemont on the South of Guiſe. 3 Chaſtelet upon the border towards Luxembourg, a ſtrong Town and one of the beſt outworks of France. 4 Mazuers, upon the Maes or Meuſe, a place of great ſtrength and like importance; belonging properly to the Dukes of Nevers (as chief Lords thereof) in right of their deſcent from the houſe of Rethel: fortified with a ſtrong Citadell for defence of the place, and that Citadel well garriſoned by the French King, for defence of this border: layed to the Government of Champagne though a Town of Picardie, and therefore made by ſome to belong to that Province alſo.

As for the ſtate of this whole Province, I do not finde that it was ever paſſed over by the French Kings unto any one hand: as almoſt all the reſt of France had been at ſome time or other, but diſtracted into divers Seigneuries and ſeveral Lordſhips (all of them abſolute in themſelves, and ſcarce affording to the French King the ſlight tribute of Homage) the particulars whereof we have ſeen before: ſome of which fell to the Crown of France by confiſcations, ſome by lawful mariages, and others by conqueſt; ſome held of England, ſome of the Earls of Artois, and others of Flanders, and laſtly of the Dukes of Burgundie, as Lords of thoſe Provinces: thoſe which depend upon England, being ſeized on by Charles the 7th, on the loſs of Normandy by the Engliſh; as thoſe which held of Burgundy, were by Lewis his ſon, immediately on the death of Duke Charles, at the battel of Nancie, Anno 1476.

NORMANDIE is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Some and part of Picardie; on the Weſt, with Bretagne, and ſome part of the Ocean; on the North, with the Engliſh Channel, by which divided from England; and on the South, with France ſpecially ſo called, and the County of Main. It made up the whole Province of Lugdunenſis ſecunda, in the time of the Romans; the Metropolis whereof was Roven: and in the greatneſs of the French Empire had the name of Neuſtria, corruptly ſo called for Weſtria; the name of Weſtria or Weſtenrich, being given by ſome to this part of the Realm of Weſt-France, as that of Auſtria or Oſtenrich to a part of Eaſt-France. Afterwards being beſtowed upon the Normans by Charles the Simple, it was called Normandie.

In this Countrey is the little Seigneury of IVIDOT, heretofore ſaid to be a free and abſolute Kingdome; advanced to that high dignity by Clotaire, the ſeventh King of the French. Who having abuſed the wife of one Gautier de Ividot (ſo called becauſe of his dwelling here) and afterward (to prevent revenge) killed the man himſelf; to make ſome ſatisfaction to his Family for ſo great an injury, erected the Lordſhip of Ividot to the eſtate of a Kingdom; and gave unto the heirs of this Gautier (or Walter) Normandy. ter) all the prerogative of a free and absolute Monarch; as to make Lawes, coyn money, and the like. From hence the French call a man that hath but small demains to maintain a great title, a Roy d' Ividot. At last, but at what time I know not, it fell again to a Lordship, and belongeth now to the house of Bellay, in Bretagne.

But to proceed from the poor Kingdom of Ividot, to the rich Dukedom of Normandie, for largeness of Extent, multitudes of People, number and statelines of Cities, fertility of Soyl, and the commodiousnes of the Seas, it may worthily be accompted the chief Province of France. Well watered with the River Seine which runneth quite through it; as do also 2 the Orne, and 3 the Aven: not to say any thing of 4 Robee, 5 Ante, and 6 Reinelle, and many others of less note. In length it reacheth 170 miles, and about 60 in breadth, where it is narrowest: containing in that round the largest and fairest Corn-fields that are to be seen in all France. Of all other naturall commodities it is extreme plentiful, excepting Wines; which the Northern coldnes of the Climate admits not of, or sparingly at the best, and of no perfection. The people of it formerly renowned for feats of Arms, the Conquerors of England, Naples, Sicil, and the Kingdom of Antioch in the East: at this time thought to be of a more sharp and subtil wit, than the rest of the French; Scavans au possible en proceces & plaideries (saith Ortelius of them) especially in the quillets and quirks of Law.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower, the Lower containing the Sea coasts, and the Higher, the more Inland parts. Principal Cities of the whole, 1 Constance, a Bishops See, the Spire or Steeple of whose Cathedral, is easily discernible afar off, both by Sea and Land; and serveth Saylers for a Landmark. From hence the Countrey hereabouts hath the name of Constantin. 2 Auranches, situate on a rock with a fair prospect over the English Channel, but more near to Bretagn, than the other; the chief City of the Abrincantes, called Ingena by Ptolemy; now a Bishops See. 3 Caen, (Cadomum in Latin) an Episcopal See, as the other; Strong, populous, and well built, seated upon the River Orne, second in reputation of the the whole Province: but more especially famous, for the Sepulchre of William the Conqueror, the University founded here by King Henry the 5th, and for the long resistance which it made against him, in his Conquest of Normandie. 4 Baieux (the Civitas Baiocassium of Antoninus) from whence the Countrey round about hath the name of Belsin. Memorable of a long time for a See Episcopal. One of the Bishops whereof, called Odo, Brother unto William the Conquerour, by the Mothers side, was by him created Earl of Kent; and afterwards on some just displeasure committed prisoner. For which, when quarrelled by the Pope, (the Clergie being then exempted from the Secular Powers) he returned this answer, that he had committed the Earl of Kent, not the Bishop of Bayeux: By which distinction he avoided the Popes displeasure. 5 Roven, of old Rothomagum, pleasantly seated on the Seine, and watered with the two little Riverets of Robee, and Reinelle, which keep it very sweet and clean. The City for the most part well built, of large circuit, and great trading; the second for bigness, wealth, and beauty in all France: anciently the Metropolis of this Province, and an Archbishops See; and honoured of late times with a Court of Parliament, erected here by Lewis the twelfth, Anno 1501. In the Cathedral Church hereof (a Reverend but no beautiful fabrick) is to be seen the Sepulchre of John Duke of Bedford, and Regent of France for King Henry the sixth: which when an envious Courtier perswaded Charles the eighth to deface; God forbid (saith he) that I should wrong him, being dead, whom living all the power of France was not able to withstand; adding withall, that he deserved a better Monument than the English had bestowed upon him. And to say truth, the Tomb is but mean and poor, short of the merits of the man, and carrying no proportion to so great a vertue. 6 Falaise, upon the River Ante, once of strength and note; the dwelling place of Arlette, a Skinners Daughter, and the Mother of William the Conquerour: whom Duke Robert, passing through the Town took such notice of (as he beheld her in a dance amongst other Damosels) that he sent for her to accompany him that night in bed, and begot on her William the Bastard, Duke of Normandy, and King of England. Her immodesty that night said to be so great, that either in regard thereof, or in spite to her Son, the English called all Strumpets by the name of Harlots; the word continuing to this day. 7 Verneville (Vernolium in Latin) in former times accompted one of the Bulwarks of Normandie, against the French. Of which it is reported, that when news was brought to Richard the first, that Philip surnamed Augustus, the French King had laid siege unto it, he should say these words; I will never turn my back till I have confronted those cowardly French men. For performance of which Princely word, he caused a passage to be broken through the Palace of Westminster; and came so unexpected upon his Enemies, that they raised their siege, and hastned homewards. 8 Alanson, of most note for giving the title of Earl, and Duke, to many Princes of the Royal Family of Valois; beginning in Charles de Valois, the Father of Philip de Valois, French King, and continuing for eight successions till the death of Charles the fourth Duke of this line: conferred occasionally after that, on many of the younger Princes of the Royal Family. 9 Lysieux, on the North-east of Alanson, a Bishops See, the chief Town of the Lexovii; as 10 Caux, of the Caletes, both placed by Cæsar in these parts. 11 Eureux, an Episcopal See also, by Ptolemie called Mediolanium, the chief City anciently of the Eburones, and still a rich and flourishing Town: the third in estimation of all this Province, and made an Earldom in the person of Lewis a younger son of Philip the third; whose son called Philip by his marriage with Joan daughter of Lewis Hutin, attained unto the Crown of Navarre. But this Town with many fair Estates in this Countrey which depended on it, being seised on by the French in the time of Charles the son of this Philip, for some practises against that Kingdom; there was after given to Charles the third and last King of this house in compensation for the same, Anno 1406. the title of Duke of Nemours, with a good sum of ready money, and a pension of 1200 l. sterling yearly, issuing out of the Revenues of Brie, and Champagne. 12 Grisors, a strong Frontire Town towards France, whilest Normandie was in the hands of the Engliſh, or under its own Dukes and Princes; notable for the many repulſes given unto the French; And 13 Pontoyſe, another Frontire upon France, ſo called of the Bridge on the River of Oyſe (which divides France from Normandie) on which the Town is ſituate, and by which well fortified on that ſide; but taken at the ſecond coming of Charles the 7th, after an ignominious flight hence, upon the noiſe only of the coming of the Duke of York, commander at that time of the Province, and the Engliſh Forces. 14 Albemarl, contractedly Aumerl, moſt memorable for giving the title of Earl to the Noble Family De Fortibus, Lords of Holderneſs in England; and of Duke, to Edward Earl of Rutland, after Duke of York. More towards the Sea 15 S. Valeries, ſeated on a ſmall but ſecure Bay, betwixt Dieppe and New-Haven. 16. Dieppe, at the mouth of a little River ſo named, opening into a large and capacious Bay; a Town of Trade, eſpecially for the Newfound-Land: remarkable for its fidelity to Henry the 4th in the midſt of his troubles; When the Confederates of the Guiſian faction called the Holy League, had outed him of almoſt all the reſt of his Cities, compelled him to betake himſelf hither, (from whence he might more eaſily hoiſe Sail for England) and called him in deriſion the King of Dieppe. 17 New-Haven, the Port Town to Roven and Paris, ſituate at the mouth of the River Seine, from hence by great Ships navigable as far as Roven; by leſſer unto Pont de l' Arch, 70 miles from Paris: the Bridge of Roven formerly broken down by the Engliſh, to ſecure the Town, lying unrepaired to this day by means of the Pariſians, for the better trading of their City. By the French it is called Havre de grace, and Franciſcopolis by the Latines; repaired and fortified (the better to confront the Engliſh) by King Francis the firſt, and from thence ſo named. Delivered by the Prince of Conde and his faction into the hands of Q. Elizabeth of England, as a Town of caution, for the landing of ſuch forces as ſhe was to ſend to their relief, in the firſt civil War of France about Religion: and by the help of the ſame faction taken from her again, as ſoon as their differences were compounded. By means whereof, the Hugonots were not only weakned for the preſent, but made uncapable of any ſuccours out of England for the time to come: and the next year were again warred on by their King, with more heat than formerly. 18 Harflew, and 19 Honflew, both ſituate on the banks of the Seine, but of little notice at the preſent, becauſe not capable of any great ſhipping, nor uſeful in the way of Trade by reaſon of the interpoſition of New-Haven, betwixt them and the Sea; the former famous notwithſtanding in our Engliſh Stories, as the firſt Town which that victorious Prince K. Henry the fifth attempted and took in, in France. 20 Churburg (the Latines call it Cæſaris Burgum) on the Sea ſide alſo, the laſt Town which the Engliſh held in the Dukedom of Normandie: belonging properly and naturally to the Earls of Eureux, advanced unto the Crown of Navarre; till aliened by Charles the third of Navarre, on the compoſition before mentioned; but being garriſoned by the Engliſh for K. Henry the ſixth, it held out a ſiege of ſeven moneths againſt the forces of France. Here are alſo in this Dukedom, the Towns of 21 Tankerville, and 22 Ewe, which have given the title of Earls, to the Noble Families of the Greyes, and Bourchiers in England: as alſo thoſe of 23 Harcourt, 25 Longueville, and 25 Aumal, which have given the title of Duke and Earl, to ſome of the beſt Houſes in France. Normandy.

There belonged alſo to this Dukedom, but rather as ſubject to the Dukes of Normandie than part of Normandie it ſelf, the County of PERCH; ſituate betwixt it & the Province of La Beauſſe, of which now reckoned for a part: and was divided into the higher, and the lower. The chief Towns of it, 1 Nogent le Rotrou, of which little memorable, but that it is the principal of Perch Govet, or the lower Perch, and that it took that adjunct from Rotrou the ſecond Earl of this County, the Founder or repairer of it; to difference it from another of that name, called Nogent le Roy, a Town of Champagne. 2 Mortaigne, or Moriton, of moſt note in the higher Perch, eſpecially for giving the title of an Earl, to John, the youngeſt Son of K. Henry the ſecond, after King of England; as in the times ſucceeding to the Lord Edmund Beaufort, after Duke of Somerſet. The whole firſt made a diſtinct eſtate, in the perſon of Arnulph of Heſdin the firſt Earl hereof. Whoſe ſon and ſucceſſor named Rotrou (of great note in the wars of Spain againſt the Moors in behalf of Alfonſo King of Navarre and Aragon, Anno 1110) by Maud the natural daughter of Henry the firſt of England, unfortunately drowned with her Brother William as they croſſed the Seas, had one only daughter named Magdalen, (or as ſome ſay Margarite) the wife of Garcias the ſeventh King of Navarre, and Mother of K. Sancho ſurnamed the Wiſe, from whom all the Kings of Navarre have ſince deſcended. But this Family being extinct in a ſhort time after, the Eſtate fell unto the Engliſh as Dukes of Normandie, and ſo continued till the ſeizure of Normandie by the French in the time of K. John. After which time the title of Earl of Perch was given to Charles Earl of Valois and Alanſon, Father of Philip de Valois, French King, of Lewis Earl of Amou, and of Charles de Valois Earl of Alanſon; in which houſe of Alanſon it continued, and was commonly the title of the eldeſt Sons of the Dukes thereof.

But to return again to the Countrey of Normandie, the ancient Inhabitants thereof were the Caletes, Eburones, Lexovii, Abrimantes, ſpoken of before; the Bellocaſſi, or Venelocaſſi, about Roven; the Salares and Baiocenſes about Sees and Baieux: all conquered firſt by the powerful Romans, the Romans after by the French, and the French by the Normans. Theſe laſt a people of the North, inhabiting thoſe Countreys which now make up the Kingdoms of Denmark, Sweithland, and Norwey: united in the name of Normans, in regard of their Northernly ſituation; as in our Hiſtory and deſcription of thoſe Kingdoms we ſhall ſhew more fully. Out of thoſe parts they made their firſt irruptions about the year 700. when they ſo ranſacked and plagued the maritime Towns of France and Belgium, that it was inſerted in the Letany, From Plague, Peſtilence, and the fury of the Normans, good Lord &c. To quit theſe people, and to ſecure himſelf, Charles the Simple, gave them a part of Neuſtria (from them ſince called Normannia) or Normandie, together with the Soveraignty of Bretagne, enjoyed by them and their poſterity for many ages. Their firſt Duke was Rollo, Anno 912. from whom in a direct line, the ſixth was Normandie William the Baſtard, Conqueror, and King of England, Anno 1067. After this, Normandie continued Engliſh till the daies of King John: when Philip Auguſtus ſeized on all his Eſtates in France, as forfeitures, Anno 1202. The Engliſh then poſſeſſing the Dukedoms of Normandie and Aquitaine; the Earldoms of Anjou, Tourreine, Maine, Poictou, and Limoſin; being in all a far greater and better portion of the Countrey, than the Kings of France themſelves poſſeſſed. The Engliſh after this recovered this Dukedom by the valour of King Henry the fifth, and having held it 30 years, loſt it again in the unfortunate Reign of King Henry the ſixth: the Engliſh then diſtracted with domeſtick factions. After which double Conqueſt of it from the Crown of England, the French diſtruſting the affections of the Normans, and finding them withall a ſtubborn and untractable people, have miſerably oppreſſed them with tolls and taxes, keeping them alwaies poor and in low condition: inſomuch as it may be ſaid of the generality of them, that they are the moſt beggerly people that ever had the luck to live in ſo rich a Countrey. But it is time to look on

The Dukes of Normandie.

912	1	Rollo of Norwey, made the firſt Duke of Normandie, by Charles the Simple; by whoſe perſwaſion baptized, and called Robert.
917	2	William ſurnamed Longeſpee, from the length of his Sword.
942	3	Richard the Son of Longeſpee.
980	4	Richard the II. Son of the former.
1026	5	Richard the III. Son of Richard the ſecond.
1028	6	Robert the Brother of Richard the third.
1035	7	William the baſe Son of Robert, ſubdued the Realm of England; from thence called the Conqueror.
1093	8	Robert II. eldeſt Son of William the Conqueror, put by the Kingdome of England by his two Brothers, William and Henry, in hope whereof he had refuſed the Crown of Hieruſalem, then newly conquered by the forces of the Chriſtian Princes of the Weſt. Outed at laſt, impriſoned and deprived of ſight by his Brother Henry; he lived a miſerable life in the Caſtle of Cardiffe, and lieth buried in the Cathedral Church of Gloceſter.
1102	9	Henry the firſt King of England.
1135	10	Stephen King of England, and D. of Normandie.
	11	Henry Plantagenet D. of Normandie, and after King of England, of that name the ſecond.
1161	12	Henry the III. ſurnamed Court-mantle, Son of Henry the ſecond, made D. of Normandie by his Father.
1189	13	Richard IV. ſurnamed Coeur de Lyon, King of England and D. of Normandie, Son of Henry the ſecond.
1199	14	John the Brother of Richard, King of England, and D. of Normandie, outed of his eſtates in France by King Philip Auguſtus, Anno 1202. before whom he was accuſed of the murther of his Nephew Arthur, found dead in the ditches of the Caſtle of Rowen, where he was impriſoned; but ſentenced cauſa inaudita, for his not appearing. After this Normandy ſtill remained united to the Crown of France (the title only being born by John de Valois, afterwards King, and Charles the 5th (during the life time of his Father) till the Conqueſt of it by the valour of K. Henry the 5th, Anno 1420. which was 218 years after it had been ſeized on by King Philip Auguſtus; and having been holden by the Engliſh but 30 years, was loſt again Anno 1450 in the unfortunate reign of King Henry the 6th. Never ſince that diſmembred from the Crown of France; ſaving that Lewis the 11th, the better to content the confederate Princes, conferred it in Appennage on his Brother Charles Duke of Berry, Ann. 1465. but within two Moneths after took it from him again, and gave him in exchange for it the Dukedom of Guyenne, which lay further off from his Aſſociates.

What the Revenues of this Dukedom were in former times, I can hardly ſay. That they were very fair and great, appears by that which is affirmed by Philip de Comines; who ſaith, that he had ſeen raiſed in Normandie, 95000 l. ſterling money, which was a vaſt ſum of money in thoſe times. As alſo by this teſtimony of the D. of Burgundie, who held King Lewis the 11th to be weakned a whole third part in his eſtate, by giving Normandie in portion to the D. of Berry. Now they amount unto as much, as the Kings Treaſurers and Tollmaſters are pleaſed to draw out of it.

The Armes of Normandie were Gules, two Leopards Or, which with the ſingle Leopard, or Lyon, being added for the Dutchy of Aquitain, make the Armes of England.

BRETAGNE is bounded on the Eaſt with Normandie, and the County of Maine; on the South with Anjou, and Poictou; on all other parts with the Engliſh, or Gallick Ocean. Watered upon the South ſide with the Loir, which divides it from Anjou; but ſo as part of this Dukedom, called the County of Raiz, lieth on the South ſide of that River, betwixt it and Poictou.

It was firſt called Armorica from its ſituation on the Sea, as the word importeth in the old Language of that People. But how it came by this new name, is not well agreed on. The general opinion is, that it took this name from the neighbouring Britans, brought over hither by the Tyrant Maximus, rebelling againſt the Emperor Gratian, Anno 385. by whom this Province was ſubdued, and from them named Britannia Minor, Little Britain. An Argument whereof may be, that the Language of this people hath ſtill no ſmall affinity with the Welch or Britiſh; there being a tradition alſo, that the Britans who firſt came over hither and maried the Women of this Countrey, cut out their tongues for fear they ſhould corrupt the Language of their poſterity. And to this Conqueſt by the Britans, theſe old Verſes give ſome further countenance, Bretagne.

Vicit Aremoricas animoſa Britannia Gentes;
Et dedit impoſito, nomina priſca, jugo.

That is to ſay,

Gaul-Armorick, the Britans overcame,
And to the conquered Province gave their name.

Notwithſtanding, the moſt probable opinion ſeemeth to be, that it took this name from the Britanni, an old Gallick People, mentioned by Plinie in Gaul-Belgick; retiring hither on the invaſions and incurſions of the barbarous Nations: though poſſibly thoſe Britanni of Gallia-Belgica might be as well ſome Colony of the Iſland-Britans, as the Belgæ a great Nation in the Iſle of Britain, are ſaid to have been a People of Gallia-Belgica. The reaſon is, becauſe there was no Author before Geofry of Monmouth who takes notice of this tranſporting of the Inſular-Britans by the Tyrant Maximus; no ancient Author Greek or Latin making mention of it. And for the Welch or Britiſh words which are ſtill remaining in the language, they are conceived to be no other than a remainder of the old Gallick tongue; which was originally the ſame with the antient Britiſh, as is elſewhere proved.

The Province is in compaſs 200 French Leagues: Pleaſant and fruitful, beautified with many ſhady Woods, and ſpacious Downs; ſufficiently well ſtored with all manner of grain, but deſtitute of Wine and the choicer fruits, by reaſon of the Northerly ſituation of it. Divided commonly into Hault or High Bretagne, and Baſſe or Low Bretagne: the firſt containing the more Eaſtern, and the laſt the Weſtern parts hereof. Neither of the two much furniſhed with navigable or notable Rivers; the defect of which, the neighbourhood of the Sea ſupplieth, affording more capacious Havens, and convenient Ports, than any one Province in this Kingdom.

To begin therefore with the Havens, thoſe of moſt note in the Higher Bretagne, are 1 S. Malo, built on a Rock within the Sea, wherewith at every high-water it is incompaſſed. A Biſhops See, and a Port very much frequented by the French, and Spaniſh, who uſe here to barter their Commodities; oftentimes ſpoyled by the Engliſh, in their Wars with France, eſpecially ſince the time of King Henry the ſeventh. 2 Blavet, a ſafe but little Haven, on the mouth of a little River of the ſame name alſo. Impregnably fortified by the Spaniard, Anno 1590. when taking opportunity of the broile in France, and pretending a good title to this Dukedom, on the expiring of the male iſſue of King Henry the ſecond, he thought by this door to have entred on the whole Eſtate, but quitted it again on the general peace made between the Crowns. 3 S. Brieu, (by the Latins called Fanum Sancti Brioci) a Biſhops See, and a well-traded Port, ſeated upon the Engliſh Channel. 4 Vannes, a Biſhops See alſo, ſituate on a capacious Bay, at the mouth of the Vilain; the chief Town of the Veneti, whom Cæſar placeth in this tract, and makes them to be the mightieſt People of all the Armoricans, ſtrongeſt in ſhipping, and beſt ſeen in Affairs at Sea. 5. Croiſſie, a little Haven at the mouth of the Loir, and the only Haven of this part on the Gallick Ocean. Then in Low Bretagne, or the more Weſtern parts hereof, there is 6 Breſt, ſeated upon a ſpacious Bay of the Weſtern Ocean; the Key and Bulwark of this Countrey, and the goodlieſt Harbour of all France. 7 Morlais, a convenient Port, and well frequented. 8 S. Pol de Leon, and 9 Triguier, both Biſhops Sees, both ſituate on the Sea-ſhore, and both the chief Towns of the Oſſiſmi, whom Ptolemy and Strabo place upon this Coaſt: the firſt of them neighboured by the Promontory which they call Le Four, the Govæum of Ptolemy. 10 Kemper Corentin, a Biſhops See alſo, the chief Town of that part hereof which is called Cournovaille (and called ſo for the ſame reaſon as Cornwall in England is) ſituate not far from the Foreland which they call Penmarch, oppoſite to Le Four ſpoken of before. A Sea Town this, but not much talked of for the Haven, for ought I can finde. 11 Conquet, a well-frequented Road, not far from Breſt.

Chief places in the Midlands, 1 Nantes, the principal City of the Nannetes, by Ptolemy called Condivincinum) a large, fair, ſtrong, and populous City, ſeated upon the Loir; a Biſhops See, and the Metropolis of Bretagne. 2 Renes, anciently the chief Town of the Rhedones (called Condate by Ptolemy) now a Biſhops See, and the Parliament City for this County, eſtabliſhed here Anno 1553. which maketh it very populous, and of great Reſort, though not fully two miles in compaſs. 3 Dol, an Epiſcopal City alſo, but unwholſomly ſeated amongſt Mariſhes. 4 Dinan, a rich and pleaſant Town on the River Rance. 5 L' Amballe, the chief Town of the Ambiliates, ſpoken of by Cæſar. 6 Rohan, the title and inheritance of the Dukes of Rohan, deſcended from a branch of the Ducal Family of Bretagne, by Mary the ſecond Daughter of Duke Francis the firſt, and Wife of John then Viſcount of Rohan. 7 Anſenis, the chief Seat of the now Duke of Vendoſme, and the head of his Eſtates in Bretagne. Of which poſſeſſed in the right of his Wife, the Daughter of the Duke of Mercoeur by the Heir of Martignes, another of the branches of this Ducal Family. 8 Chaſteau-Briant, a ſtrong piece on the borders of Normandie. 9 Cliſſon, the chief Town of the Dutchy of Raiz, being that part of Bretagne which lieth on the South-ſide of the Loir; a ſtrong Town, and fortified with a very good Caſtle.

Bretagne. The Britans, whosoever they were in their first Original, were questionless one of the first Nations that possessed any part of Gaul, after the Conquest of the Romans. Governed at first by their own Kings, the most considerable of which was that Aldroenus or Auldran, the Son of Solomon; who at the sute of the Insular Britans, then distressed by the Scots and Picts, as (Geofrey of Monmouth telleth the story) sent over Constantine his Brother with a complete Army to their aid; who having valiantly repulsed the Enemy, was made King of Britain, Anno 433. Of whose posterity more there. Those of Armorica being broken by the puissance of Charles the Great, abandoned the name of Kings, and satisfied themselves with the title of Earls; assumed first by Alain le Rebre, Anno 874. but as some say, Anno 859. which was somewhat sooner. By Peter of Dreux, the sixteenth Earl, challenging his Estate in right of Alice his Wife, the half Sister of Arthur, and Daughter of Constance, by Guy of Thouars her third Husband, the better to secure his title, this Earldom was made subject to the Vassallage of the Crown of France, in the time of Lewis the ninth; by whom John called the Red, the Son of this Peter, was created the first Duke of Bretagne; as being of the Bloud Royal of France, descended lineally from Robert the first Earl of Dreux, one of the younger Sons of King Lewis the Grosse. Yet notwithstanding this subjection to the Kings of France, the Dukes hereof reserved unto themselves the Soveraign powers; as to write themselves, By the Grace of God, the priviledge of coyning Gold, &c. and stood so high upon their termes, that Francis the last Duke, denyed to do his Homage to Charles the seventh, either upon his Knees, or without his Sword, according to the former custome. For which bring quarrelled by Lewis the eleventh, the Son of Charles, who was at better leisure to pursue the business than his Father was, he joyned himself with Charles Duke of Berry, and Charles Duke of Burgundie in a War against him; and thereby drew upon himself that ruine, which he endevoured to avoid. For in conclusion, Charles of Berry, as it was thought, was poysoned; Charles of Burgundie lost his life at the Battel of Nancie, 1476. and a great part of his Estate was conquered by the French King. And Francis this Duke having embarked himself in the same troublous Ocean, must needs suffer shipwrack with his Copartners. The French King invadeth Bretagne; The Duke overcharged with melancholy, dies, 1488. leaving Anne, his Daughter and Heir, in the power of Charles the eighth, the Son and Successor of that Lewis: who contracts a mariage with the Orphan, and uniteth Bretagne to France. There were many impediments which might have hindred this mariage, but Charles breaketh through them all. First, Charles himself had been formerly contracted to the Archduke Maximilians Daughter; but this he held void, because the young Lady was not of age, at the time of the Contract. 2 Anne the Dutchess was also contracted to Maximilian; and this he held unvalid also, because that being his Homager, she could not bestow her self without his consent. 3 Maximilian had by proxie maried her, which mariage he consummated by a Ceremony in those daies unusual. For his Ambassador attended with a great Train of Lords and Ladies, bared his Leg unto the Knee, and put the same within the Sheets of the Dutchess, taking possession thereby of her Bed and Body. But Charles consulting with his Divines, was told, That this pretended Consummation was rather an invention of Court, than any way firm by the Lawes of the Church, and therefore of no power to hinder his pursute of this mariage, so advantagious to his Crown. What else remains touching the union of this Dukedom to the Realm of France, we shall see anon: having first looked over the Succession of those Princes, who under several Titles have governed the Estate thereof; according the best light we can get from Story.

385 1 Conan placed her by Maximus.
2 Grallon, Son of Conar.
3 Solomon, Son of Grallon.
4 Auldran, or Aldroenus, the Son of Solomon.
5 Bodis, Son of Auldran.
6 Hoel, Son of Bodis.
7 Hoel II. Son of Hoel the first.
8 Alain, Son of Hoel the second.
9 Hoel III. Son of Alain.
10 Solomon II. Son of Hoel the third.
11 Alain II. Grandchild to Solomon the second, the last King of Bretagne, of the race of Conan: who dying without Issue, left his Kingdom unto many Competitors, by whom distracted into many petit Tyrannies, and at last subdued by Charles the Great. And though they did again recover their Liberty and Kingdom, in the time of Ludovicus Pius, who next succeeded; yet they did not hold it long in quiet. Insomuch, as after the murther of two or three Usurpers of the royal title, Alain, surnamed Le Rebre, laid aside that invidious name of King, and would be called only Earl of Bretagne. His Successors follow.

Earls and Dukes of Bretagne.

874 1 Alain le Rebre.
2 Indicael and Colodock Sons of Alain.
3 Mathrudon, Son in Law of Alain le Rebre.
4 Alain II. Son of Mathrudon.
5 Conan, descended from King Solomon the third.
6 Geofry, Son of Conan.
7 Alain III. Son of Geofry.
8 Conan II. Son of Alain.
9 Hoel, Sisters Son of Conan the second.
10 Alain IV. called Fergent, Son of Hoel.
11 Conan III. Son of Alain.
12 Eudon, Husband of Bertha, Daughter of Conan.
1131 13 Conan IV. Son of Eudon.
1172 14 Geofry II. Son of Henry the third, King of England, Husband of Constance, Daughter and Heir of Conan the fourth.

1186 15 Arthur, Son of Geofrey.
1202 16 Peter of Breux, in right of Alice his wife the half Sister of Arthur.
1250 17 John, the first Duke of Bretagne.
1287 18 John II. Son of John the first.
1305 19 Arthur II. Son of John the second.
1312 20 John III. Son of Arthur the second.
1341 21 John Earl of Montfort, Brothers Son of Arthur.
1399 22 John V. Son of John of Montfort.
1442 23 Francis the Son of John the fifth.
1450 24 Peter, the Brother of Duke Francis.
1457 25 Arthur III. second Son of John Earl of Montfort.
1458 26 Francis II. Son of Richard Earl of Eſtampes, the Brother of Duke Arthur the 3d, the laſt Duke of Bretagne, of whom ſufficiently before.
1484 27 Charles the 8th, French King, ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Bretagne in right of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Francis the 2d.
1498 28 Lewis the 12th, French King ſucceeded on the death of Charles, in the right of the ſaid Anne, whom he took to Wife: and to make a way unto her Bed, divorced himſelf from the Lady Joan his former Wife, Daughter of Lewis the 11th.
1515 29 Francis the III. of Bretagne, and the firſt of France, ſucceeded in the Dukedom in right of Claude his Wife, the eldeſt Daughter of Lewis the 12th and of Anne of Bretagne: by whom being made the Father of ſo many Children, that he had little cauſe to fear that the Crown would be ſeparated from his Houſe; in the year 1532 being the ſeventeenth of his reign and Government, cauſed an Act to paſs, with the conſent of the States of Bretagne, for the inſeparable uniting of that Dukedom to the Kingdom of France, and by that means diveſted his poſterity of it. For his male iſſue failing in King Henry the 3d, the rights hereof deſcended on the Heirs general; that is to ſay, on Iſabel, Daughter of Philip the ſecond of Spain, and of the Lady Iſabel or Elizabeth his Wife, the eldeſt Daughter of Henry the ſecond, and Neece to the ſaid Francis the firſt; and after her deceaſe (dying without iſſue) on the Lady Katharine her Siſter, maried to Charles Emanuel Duke of Savoy. For whom when Philip of Spain claimed this Eſtate, the French pretended a Law againſt it of their own deviſing, viz. That no Eſtate being incorporated to that Crown, could be aliened from it. A proper Law, and couſen German to the Salique; but ſuch as ſerved their turn by the help of the Engliſh, who deſired not to have the Spaniards ſo near Neighbours to them.

Moſt of our former Earls of Richmond were Earls and Dukes of this Houſe. Their Armes were Ermins.

6. The Eſtates of ANJOU.

THe Eſtates of ANJOU, taking them in the full latitude and extent thereof, bounded on the Eaſt with La Beauſſe; on the Weſt, with Bretagne, and part of Poictou; on the North, with Normandie; and on the South, with part of Berry, and Poictou. In which circumference are comprehended the three ſmall Provinces of Anjou, Tourein, and Maine; moſt commonly accounted of as parts and members of La Beauſſe, the ancient Inhabitants whereof, in the times of the Romans, were the Andes, as Cæſar (or the Andegavii, as Plinie) cals them, the Turones, and the Cenomani, accounted afterwards a part of the Province of Lugdunenſis Tertia.

The Countrey for the moſt part is very fruitful and pleaſant, eſpecially in Tourein; as is the whole tract upon the Loir. Anjou is ſomewhat the more hilly, but otherwiſe little inferior to Tourein, affording plenty of white Wines, the beſt in France; and yeelding from thoſe Hils above 40 Riverets, falling into the Loire from thence: the chief whereof are Mayenne, 2 Vienne, 3 Dive, and 4 Sartre.

1 ANJOU, called Andegavia by the Latines, is ſituate in the midſt betwixt Maine and Tourein, ſo called from the Andegavi, the old Inhabitants of theſe parts. Principal Cities are, 1 Angiers, (by Ptolemie call Juliomagns) of a large circuit, and well built, the See of a Biſhop, reckoning in it 15 Pariſhes beſides the Cathedral. It is ſeated on the River Sartre in a very good air, and therefore choſen for the ſeat of an Univerſity, founded here by Lewis the ſecond Duke of Anjou, the Son of King John, Anno 1388. 2 Beaufort, a Town belonging formerly to the Dukes of Lancaſter, in which John of Gaunt ſo much delighted, that he cauſed all the Children that he had by Katharine Swinford, his third Wife, to be called Beauforts: which Beauforts were afterward Dukes of Somerſet, and Exeter, and Earls of Dorſet. This Town came to the houſe of Lancaſter, by the mariage of Blanch of Artoys, unto Edmund ſurnamed Crouchback, ſecond Son to our Henry the third; created by his Father, the firſt Earl of Lancaſter. Memorable in theſe latter times for giving the Title of a Dutcheſs to Madam Katharine, the beloved Miſtreſs of K. Henry the 4th, by whom ſhe was mother of Cæſar now Duke of Vendoſme, and of Alexander, not long ſince the Grand Prior of France. With reference to which, the ſecond Son of the Duke of Vendoſme is honoured at this preſent with the title of Duke of Beaufort: as the eldeſt with relation to his Mother was made Duke of Mercoeur. 3 Baugie, near which was fought that memorable Battel betwixt the Engliſh and the French, wherein the Engliſh loſt the day, and Thomas Duke of Clarence, Brother to Henry the fifth, was there unfortunately ſlain, Anno 1422. 4 Saumur, pleaſantly ſituate on the Loire, and for long time one of the Cautionary Towns in the hands of thoſe of the Reformed Religion: of whom it is the only entire Univerſity in this Kingdom; eſpecially famous for the learned Philip du Morney, Lord of Pleſſis, ſometimes the Governor hereof. 5 Loches, ſeated on the River Indre, the Caſtle whereof being mounted on a ſteep high Rock, is thought to be one of the ſtrongeſt Anjou. peeces of all France. 6 La Fleſche, of ſpecial name at the preſent for a Colledge of Jeſuites, one of the faireſt in this Kingdome. The word in the French tongue ſignifieth an Arrow (whence thoſe who make Bowes and Arrowes have the name of Fleſchers.) At Nola in the Realm of Naples, there is another Colledge of them, called D' Arque, the Bow: on which one wittily compoſed this enſuing Diſtich;

Arcum Nola dedit, dedit illis alma Sagittam
Gallia: quis Funem, quem meruere, dabit?

That is to ſay,

Nola the Bow, and France the Shaft did bring:
But who ſhall help them to the Hempen-ſtring?

2 On the South-eaſt of Anjou, lieth the Countrey of TOUREIN, the ancient Seat of the Turones: which, for the wholſomneſs of the Air, the pleaſantneſs of the Countrey, and admirable plenty of all Commodities, is by ſome called The Garden of France. Principal Cities in it, 1 Amboiſe, pleaſantly ſeated on the Loire, and beautified with one of the faireſt Caſtles in France, both for the gallantry of the Building, and beautifulneſs of the Proſpect. 2 Tours, by Ptolemy called Cæſarodunum, and the Turonum Civitas of Antoninus; the Metropolis of Lugdunenſis tertia, and an Archbiſhops See: a fair, rich, and well-traded Town, ſituate on the banks of the Loire, in a moſt ſweet and pleaſing Countrey. Famous in that thoſe of the Reformed Religion, from the Gate of S. Hugo, at which they uſed to iſſue out to their Aſſemblies in the Fields, had the name of Hugonots. Given to them, as ſome others think, as the Diſciples of the night-walking Spirit (or Robin Goodfellow) which they call S. Hugo, in regard they had their firſt meetings, for the moſt part, in the nights; as had the Primitive Chriſtians in the times of their Perſecutions. Some, more improbably, (and indeed ridiculouſly) derive the name from the firſt words of an Apologie which they are fabled to have made to the King; which were Huc nos venimus: fancying, that as the Proteſtants did derive that Appellation from the words Proteſtantes, and Proteſtamur, ſo often uſed by them in their Apologie to Charles the fifth; ſo from thoſe words Huc nos, came the name of Hugonots, or Huonots. But more aſſuredly famous for the great Battel fought near it by Charles Martell, Mayre of the Palace, and Father of Pepin King of France, againſt an Army of 400000 Moors, led by Abderamen, Lieutenant General in Spain, for Evelid or Iſcam the great Caliph: of which 370000 loſt their lives in the place, Anno 734. 3 Laudun. 4 Richelieu, pleaſantly ſeated in a rich and flouriſhing Soil, as the name importeth. Of no great note till the time of the late great Cardinall of Richelieu, who took name from hence; by whom it was made one of the neateſt Towns (for the bigneſs of it) in all this Kingdom, and honoured with the titles of a Dukedom and Pairrie of France.

As for the Fortunes of this Province (for of Anjou we ſhall ſpeak more at large anon) it had a while its own Proprietary Earls, of the houſe of Blais; conferred by Hugh Capet upon Odon Earl of Blais and Champagne: and by him given, together with the Earldom of Blais, to Theobald or Thibauld his eldeſt Son, (his ſecond Son named Stephen ſucceeding in Champagne); who in the year 1043. was vanquiſhed and ſlain by Charles Martell Earl of Anjou, and this Province ſeized on by the Victor, who afterwards made Tours his ordinary Seat and Reſidence. Part of which Earldom it continued, till the ſeizure of Anjou, and all the reſt of the Engliſh Provinces in France, on the ſentence paſſed upon King John. After which time diſmembred from it, it was conferred on John, the fourth Son of King Charles the ſixth, with the ſtile and title of Duke of Tourein; and he deceaſing without Iſſue, it was beſtowed with the ſame title, on Charles the eldeſt Son of Lewis Duke of Orleans (in the life of his Father); the ſame who afterwards ſucceeding in the Dukedom of Orleans, was taken Priſoner by the Engliſh at the Battel of Agincourt, kept priſoner 25 years in England, and finally was the Father of King Lewis the twelfth.

3 On the North ſide of Anjou, betwixt it and Normandie, lieth the Province of MAINE; Comitatus Cenomannenſis in our Latine writers. So called of the Cenomanni the old Inhabitants of this tract in the time of Cæſar; ſome of which, with the Boii, Senones, and other nations of the Galls had in the former time paſſed over the Alpes, and there poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe Countreys, which now paſſe under the name and accompt of Lombardie. The chief Towns whereof are, 1 Mans, Cenomannenſium Civitas in Antoninus, by Ptolemie called Vindinum; ſeated on the meeting of Huine and Sartre; the principall of the Province, and a Biſhops See: moſt memorable in the elder times for giving the title of an Earl to that famous Rowland, the Siſters Son of Charlemaigne, one of the Twelve Peers of France; (the Subject of many notable Poems, under the name of Orlando Inamorato, Orlando Furioſo, beſides many of the old Romances) who was Earl of Mans. 2 Mayenne, on the Banks of a river of the ſame name, (Meduana in Latine) the title of the ſecond branch of the houſe of Guiſe: famous for Charles Duke of Mayenne, who held out for the League againſt Henry the 4th; A Prince not to be equalled in the Art of War, only unfortunate in employing it in ſo ill a cauſe. 3 Vitrun, upon the edge of Bretagne, of which little memorable. 4 La Val, not far from the head of the River Mayenne: of note for giving both name and title to the Earls of Laval, an ancient Family, allied unto the houſes of Vendoſme, Bretagne, Anjou, and others of the beſt of France. Few elſe of any note in this little County; which once ſubſiſting of its ſelf under its own natural Lords and Princes, was at laſt united to the Earldom of Anjou, by the mariage of the Lady Guiburge, Daughter and Heir of Helie, the laſt Earl hereof, to Foulk

Earl

Earl of Anjou, Anno 1083. or thereabouts: the Fortunes of which great Eſtate it hath alwaies followed, ſince that time. Anjou.

But as for Anjou it ſelf, the principal part of this goodly Patrimony, it was by Charles the Bald conferred on Robert a Saxon Prince, for his valour ſhewn againſt the Normans, Anno 870. Which Robert was Father of Eudes King of France, of Richard Duke of Burgundie, and of Robert who ſucceeded in the Earldom of Anjou; Competitor with Charles the Simple for the Crown it ſelf, as the next Heir to his Brother Eudes, who died King thereof. Slain in the purſuit of this great quarrel, he left this Earldom, with the title of Earl of Paris, and his pretenſions to the Crown, unto Hugh his Son, ſurnamed the Great: who to make good his claim to the Crown, againſt Lewis the 4th, Son of Charles the Simple, conferred the Earldom of Anjou, and the Countrey of Gaſtinois, on Geofry ſurnamed Gryſogonelle, a renowned Warriour, and a great ſtickler in his cauſe, in whoſe race it continued near 300 years. How the two Counties of Main and Tourein were joyned to it, hath been ſhewn before. Geofry the Son of Foulk the third, maried Maud, Daughter to Henry the firſt of England, and Widow of Henry the fourth Emperor: from whom proceeded Henry the ſecond, King of England, and Earl of Anjou. But John his Son, forfeiting his Eſtates in France (as the French pretended) Anjou returned unto the Crown: and afterwards was conferred by King Lewis the ninth, on his Brother Charles; who in right of Beatrix his Wife was Earl of Provence, and by Pope Urban the fourth, was made King of Naples and Sicilie. Afterwards it was made a Dukedom by King Charles the fifth, (Tourein being firſt diſmembred from it) in the perſon of Lewis of France his ſecond Brother, to whom this fair Eſtate was given, as ſecond Son of King John of France, the Son of Philip de Valois, and conſequently the next Heir to Charles de Valois the laſt Earl hereof (the King his Brother yeelding up all his right unto him) Finally it returned again unto the Crown in the time of Lewis the eleventh. The Earls and Dukes hereof having been veſted with the Diadems of ſeveral Countreys, following in this order.

The Earls of Anjou of the Line of Saxonie.

870 1 Robert of Saxonie, the firſt Earl of Anjou.

875 2 Robert II. Competitor for the Crown of France with Charles the Simple, as Brother of Eudes the laſt King.

922 3 Hugh the great, Lord of Gaſtinois, Earl of Paris, Conſtable of France, and Father of Hugh Capet.

926 4 Geofry Gryſogonelle, by the Donation of Hugh the great, whoſe party he had followed in the War of France, with great fidelity and courage.

938 5 Foulk, Earl of Anjou, the Son of Geofry.

1075 8 Foulk II Brother of Geofry 3d gave Gaſtinois, (which was his proper inheritance) to King Philip the firſt; that by his help he might recover the Earldom of Anjou, from his part wherein he was excluded by his Brother Geofry.

1080 9 Geofry IV. Son of Faulk 2d.

1083 10 Foulk III. Brother of Geofry; King of Hieruſalem in the right of Meliſend his Wife.

1143 11 Geofry V. ſurnamed Plantagenet.

1150 12 Henry the II. King of England, Son of Earl Geofry and Maud his Wife, Daughter of King Henry the firſt.

1162 13 Geofry VI. third Son of King Henry the 2d, made Earl of Anjou on his mariage with Conſtance, the Heir of Bretagne.

1186 14 Arthur Son of Geofrey and Conſtance.

1202 15 John, King of England, ſucceeded on the death of Arthur; diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtates in France by Philip Auguſtus, immediately on the death of Arthur, Anno 1202.

Earls and Dukes of Anjou, of the Line of France.

1262 1 Charles, Brother of King Lewis the ninth, Earl of Anjou, and Provence, King of Naples and Sicilia, &c.

1315 2 Charles of Valois, Son of Philip the third; Earl of Anjou in right of his Wife, Neece of the former Charles, by his Son and Heir of the ſame name; the Father of Philip de Valois, French King.

1318 3 Lewis of Valois, the ſecond Son of Charles, died without iſſue, Anno 1325.

1376 4 Lewis of France, the 2d Son of King John, the Son of Philip de Valois, created the firſt Duke of Anjou by King Charles his Brother; and adopted by Queen Joan of Naples, King of Naples, Sicil, and Hieruſalem, and Earl of Provence.

1385 5 Lewis III. Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Provence, and Main; titulary King of Sicil, Naples, and Hieruſalem.

1416 6 Lewis IV. ſucceſſor to his Father in Eſtate and Titles.

1430 7 Renè, the Brother of Lewis, by the adoption of Qu. Joan the 2d, was for a while poſſeſſed of Naples; but preſently outed by Alfonſo of Aragon, and died the titulary King of Naples, Sicil, and Hieruſalem; the Father of Queen Margarite,

Wife

1480 8 Charles Earl of Maine, Nephew to Renè by his third Brother Charles, at his deceaſe left Anjou, and all the reſt of his Eſtates to King Lewis the 11th, An. 1481. Since which never otherwiſe aliened, than as an honourary title of the third Sonne of France.

It is to be obſerved here (according to our method in other places) that Renè King of Sicil, &c. and Duke of Anjou, inſtituted an Order of Knight-hood, called of the Croiſſant: the Knights whereof carryed a Creſcent, or Half-moon, on their right Arms, with this Motto, L' Os en Croiſſant; encouraging them thereby to ſeek the increaſe of valour and reputation.

The Arms of this Dukedome, were France, a Border Gules.

7 LA BEAUSSE.

LA BEAUSSE (not reckoning in the Provinces laſt before deſcribed) is bounded on the Eaſt wth France ſpecially and primarily ſo called; on the Weſt, with Anjou, Maine, Tourein, and ſome part of Berry; on the North, with Normandy; and on the South, with Nivernois, and the reſt of Berry. It is called Belſia in Latine Writers; both names derived from the pleaſantneſſe and beauties of it; this Countrey being not only looked on as the Garden of France, but the Nurſe of the great City of Paris, which from the breaſts thereof receiveth the beſt part of its ſuſtenance.

The principall Nations of the whole in the time of the Romans, were the Carnutes, which inhabited the greateſt part, and the Samnitæ neer the Loire; part of Gallia Celtica, and caſt into the Province of Lugdunenſis quarta by the Emperour Conſtantine. Divided by the French into the Higher, the Lower, and the Intermediate.

1 The HIGHER BEAUSSE is that part which lyeth next to Normandy, of which the principall Towns are, 1 Dreux, ſeated upon the River Eureux, ſuppoſed to be the ſeat of the antient Druides, who held here their Parliaments or Seſſions for adminiſtration of Juſtice. The title and inheritance of Robert, one of the younger ſonnes of K. Lewis the Groſſe, and Grandfather of that Peter of Dreux, who ſucceeded Arthur, the Sonne of Geofrie Plantagenet, in the Earldom of Bretagne. 2 Montfort, an Earldom, the title and Eſtate of John Earl of Montfort, ſurnamed the Valiant, who ſucceeded in the Dukedome of Bretagne, by the aid of the Engliſh, An. 1341. 3 Chartres, called antiently Carnutum Civitas, (but by Ptolemy, Atricum) from whence the Countrey hereabouts was called Le Pais Chartrain: ſeated in an uneven place, varyed with fertile riſing Hills, ſo that the Eaſt ſide ſtands upon the top of an Hill, and the Weſt ſpreads it ſelf in the bottom of a Plain, through the midſt whereof runs the River Eure, which as ſoon as it comes to the Walls of the City, on the South-ſide, divides it ſelf into three branches, two whereof encompaſſe the City round about, and the third running thorow the middeſt thereof, ſerveth the Town with many Mills for the uſe of the people; doth afterwards unite it ſelf with the reſt into one main Channell. A very fair and goodly City, a Biſhops See, and one of the Vidamates of France; antiently giving the title of an Earldom alſo to the houſe of Blois, from the time that Theobald the ſecond Earl of Blois extorted it by ſtrong hand from the Biſhops hereof, about the year 950. continuing in the poſſeſſion of that Family till the year 1300. or thereabouts, when ſold by Maheult or Maud, the Heir Proprietar hereof, Wife of Hugh de Chaſtillon, in her right called Earl of Blois, to King Philip the Fair, for an Annuall penſion of 4000 Livres. 4 Auneau, a Town of the territory of Chartres, memorable for the great ſlaughter made here by Henry Duke of Guiſe, of the German Auxiliaries, invading France with a right formidable Army in behalf of the Hugonots.

2 The LOWER BEAUSSE is that which lyeth towards Nivernois and Berry; and is ſubdivided into Sologne, and Orleanois. In SOLOGNE, which lyeth cloſe to Berry, the chief places of note, are, 1 Romorantin, ſeated on the Souldre, the chief Town of this Tract. 2 Mallenzay. 3 La Ferte, or La Ferte S. Bernard, of which nothing memorable. In ORLEANOIS, which lyeth more Northwards upon the River of Loyre, are, 1 Iargeau, a Town once of very great ſtrength, and one of the out-works of Orleans. 2 Cleri, called alſo Cleri of Noſtre-dame, from the Church there built unto our Lady. 3 Tury; and 4 Angerville, both in the ordinary Road betwixt Paris and 5 Orleans, the principall City of all Beauſſe, called Genabum in the time of Cæſar; repaired, or rather new built by the Emperour Aurelius, An. 276. from thence named Aurelia, the Countrey round about it Aurelianenſis, now Orleans, and Orleanois. The Countrey generally very fruitfull, and yeelding a moſt excellent and delicious Wine; which for the ſtrength, and intoxicating power thereof, is baniſhed the French Kings Cellar by eſpecial Edict. The City very pleaſantly ſeated on the River Loyre, wel built, ſituate in a ſweet Air, and planted with a civil and ingenuous People; who are ſaid to ſpeak the beſt Language of any in France. For a time it was the chief Seat of a diſtinct Kingdome, (according to the unprovident humour of the Merovignians) the lot of Clodomire Sonne of Clovis the Great, and of Guntram Sonne of Clotaire, both Kings of Orleans; as alſo was Theodorick, the ſecond Sonne of Childebert King of Mets, on the death of Guntram. But Sigibert his ſonne being vanquiſhed by Clotaire the ſecond, this Kingdome extending to the ſhores of the Aquitain Ocean, was added unto that of France. Orleans ſince that time content with a lower title, hath of late oftentimes with greater prudence, been made the honourary title of the ſecond Sonnes of France called Dukes hereof; the firſt who had the title being Philip the 2d. ſonne of Philip de Valois, from a Baſe ſonne of whoſe, the Earls of Dunois, and Dukes of Longeville do derive themſelves, and Lewis the ſecond ſonne of Charles the firſt, Grandfather of Lewis the 11th. French King. It is a See Epiſcopall, a Bailywick; or Seige Præſidial, and an Univerſity. The See Epiſcopal founded in the Church of St. Croſſe, miſerably ruined by the Hugonots in the civil Wars, out of meer hatred to the name. The Siege Præſidial ſetled here by King Henry the 2d, 1551. for the eaſe of his Subjects of theſe parts, in ſutes not worth the troubling of the Courts of Paris. The Univerſity erected by King Philip le Bel, An. 1312. though, to ſpeak properly, it be an Hall only for the reading of the Civil Lawes, the only learning there profeſſed, and for that conſiderable. A Town now not of ſo great ſtrength as in former times, when for ſome moneths it held out againſt the whole power of the Engliſh; reſcued from them at laſt by the valour of Ioan the Virgin, whoſe Statua (like a man of Arms) is ſtill preſerved on the Bridge-gate of this City; neer which great Montacute Earl of Salisbury had his Fatal blow. Berry.

Earls

The MIDDLE or intermediate BEAUSSE lieth betwixt the former; in which the places of chief note are, 1 Blois, ſeated alſo on the Loire, in a ſound Air, and fruitfull Countrey; the Nurſery for the moſt part of the Kings Children, for that cauſe much reſorted to by the Nobility, and honoured ſometimes with the reſidence of the Kings themſelves: it being in the Councel-chamber of the Kings houſe here, that Henry of Lorrein, Duke of Guiſe, the chief contriver of the terrible Maſſacre at Paris, and Author of the Holy League; was ſlain by the command of King Henry the 3d, An. 1589. 5 Chaſteau-Dun, the chief Town of the Earldom of Dunois, (the honour and Eſtate of Iohn Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Baſtard of Orleans, one of the beſt Souldiers of his time, and ſo approved by his exploits againſt the Engliſh) mounted upon the top of an high Hill, at the confluence of the Loire, and Aigre. 3 Lavardin, moſt remarkable for giving name and honour to a noble Family, which depending on the houſe of Vendoſme (to the Signeury whereof it doth belong) brought forth that valiant Commander, Monſieur de Laourdin, a faithfull and couragious follower of K. Henry the 4th, in his long War againſt the Leaguers. 4 Vendoſme (Vindocinum in Latine) the chief Town of the Dukedom of Vendoſme; not otherwiſe of note than for the Earls and Dukes which have born this Title: of which as being the Progenitors of the Kings now regnant, I have thought fitte to adde the enſuing Catalogue; premiſing firſt, that this Earldome came to the houſe of France by the mariage of Katharine daughter and Heir of Iohn, the laſt Earle of the former Race, to Iohn the firſt, the Earl of the other Family.

Earls and Dukes of Vendoſme.

1432 2 Lewis of Bourbon a Confederate with Ioan the Virgin, in her actions againſt the Engliſh.

1472 4 Francis of Bourbon.

1532 6 Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendoſme and King of Navarre.

1562 7 Henry of Bourbon, Duke of Vendoſme, and King of Navarre; afterwards King of France alſo, by the name of Henry the 4th.

8 Cæſar de Vendoſme, one of the Sons of Henry the 4th, by the Dutcheſs of Beaufort, created by his Father Duke of Vendoſme, and once deſigned his Succeſſor in the Crown of Franee. Afterwards by the procurement of the King his Father, maryed to the Daughter and Heir of Philibert Emanuel, D. of Mercoeur, (a younger branch of the houſe of Lorrein) poſſeſſed of a fair and goodly Eſtate in the Dukedome of Bretagne, in the right of his Wife, a Daughter and Heir of the houſe of Martignes (a branch of the Family of thoſe Dukes.) By means whereof the Duke of Vendoſme hath not only a large inheritance, but great authority in that Countrey.

The Arms of the Earls and Dukes of Vendoſme, were and are, Azure, ſix Flower de Lyces Or, 3. 2. 1. Thoſe of the former Family affirmed by Bara to have been France, on a Bend Gules, three Lyons Or.

But the great Lords of this Countrey, were the Earls of Blois, poſſeſſed not only of the Earldom of Chartreſſe (a fair and goodly Signeury) in the higher Beauſſe; but alſo of the whole Countrey of Toureiu, a better Patrimony and Eſtate than that; which how they were alienated from this Houſe, we have ſeen before. And as for the Earldome of Blois it ſelf, it contained a large and gallant Patrimony in the middle Beauſſe, thereunto belonging; which being after ſold to the Dukes of Orleans, gave the firſt greatneſſe to that Houſe. As for the Earls of Blois themſelves, they fetch their Pedigree from one Gerlon a noble Dane (companion in Arms unto Rollo the firſt Duke of Normandy) in his acquiring of that Dukedome, by Charles the Simple created the firſt Earl hereof, An. 920. or thereabouts, branching it ſelf into the houſes of Blois and Champague; ſometimes united in one perſon, but for the moſt part, and at laſt, divided into two great Families; Stephen King of England, commonly called Stephen of Blois, derived both his name and parentage from the Earls of this houſe, as being ſon of Theobald, the fifth Earl of Blois, by Maud one of the daughters of William, Duke of Normandy, and King of England, ſurnamed the Conquerour. From this Theobald the Earls of Blois continued in the maſculine Line, till the year 1219. under nine Princes in the totall, of the houſe of Gerlon: And then it fell by the Heirs Generall, to the noble Family of Chaſtillon, continuing theirs till the year 1391. when ſold by Guy de Chaſtillon the laſt Earl of that Houſe, to Lewis Duke of Orleance, he being then Nivernois. then Childleſſe, and wholly governed by his Wife (a Daughter of the houſe of Namurre) who could not otherwiſe maintain her great prodigality, but by ready money. United finally to the Crown, by Lewis the Grand-ſon of this Lewis, on his ſucceſſion to the Kingdom, after Charles the 8th.

The Arms of theſe great Earls were, Gules, three Palls, Vaire, a Chief, Or.

8 NIVERNOIS.

NIVERNOIS is bounded on the North with La Beauſſe, on the South with Burbonois, on the Eaſt with Champagne, and on the Weſt with Berry; ſo called from Nivernium, or Nevers, the chief Town thereof.

This is the ſmalleſt Province in all this Continent, but to be handled here apart, becauſe not eaſily reducible unto any other, as all the reſt of the leſſer Provinces may be. The Soyl not very fruitfull of Corn or Wine, but plentifully ſtored with rich Paſtures, and well ſhaded with Woods, in which are found ſome Mines of Iron, interſperſed with Silver, and many quarries of good Stone, of much uſe for building. The territory being but ſmall, we cannot look for many Towns of note, and conſequence. Of thoſe that be, the principall are, 1 Pontigni, remarkable for an antient Abby, the buriall place of ſome of the old Earls of Nevers. 2 Nevers it ſelf upon the Loyre, beautified with a Bridge of 20 Arches, but otherwiſe not great or fair, though the chief of this ſmall Countrey, and the ſeat of the Dukes. The reputation which it hath proceeding ſpecially from the Antiquity thereof, and the Earls and Dukes from thence denominated.

Once part of the Burgundian Conqueſts, and from them won by the French, it came to have Princes of its own, almoſt as early as any other Countrey in the Realm of France. Who was the firſt that had the title of Earl of Nevers, and therewithall the Lordſhip of this Eſtate, I can no where find; but ſure I am, that in the year 1001. both the Eſtate and title were enjoyed by Laudin a noble man of the Burgundian race, who on the death of Henry the 4th, Duke of Burgundy, was like to have ſeized on that Eſtate, in deſpight of Robert King of France, who pretended to it. Paſſing through many Families, it came at laſt to the Houſe of Burgogne, in the perſon of Odo, ſon of Hugh the fourth of that name, Duke of Burgundy, by the Heir Generall of Nevers, and from that to the houſe of Flanders, by the mariage of Yoland of Burgogne, to Robert of Bethune Earl of Flanders, 1312. whoſe ſon named Lewis, maryed the Heir of Rethell; uniting by that maryage theſe Eſtates under his command. Together with the reſt of the rights of Flanders, it came again by maryage to Philip the Hardy Duke of Burgundy; who with the liking and conſent of his elder Sons (otherwiſe well provided for) conferred both it and Rethel, on his third Son Philip, whoſe Neece Elizabeth, daughter and Heir of John of Burgogne, brought it in marriage to Adolph of Cleve her Husband, An. 1484. In the perſon of Francis, the 4th Earl of this Houſe, it was made a Dukedome, and by his Daughter Henrietta, ſiſter and Heir of Francis the laſt Prince of this Family, was brought in Dower to Lewis de Gonzaga, ſecond ſonne of Frederick Duke of Mantua, An. 1563. whoſe ſonne Charles ſucceeded his Father and Mother in the Dukedome of Nevers; and Vincent of Gonzaga, his Couſin German, in the Dukedome of Mantua. And here it is to be obſerved, that though this Eſtate hath paſſed through ſo many Families, yet the rights and Regalities thereof, have been ſtill continued; not being hitherto reduced (for ought I can find) under any of the Parliaments of France, as all the reſt of that Kingdome is, but ſuch parts thereof as are either under other Princes, or elſe enjoy the Priviledges of a Free Eſtate.

The Arms hereof are, Azure, within a Border Compone, Gules and Argent, three Flower de Lyces, Or.

9 The Dukedome of BOVRBON.

THE Dukedome of BOVRBON, in the full power and extent thereof, comprehended Bourbonois, Forreſt, Beau-jolois, and Auvergne; all now reverted to the Crown.

1 BOVRBONOIS hath on the Eaſt, the Dukedome of Burgundy; on the Weſt, Berry; on the North, Nivernois, and a corner of Gaſtinois; on the South, Auvergne: So called from Bourbon (for diſtinction ſake, called Bourbon Archenbauld) the chief Town thereof. The Countrey very well wooded, and of excellent paſturage; which makes the people more intent to grazing and feeding Cattel, than they are to Tillage; and is watered with the Rivers of Loyre, Yonne, and Allier, which are counted navigable; beſides Aron, Acolin, Lixentes, Lanbois, and ſome leſſer ſtreams.

It is divided into the Higher, and the Lower. In the Higher which is more mountainous and hilly, there is no other Town of note, than that of Montaigne, ſituate in the County of Combraille; the Signeury, as I take it, of Michael de Montaigne, the Author of the Book of Eſſaies. But in the Lower Bourbonois are, 1 Molins, eſteemed the Center of all France, ſituate on the Allier, a Baillage, and the chief Town of this Countrey: the River yielding great plenty of Fiſh, but of Salmons ſpecially; the Town adorned with a fair Caſtle, and that beautified with one of the fineſt Gardens in France, in which are many Trees of Limmons and Oranges. 2 Bourbon Archenbauld, and 3 Bourbon Ancie: the former of the two ſeated upon the Loire, and giving name to the whole Province; of great reſort by reaſon of its medicinal waters. 4 S. Porcin, and 5 Varennes Ganat upon the Frontiers of Auvergn, 6 Chancelle, 7 Charroux, 8 Paliſſe, 9 Souvigni, 10 St. Amand, &c. Forreſt.

The antient Inhabitants were part of the Hedui, who being waſted in their warres againſt the Romans, a great part of their Countrey was by Julius Cæſar, conferred on the Boii, a German Nation, who coming with the Helvetians into Gaul, and unwilling upon their defeat to go home again, were by him planted in this Tract, at the requeſt of the Hedui, who deſired it of him: and poſſibly the Hedui might be willing to have theſe Boii dwell amongſt them, not only to fill up their numbers, and manure the waſte Grounds of their Countrey, but in regard of ſome neerer tie, that was between them: it being conceived by many learned men, that theſe Boii, which together with theſe Cenomanni, Senones, and other Gallick Nations croſſed over the Alpes, had been originally of theſe parts, and being driven out of Italy by the conquering Romans, fell into Germany, and from thence ſent thoſe Auxiliaries to attend the Helvetians in their journey ſpoken of before. Made ſubject to the Romans, with the reſt of Gallia, and by them reckoned as a part of Aquitanica, it continued under their command, till the coming in of the Burgundians, by whom it was ſubdued and made a part of their Kingdome, in the ſubverting of which Kingdome, it was (together with Beau-jolois) ſubdued by the more powerfull French, and how diſpoſed of afterwards, we ſhall ſee anon, having firſt taken a view of the other Provinces.

2 FORREST, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Beau-jolois; on the Weſt, with Auvergne; on the North, with Bourbonois; and on the South, with a part of Languedoc. The Countrey populous and large, but not very fruitfull; hilly and mountainous, much of the nature of the Wood-lands. The Air a little of the coldeſt to afford good Wines, but that ſufficiently recompenſed by abundance of pit-coal; by which they have good fires at a very cheap rate. The people are conceived to be none of the wiſeſt, but withall very greedy and covetous of gain.

The chief Towns in it are, 1 Mont-briſon, ſeated on the Loyre. 2 Feurs, ſeated on the ſame River, called antiently Forum Seguſianorum, the chief Town of the Seguſiani, or Seruſiani, whom Cæſar and others mention in this part of Gaul. 3 St. Stephen, (or Eſtienne) in Feurian, neer the head of that River. 4 St. Germans. 5 St. Rimberg. 6 St. Bennet le chaſteau. 7 St. Guermiter, &c. of which little memorable.

This Countrey of Forreſt was antiently a part of the Earldome of Lyons, diſmembred from it at or about the ſame time with Beau-jolois; and was held by a long ſucceſſion of Earls Proprietaries of it, as a State diſtinct: till Regnand Lord of Forreſt, the Sonne of Earl of Guy, by the mariage of Iſabel Daughter and Heir of Humbert Earl of Beau-jeu, joyned them both together, which was about the year 1265. parted again after his deceaſe, An. 1280. Guy being his eldeſt Sonne ſucceeding in Forreſt; and Lewis his ſecond ſonne in Beau-jeu. How they became united in the houſe of Burgundy, we ſhall ſee anon.

3 BEAU-JOLOIS, ſo called from Beau-jeu, the chief Town hereof, taketh up the tract of ground betwixt the Loire and the Soaſne; and betwixt Lionnois, and Forreſt. A Countrey of no great extent, but very remarkable for the Lords and Princes of it: who have been men of great eminence in their ſeverall times. The chief Town of it is Beau-jeu, beautified with a goodly Caſtle, pleaſantly ſeated on the brow of a riſing Mountain, from whence perhaps it took the name; as the great Keep in Farnham Caſtle, was in the ſame ſenſe, and for the ſame pleaſant ſituation, called Ioyeux Guard, in the time of Lancelot du Lake, whoſe that Caſtle was. Which appears further by a Tower built at Conſtantinople, by Guiſchard the third of that name Lord hereof (being then Ambaſſadour to the Emperour from King Philip Auguſtus) with this inſcription, Turris Bellijocenſis; which there continued to be ſeen, a long time after. 2 Belle-ville, where is an Abby founded by Humbert the ſecond, An. 1158. 3 Ville Franche, environed with Walls by Humbert the fourth; whoſe Sonne Guiſchard the third above mentioned, founded here a Convent of Franciſcans called to this day Minorétte. 4 Noironde. 5 St. Maurice. 6 Ulſie. 7 Obches, concerning which there have been long and many Wars betwixt the Earls of Forreſt, and theſe Lords of Beau-jeu.

This Countrey, as that other of Forreſt, was once part of the Earldome of Lyons; in the partage of which Eſtate it fell to Omphroy one of the Brothers of Earl Artaud, An. 989. whoſe Succeſſors had no other title than Lords of Beau-jeu. They were moſt of them men of great piety, founders of many Collegiate and conventuall Churches; ſome of them men of action alſo: Humbert the ſecond and the fifth, Adventurers in the Wars of the Holy Land; Richard the ſecond, in thoſe againſt the Engliſh; Guiſchard the fourth, made Conſtable of France, by King Lewis the ninth. But the houſe failing in this Guiſchard, it was united unto that of the Earls of Forreſt, as before is ſaid, in the perſon of Regnand Earl thereof: whoſe Sonne and Succeſſor called Lewis, was alſo Conſtable of France; as Edward the Grand-child of this Lewis, a Marſhall of it. But at the laſt it fell into the hands of a lewd and wicked Prince, Edward the ſecond: who being impriſoned at Paris for his great offences, and overlayd with Wars by the Dukes of Savoy; made a donation or free gift of all his Signeuries to Lewis Duke of Bourbon, ſurnamed the good; the direct Heir of Guy Earle of Forreſt, the eldeſt Sonne of Regnand Earl of Forreſt and Lord of Beau-jeu above mentioned, and conſequently of next Kin to him. An. 1400.

4 AUVERGNE hath on the Eaſt Forreſt, and Lyonois; on the Weſt, Limoſin, Perigort, and Quercu; on the South, part of Languedoc; and on the North, Berry and Bourbonois. It is divided into the Higher, and Lower. The Lower being called Limaigne, is fruitfull in a very eminent degree; the Higher mountainous and barren. In this laſt the Towns of chief note are, 1 St. Flour a Biſhops See, of Auvergn. of an impregnable ſituation. 2 Arilla, on the River Iourdain, defended with a ſtrong Caſtle on the top of a Rock. 3 Beauregard, on the River Gardon. 4 Carlat. 5 Murat. 6 Billon, of which little obſervable in antient ſtories. In the Lower called Limaigne, from a River of that name which falls into the Allier; there is, 1 Clermont, a Biſhops See, fair and pleaſing for the ſituation, and Fountains deſcending from the Hills of the higher Auvergn, the chief city of the whole Province. Moſt memorable in theſe later Ages for the Councell here called by Pope Urban the ſecond, An. 1067. in which, by the artifice of the Pope, the Chriſtian Princes of the Weſt ingaged themſelves in the Wars of the Holy Land; giving thereby the better opportunity to the Popes, to enlarge both their Territories, and their power. It was firſt raiſed out of the ruines of Gergovia, the head City of the Auverni, in the time of Cæſar, and the ſeat Royall of Vercingetorix King of that Nation, who ſo long put him to his trumps with an Army of 138000 men; now a ſmall Village called Gergeau. 2 Riom, in which reſides the Seneſchall or chief Governour of the Lower Auvergn. 3 Montpenſier, of great note for the Princes of the houſe of Bourbon, once Dukes hereof: beginning in Lewis the firſt Earl, Sonne of John Duke of Bourbon, An. 1415. and ending in Henry the laſt Duke; whoſe Daughter and Heir was maryed to the Duke of Orleans, Brother of Lewis the thirteenth. 4 Montferant. 5 Yſſoire. 6 Brionde. 7 Aigueperſe. 8 Turenne, the antient Seat and Patrimony of the De La Tours, heretofore Earls of Boulogne, now Soveraigns of Sedan, and Dukes of Bovillon; to whom it hath for ſome Ages ſince given the title of Viſcount. A Family deſcended from the Heirs generall of Euſtace Earl of Boulogne in Picardy, Father to Godfrey of Bovillon Duke of Lorrein, and King of Hieruſalem.

The Countrey firſt inhabited in the times of the Romans, by the potent Nation of the Auverni; whoſe King Bituitus was taken Priſoner, and led in triumph unto Rome, in the War againſt the Salii, the Allobroges, and others of their Confederates: Not fully conquered, till Cæſar had ſubdued their King Vercingetorix. They were afterwards part of the Province of Aquitania prima, retaining in the often changes of the Empire, its old name of Auvergn. Heretofore part of the great Dutchy of Aquitain, remaining ſubject to thoſe Dukes till William the eighth Duke, and the fourth of that name, gave it in portion with one of his Daughters, whoſe name I find not, nor the name of her Husband neither, of whom there is nothing on record, but that he took up Arms againſt Lewis the ſixth, who began his Reign An. 1110. By the Heir generall of this houſe it was conveyed in mariage to John the ſecond ſon of Guigne the 4th, and Beatrix, Daulphin of Viennois; in whoſe Line it continued under the title of the Daulphins of Auvergn, till Beyault, the laſt Earl or Daulphin of it. Who having maryed the Heir of Guy Earl of Forreſt, the ſonne of Regnaud above mentioned; had by her a Daughter named Anne, Heir of both Eſtates, maryed to Lewis the Good, the third Duke of Bourbon: to whom Edward the laſt Lord of Beau-jeu made a Donation or ſurrendry of that Signeury alſo; uniting in his perſon the diſtinct Eſtates of Bourbon, Beau-jeu, Forreſt, and Auvergne.

And as for Bourbonnois it ſelf, in the diſtractions of the French Empire, by the poſterity of Charles the Great, who moſt improvidently cuntqued it into many great Eſtates, and petit Signeuries: it fell unto the ſhare of the potent Family of the Dampierre, deſcended from the antient houſe of Burgogne, who held it till the year 1308. At what time Lewis the ninth, for the advancement of Robert Earl of Clermont (in Beauvoiſin) his fifth Son; maryed him to Beatrix Daughter and Heir of Archenbald Dampierre the laſt of that houſe. Lewis the ſonne of this Robert was the firſt Duke of this Line; whoſe ſucceſſors and their atchievements follow in this Catalogue of

1317 2 Lewis, the firſt Duke of Bourbon, Peer, and Chamberlain of France.

1341 3 Peter, Peer, and Chamberlain, ſlain in the Battle of Poictiers, An. 1356.

1434 6 Charles, Peer, and Chamberlain, Generall of the Army againſt the Engliſh in the Iſle of France.

1456 7 John II. Peer, Chamberlain, and Conſtable of France.

1487 8 Peter II. Brother of John, Peer, Chamberlain, and Regent of France, in the abſence of Charls the 8th.

1503 9 Charles Earl of Montpenſier, Duke of Bourbon in the right of Suſan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Peter the ſecond, Duke of Bourbon. After whoſe death, being ſlain at the ſack of Rome, An. 1527. without Iſſue, his Eſtate fell unto the Crown; and ſo continued, till by the Sentence or Arreſt of the Court of Parliament in Paris, Auvergn, Forreſt, and Beau-jeu were adjudged to Madam Loviſe, Mother of Lewis the firſt Duke of Montpenſier, and daughter and Heir of Gilbert de Bourbon Earl of Montpenſier, the Nephew of John Duke of Bourbon (the firſt of that name) of which houſe ſhe was the only ſurviving heir, from whence deſcended Henry, the laſt Duke of that Family, ſpoken of before. And for the title of Auvergne, it was used customarily by the eldest Sons of the Earls and Dukes of Montpensier; till given to Charles, natural Son of King Charles the ninth, called from hence the Count or Earl of Auvergne: who being a Confederate of Charles Duke of Biron, was in the year 1604. made Prisoner by King Henry the fourth, released by King Lewis the thirteenth, Anno 1616. and within two years after made Duke of Angolesme; in whose posterity it remaineth. Berrie.

The Armes of these Dukes were 1 France, a Baston Gules, for the Dukedom of Bourbon; 2 Or, a Daulphin Palme, Azure, for the County of Auvergne; 3 Or, a Lion Sable, armed Gules, under a Labell of fine pieces of the same, for the Signeury of Beau-jeu. The Armes of the Earldom of Forrest I am yet to seek. But anciently the Armes of Bourbon when under the Dampierres, were Or, a Lion Rampant Gules, environed with Cockle-shels of Azure.

HAving thus taken a survey of those several provinces, which (except Bretagne) were the first purchases of the French in the modern France, and so much of the Burgundian Conquests, as were either layed to the Kingdom of West France, or else were necessarily to be passed over in the course of our Journey, let us next look on those which were possessed by the Gothes. And first we will begin with BERRIE, (as next in situation unto those before described) bounded on the East with Bourbonois and Nivernois; on the West, with Poicton and part of Toureine; on the North, with La Beausse; on the South with Limousin, in Latin called Biturigum regio, from the Bituriges, the old inhabitants of this Tract; by Pliny, Strabo, and some others called the Bituriges Cubi, to difference them from the Bituriges Isci, dwelling about Bourdeaux.

The Countrey watered in the East with the River Laure; in the South, with the Fage; in the North, with the Cher; and in the Inland parts with Indre, Arnon, Theo, Eure, and others which we shall meet withall anon: of no great note, but such as much conduce to the fruitfulness of it; affording it the benefit of fat pastures, and flourishing meadows; which breed great multitudes of cattel, and such flocks of Sheep, that when they tax a man for lying in excess of numbers, they use to say, Fie sir, there are not so many sheep in Berrie.

It containeth in it 33 walled Towns, the chief whereof are, 1 Bourges, a Town of great strength by nature, and as well fortified by Art; situate in a low Flat, amongst deep impassable Bogs and Marishes, caused by the overflowings of the Auron, Yeure, Malon, and Aurette; small Riverets, but of great waters when they meet together. By means whereof it may be easily drowned, at the approach of an Enemy; for that cause made the fastness and retreat of Charles the seventh, in his long wars against the English, possessed at that time of Paris, and the greatest part of the Kingdom. The poor Prince in the mean time, fain to feast it here with a Rump of Mutton, and a Chick, and that but upon high daies neither: from his constant abode here, and that withall he had been Duke of this Countrey, in the life of his three elder Brethren, by the English in derision called King of Berrie. A large, fair, and rich Town it is, the Seat of an Archbishop; a siege presidial, and one of the best Universities in France, especially for the study of the Civil Lawes, first founded by King Lewis the ninth, and afterwards restored and perfected by Charles Duke of Berrie, the Brother of King Lewis the eleventh. Some fabulous Founders, and ridiculous Originations, have been thought of for it; as that it was built by Ogyges, a Grandchilde of Noah, by whom called Bytogyges, which in the corruption of the following times, came (forsooth) unto Bituriges: which Etymologie, were it as dear bought as it is far fetcht, might be good for Ladies; and then it would be good for somewhat. Others no less absurdly, will have it called Bituris, quasi Bi-turris, from two fair Towers which formerly (as they pretend) were erected here; one of the two, in part still standing: and unto this, they say, alludeth an old Grammarian, thus:

Turribus à binis inde vocor Bituris.

From two Towers which were builded here,
The name of Bituris I beare.

But the truth is, it was thus called from the Bituriges (the Biturigum Civitas of Antoninus) and by that name in the division of old Gaul by the Emperour Constantine, made the Metropolis of the Province of Aquitania prima, of which this Countrey was a part. 2 Wiarron, or Viarzon, pleasantly seated amongst Woods, Vines, and Rivers; the Rivers Arnon, Theo, Cher, and Yeure, meeting hereabouts. Built in or near the place of the old Avaricum, a Town of great note and strength in the time of Cæsar: the revolt whereof gave such a check to his proceedings, that he was fain to stretch his wits, and valour on the very tenterhooks, before it was again recovered. 3 Concressant, on the River Souldre, beautified with a strong and magnificent Castle. 4 Chasteau-Roux, on the River Indre: of which little memorable. 5 Issanden, on the River Theo, the Balliage for that part of the Countrey. 6 Montfalcon, an antient Barony. 7 Argenton, on the River Creuse, the Title and Estate of Philip de Comines, here called Seigneur de Argenton, who writ the History of France under Lewis the 11th, in which he dived so far into, and writ so plainly of the greatest affairs of State, that Queen Katharine de Medices used to say, that he had made as many Heretickes in State-policy, as Luther had done in Religion. 8 Sancerre, seated on an high hill near the River Loire, by some Latin writers called Xantodorum, but most gene-Poicton. rally ſaid to be called, quaſi ſacrum Cereris, from the Goddeſſe Ceres, herein worſhipped in the times of Gentiliſme. A Town of great conſequence and ſtrength, and as ſuch aſſigned over to the Hugonots, An. 1569. as a Town of caution for their ſecurity, and the better keeping of the Articles of Peace then agreed upon: Famous not long after for enduring a moſt deſperate and tedious ſiege, under Charles the 9th, by whom theſe Articles were almoſt no ſooner made than broken. Before which time, it was not under the command of the French Kings, but under the direct dominions of its own Princes, called the Earls of Sancerre, who had the Soveraignty thereof; but being taken by the Kings Forces, upon this occaſion, An. 1573. and the Walls thrown down, a Garriſon was put into the Caſtle, to keep it for the time to come at the Kings devotion, the rents and profits of it ſtill remaining to the true Proprietaries.

Here is alſo in this Province the Town and Signeury of Aubignie, adorned with many priviledges, an ample territory, and a beautifull Caſtle. Beſtowed by Charles the ſixth on Robert, the ſecond Sonne of Alan Stewart, Earl of Lennox in Scotland, for his many ſignall ſervices againſt the Engliſh, and is ſtill the honourary title and poſſeſſion of the ſecond Branch of that noble and illuſtrious Family; hence called by the name of Lords of Aubignie.

But as for Berry it ſelf, and the Fortunes of it, we may pleaſe to know that the old Inhabitants of it, were the Bituriges Cubi, (or the Biteriges Liberi, as ſome Writers call them) ſubdued but not without great difficulty by the matchleſs Cæſar; in the firſt diviſion of Gallia, made part of Aquitain, and in the new modelling of that Province by the Emperour Conſtantine, a part of Aquitania Prima, won from the Romans by the Gothes, and from them by the French, it was for long time under the command of Provinciall Governours; one of which, called by the name of Godfrey, obtained that dignity from Hugh Capet, and his Poſterity enjoyed that Office, under the Kings of France, till the dayes of King Henry the firſt; of whom the Inheritance and Eſtate was bought by Harpin, one of the deſcendants of that Godfrey. But long he had not held it as Proprietary, in his own right, when deſirous to make one in the Holy Wars, he ſold it back again to King Philip the firſt (the better to furniſh himſelf for that expedition) An. 1096. to be united to the Crown after his deceaſe. Since which time, the Soveraignty of it hath been alwayes in the Crown of France; but the poſſeſſion and Revenue ſometimes given with the title of Duke, for a portion to ſome of the Kings younger Sonnes, to be holden of them in Appennage, under the Soveraignty and command of the Doner and his Succeſſors. The firſt of thoſe that held this title, was John, a younger Sonne of King John of France, and Unkle unto Charles the 6th, during whoſe Reign, betwixt this Duke, and thoſe of Burgundy and Orleans, the Realm of France was miſerably diſtracted into Broils and Factions. The ſecond was another John, Sonne of Charles the 6th, who dying in his minority, was ſucceeded in this title, by his Brother Charls, Succeſſor to his Father in the Crown it ſelf. The fourth and laſt, (for it had no more then four Dukes in all) was Charles, the youngeſt Sonne of King Charles the 7th, who ſiding with the Earl of Charolois, did ſo much trouble the affairs of France, under Lewis the 11th, by whom he was made Duke of Normandy, and of Guienne afterwards, but held neither long. After whoſe death it was united to the Crown, never ſince ſeparated from it; but though it never had Duke ſince, it hath had three Dutcheſſes: firſt giving the title of Dutcheſs to the Lady Joan, Daughter of Lewis the 11th, and Wife to Lewis the 12th, then Duke of Orleans, eſtated herein by her ſaid Husband, when coming to the Crown, he divorced her from him, to make room for the Lady Anne, Dutcheſſe of Bretagne, the Widow of Charles the 8th, his Predeceſſor. Conferred after her deceaſe, but on more honourable grounds, by King Francis the firſt, on the Lady Margaret his ſiſter, firſt marryed to Charles Duke of Alanſon, and after his deceaſe to Henry of Albret King of Navarre: the laſt that had this title, being another Margaret, a Daughter of the ſaid King Francis, maryed to Philibert Emanuel Duke of Savoy.

II. POICTOU.

POICTOU is bounded on the Eaſt, with Tourein, Berry, and Limoſin; on the North, with Bretagne, and Anjou; on the South, with Xaintoigne, a member of the Dukedome of Aquitain; and on the Weſt, with the Aquitain Seas.

It is called in Latine Pictavia, from the Pictones, as Ptolemy, Cæſar, and ſome others; or the Pictavi, as Antoninus calleth them, the old Inhabitants hereof: and is a Countrey ſo great and plentifull, that there are numbred in it 1200 Pariſhes, and three Biſhopricks. A ſtrong argument of the populouſneſs and largeneſs of it. Beſides the goodneſs of the Soil, it hath many other great helps to enrich it; that is to ſay, a large Sea coaſt, ſome capacious Harbours, not a few navigable Rivers, emptying themſelves into the ſea; beſides the benefit which redounds to it from the Clin, or Clavius, the Creviſe, and Vienne, three Rivers falling into the Loire; which alſo glides along on the North hereof.

The principall Towns and Cities of it are, 1 Poictiers, in Latine Pictavis, ſeated upon the Clin, or Clavius, by Ptolemy called Auguſtoritum: the largeſt City for compaſſe of ground within the Walls, next to Paris it ſelf; but containing in that circuit, Meadows, Corn-fields, and other waſte grounds. It is an Univerſity, eſpecially for the ſtudy of the Civil Lawes, and a See Epiſcopall: one of the Biſhops hereof being S. Hilarie, ſurnamed Pictavenſis, that renowned Father of the Church, and a ſtout Champi-

Champion of the Catholick Faith againſt the Arians, though countenanced in their Hereſie by the Emperour Conſtantius. 2 Souri, upon the River Charente, neer the edge of Xaintoigne. 3 Talmont, upon the ſhores of the Ocean. 4 Beaumoir, a Sea-town alſo, and a reaſonable good Port, neer the confines of Bretagne. 5 Roch-ſur-yon, which gave the title of Prince to one of the Branches of the Royall race of Bourbon. 6 Luſignan, on the River Ion, denominating the noble Family of Luſignan, ſometimes Kings of Hieruſalem, and afterwards of Cyprus; which laſt they had in exchange for the firſt, by the donation of King Richard the firſt of England. 7 Lucon, or Luſſon, ſeated upon a navigable Arm of the Sea: ſufficiently famous in being the Epiſcopall See of the renowned Cardinal of Richelieu, who ſo long managed the affairs of France, for King Lewis the thirteenth. 8 Mailleſais, a Biſhops See alſo. 9 Thovars, which gives the title of Duke to the antient Family of Tremovile, from which the Dukes of Bretagne did derive themſelves; from the time that Conſtance the Daughter and Heir of Conan, after the death of Geofrie Plantagenet her firſt Husband, had Guy of Thovars for her ſecond. 10 Chaſtell Herauld, (or Caſtrum Heraldi) on the River Vienne, of which James Hamilton, Earl of Arran in Scotland, by the gift of King Henry the ſecond of France, the better to aſſure him to the French Faction there, againſt the Engliſh, had the title of Duke. Poictou.

In the Vine-Fields of this Countrey, within two Leagues of Poictiers, was fought that memorable Battell, between John of France, and Edward the Sonne of King Edward the third, ſurnamed the Black Prince. Who being diſtreſſed by the number of the French, would willingly have departed on honourable terms; which the French not accepting, in ſtead of conqueſt, found a Fatall overthrow. For they preſuming on their own ſtrength, to their own diſadvantage, bereft the enemy of all opportunity of retiring: whereas ordinary policy would inſtruct the Leader of an Army, to make his enemy, if he would flie, a Bridge of Gold; as Count Petillan uſed to ſay. Hereupon Themiſtocles would not permit the Grecians to break the Bridge made over the Helleſpont by Xerxes; leſt the Perſians ſhould be compelled to fight, and ſo happen to recover their former loſſes: and Charles the ſixth loſt his Army, by intercepting of our Henry the fifth in his march to Calice. For where all way of flight or retreat is ſtopt, the baſeſt Souldier will rather die with glory in the Front of his Battell, than flie and be killed with ignominy. So true a Miſtreſſe of hardy reſolutions is Deſpair; and no leſs true this Proverb of ours, Make a Coward fight, and he will kill the Devil. On the contrary, it hath been the uſe of divers politick Captains, to make their own Souldiers fight more reſolutely, by taking from them all hope of ſafety, but by Battell. So did William the Conquerour; who at his arrivall into England, burnt the Ships which tranſported his Army: thereby giving his Souldiers to wit, that their lives lay in the ſtrength of their Arms, and courage of their hearts, not in the nimbleneſs of their heels. Tariff, the leader of the Moors into Spain, burnt likewiſe all his Navy, one only Pinnace excepted; which he reſerved to carry tidings of his ſucceſs. So when Charles Martell encountred that infinite hoſt of the Saracens, (of which you have already heard) he commanded the people of Tours to open the Gates only to the Victors. Then he led his Army over the Loire, placing on the banks thereof certain Troops of Horſemen, to kill all ſuch as fled out of the field: Hereby informing his men, that there was to them no more France than what they fought on; unleſs they were Conquerours. In like manner, the ſame Themiſtocles, cunningly working the Perſians to encloſe the Greek Navy on every ſide; inflamed the Grecians with ſuch courage, by a neceſſity of fight, that they gave their enemies the moſt memorable defeat that ever hapned on thoſe ſeas.

But to proceed, the people of this Province have more in them of the old Gall, than any in France; as lying ſo betwixt the borders of the Gothes, and French, that it was never throughly planted, or poſſeſſed by either. An Argument whereof may be, that they are naturally more rude, ſubtile, crafty, and contentious than the reſt of their Countrey men; and have a Dialect by themſelves much differing from the common French, having many words mixt with it (queſtionleſs ſome remainders of the antitient Gallick) which the naturall French man underſtands not. In the diviſion of Gaul by the Emperour Conſtantine they were reckoned for a part of Aquitania ſecunda: and as a part thereof won from the Romans, with Limoſin, Perigort, and Quercu, by Euricus King of the Gothes in Spain. Of whoſe Kingdome it continued part, till thoſe Gothes were diſpoſſeſſed of their hold in France, by Clovis the fifth King of the French, ſurnamed the Great. After which it belonged to the Kings of that People; by the Poſterity of Charles the Great; aſſigned to ſome Provinciall Governours with the title of Earls. One of which being named Ebles (of the old Gothiſh race, if I gueſſe aright) by the laſt Will and Teſtament of William the Debonair Duke of Aquitain, and Earle of Auvergne, ſucceeded in that fair Eſtate. Poictou by this means made a part of the Dukedome of Aquitain, came with it at the laſt to the Kings of England, as ſhall there be ſhewn: and being theirs was given with the title of Earl by King Henry the ſecond, to Richard ſurnamed Coeur de Lyon, who was after King. Seized upon by the French in the unfortunate Reign of King John, with the reſt of the Engliſh Provinces, An. 1202. Alphonſo, brother to Lewis the 9th, is made Earl of Pictou: and being again recovered by King Henry the third, it was by him conferred on his Brother Richard Earl of Cornwall. But Henry being entangled in the Barons Wars, and Richard wholly taken up with the affairs of Germany, of which by ſome of the Electors he was choſen Emperour: it was fully conquered by the French, and never ſince diſmembred from that Crown, for ought I can find. For though in the more active times of King Edward the third, ſome of the beſt Towns and pieces of it were poſſeſſed by the Engliſh: yet were they loſt again ſoon after, according to the various ſucceſſes and events of War.

12 LIMOSIN, 13 PERIGORT, 14 QUERCU.

THeſe Provinces I have joyned together, becauſe for the moſt part they have followed the ſame fortune; being ſometimes French, and ſometime Engliſh, according to the ſucceſſes of either Nation.

1 LIMOSIN, the largeſt of the three, hath on the Eaſt, Bourbonnois; on the Weſt, Perigort; on the North, and North-weſt, Poictou, and Berry; on the South, Auvergne. It is divided into the Higher, properly called Limoſin; and the Lower, commonly called La Marche: both parts, but ſpecially La Marche, which lieth towards Auvergne, being mountainous and not very fruitfull; but of a free and open Air; inhabited by a people of a more ſtaid and ſober nature, than the reſt of the French; frugall in expence, and moderate in diet; only ſo great devourers of bread, that they are grown into a By-word.

The chief Towns in La March, or the Lower Limoſin, are, 1 Tulles, ſeated in a rough and hilly Countrey, a Biſhops See. 2 Uzarche, ſeated amongſt the Mountains, on the River Vezere, a very fierce and violent current; with which ſo fortified on all ſides, that it is thought to be a very ſtrong and ſecure dwelling. 3 Treinac. 4 Douſenac. 5 Belmont. 6 Meiſſac. 7 Brive le Gaillard, &c. In the Higher Limoſin the chief Towns are, 1 Limoges a Biſhops See, the principall of the Lemovices, from whom denominated; by Ptolemy called Ratiaſtum. A neat, but no large City, rich, populous, and inhabited by a people of ſo great an induſtry, that they compell every one to work; and is therefore by the French called the Priſon of Beggers. Seated on the Vienne. At the taking of it when revolted, Edward the Black Prince could by no means be allured to pity the diſtreſſed Citizens, till purſuing his enemies, he ſaw three French Gentlemen make head againſt his Army; the conſideration of whoſe magnanimity drew him to pity, where before he had vowed revenge. 2 Chaluz, at the beſieging of which, our Richard the firſt was ſlain by a ſhot from an Arbaliſt; the uſe of which Warlike Engine, he firſt ſhewed to the French. Whereupon a French Poet made theſe Verſes, in the perſon of Atropos.

Hoc volo, non aliâ Richardum morte perire,
Ut qui Francigenis Baliſtæ primitùs uſum
Tradidit, ipſe ſui rem primitùs experiatur:
Quamq; aliis docuit, in ſe vim ſentiat artis.

It is decreed thus muſt great Richard die,
As he that firſt did teach the French to dart
An Arbaliſt; 'tis juſt he firſt ſhould trie
The ſtrength, and taſte the fruits of his own Art.

The man that ſhot him was called Bertram de Gurdon, who being brought before the King (for the King neglecting his wounds, never gave over the Aſſault till he gained the place) boldly juſtified his Action, as done in the ſervice of his Countrey, and for revenge of the death of his Father and Brother, whom the King had cauſed to be ſlain. Which heard, the King not only cauſed him to be ſet at liberty, but gave him an hundred ſhillings ſterling, in reward of his Gallantry. 3 Soubſterrein, on the confines of Berry. 4 Confaulat. 5 Dorat, on the River Vienne. 6 Boiſſon. 7 Birat, of which nothing memorable.

2 PERIGORT, hath on the Eaſt, Auvergn, and Quercu; on the Weſt, Xaintoigne; on the North, Limoſin; and on the South, ſome part of Gaſcoigne. The Countrey and people are much of the ſame condition with that of Limoſin, ſaving that Perigort is the more woody; and thoſe woods plentifull of Cheſnuts. The chief Towns of it are, 1 Perigeux, the principall City of the Petrogorii, by Ptolemy called Veſſena, now a Biſhops See; ſome footſteps of which name remain in a part of Perigeux; (for the Town is divided into two parts) which to this day is called Veſune; in which ſtandeth the Cathedrall Church, and the Biſhops Palace. The whole City ſeated in a very pleaſant Valley, environed with Downs, affording a moſt excellent Wine; and having in it as a mark of the Roman greatneſs, the ruins of a large and ſpacious Amphitheatre. 2 Bergerac, ſeated on the great River of Dordonne. 3 Sarlat, a Biſhops See. 4 Nontron, defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle. 5 Miramont. 6 La Roche. 7 Marſac, where is a Well which ebbeth and floweth according to the pulſe of the River of Bourdeaux. And 8 Angoleſme, in the North-weſt, towards Xaintoigne, the ſeat of the Engoliſmenſes in the time of the Romans, now a Biſhops See: ſeated upon the River of Charente, with which it is almoſt encompaſſed; the other ſide being defended by a ſteep and rocky Mountain. A Town of great importance, when poſſeſſed by the Engliſh, being one of their beſt out-works for defence of Bourdeaux: one of the Gates hereof being to this day called Chande, ſeems to have been the work of Sir John Chandois Banneret, one of the firſt Founders of the moſt noble Order of the Garter, then Governour hereof for King Edward the third. Being recovered from the Engliſh by Charles the fifth, it was beſtowed on John, the third Son of Lewis Duke of Orleans, Grand-father of King Francis the firſt, with the title of an Earldome only, An. 1408. Afterwards made a Dukedome in the perſon of the ſaid King Francis, before his coming to the Crown. And for the greater honour of it, as much of the adjoyning Countrey was layd unto it, as maketh up a Territory of about 24 French Leagues in length, and 15 in breadth: Within which circuit circuit are the Towns of Chaſteau-neif, and Coignac, on the River of Charente. 3 Roche Faulcon, 4 Chabannes. 5 Meriville. 6 Villebois, &c. Since that united to the Crown, it hath of late times given the title of Duke to Charles Earl of Auvergne, An. 1618. the Baſe Sonne of Charles the ninth, conſequently extracted from the houſe of Angoleſme. Aquitain.

3 QUERCU, is encompaſſed about with Limoſin, Perigort, Languedoc, and Auvergne. A populous Countrey for the bigneſſe (being one of the leaſt in all France) and very fruitfull withall, though ſomewhat mountainous. The principall places in it, 1 Cahors, the chief City of the Cadurci, in the times of the Romans; ſtill a great, ſtrong, and well traded Town, and the See of a Biſhop, who is alſo the Temporall Lord of it; ſeated upon the River Loch. From hence deſcended and took name the noble Family of Chawort, De Cadurcis in Latine: out of which by a Daughter of Patrick de Cadurcis, Lord of Ogmore and Kidwelly in the Marches of Wales, maryed to Henry the third Earl of Lancaſter, come the Kings of England, and moſt of the Royall houſes in Europe. 2 Montalban, a Biſhops See alſo, built on the top of an high Mountain, and ſo well fortified by all advantages of Art, that it is thought to be the moſt defenſible of any in France: of which it gave ſufficient proof in that notable reſiſtance which it made to King Lewis tha the thirteenth, in his Wars againſt thoſe of the Religion, An. 1622. 3 Soulac, upon the River Dordonne. 4 Nigrepelliſſe, another of the Towns poſſeſſed by the Proteſtant party, reduced to the obedience of King Lewis the thirteenth, An. 1621. but in Novemb. following, they murdered the Kings Garriſon, and the next yeer denyed admiſſion to the King. Taken at laſt, An. 1622. by the King in perſon; the puniſhment did exceed the crime. For the men were not only killed and hanged, as they had deſerved; but many of the Women alſo: ſome of them having their ſecret parts rammed with Gun-powder, and ſo torn in pieces, by the unpattern'd barbariſm of the mercileſs and revengefull Souldiers. 5 Chaſteau-Saraſin, a ſtrong Town on the Garond. 6 Nazaret. 7 Burette, &c.

The antient Inhabitants of theſe three Provinces, were the Lemovices, the Petrocorii, and the Cadurci, before mentioned: of which the Lemovices, and Cadurci, were caſt into the Province of Aquitania Prima; the Petrocorii, and Engoliſmenſes, into Aquitania Secunda. In the declining of that Empire, ſeized on by the Gothes, but from them ſpeedily extorted by the conquering French. Afterwards when King Henry the third of England releaſed his right in the Provinces of Normandy, Poictou, Anjou, Tourein, and Maine; Lewis the ninth to whom this releaſe was made, gave him in ſatisfaction of all former intereſſes, 300000 l. of Anjovin money, the Dukedome of Guienne, the County of Xaintoigne, as far as to the River of Charent, with the Province of Limoſin. And on the Capitulations made betwixt Edward the third of England, and John of France, then Priſoner to him; Perigort and Quercu (among other conditions) were conſigned over to the Engliſh, diſcharged of all Reſort and Homage to the Crown of France. After which times reſpectively they remained all three in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh, untill their finall expulſion by King Charles the 7th, never ſince that diſmembred from the Crown thereof.

15 AQUITAIN.

THE Dukedome of AQUITAIN, the greateſt and goodlyeſt of all France, contained the Provinces of Xaintoigne, 2 Guienne, 3 Gaſcoigne; with the Iſles of Oleron and Rees, and other Iſlands in the Aquitanick or Weſtern Ocean.

1 XAINTOIGNE is bounded on the Eaſt with Limoſin, and Perigort; on the Weſt, with the Aquitanick Ocean; on the North, with Poictou; and on the South, with Guienne: So called from Sainctes, one of the principall Cities of it; as that from the Santones, a Nation here inhabiting in the time of the Romans, whoſe chief City it was. The River of Charente running through the middle, and ſo on the North border of it, emptieth it ſelf into the Ocean, juſt oppoſite to the Iſle of Oleron; having firſt taken in the Seugne, and the Boutonne, two leſſer Rivers.

The chief Towns of it are, 1 Sainctes, by Ptolemy called Mediolanium, by Antonine, Civitas Santonum, ſeated upon the Charente, a Biſhops See, and the Seneſchalſie for the County. 2 S. John d' Angelie, ſituate on the Boutonne, a Town once impregnably fortified; whereof it hath given ſufficient teſtimony in the Civil Wars of France about Religion, untill the Fatall time was come, in which the great power of that party was to be diſſolved; at what time, (viz. An. 1621.) after a ſiege of forty dayes it was taken by King Lewis the 13th. the Fortifications demoliſhed, the Town left open, and commanded from that time forwards to be called by the name of Lewis-Bourg. 3 Bourg ſur la mer, upon the Dordonne, which for the wideneſs of it is here called a Sea. 4 Retraicte, ſeated near the confluence of the two great Rivers, the Garond, and the Dordonne. 5 Blaye, the moſt Southern Town of all this Countrey, defended with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a good Garriſon, for ſecuring the paſſage unto Bourdeaux; this Town being ſeated on the very mouth of the River which goeth up to it. 6 Rochelle, Rupella in the preſent Latine, but antiently called Santonum Portus, as the chief Haven of the Santones, a well noted Port in the moſt northern part of Xaintoigne; from whence the Countrey hereabouts is called ROCHELOIS. The Town ſeated in the inner part of a fair and capacious Bay, the entrance of which is well aſſured by two very ſtrong Forts, betwixt which there is no more ſpace, than for the paſſage of a good ſhip; every night cloſed up with a maſſie Chain: and the whole Town either environed with deep Mariſhes, or fortified with ſuch Bulwarks, trenches, and other works of modern Fortification, that it was held to be, as indeed it was, the ſafeſt retreat for thoſe of the Reformed Religion in the time of their troubles; as may be ſeen by Aquitain. the ſtory of it, which in brief is thus. At the end of the ſecond Civil Wars, Anno 1568. many Towns conſidering how ill the former Peace had been obſerved, refuſed to take in any of the Kings Garriſons, or permit any of the Papiſts to bear Armes amongſt them; of which Rochel was one: which alſo, contrary to the Kings command, maintained a Navie for their ſafety by Sea, and continued their Fortifications for their defence by Land. So that hither the Queen of Navarre and her Son retired, as to a place of ſafety. Anno 1570, Rochel alone, of all the French Towns held good for the Proteſtants, and is by Monſieur Joinville on all ſides blocked up: but the ſiege ſoon raiſed, and Rochel, Montalban, Sancerre, with others, made cautionary for the peace enſuing. Anno 1575, beſieged by Biron the elder, with an Army of 50000 men, and 60 pieces of Artillery; Charles the ninth, Henry Duke of Anjou, the Duke of Aumal, &c. being alſo preſent at the ſervice: It held out from the beginning of March, till the ſeventh of June, and was then freed; the City having in one moneth endured 13000 ſhot, and the King loſt 20000 men, amongſt them Duke of Aumal for one. Anno 75, & 78, it was attempted by Landerean, the Iſle of Ree taken, but ſoon recovered: the King of Navarre, and Prince of Conde, after that defeat, being received in, in triumph. Anno 1577, beſieged to Sea-ward by Lanſac; who being alſo beaten back, a Peace was made, and eight cautionary Towns more added to their former ſtrength. In the troubles of 85, & 88. the Princes abovenamed made it their Retreat; and from thence iſſued to divert the purpoſes of the Duke of Mercoeur. The next year, Henry the third being ſlain, and the King of Navarre ſeated in the Throne, the Proteſtant party increaſed exceedingly in power and number; and taking advantage of the minority of Lewis the thirteenth, governed themſelves apart as a Free Eſtate, Rochell being made the head of their Common-wealth; fortified to that end with 12 Royal Baſtions of Free ſtone, with double ditches, deep and broad in the bottom, abundantly furniſhed with Powder and Ammunition, 150 pieces of Canon, beſides Culverins and ſmaller pieces, with victuals, and all other neceſſaries to endure a ſiege; and grown unto ſo great wealth, that there were thought to be an hundred or ſixſcore Merchants, worth 100000 Crowns a piece. This drew upon them the great War, in the years 1621, & 1622. Which ended in the loſs of all their Garriſons, except Rochell, and Montalban: thoſe to remain in pledge with the Proteſtant party, but for three years only. Which time expired, the Rochellers were again beſieged both by Sea and Land, the Iſle of Ree took from them, their Fleet broke at Sea, and the mouth of their Haven ſo barred up with Ships chained together, and ſunk into it, and other works of ſtupendious greatneſs, in the very Ocean, that no forein ſuccours out of England, (however really intended, and bravely followed) had been able to come to their relief. In the end, having endured all the extremities of a tedious ſiege, they yeelded themſelves to the Kings mercy, Anno 1628. Montalban, Nimes, and other places newly fortified, ſubmitting at the ſame time alſo. 7 Marans, a great Town, and of great importance, ſeated by the Ocean Sea in a low fenny place, as it were in a Peninſula, and ſo incompaſſed on every ſide with mariſh watry grounds, that there is no acceſs to the works thereof, but by very few, and thoſe narrow paſſages. 8 Chaſtillon; and 9 Saubize, places of good ſtrength alſo, but of greater note; the firſt, for giving ſurname to a noble Family, out of which iſſued formerly the Earls of Blois, and of late times Gaſper de Colligni and Monſieur D' Andalal his Brother, much mentioned in the wars of France about Religion; the later giving the title of a Duke to a younger Son of the Houſe of Rohan, as great a ſtickler in that cauſe, as thoſe Brethren were.

II. GUIENNE, the ſecond Province of the Dukedom of Aquitain, is bounded on the North with Xaintoigne, from which parted by the River of Dordonne; on the South, with Gaſcoigne; on the Eaſt, with Perigort; and on the Weſt, with the Aquitanick Ocean, from the Pyrenean hils to the River of Bourdeaux. The reaſon of the name I could never learn. Some think it a corruption of the old name, Aquitain; but not very probably. The Countrey generally plentiful of Corn and Wine; the one being vented into Spain, and the other into England. The people, as thoſe of Xaintoigne alſo, tall of ſtature, of able bodies, haters of ſervitude and baſeneſs, and well practiſed in armes; which qualities of the minde, and conſtitution of body, (being therein ſo different from the reſt of France) it is poſſible enough, they might have from the Engliſh; who for 300 years were poſſeſſed of the Countrey, and have left many tracks of their language in it.

The principal Rivers of this Province are, the Garond, and the Dordonne, meeting together at Retraicte, a Town of Xaintoigne; and thence in one Channel falling into the Ocean: the Countrey betwixt theſe two Rivers being called Le Pais entre les deux mers, or, The Countrey betwixt the two Seas; the Rivers hereabouts reſembling a ſmall Sea in wideneſs. Of leſſer note are, 1 Jearne, 2 Baize, 3 Lot, and 4 Liſle, falling into the Garond, in their ſeveral places.

Chief Towns whereof are, 1 Bourdeaux, ſeated on the South bank of the Garond, not far from the Sea, amongſt the mariſhes. The chief City of the Bituriges, who poſſeſſed this tract; and for diſtinctions ſake, were called Bituriges Ubiſci, thoſe of Bourges being called Bituriges Cubi. It was after called Burdegala, and Civitas Burdegalenſium; the Metropolis at that time of Aquitania ſecunda; conſequently an Archbiſhops See, as it ſtill continueth. A fair, rich, and populous City, beautified with many goodly buildings, an Univerſity founded here by K. Lewis the 11th, and a large Cathedral. It was made Parliamentary for Aquitain, and the parts adjoyning, by K. Charles the 7th. Anno 1453, not long after the expulſion of the Engliſh thence: and is one of the moſt noted Empories in all the Kingdom, frequented very much by the Dutch, and Engliſh for Gaſcoigne wines; over which laſt, the French are ſo jealous, that they permit them not to come up the River, till they have unladen all their Ordnance at the Port of Blaye. The Countrey hereabouts is, from this Town, called Bourdelois. 2 Fronſac, lying in the Countrey betwixt the two Seas (as they call it,) which gives the title of a Duke to the noble Family of the the Earls of S. Paul, now Dukes of Fronſac; and to the Countrey round about, the name of Fronſadaze. 3 Libourn, at the confluence of the two great Rivers, oppoſite to Retraicte in Xaintoigne. 4 Soulac, at the influx of the Garond, in the Peninſula, or demi-Iſland: called the Countrey of Medoc. 5 Baionne a Sea Town, and Epiſcopal See, frontiering on the coaſt of Spain. 6 St. John de Luz, at the foot of the Pyrenæan Mountains, all about which, the people ſpeak the Baſquiſh, or old Gaſcoigne language, being the ſame with that of Biſcay. 7 D' Acqs, an Epiſcopal See, by Ptolemie called Aquæ Auguſtæ, (Civitas Aquenſium, by Antoninus) from whence this part of Gaule had the name of Aquitain. Theſe three laſt being all of them Frontier Towns, are ſtrongly fortified. 8 Bazas, (called Coſſium by Ptolemie) the chief City of the Vaſates, whom Antoninus placeth in this tract; now a Biſhops See, ſituate on the borders of Gaſcoigne, in the Countrey from hence called Bazadas. Towns of leſs note, 1 Eſparrez: 2 St. Baſil. 3 Reule. 4 Chaſteau-Muron. 5 Monſeguer. 6 Sainctterre, &c. Here is alſo in this Province the Countrey of Buche, lying along the Sea-coaſt from Baionne to Medoc, a barren, poor, and wretched Countrey, the worſt piece of France; only remarkable for the Lords or owners of it, formerly of the houſe of Foix: of which the moſt remarkable were Gaſton de Foix, for his many ſignal ſervices againſt the French, created Earl of Longueville, and Knight of the Garter by King Henry the ſixth; and his Son John de Foix, created Earl of Kendall, and Knight of the Garter, by the ſaid King Henry; but better known in Engliſh ſtories by the name of Capital, or Capdau de Buche, the Lords hereof having no higher title than that of Captain.

Gaſcoigne.

III. GASCOIGNE, the third and largeſt part of the Dukedom of Aquitain, hath on the Eaſt Languedoc, from which parted by the River Garond; on the Weſt, the Pyrenean Mountains, which divide it from Spain; on the North, Perigort, Quercu, and ſome part of Guienne; and on the South, a main tract of the Pyrenees, running on to Languedoc. The Countrey generally fruitful, but of Wines eſpecially; brought hence to Bourdeaux as the Staple for that commodity, and thence tranſported into England in great abundance.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Auſcii, Laſtoraces, Convenares, Conſerani, &c. making up a great part of the Province of Novempopulonia: united in this name of Gaſcoigne on the conqueſt of it by the Vaſcones, a Spaniſh Nation, who fell in here, during the reign of Dagobert the 11th King of the French. And though ſubdued by Clovis the ſecond, Son of Dagobert, yet they left their name unto the Countrey; divided afterwards according to the chief Seigneuries and Eſtates thereof, into 1 the Principality of Bearn, 2 the Earldoms of Foix, 3 Comminges, 4 Bigorre, 5 Armaignac, 6 Albret, and 7 the Countrey of Agenois.

1 The Principality of BEARN, is ſituate at the Foot of the Pyrenees, where they joyn to Languedoc; ſo called from Benearnum, a principal City of this tract, mentioned by Antoninus, and others of the ancient Writers. The Countrey of good paſturage, though amongſt the mountains, affording plenty of Cattel, butter and cheeſe; and in ſome places wines alſo, little inferiour in taſt and colour to the beſt of France; and many medicinal ſprings iſſuing from the hils adjoyning.

The Religion here, as generally in all Gaſcoigne, is that of the Reformed Churches, introduced about the year 1560; or rather then confirmed by publick authority of the King and Queen of Navarre: at what time the Maſs, Tithes, Church-lands, and the Prelates Votes in Parliament (according to the Genevian way of Reformation) were condemned together. And ſo it ſtood untill the year 1620, when by the power and authority of Lewis the 13th, King of France and Navarre, the Prelates were reſtored to their Votes and Lands, the Clergy to their Tithes, and Maſs cauſed alſo to be ſaid in ſome of their Churches: yet ſo, that thoſe of the Reformed were left unto the free exerciſe of their own Religion, as in former times.

The principal Towns hereof are, 1 Orthes, the ſame which anciently was called Benearnum. 2 Leſcar, a Biſhops See, the ancient ſeat and habitation of the Princes of Bearn. 3 Oleron, a Biſhops See alſo, mounted upon an high hill, in the more mountainous parts of the Countrey. 4 Sainctterre, well garriſoned ſince the reduction of this Countrey to the Kings obedience. 5 Pau, the principal of all the Province, honoured with a Parliament or Court of Judicature for all the Countrey; and a fair Palace of the Prince, built by Henry of Albret, King of Navarre, and Lord of Bearn; the Seat of him and his Succeſſors, till the coming of King Henry the fourth to the Crown of France. 6 Grenade, upon the Frontier towards Begorre.

This Countrey for a long time followed the fortune of Aquitain; and in the general diſmembring of the French Empire, had its own Proprietaries, who were the abſolute Lords of it, acknowledging no Superior for ought I can finde. The principal of which was that Gaſton (a name very frequent in this Family) who in the year 1118 accompanied with many noble perſons of France, aſſiſted Alphonſo King of Navarre and Aragon at the ſiege of Saragoſſa: in the courſe of which action he did ſo good ſervice, that he was not only much honoured, but liberally rewarded for it; both he and his poſterity enjoying many priviledges in the conquered City. By the Heir general of this Gaſton, maried to William de Moncada Seneſchall of Catalogne, and of great poſſeſſions in that Countrey, the Lordſhip and Soveraignty of Bearn fell unto that Family, about the year 1220. but long it did not tarry in it. For William being ſlain in the conqueſt of the Iſle of Majorca, Anno 1228. left his Eſtates to Gaſton de Moncada his eldeſt ſon; who much increaſed them by the addition of the Earldom of Begorre, and many other goodly pieces, accrowing to him in the right of his Wife Martha, heir thereof; whereof more anon. Grown by this means to ſuch authority and eſteem in the Court of Aragon, that (being without iſſue male) Conſtance his eldeſt daughter was thought a match of great advantage to Alphonſo eldeſt ſon to King James the firſt. But dying without iſſue by her, Anno 1260. the Soveraignty of Bearn with all the Appendixes thereof both in France and Spain, became united to the Earldom of Gascoigne. Foix (an Estate equall to it both in power and patrimony) by the mariage of Roger Bernard the ninth Earl of Foix, who succeeded in that Earldom, Anno 1262. with Margaret de Moncada another daughter of this Gaston, and Heir of Bearn. Afterwards being much increased both in power and honour (by the addition of the Earldom of Comminges, the Visconty of Narbon, and the Signeury of Buche in Guyenne, to this house of Foix) it was added to the Crown of Navarre, by the mariage of Gaston Earl of Foix, and Soveraign of Bearn, with Eleanor the Heir of that Kingdom, Anno 1481: descending with that Crown upon Henry of Bourbon, King of Navarre, and afterwards of France, by the name of Henry the fourth; but governed by him alwaies as a State distinct, without relation or resort to the Crown of France. But Lewis the thirteenth his Son, finding some inconvenience in that distinction, incorporated it for ever to the rest of his Dominions, Anno 1620, though not without some opposition from the subjects of Bearn: which he was fain to over-bear by his personal presence, and the advantage of such Forces as he carried with him. Since reckoned as a part of that Kingdom, awed, as the rest of France, by Forts and Garrisons, and governed in Civil matters by the Parliament established at Pau; the Judges and Counsellors thereof at the Kings appointing.

Foix

2 The Earldom of FOIX, is situate on the West of Languedoc; Commingeois interposing betwixt it and Bearn. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Maseros, on the Garond, a Bishops See. 2 Pamieres, a Bishops See also, seated on the River Lagiere. 3 Foix, on the same River, called in Latin, Fuxium, and the Earls hereof Comites Fuxienses; the chief seat of the Flussates in the times of the Romans, now giving name to all the Countrey. 4 Mirande, in the County of Esterac, and the chief thereof; but otherwise of no great accompt. 5 Savardun, and 6 Monthault, two strong pieces. 7 Mirepoix (oppidum Miropense) a Bishops See also, but of no note otherwise. The old Inhabitants of this tract, besides the Flussates above mentioned, were called Vaccæi, perhaps of the abundance of Kine bred in the pastures hereof: upon which ground, the Earls of Foix have for their Armes, 3 Cowes passant Gules, horned and hoofed Azure, in a Field Or.

The first of these Earls was Bernard of Carcassone, advanced to this honour by Raimond Earl of Tholouse, who had then the Soveraignty hereof, Anno 1062. The Patrimony hereof much increased by mariage, (no one Family more) many fair lands in the Marishes of Province being added to it by Estmiette, wife of Roger the second; not a few Signeuries in Catalonia, by Cerile daughter of Earl Raimond, wife of Roger the third; the Earldom of Castelbon, by Brunicen wife of Roger-Bernard the first; the Earldom of Comminges by Eleanor the wife of Gaston the second. Besides all which, in or about the year 1262, Roger Bernard, the nineth Earl, united Bearn to his Estate, as before is said; whose Grand-childe Isabel (the male issue failing) conveyed the whole Estate to Archembald, Lord or Captain of Buche, in the Province of Guienne. Gaston, the Nephew of this Archembald by his eldest Son John, was for his many good services to Charles the seventh, made a Peer of France: and did not only purchase the Visconty of Narbon, from the Lords whereof he was descended by Mainguard, wife of Roger-Bernard the second; but by his mariage with Eleanor or Leanora Daughter and Heir of John King of Navarre, united that Kingdom to his house, though he enjoyed it not in his own person. By means of which Alliances, and other improvements of Estate, this Family grew to so great power and reputation, that there were four Queens at one time descended from it: viz. Katharine Queen of Navarre, German Queen of Aragon, Anne Queen of France, and Anne Queen of Hungarie and Bohemia. Before which time (I mean the addition of Navarre to their other Estates) the Earls of Foix were in so high esteem in the Court of France, that in all publick Ceremonies they took place of the Earls of Vendosme, though extracted from the Royal bloud, and lived in a condition equal to most Kings in Christendom. In which regard, as also that the later Kings of Navarre and present Kings of France, are descended of them; it will not be amiss to subjoyn here the Catalogue of

The Earls of Foix.

A. Ch.
1062	1	Bernard the younger Son of Roger Earl of Carcasson, the first Earl of Foix.
1096	2	Roger, the Son of Bernard, an adventurer in the first war for the Holy Land.
1111	3	Roger II. Son of Roger the first.
1144	4	Roger III. Son of Roger the second.
1188	5	Raymond-Roger son of Roger the third, a great stickler for the Earls of Tholouse, in favour of the Albigenses, and their opinions.
1223	6	Roger-Bernard, the inheritor of his Fathers opinions, as well as of his Estates and fortunes.
1241	7	Roger IV. surnamed Rotfer, a companion of the King S. Lewis in the Holy Land.
1255	8	Roger-Bernard II. Son of Rotfer.
1262	9	Roger Bernard III. who added Bearn and its Appendixes unto his Estates.
1306	10	Gaston the Son of Roger-Bernard the third, and of Margaret de Moncada the Heir of Bearn.
1315	11	Gaston II. Son of Gaston the first, a great Enemy to the English in behalf of Philip de Valois; and as great a friend to the King of Aragon against the Moors, in which war he was slain.
1344	12	Gaston III. for his beauty surnamed Phœbus, inferiour for Revenue and the port he lived in, to few Kings in Christendom.
1390	13	Matthew Earl of Castelbon, Son of Roger-Bernard Earl of Castelbon the second Son of Gaston the first: designed designed ſucceſſor to John King of Aragon, whoſe eldeſt Daughter he had maried, but diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the Duke of Momlanc.

1399 14 Archembald Captain of Buche, and Iſabel Siſter and Heir of Matthew, Earls of Foix.

1413 15 John Son of Archembald, a great Enemy to the Engliſh in behalf of Charles the ſeventh of France: his younger Brother Gaſton, as great a friend unto the Engliſh, ſucceeding in the Eſtate of Buche. From Peter the ſecond Son of this John, deſcended Odet de Foix, Lord of Lautrech, ſo renowned in the wars of Italie.

1436 16 Gaſton IV. Son of John a principal Agent in the Conqueſt of Guienne from the Engliſh; by his mariage with Eleanor Daughter and Heir of John King of Navarre, advanced his houſe unto that Kingdome: Grandfather by John Viſc. of Narbone his ſecond Son to Gaſton de Foix Duke of Nemours, ſlain at the taking of Ravenna, Anno 1512.

1472 17 Francis Phœbus Nephew of Gaſton the fourth, and of Eleanor of Navarre by their Son Gaſton Prince of Viane, ſucceeded his ſaid Grandfather in the Earldom of Foix, and his Grandmother in the Realm of Navarre about 7 years after. Gaſcoigne.

1483 18 Katharine the Siſter and Heir of Francis, by her mariage with John Earl of Albret, added that Earldom alſo to the houſe of Foix.

1517 19 Henry of Albret Son of John and Katharine, King of Navarre, Soveraign of Bearn and Earl of Foix, by his marriage with the Lady Margaret, Siſter to King Francis the firſt, added the greateſt part of the lands of Armaignac unto his Eſtate.

1556 20 Antonie of Burbon Duke of Vendoſme, and Joan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Henry of Albret, Kings of Navarre, Soveraigns of Bearn, and Earls of Foix.

1572 21 Henry II. Son of Joan and Antonie, King of Navarre, Soveraign Lord of Bearn, and Earl of Foix; on the murder of Henry the third of France, ſucceeded alſo in that Kingdom by the name of Henry the fourth, Anno 1589, the Father of Lewis the thirteenth, and Grandfather of King Lewis the fourteenth, now reigning, Anno 1648. And ſo having brought the Earls of Foix to the Crown of France, it is time to leave them. The Arms of theſe great Earls we have ſeen before.

3 The Earldom of BEGORRE is ſituate North of Bearn, at the foot of the Pyrenæan mountains: ſo called from the Bigerrones, the old inhabitants hereof in the time of Cæſar. Scattered in which, and the adjoyning Principality of Bearn, live a leprous and infectious people, of noyſome breaths, deformed bodies, and ghaſtly viſages: in which regard, not ſuffered to have any commerce with other people, nor to inherit any Lands; but only to apply themſelves to drudgery, and the baſeſt of mechanick trades. From their great miſhapen heads called Capets or Gabets.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Baigneres, famous for medicinal Bathes. 2 Lourde, of which nothing memorable. 3 Tarbe, (by Antonine talled Turſaubica) ſeated upon the River Adour, honoured with a ſtrong Caſtle, an Epiſcopal See, and the Seneſchalſie for all the Countrey of Begorre. Which Countrey having for long time its own Proprietary Earls, under the Soveraignty and Homage of the Crown of Navarre, from the Kings whereof they were extracted, or thoſe Kings from them; was at the laſt, by the mariage of Petronilla, Daughter and Heir of Eſquibat the laſt Earl, to Boſon Vicount of Marſan and Gabardan, added to that houſe. Whoſe Daughter Matthee, marying to Gaſton Prince of Bearn, increaſed that Principality with thoſe goodly pieces of Marſan, Gabardan and Begorre; all brought unto the houſe of Foix, by Margaret, Daughter of this Gaſton, maried to Roger-Bernard, as before is ſaid.

The Armes hereof were Azure, a Croſs Argent. By Inigo Ariſta the Son of Simon, Earl of this Countrey, called to the Crown of Navarre, made the Armes of that Kingdom; whereas before that time, the Armes thereof had been Argent, on a Tree Vert, a Croſs in chief, Gules. Which Armes are ſaid to be took by Garcia Ximines the firſt King of Navarre, from ſuch a ſign appearing to him in the Skie, before his firſt battel with the Moores.

4 The Earldom of COMMINGES lyeth betwixt Bearn and Foix, running betwixt both as far Northward, as to border Eaſtward on Begorre. Divided into the Higher, and more mountainous part, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenees; and the Lower, which hath ſomewhat more of the valley in it. The old Inhabitants of both, the Convenæ, and Conſerani. The principal places at preſent in the Lower Comminges are, 1 Lombes, a Biſhops See, but of late erection. 2 Moret, upon the River Garonne. 3 Samathan. 4 Liſle en Dodon. And in the Higher, there is 1 Conſerans, once the chief Town of the Conſerani, now a Biſhops See, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenean hils. 2 S. Bernard, of old called Civitas Convenarum, a Biſhops See alſo, and the chief City of this Earldom. 3 St. Beat, 4 St. Fregou, 5 Monregeau, or Mons Regius, 6 Silliers, &c.

Of the eſtate of this Earldom I have little to ſay, but that it was united to the houſe of Foix, by the mariage of Eleanor, the Daughter of an Earl hereof, to Gaſton the ſecond of that name, and the eleventh Earl of this Houſe. Given afterwards notwithſtanding to a Spaniard called Rodrigo de Villandrada, by Charles the ſeventh. But in the end reſtored again to the houſe of Foix, by the prowes and great ſervices of Gaſton the fourth, who cauſed his uncle Matthew, the youngeſt ſon of Archembald and Iſabel Earls of Foix, to be ſetled in it, according to the will and purpoſe of his Father Archembald, who had given it to him. But falling to the Crown again, it was conferred on John of Leſcon, a Baſtard of the Earl of

Armaignac Armaignac, who was Earl of Comminges, and one of the Marſhals of France in the time of King Lewis the eleventh. The Armes of theſe Earls were Gules, four Orelles in Saltier, Argent.

5 The Earldon of ARMAIGNAC, the greateſt of all theſe Eſtates conſidered ſeverally and apart, lieth on the North of Comminges, and ſo extendeth it ſelf to the banks of the River Garond. Principal Towns are, 1 Aux, upon the River Gez, anciently called Auguſta Auſciorum; the Metropolis or head City of the Province of Novempopulonia; by conſequence an Archbiſhops See: The Revenues whereof are ſaid to be the greateſt of any Prelates in France, computed at no leſs than 40000 l. per annum. 2 Lectoure, a Biſhops See, called of old Leſtoracium, in our moderne Latine Lectodurum. A Town ſo well fortified, when in the power of the Earls of Armaignac, that it held out a ſiege of three moneths againſt the forces of France: but ſince it came into the hands of the French Kings, ſo ſtrengthned and embattelled according to the modern Art of Fortifications, that it is held the ſtrongeſt Bulwark of the Kingdom on this ſide, and their ſureſt Fortreſs againſt Spain. 3 Liſle de Jourdain, which hath the title of an Earldom, bought at the price of 38000 Crowns, of John Duke of Bourbon, by John the fourth Earl of Armaignac, Anno 1421. 4 Auvillar. 5 Auzan. 6 Chaſtel-neau. 7 Malbourquer, 8 Neſtes, of which little memorable.

The Earls of Armaignac fetch their Original from the Kings of Navarre: Sancho the great, having ſubdued ſome Lands in Gaſcoign, which he conferred on Garſias a younger Son of his, with the title of Earl of Armaignac, Anno 1014. On which foundation it increaſed ſo faſt, both in power and honour, that Bernard the fourth Earl hereof, came to be Conſtable of France. And ſo did John the fourth of that name, by the favour of King Charles the ſeventh: who alſo writ himſelf, By the Grace of God Earl of Armaignac; according to the ſtile of Soveraign Princes. A man of ſo conſiderable power in theſe parts of France; that the marriage of a Daughter of his to our Henry the ſixth, was thought the beſt means for eſtabliſhing his Eſtate in Guienne. And I remember it was charged on the Duke of Suffolk, that by breaking off this alliance for that of Anjou, he had been the cauſe of the loſs of the Kings pieces in France. This greatneſs made him ſubject to the jealouſie of King Lewis the eleventh, who worried him out of his Eſtate and his life together. Charles, Brother of this John, ſucceeded by the favour of King Charles the eighth. After whoſe death this fair Eſtate was ſeized on to the uſe of the Crown; till given again by Francis the firſt to Charles Duke of Alanſon, whoſe grand-father had maried with a Siſter of the ſaid Earl John) and to the Lady Margaret his Wife, the ſaid Kings Siſter: who, after the deceaſe of the Duke of Alanſon, brought it to Henry of Albret, and King of Navarre, her ſecond Husband; returning ſo to the Original from whence firſt it came.

The Armes of theſe great Princes, were Quarterly 1 Argent, a Lyon Azure; 2 Gules, a Leopard-Lyon Or. The 3, &c.

6 The Earldom of ALBRET is ſituate on the North-weſt of Armaignac, bordering upon Guienne. The chief Town whereof is 1 Nerac, ſeated on the River of Baize; the only place of ſtrength and moment in all this eſtate. 2 Chaſtell-Jalone, well ſeated to diſturb the Trade betwixt Bourdeaux and Gaſcoigne, but not able to endure a ſiege. 3 Mont de Marſan, and 4 Tartas, both ſeated on the River Ladour: and all four formerly Towns of Caution for thoſe of the Reformed Religion; of which this Countrey is ſo full, that the Popiſh Religion had hardly any footing in all this Territory. Which, though the ſmalleſt of the ſix, and of leaſt Antiquity, had yet the fortune to incorporate all the reſt into it. For John, the Son of Alan Earl of Albret, by his mariage with Katharine, Daughter and ſole Heir of Gaſton, Son of Gaſton of Foix, and of Leanora Princeſs of Navarre, added to his Eſtate the Signeuries of Bearn, Foix, and Begorre. And Henry of Albret his Son, by marying the Lady Margaret, Siſter of King Francis the firſt, united to it thoſe of Armaignac and Comminges. By Jean the Daughter of this Henry, the whole Eſtate was brought to Antonie of Bourbon, Duke of Vendoſme, and Father to King Henry the fourth, becoming ſo united to the Crown of France, from which it was at firſt diſmembred.

The Armes of theſe Earls, were Quarterly 1 France; 2 Gules, a Border ingrailed Arg. The 3d, &c.

7 As for the Countrey of AGENOIS, the laſt part of Gaſcoigne, it never had other hearts (after it left off to be French) than the Dukes of Aquitaine. The principal Cities of it, 1 Agen, a rich, populous, and well-traded Town, ſeated on the Garonne, in a fruitful Countrey: A Biſhops See, a Seneſchalſie, and held to be the faireſt in Gaſcoigne. 2 Condon, a Biſhops See alſo, from which the parts adjoyning are called Condonnois. 3 Villeneufne, 4 Claerac, 5 Marmand, 6 Foy, &c.

Thus having took a brief view of thoſe ſeveral members which made up the great body of the Dukedom of Aquitaine; let us next look on the eſtate of the whole thus brought together: which in the declination of the Roman Empire, was given unto the Gothes, before poſſeſſed of all Gallia Narboneuſis, by Valentinian the third, as a reward for their ſervice in driving the Alani out of Spain. Long the Gothes had not held it, when they were outed of it by Clovis, the fifth King of the French, continuing under his Succeſſors, till Ludovicus Pius made it a Kingdom, and gave it unto Pepin his youngeſt Son. But Charles and Pepin, the Sons of this Pepin, being diſpoſſeſſed by Charles the Bald; it was by him conferred on Arnulph, of the houſe of Burgundie, for his many good ſervices againſt the Normans, Anno 844. Whoſe Succeſſors take here in this order following.

The

The Dukes of Aquitain.

844	1	Ranulph of Burgundie, firſt Duke of Aquitaine.
875	2	William, Earl of Auvergne, Nephew of Ranulph.
902	3	Ebles, Earl of Poictou, ſucceeded in Aquitaine and Auvergne, by the Will and Teſtament of Duke William.
911	4	Ebles II. Son of Ebles the firſt.
935	5	Willam II. the Son of Ebles the ſecond.
970	6	William III. Son of William the ſecond.
1619	7	Guy, the Son of William third.
1021	8	William IV. Son of Guy.
1086	9	William V. Son of William the fourth.
1156	10	Lewis the ſeventh of France, in right of Eleanor his Wife, ſole Heir of William the fifth.
1152	11	Henry, Duke of Normandie, and Earl of Anjou, &c. in right of Eleanor his Wife divorced from Lewis on pretence of ſome conſanguinity; after King of England.
1169	12	Richard, King of England, the Son of Henry.
1199	13	John King of England, the Brother of Richard; who forfeiting his Eſtates in France, on a judicial ſentence pronounced againſt him for the (ſuppoſed) murther of his Nephew Arthur Duke of Bretagne; Aquitaine and the reſt of the Engliſh Provinces were ſeized on by the French, Anno 1202. But notwithſtanding this Arreſt, the Engliſh ſtill continued their pretenſions to it, till at the laſt it was agreed betwixt King Lewis the ninth of France, and Henry the third of England, Anno 1259. That the Engliſh ſhould reſt ſatisfied with Guienne, the bounds whereof were to be the Pyrenees on the South, and the River of Charente on the North, comprehending therein alſo the Countrey of Limoſin; and that on his inveſtiture into this Eſtate, he ſhould relinquiſh all his rights in Normandie, Anjou, Tourein, Maine, &c. In conſideration whereof, he ſhould have 150000 Crowns in ready money. On this accord the Kings of England became Homagers to the Crown of France, which ſometimes they omitted, ſometimes did it by Proxie, but never in perſon, till Philip de Valois required it of K. Edward the third: and becauſe ſuch duties are not often perſonally done by Soveraign Princes, Du Serres ſhall deſcribe the formality of it. The place deſigned for this exploit was the Church of Amiens, " to which Edward came (ſaith he) with " ſuch a Train, as was entended rather to the honour of himſelf than the French King. Royally attired " he was, with a long Robe of Crimſon Velvet, powdred with Leopards of Gold; his Crown upon his " head, his Sword by his ſide, and golden ſpurs upon his heels. Philip, attended by the chief Officers of " the Realm, ſat upon his Throne, apparelled in a long robe of purple Velvet, powdred with Flower de " Lyces of Gold; his Crown upon his head, and the Scepter in his hand. Vicount Melun, the great " Chamberlain of France, commanded Edward to take off his Crown, ſword, and ſpurs, and to kneel " down: which he did accordingly. Then taking both his hands, and joyning them together, he ſaid " unto him; You become a Liege-man to the King my Maſter, who is here preſent, as Duke of Guienne, and " Peer of France, and promiſe to be faithful and loyal to him; ſay yea: and Edward ſaid yea, and aroſe. But the Hiſtorian notes withall, that Philip paid dearly for this Pageant; the young King never forgetting the indignity which was put upon him, till he had made France a field of bloud. And here it is to be obſerved, that though the Kings of England by this new inveſtiture, were entituled Dukes of Guienne only, yet they had all the power and priviledges of Dukes of Aquitaine; excepting the homage of the great Lords and Earls of Gaſcoigne, which formerly belonged unto them. Inſomuch as Richard the ſecond, though Duke of Guienne only in ſtile and title, inveſted his Uncle John of Gaunt in that brave eſtate, under the ſtile and title of Duke of Aquitaine; ſummoned to Parliament by that name by the ſaid King Richard. From this Accord betwixt the Kings, the Engliſh had poſſeſſion of the Dukedome of Guienne, according to the order of their Succeſſions, from the fortieth of King Henry the third, Anno 1259, to the twenty ninth of King Henry the ſixth, Anno 1452 (the intercalation of John of Gaunt excepted only:) when outed of all their old rights in France, rather by the good fortune, than by the valour of Charles the ſeventh; the Engliſh then divided in Domeſtick Factions, and not at leaſure to look after the affairs of France. Nor do I finde, that Guienne being thus recovered, was ever diſmembred from that Crown, but when King Lewis the eleventh aſſigned it over to his Brother the Duke of Berry, to take him off from joyning with the Dukes of Bretagne and Burgundie in a new confederacy; who held it but two years, and died the laſt Duke of Guienne, Anno 1472.

The Armes of this Dukedom were Gules, a Leopard or Lyon Or; which joyned to the two Lyons of Normandie, make the Armes of England.

LANGUEDOC is bounded with the Pyrenean hils, the Land of Ronſillon, and the Mediterranean, on the South; on the North, with Forreſt, Quercu, and Auvergu; on the Eaſt, with Provence and Daulphine; on the Weſt, with Gaſcoigne. Whereas the other Frenchmen in an affirmation ſay Ouy, theſe of this Countrey ſay Oc; and therefore Ortelius conjectures it was called Languedoc. But the truth is, it took denomination from the Gothes, who reigning long in this Countrey, left behinde

Languedoc. them a ſmack of their Language; and therefore it was called Languegotia, and now Euphoniæ gratiâ, termed Languedotia, or Languedoc, that is, the Gothes Language.

The Countrey on thoſe parts which lie next to Auvergn, is like the higher parts thereof, mountainous and not very fruitful; in all the reſt, as rich and pleaſant as the beſt Provinces in France; and having the advantages of Olives, Raiſins, Figs, Orenges, and other fruits not ordinary but here, and in the neighbouring Province. In that participating the commodities both of France and Spain. The people have ſomewhat in them of the ancient Gothes, and draw nearer to the temper of the Spaniards, than any other of the French; as being accounted very devout, great vaunters of themſelves, affecting bravery above their condition and eſtates; not caring how they pinch it on the working daies, or at home in private, ſo they may flaunt it in the ſtreet, and be fine on holy-daies. The humour alſo of the Women, and in them more pardonable.

Principal Rivers of this Province, are 1 Aurance, 2 Lieran, and 3 Orbe, emptying themſelves into the Rhoſne; and Alby which disburdeneth it ſelf into the Ocean. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Niſmes (in Latin Nemauſus) anciently a Colony of the Romans, now a Biſhops See; where there remain ſome marks of the Roman greatneſs, eſpecially the ruines of a ſpacious Palace built by the Emperour Adrian. 2 Mont-pelier (in Latine Mons Peſſulanus) ſituate on an high mountain, as the name imports, ſome twelve miles diſtant from the Sea; an Univerſity for the ſtudy of Phyſick, and for that very happily ſeated, the Countrey round about affording great variety of medicinal herbs. An Earldom of it ſelf in the former times, conveyed by Mary Daughter of William the laſt Lord hereof, to King Peter of Aragon her husband; next, made a Member of the Kingdom of Majorca, and finally by James, the laſt King of Majorca, ſold to King Philip of Valois. Of late one of the ſtrongeſt holds which thoſe of the Reformed Religion had in this Countrey; and memorable for the notable reſiſtance which it made againſt the whole forces of Lewis the 13th in the laſt Civil Wars about Religion. 3 Aleth, and 4 Carcaſſonne, both Biſhops Sees, both ſeated on the River Aude; the people of both ſpeaking a corrupt French, with an intermixture of ſome Spaniſh. Which intermixture of Spaniſh with that broken French, they either have originally from the Gothes of Spain, of whoſe Kingdom this was once a part: or from their long ſubjection to the Earls of Barcelone, to whom they were conveyed, with other fair eſtates in this part of France, by the mariage of Raymond Borenger the ſeventh Earl thereof, with Almodia the Daughter of ſome of the great Lords who then ruled in Languedoc, about the year 1040. And to theſe Towns, as alſo unto thoſe of Niſmes and Alby, the Earls of Barcelone, and the Kings of Aragon (in their right) did pretend a Soveraignty (though they had loſt the poſſeſſion of them) as thoſe of France did to the Earldom of Barcelone: till mutual releaſes made on both ſides of each others claims, by James the firſt of Aragon, and the King St. Lewis, Anno 1260, or thereabouts. 5 Alby, commodiouſly ſeated on the River ſo called, the Civitas Albigentium of Antoninus, the chief of this part of Languedoc, called from hence La Paix Albigeois; remarkable in Church-hiſtory for thoſe great oppoſites to the corruptions and errors of the Church of Rome, called the Albigenſes. 6 Beziers, upon the River Orbe, the Betira of Ptolemie, and Civitas Beterraſium of Antoninus; a Roman Colonie of old, now a Biſhops See. 7 Agde, called Agatha by ancient writers, remarkable for a Councel held there in the year 450, and for a well-frequented Port, at the mouth of the River Egbaud. 8 Narbon, ſeated on the mouth of the River Aude, the Seat of the Phocenſes, and the firſt Roman Colony (next after Carthage) out of Italie. In Italie it ſelf; (to obſerve ſo much by the way) were no leſs than 150 Colonies; 57 in Africk, 29 in Spain, 26 in France, in England 4 only, in Syria 20, and in other Countreys ſome, but very few in reſpect of the largeneſs of the Territories. Theſe Colonies were inſtituted partly to repreſs Rebellions in the conquered Countreys; partly to reſiſt a forein enemy, partly to reward the ancient Souldiers, partly to relieve the poorer ſort, and partly to purge and empty the City of the ſuperfluity and redundance of her people. Now if the queſtion be asked, whether a Colony or a Fortreſs be more behooveful, I anſwer with Boterus in his Raggio de ſtato, that a Fortreſs is more fit for ſuddain uſe, and a Colony for continuance: the former are quickly erected, and perhaps as ſoon loſt; the other require ſome time of ſetling, and are after of a good ſufficiency to defend themſelves. As we ſee in our times, the Spaniſh Colonies of Ceuta and Tanger in Africk; and our own of Calais, which was the laſt Town we loſt on the firm Land. This Narbon was in the infancy of the Roman Empire, the moſt populous and greateſt Town of all France: inſomuch, as from it all this part of France was called Gallia Narbonenſis. A Province, of which Pliny delivered us this cenſure: Narbonenſis Gallia agrorum cultu, morum virorumq; dignatione, opum amplitudine, nulli provinciarum poſtponenda; breviterq; Italia potiùs quàm provincia; that is to ſay, that for fruitfulneſs of the ſoil, and the civility of the people, it was inferiour to no province in the Roman Empire. But to return unto the Town, being antiently the Metropolis of this Province, it had withall the honour of being an Archbiſhops See, which it ſtill continueth: well fortified at the preſent as a Town of war, frontiering Catalonia and the land of Rouſillon. 9 La Puy, the See of a Biſhop, who in Latin is called Podienſis; the chief of that part of Languedoc, which is named Velay, the ancient ſeat of the Velauni. 10 Viviers, on the River Rhoſne, (by Plinie named Alba Helviorum) from whence the Countrey adjoyning hath the name of Vivarets. 11 Rhodes, or Rutena, the principal City of the Ruteni, now a Biſhops See; from whence the Countrey round about hath the name of Rouvergn; though ſome account this Rouvergn, a diſtinct Province, and no part of Languedoc. 12 Tholouſe, ſeated on the Garonne, anciently the principal City of the Tectoſages, and the Toloſates, placed by old Writers in this tract; now the chief of Languedoc, and one of the greateſt in all France. The ſeat of an Archbiſhop, and an Univerſity: ſo ancient, that ſome report it to be built when Deborah judged Iſrael. Here was a Parliamentary Court erected, for the adminiſtration of Juſtice in theſe parts, 1302. As for the Story of Tholouſe, it was obſerved, that certain Souldiers having ſtole ſacrilegiouſly ſome Gold out of the Temples of Tholouſe, (when it was ſackt by Cepio a Roman Conſul) came all to miſerable and unfortunate ends: hence grew that Adage, Aurum habet Tholoſanum, applyed to unhappy men. Languedoc

But that which deſerves moſt note in the Hiſtory of it, are the large and ſpacious fields about it, called by the Writers of theſe times by the name of Campi Catalaunici, extending in length 100, in breadth 70 French Leagues. In which fields, [An. 435. was fought that terrible Battle between Attila King of the Hunnes, and Ætius the Roman Lieutenant in France; Ætius was ſtrengthned by the Gothes, Francks, Burgundians, and Germans. Attila's Army conſiſted of Hunnes, Eruli, Scythes, Sarmatians, and Suevians, to the number of 500000, of which 180000 that day loſt their lives: Attila himſelf being driven to that deſperate plunge, that making a funeral pile of Horſe Saddles, he would have burned himſelf. But his enemies weary of wel-doing, or Ætius politickly fearing, that if Attila were quite deſtroyed, the Gothes, Franks, and others of the Barbarians then confederate with him, would become too inſolent; gave him leave to retire home through Italy: which he haraſſed with Fire and Sword, murdering the People, and ruining the Towns, ſo that he was then, and long after, called Flagellum Dei. Ætius, notwithſtanding this good ſervice, was by Valentinian the Emperor of the Weſt, rewarded with the loſs of his head: By which act, the Emperor (as one truly told him) had cut off his right hand with his left. And indeed ſo it happened. For not long after, he himſelf was by Maximus murdered, and the Empire of Rome irrecoverably deſtroyed. Now that theſe Fields lay hereabouts, and not about Chalons in the Province of Champaigne (as ſome learned and induſtrious men have been of opinion) I am aſſured by theſe three reaſons. Firſt the improbability that Ætius having got the victory, ſhould ſuffer ſuch a vaſt and numerous Army to paſs through the whole length of France, from one end to the other, and having waſted all the Countrey, to break into Italy. And ſecondly the teſtimony of Jornandes an antient writer, who telleth us, firſt, that before this fight, Attila had beſieged and diſtreſſed the City of Orleans; and therefore was not vanquiſhed in the fields of Chalons: and then, that immediately upon the Victory, Toriſmund the King of the Gothes, (his Father Theodorick being ſlain) in Campis Catalaunicis ubi & pugnaverat; Regia Majeſtate ſubvectus Tolotam ingreditur; being proclaimed King in thoſe very fields, entred with great ſtate and triumph into Tholouſe, the Regal City at that time of the Gothiſh Kingdom. Which plainly proves the place of battle to be near this City: though poſſible by the name Campi Catalaunici (the great length and breadth thereof conſidered) we are to underſtand the whole Countrey of Languedoc.

The old Inhabitants of this Countrey beſides the Helvii, the Vellauni, the Tectoſages, and Albigenſes, formerly remembred, were the Agatenſes, Beterenſes, Gabales, Volcæ, and the Arecomici; all which, together with ſome others of leſſer note, made the Province of Narbonenſis Prima, whereof the Metropolis was Narbon. In the falling of the Roman Empire aſſigned with the reſt of Narbonenſis, and ſome part of Spain, to Atholfus King of the Gothes, whom Honorius by this gift and by beſtowing on him his Siſter Placidia, bought out of Italy. The Gothes having got ſo good footing in Gaul, enlarged their bounds by taking in the moſt part of Aquitain, Quercu, and Auvergn: but forced to quit them to the French, who Conquered that from them which they got from the Romans; and ſhut them up within the limits of their firſt Donation. After this they declined as faſt in France, as they thrived in Spain; loſing Provence to Theodoric, King of the Oſtro-Gothes, or Gothes of Italy; whoſe ſucceſſor Amalaſunta, fearing a War from Greece, reſigned her intereſs in Provence to Theodobert the French King of Mets. Nothing now left unto the Gothes of their Gallick purchaſes, but this Languedock only; and this they held as long as they had any thing to do in Europe, but loſt it finally to the Moors, with all Spain it ſelf. Recovered from the Moors by Charles Martel, and added to the reſt of the French Empire; it was by Charles the great given to one Thurſin, of the race of the antient Kings, with the title of the Earl of Tholouſe, on condition that he would be Chriſtened. But long it continued not in his race, nor in any other, not being ſetled in a way of Lineal Deſcent, till the time of Raymond the eighth Earl, Brother to another Raymond Earl of St. Giles (a Town of Guienne) whoſe Grand-child Hugh, being an adventurer in the Wars of the Holy Land, and wanting money to provide himſelf for that expedition, ſold his Eſtate herein to his Uncle Raymond, the Earl of St. Giles before mentioned. From this time forward we find theſe Earls to be as often called the Earls of St. Giles, as the Earls of Tholouſe; and by that name frequently remembred in the Eaſtern ſtories; as for his great valour in the courſe of the Holy wars, eſpecially at the taking of the City of Tripoli, given to him (after it became Chriſtian) with the title of Earl. This Raymond worthily named the Great, Earl of Tholouſe, St. Giles, and Tripoli, had three Sons all all of them ſucceeding; of which the eldeſt was Bertrand, had a Baſe ſon called Ponce, who ſucceeded him in the Earldom of Tripoli, the Father of Raymond, and Grand-father of another Raymond, both Earls of Tripoli, and both ſuſpected to be falſe to the Chriſtian Princes in the continuance of thoſe wars. Alfonſo the third Son was alſo the Father of a Raymond, the Father of another Raymond, who proved a great maintainer of the Albigenſes: and in purſuance of that cauſe murdered the Legat of the Pope ſent to Excommunicate him, and ſtrangled his own Brother Baldwin, becauſe he found him not inclinable to his opinions. For this cauſe Warred upon, and Vanquiſhed by Simon de Monfort, Father of Simon de Monfort, the great Earl of Leiceſter; and after many troubles and continual Wars, left his eſtate and quarrell to his Son named alſo Raymond the laſt Earl of this Houſe; who proving alſo a ſtrong Patron of theſe Albigenſes, was condemned for a Heretick, curſed by the Pope, and perſecuted by the French Provence. Kings, Philip the ſecond, Lewis the 8th, and St. Lewis. This laſt willing to make a peaceable compoſition, maried his Brother Alphonſo, to Jane daughter and heir to Count Raimond, with this clauſe, That if it ſhould happen theſe two to die without iſſue, then Languedoc ſhould be incorporated to the Crown. Raimond agreed, the mariage was ſolemnized, An. 1249. They both died without iſſue, 1270. and Languedoc returned to the Crown in the days of Philip the third.

The names and Succeſſion of theſe Earls, in regard they were Peers of France, great Princes, and for the moſt part men of action, take in order thus.

The Earls of Tholouze.

An. Ch.
779	1	Turſin, the firſt Earl of Tholouze.
803	2	William made Earl by Charlemaigne, Peer of France at the firſt foundation of that Order.
828	3	Iſauret Thurſin, Sonne of Thurſin the firſt Earl.
841	4	Bertrand, Sonne of Iſauret Thurſin.
894	5	William II. of ſome other houſe.
919	6	Ponce, a great Juſticiar, but of unknown race.
963	7	Almaric, of as obſcure parentage as Ponce.
1003	8	Raymond, the Brother of Raymond Earl of S. Giles, advanced by Robert King of France.
1052	9	William III. Duke of Aquitaine, ſucceeded in right of his Wife, the Daughter of Raymond.
1086	10	Hugh Aymon, Sonne of William the third, ſold his Eſtate and Earldom to his Uncle Raymond.
1096	11	Raymond II. Earl of S. Giles, Tholouze, and Tripoli; of great note in the Warre of the Holy-Land.
	12	Bertrand, Sonne of Raymond the Great.
	13	William IV. Brother of Bertrand.
1101	14	Alfonſo, Brother of William the fourth.
1146	15	Raymond III. Sonne of Alfonſo.
1185	16	Raymond IV. Sonne of Raymond the third, the Great Patron of the Albigenſes.
1222	17	Raymond V. Sonne of Raymond the fourth, vanquiſhed and compounded with, by King Lewis the Saint.
1249	18	Alfonſo II. Brother of St. Lewis, and Husband of Joan, daughter and heir of the laſt Raymond: after whoſe death, and the deceaſe of Joan the Counteſs, An. 1270. this Earldom was united to the Crown of France; according to the Capitulations before mentioned.

The Arms of this Earldom were Gules, a Croſs Pommelè, of 12 points, Or.

17 PROVENCE.

PROVENCE is environed with Languedoc on the Weſt; Daulphine, on the North; the Mediterranean, on the South; and on the Eaſt with the Alpes, and the River Varus; which divide it from Piemont, the neereſt of the Alpine Provinces.

It took this name from the Romans, who being called in by the Marſilians, to revenge a private wrong done them by the Salii, the next neighbouring People, wholly poſſeſſed themſelves of this Countrey; calling it κατ' ἐξοχὴν, The Province. Under their Empire it continued, making up the whole Province of Narbonenſis Secunda, and part of Alpes Maritimæ. How it was given unto the Viſigothes, or Gothes of Spain, and from them taken by the Oſtrogothes, or Gothes of Italy; hath been ſhewn in Languedoc. Being reſigned unto the French, it became a part of the new Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. Made a diſtinct Eſtate in the perſon of Hugh de Arles, (who afterwards ſucceeded in the Kingdom alſo) by Boſon the firſt. And by this Hugh de Arles upon his reſignation of that Kingdom to Rodolph Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour; given unto William his Son, with the ſtile and title of Earl of Provence; confirmed therein by the Emperor Conrade the ſecond, on whom the rights of that Kingdom had been transferred; to be held of him, and his Succeſſors in the Empire. In his poſterity it continued, till conveyed to the Earls of Barcelone, by the mariage of the Lady Doulce with Earl Raymond Arnold, Anno 1082. Caryed, together with that Earldom, to the Crown of Aragon; and finally by Beatrix, one of the Daughters of Raymond the third, the laſt Earl of this Family, conveyed in mariage to Charles Earl of Anjou, Brother of Lewis the 9th of France, An. 1262. whom Urban the 4th not long after crowned King of Naples. By Joan the firſt, the fourth from Charles, driven out of Naples by Lewis of Hungaria, and reſtored again by the power of Pope Clement the fifth; the City and Territory of Avignion (where the Pope reſided at that time) is diſmembred from the Earldom of Provence, and given in Fee for ever to the Church of Rome: partly to recompenſe that favour, and partly for diſcharge of ſome old Arrears of Rent or Tribute, pretended to be due to the See of Rome, for the Realm of Naples. A City which had formerly been under the Protection, and by that title in the Actual poſſeſſion of many of the Popes of Rome; ever ſince the conviction of Raymond Earl of Tholouſe, to whom it formerly belonged,

but held by them in Fee of the Earls of Provence. Not long after this Donation, the ſaid Joan adopted for her Heir and Succeſſor, Lewis Duke of Anjou, Brother to Charles the fifth of France, deſcended lineally from Charles Earl of Anjou, and King of Naples: poſſeſſed by this Adoption of the Earldom of Provence, and a title to the Realm of Naples. Rene, the Grandchild of this Lewis, having no iſſue-male ſurviving, made Lewis of Chalons, the Prince of Orange, (another Signeury in this Countrey): and gave him therewithall full power to make Laws, coin money, and pardon all crimes; to write himſelf Prince of Orange by the Grace of God, with all the other Prerogatives of an abſolute Prince. This was in the year 1415. So that now the Countrey ſtands divided betwixt the French King, the Pope, and the Prince of Orange; each of them abſolute and independent in his own Eſtate: as long at leaſt as the French King is pleaſed to give way unto it. Provence.

The whole is much of the ſame nature with Languedoc, before deſcribed, but in one part thereof, that namely between Marſeilles and Arles, different from all the reſt of France. By the French commonly called La Craux; by the elder Writers Campi lapidei, becauſe all in a manner overſpread with ſcattered ſtones. Suppoſed by Mela to be the place in which Hercules encountred Albion and Bergeon the ſons of Neptune: whom when he could not otherwiſe vanquiſh, he was by Jupiter his Father aided with a ſhower of ſtones; of which theſe were faigned to be the Remainders. A Countrey which takes up a good ſpace of ground, and hath a few poor Towns in it, but not much inhabited.

In that part of it which belongs to the King, the Towns of ſpecial note, are, 1 Aix, ſeated on the Rhoſne, the Metropolis of Narbonenſis ſecunda, and at that time called Aquæ Sextiæ, from Sextius the Founder of it (by whom the Salii were ſubdued in the ſecond year of that war) and the hot Bathes here. Now, and of long time, an Archbiſhops See, and the chief City of this Province; and for that reaſon made the Seat of a Court of Parliament for this Countrey An. 1501. Moſt memorable in old ſtory for the great diſcomfiture of the Cimbri by C. Marius. Who not willing to venture on the enemy united (for they were no fewer than 300000 fighting men, and lately fleſhed in the overthrow of Manlius and Sepio, (two Roman Conſuls); permitted them quietly to paſs by his Camp: The Barbarians who imputed it to fear or cowardize, ſcornfully asking his Souldiers, what ſervice they would command them to Rome. But when, for their eaſier paſſage over the Alpes, they had divided themſelves into three Companies; Marius ſeverally ſetting on them all, put them all to the ſword. Ea victoria viſus meruiſſe ne ejus nati Rempub. pœniteret, by this Victory, and this only, giving cauſe to the Romans (as Velleius hath it) not to be ſorry for his birth. 2 Arles, in Latine, Arelatum, by Auſonius called the Rome of France, and in thoſe times ſo highly prized, that Conſtantinus Flavius being choſen Emperor by the Britiſh Legions, in the declining times of the Weſtern Empire, intended to have made it the Imperial Seat. And not leſs memorable in Church-ſtory for a Council here held in the time of Conſtantine the Great, Anno 313, in which was preſent Reſtitutus the Biſhop of London, and certain other Biſhops of the Britiſh Church. It was antiently a Roman Colony, and now the See of an Archbiſhop; ſituate on the River Rhoſne, in a low and mariſhie ſituation: which natural ſtrength ſeconded by the new works of King Henry the fourth, have made it one of the beſt Bulwarks of France, on that that ſide of the Kingdom. Selected for the Seat Royal of the French Kings of Burgundy, who from hence were called Kings of Arles; as the Kings of Auſtraſia (or Eaſt France) were called Kings of Mets, becauſe they had made choice of that City for the Regal Seat. Between this City and the Sea, but on the other ſide of the River, runneth a deep Channel, cut with infinite charge and induſtry by C. Marius, for conveyance of victuals into his Camp, in his war againſt the Cimbri before named; by Ptolemie called Foſſæ Marianæ, by the French, Camargue, a corrupt word made of Caius Marius: the Countrey about which, called alſo by the ſame name for the ſpace of 24 miles, is of excellent paſturage, and breedeth great abundance of Horſes; the chief Town of which is called 3 St. Gillis. 4 Marſeilles, a known Port on the Mediterranean, firſt built by the Phocenſes, a Greek Nation of Aſia Minor, who being baniſhed their Countrey, came and planted here, about the reign of Tarquinius Superbus, the laſt King of Rome. It was firſt only a Confederate City of the Romans, for whoſe ſake, being moleſted by the Salii, and others of the neighbouring Nations, the Roman Legions firſt entred Gaul: afterwards, ſiding with Pompey in the Civil Wars, or at leaſt deſirous to ſtand neutral, it was forced by Cæſar, and made a Colony. In the proſperity hereof it drove a great trade on the Mediterranean, and was the mother of many fair and flouriſhing Colonies, Emporia, Forum Julium, Nicæa, Olbia, diſperſed in the adjoyning ſhores of France, Spain, and Italy. 5 Glandeves, antiently called Glanum, a Biſhops See, ſeated upon the Maritim Alpes. 6 Taulon, by Ptolemie called Tauroentium, and by ſome Tholone, beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, well ſtored with Oil, great quantity of Salt brought hither from the Iſle of Eres, about three Leagues off; and a kind of Almonds, called Provence Almonds; made by this means one of the moſt frequented Ports of the Mediterranean. 7 Antibi (in Latin Antipolis) a Sea-coaſt Town neer the River Varo, one of the fartheſt of this Countrey towards Italy. 8 Feriols (the Forum Julium of the antients) on the Mediterranean, founded by the Maſſilians as before was ſaid; after a Colony of the Romans. 9 La Grace, a Biſhops See, more within the Continent. 10 Ciſteron, on the borders of Daulphine. 11 Brignols, 12 Merindol, and Chabriers, two little Towns amongſt the Mountains, towards Daulphine; not otherwiſe of note but for the horrid Maſſacre of the Proteſtants, before deſcribed.

II. The Principality of Orange lieth on the North-Weſt of this Province, watered with the Rivers of 1 Durance, 2 Seile, 3 Meine, and 4 Ecque; all helping to augment the Rhoſne. The chief places of it are, 1 Aurange, ſeated on the Meine, an Epiſcopal See, famous for many rare and won-

Orange. dertul Antiquities, demonſtrating the Roman Greatneſs, of whom once a Colony; but of moſt note in Church ſtory for a Council held here againſt the Semi-Pelagians, in the year 444. called Arauſicanum; the Latine name of this City being antiently Arauſia, in ſome Writers Auriacus, and of late Aurangia. 2 Eſtrang. 3 Bois de St. Pol, more properly St. Paul de Vences, being the Civitas Vencienſum of Antoninus, but not otherwiſe memorable.

As for the Princes hereof, they were antiently of the Noble Family of the Bauſſii, but Homagers and Tributaries to the Earls of Provence. By Mary Daughter and Heir of Reynold the laſt of this Family, it was conveyed in mariage to John de Chalons, one of the moſt noble houſes of Burgundy, from the Earls whereof they were extracted. Lewis tht Son of this John obtained of Rene Duke Anjou and Earl of Provence, the Soveraignty hereof, as before was ſaid. By Claude the Heir general of this houſe, beſtowed in mariage by King Francis the firſt on Count Henry of Naſſaw, Ambaſſador from Maximilian Emperor of Germany, An. 1514. it was tranſlated to that Family, where it ſtill remaineth.

1475 1 Lewis of Chalons, firſt abſolute Prince of Orange.

2 William de Chalons who ſubmitted his Eſtate to the Parliament of Daulphine, to ſatisfie King Lewis the 11th, by whom reſtored again to his former Soveraignty.

3 John de Chalons, a bitter enemy to King Lewis, in defence of the rights of Mary Dutcheſs of Burgundy.

1500 4 Philibert de Chalons, ſlain at the ſiege of Florence, where he commanded the Forces of Charles the fifth: Claude his only Siſter, and next heir of that houſe, being maried to Henry Earl of Naſſaw, An. 1515.

1584 7 Philip of Naſſaw, kept as an Hoſtage all his life by the King of Spain.

8 Maurice of Naſſaw, Brother of Philip, Commander of the Forces of the United Provinces.

1625 9 Henry of Naſſaw II. Succeſſor to his Brother Maurice, in his Offices, Eſtates, and Honors.

1648 10 William of Naſſaw II. the Son and Succeſſor of Henry, maried the Princeſs Mary, eldeſt Daughter of Charles King of great Britain, &c. on May day, 1641.

The Revenues of this principality are about 30000 Crowns. The Arms are Quarterly Gules, a Bend Or, 2 Or, a Hunters Horn Azure, ſtringed Gules; the third as, &c. Over all an Eſcocheon of Pretence Chequie, Or and Azure. More briefly thus, Quarterly Chalons and Aurange, under an Eſcocheon of Geneva.

Southward of Aurange lyeth the County of VENASCINE, as the French call it, Comitatus Veneſſinus in the Latine; ſo called from Avenio (now Avignon) the chief City of it. Antiently it had Lords of its own called Earls of Venize, (Veniſſæ Comites in the Latine) united to the houſe of Savoy by the maria e of Laurenha a daughter hereof with Earl Humbert the ſecond, An. 1080. or thereabouts. But this family of the firſt Lords coming to an end, it fell (but by what right I find not) to the Earls of Tholouſe, but held by them as Homagers (for this eſtate) of the Earls of Provence: on the conviction of Earl Raymond, condemned for Hereſie, brought under the protection and patronage of the Popes of Rome; the more abſolute Soveraignty hereof and of the City Avignon, being ſetled on them by Queen Joane, as before is ſaid. The principal Cities of this tract, are, 1 Avignon, the Avenio of Strabo, Plinie, and Mela, a very fair and flouriſhing City, pleaſantly ſeated on both ſides of the River of Rhoſne: famous for being the reſidence of the Popes for 70 years, which times the Romans remember till this day by the name of the Babylonian captivity; adminiſtring ever ſince an Oath unto the Pope at his Coronation, not to remove his Seat to Avignon. The firſt Pope that removed hither was Clement the 5th, An. 1303. when as yet, the Popes had no more right in it than that of Patronage and Protection; and returned again to Rome by Gregory the 11th, An. 1377. In this City are ſaid to be 7 Palaces, 7 Pariſh Churches, 7 Monaſteries, 7 Nunneries, 7 Innes, and 7 Gates. So that if there be any myſterie in the number of ſeven, or any credit to be given to ſuch Pythagorean divinity; the Archbiſhop of this City may as well be entituled Antichriſt, as the Pope of Rome; if there be nothing but the myſterie of this number to affix it to him. It was made an Univerſity at the time of the Popes firſt ſetling here, and ſo ſtill continueth; Alciate the great Emblematiſt being here Profeſſor. 2 Carpentras, by Ptolemie called Carpentoracte, a Biſhops See; as is alſo 3 Cavaillon, (of old Caballio) once a Roman Colonie, on the River Durance; and 4 Taraſcon, on the Rhoſne, opopoſite to Beaucaire in Languedoc: for the Popes dwelling here ſo long, could not be otherwiſe attended than by mitred Prelates. 5 Vaſon, Civitas Vaſionenſium, of Antoninus.

The Revenues of the Pope here are not very great, and thoſe expended all in keeping of Forts and Garriſons, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Proteſtants of Orange. So that it is ſuppoſed that it is rather a charge, than a profit to him: which maketh the people like very well to live under his Government, as bringing more money to them than he gathereth from them. The Arms hereof, when under the old Earls of Venize, were Gules, two keys in Saltire Or, ſtringed Azure.

Which

Which ſeems to have in it ſome preſage, (the Popes pretending to the Keys, as we know they do) that it ſhould one day become ſubject to the See of Rome. Provence.

The old Inhabitants of the whole Countrey, were, as appeareth, the Salii, Maſſilienſes, Vaſionenſes, and Vencienſes, before mentioned; beſides the Deceates about Antibe, the Senitii, and Sigeſtorii about Ciſteron: all conquered by the Romans, in their firſt war in Gaule, called in to aid thoſe of Marſeilles againſt the Salii. The fortune of it ſince, hath been ſhewn before. Nothing remains now, but the Catalogue of The Earls of Provence.

1 Hugh de Arles, ſuppoſed to be the Son of Lotharius, King of Auſtraſia, and Waldrada his Concubine; made the firſt Earl of Provence by Boſon the firſt, King of Burgundie. He was after King of Burgundie, and Italy alſo.

2 William de Arles, the Son of Hugh.

3 William II. ſurnamed the younger, Son of William the firſt.

4 Gilbert Earl of Provence, the Father of the Lady Doulce.

1082 5 Raymond Arnold, Earl of Barcelone, the Husband of the Lady Doulce of Provence.

7 Raymond II. Sonne of Berengar Raymond.

1173 8 Alfonſo King of Aragon, and Earl of Barcelone, the Son and Heir of Raymond Earl of Barcelone, eldeſt Son unto Raymond Arnold, and the Lady Doulce.

1196 9 Alfonſo II. ſecond Son of Alfonſo the firſt, ſucceeded in the Earldom of Provence; his elder Brother Pedro inheriting the Realm of Aragon, and the Earldom of Barcelone.

10 Raymond III. Son of Alfonſo, the laſt Earl of Provence of this Line.

1282 12 Charles II. King of Naples, and Earl of Provence.

1310 13 Robert, King of Naples, and Earl of Provence.

1342 14 Joan, Queen of Naples, and Counteſs of Provence.

1371 15 Lewis, Duke of Anjou, the adopted Son of Queen Joan, Earl of Provence, and titulary King of Naples, &c. (Of whoſe deſcent from Charles de Valois, Earl of Anjou and Provence, we have ſpoke elſewhere.)

1385 16 Lewis II. Duke of Anjou, Earl of Provence, &c.

1416 17 Lewis III. Duke of Anjou, Earl of Provence, &c.

1430 18 Renè Brother of Lewis Duke of Anjou, &c.

1480 19 Charles Earl of Maine, Son of Charles Earl of Maine, the Brother of Renè, ſucceeded in all the eſtates and titles of his Uncle; and at his death gave Provence to King Lewis the 11th, his Couſin german: as being the Son of Charles the ſeventh, and Mary Daughter of Lewis the ſecond, Duke of Anjou, Siſter of Lewis the third and Renè, the preceding Dukes, and of Charles Father of this Charles, the laſt Earl of Provense. Immediately on whoſe deceaſe, Decemb. 19th. An. 1481. the King ſent a Commiſſion to Palamede de Forban, Lord of Sollier, Chamberlain of Earl Charles, to take poſſeſſion of the Countrey in his name, and command therein as Lieutenant General. Since which time Provence never was diſmembred from the Crown of France, ſo much as in the way of Apennage, or any honorary title amongſt the Kings Children.

What the Revenues of it were to the former Earls, I am not able to ſay, having no good autority to proceed upon. Only I find, that beſides the Lands belonging to the Earls hereof, and other cuſtomary and caſual Taxes, there was a Tax called the Royal impoſt, being ſixteen Florens levied upon every fire: which reckoning 3500 fires, (for ſuch the eſtimate of them was) amounted yearly unto 56000 Florens. Now it is ſubject to the rigor and uncertainty of the Kings Taxations, as well as all the reſt of France. And ſo much of thoſe Provinces which properly made up the Kingdoms of the French and Gothes; let us next look on thoſe which at the ſame time were ſubdued by the Burgundians; whoſe Hiſtory, Kingdom, and Eſtate, are to be conſidered, before we come to the deſcription of their ſeveral Provinces.

The Kingdom of BURGUNDY.

THe Kingdom of the BURGUNDIANS at their firſt ſettlement in Gaul, contained all thoſe Provinces of the Roman Empire, then called the Alpes Graiæ and Pœninæ, Maxima Sequanorum, Lugdunenſis Prima, and Viennenſis; now paſſing under the new names of the Dukedom and County of Burgundy, Switzerland, the Griſons, Walliſland, Savoy, La Breſſe, Daulphine, Lionois, Nivernois, and ſome part of the Dukedom of Bourbon. A fair and large quantity of ground, able at once to tempt, and ſatisfie an ambitious Nation. But the Burgundians came not into Gaule of their one accord; though of their own accord they drew ſomewhat neer it. In their Original they were a people bordering neer the Vandals, if not a Tribe or Sept of them; and dwelling in thoſe parts in which are now the Dukedoms of Meclenburg, and Pomerania. At the time that Druſus and Tiberius warred in Germany, they were utterly barbarous, living in Tents only here and there clapped up. Which being in their own language called Burgs, gave them the name of Burgundians amongst the Romans; in the same sense as the wild Arabs had the name of Scenitæ, amongst the Greeks, from the like kind of living. In the year 416. at the instigation of the Vandals they left their own seats, and planted themselves in the Towns and Villages belonging now to the Marquesses of Baden, and Electors of Rhene. About which time they received the Christian Faith, being then miserably oppressed by the Hunnes, breaking upon them out of Pannonia. Not finding any other way to free themselves of that Enemy, they betook themselves to the God of the Christians, and were universally baptized. After which falling on the Hunnes, they slew no less than 30000 of them in one battel: from that time forwards never troubled with that barbarous Nation. Christians then they were, and Orthodox in their profession, before their coming into Gaule: and for that reason called in by Stilico to oppose the French, then threatning an invasion of the Roman Provinces. Upon this invitation they passed over the River with an Army of 80000 fighting men, possessing themselves of all which lay from the farthest shore of the Rhosne, to the Alpes of Italy; and from the mountain Vauge, to the Mediterranean; Provence only excepted, about the same time planted by the Gothes. Their Government was under Kings; Many, according to their tribes, when they lived in Germany; Monarchical, when setled in the Realm of France, where they had these five Kings of the Burgundians.

A. Ch.

408 1 Tibica, who first brought the Burgundians into Gaule.

2 Gundioch.

3 Gundebault, who harassed Italy, then in possession of the Gothes, with fire and sword, the Uncle of Clotilda, Wife to Clovis, the fifth King of the French, by her perswasion made inclinable to the Christian Faith.

4 Sigismond.

5 Gundomar, the Son of Sigismund, first set upon by Clodomire, the Son of Clovis, King of Orleans, whom he slew in battel neer Autun; but afterward outed of his Kingdom by Childebert and Clotair, Kings of Paris and Soissons, in revenge of the death of their Brother Clodomire. And so the Kingdom of the Burgundians fell unto the French, after it had continued about 120 years: Guntram, the Son of Clotaire, and Clovis, one of the Sons of Dagobert the first, being in their times, honored with the titles of Kings of Burgundy.

But the first time that the Kingdom of Burgundy setled amongst the French, in the way of succession, was in the partage of that vast Empire of Charlemagne, amongst the children and posterity of Ludovicus Pius: In constituting of which Kingdom, Provence was added to the reckoning, to make this answerable to the other parts of that broken Monarchie. The first of these French Kings was Charles, the youngest Son of Lotharius Emperor, and King of Italy, eldest Son of the said Lewis the Godly. The succession in this order following.

The French Kings of Burgundy.

A. Ch.

855 1 Charles, youngest Son of the Emperor Lotharius, died without issue.

858 2 Lotharius, the second King of Mets, and Lewis the second Emperor, Brethren of Charles, succeeded in Burgundy; the mountain Jour dividing and bounding their Estates.

876 3 Charles the Bald, King of France, and Emperor, Unkle to the three former Kings, all dying without issue, succeeded in the whole Estate; which he again divided in three Governments or Members: that is to say, Burgundy on this side of the Soasne, containing the now Dukedom of Burgundy, with the Earldoms of Lions and Masçon. 2 Burgundy beyond the Jour, comprehending the Provinces of Savoy, Switzerland, Wallisland, and the Estates of the Grisons; and 3ly, Burgundy on the other side of the Soasne, lying betwixt the other two; containing the now Counties of Burgundy, Provence, La Bresse, and Daulphine. This last conferred with the title of Earl, on Boson Earl of Ardenne, by Charles the Bald, who had married his Sister Judith; and not long after in the person of the said Earl Boson, raised unto a Kingdom by Charles the Gross, by the name of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. The Kings, these that follow.

4 Boson Earl of Ardenne, Husband of Hermingrade, the Daughter of Lewis the second, Emperor, and King of Burgundy, was first by Charles the Bald made Earl of Burgundy, beyond the Soasne; and afterwards by Charles the Cross created the first King of Arles and Burgundy, to be held by him and his Successors, of the German Emperors.

5 Lewis II. Son of Boson and Hermingrade; chosen King of Italy, but outed by the Faction of Berengarius.

917 6 Hugh de Arles, supposed to be the Son of Lotharius the second, by Waldrada his Concubine; succeeded by the gift of Lewis; and was chosen by his Faction there, King of Italy also. For the quiet enjoying of which Kingdom, he resigned this to Rodolph, Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, elected by another Faction to that broken Title.

926 7 Rodolph Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, succeeded on the resignation of Hugh de Arles: his Brother Boson being setled beyond the Jour.

937 8 Rodolph II. Son of Rodolph; a Prince of so short a reign, or so little note, that he is by some left out of the catalogue of these Kings.

9 Boson

9 Boſon II. the Brother of Rodolph the firſt, by whom the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Jour, was united to the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. Daulphine.

965 10 Conrade Son to Boſon the ſecond.

990 11 Rodolph III. Son to Conrade, who having no iſſue of his Body, gave his Eſtate to Conrade the ſecond, Emperor of Germany, and his Son Henry ſurnamed the Black, whom he had by Giſela, the Siſter of this Rodolph; by whom it was united to the German Empire, An. 1032. In the diſtractions whereof, following not long after his deceaſe, the Provincial Earls or Governors for the German Emperors, made themſelves Maſters and Proprietaries of their ſeveral Provinces (the Dukedom of Burgundy excepted, ſetled long before) out of which roſe the great Eſtates of the Duke of Savoy, the Earls of Burgundy, and Provence, the Daulphins of Viennois, and Lords of Breſſe, together with the Common-wealths of the Switzers and Griſons: every poor Bird ſnatching alſo ſome feather or other of this dying Eagle. Yet notwithſtanding the diſmembring and cantoning of this fair Eſtate, the ſucceeding Emperors of Germany, claimed not only a ſuper-intendence over, but a diſpoſal of all the Countries that ever were under the command of a King of Burgundy: Inſomuch that the Emperor Henry the ſixt, receiving no ſmall part of the money which our Richard the firſt paid to the Duke of Auſtria for his ranſom, gave unto the ſaid Richard the Kingdom of Burgundy, the Soveraignty of Provence, Viennois, Marſeilles, Narbon, Arles, and Lyons; together with the homages of the King of Aragon, and of the Earl of Digion, and S. Giles. A royal gift, if either the Emperor had had any dominion over thoſe Countreys, or if they would have received any Prince or Officer of his appointing.

The Arms of this Kingdom under the old Burgundian Kings, are ſaid to have been Azure, a Cat Arg, armed Gules. Which being ſaid, we will proceed to the deſcription of thoſe Provinces of this broken Kingdom, which lie within the bounds of France; the reſt which lie beyond the Jour, having been ſpoken of already in the Alpine Countries, which made up the whole continent of the Tranſ-jouran Burgundie.

NOrth of the Countrey of Provence, where we left before, lyeth that of DAULPHINE, having on the Eaſt, Savoy, and the Maritime Alpes; on the Weſt Lionois, and ſome part of Languedoc, from which divided by the Rhoſne; and on the North, La Breſſe, and thoſe parts of Savoy which lie towards Piemont. So called, as ſome report, from Dauphinè wife of Guigne the ſecond; in like manner as Flanders is affirmed moſt probably to have took that name from Flandrina wife of Liderick the ſecond, then one of the laſt of thoſe Princes who governed in that Countrey by the name of Forreſters.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower; that mountainous, ſtony, and unfruitful, of the ſame nature with the Alpes, with whoſe branches it is over-run: the other tolerably fruitful, but not to be compared with the reſt of France. The people of the Higher, and more mountainous parts, are generally groſs and rude; not capable of learning, but well enough inclined to Arms and traffick, and have a cuſtom, that on the coming on of Winter they ſend abroad all thoſe which are fit for Travel, (whom they call Bics, or Biſonards) who ſeldom return back till Eaſter: none ſtaying at home, but old men, children and impotent perſons, which cannot go abroad to get their livings. Thoſe in the Lower, are more civil, but not more given to labour than the Mountainers are; nor very covetous of gain, ſo they may live at eaſe, without want or penury. In both parts generally good Souldiers, and well affected to their Prince.

The Lower Daulphine, together with that part of Provence which lies next to the Rhoſne, and the adjoyning parts of Savoy, made up the Province called Viennenſis, from Vienna the Metropolis of it, ſituate on the Rhoſne, honored with the Seat of the Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum; ſtill the chief City of this Countrey, an Archbiſhops See, and a Siege Præſidiall. From hence the tract about it is called Viennois, and was the title of the firſt Proprietaries of this Countrey, entituled Daulphins of Viennois. To this Town Archelaus, the Son of Herod, was baniſhed by Auguſtus Cæſar. 2 Valence, the chief City heretofore of the Valentini, then a Roman Colony; now a Biſhops See, and a Univerſity for the Civil Laws; a rich, ſtrong, and well-traded Town, ſeated on the Rhoſne. The Countrey hereabouts from hence called Valentinois; and hath given honorary title to two perſons of more Fame, than Honor: the firſt of which was Cæſar Borgia, the Son of Pope Alexander the ſixth, who caſting off his Cardinals Cap, was made Duke of Valentinois by Charles the eighth; the other Madam Diana, the great Minion and Paramour of Henry the ſecond, under whom ſhe much ſwayed the affairs of France, and honored with the title of Dutcheſs of it. 3 Grenoble, (in Latine, Gratianopolis,) the chief Seat heretofore of the Accuſiani, the moſt populous and beſt built of all this Province; and much reſorted to by the Lords and Nobleſs, by reaſon of the Court of Parliament here erected, An. 1453. About this lyeth the Countrey called Griſinaudan, 4 Ternay, 5 Roſſillon, 6 La Roche, 7 Montelimar, all along the Rhoſne; 8 Romons upon the confluence of the Rhoſne, and the Iſere. 9 Cremien, 10 St. Marceline, 11 St. Andre, 12 Beaurepaire, more within the Countrey.

The Higher Daulphine, together with thoſe parts of Provence which lie next to Italy, made up the Province of the Alpes Matritimæ, the Metropolis whereof, was, 1 Ebrodunum, now called Ambrun, an Archbiſhops See, and Siege Præſidiall; ſeated on an high rock, in the midſt of a pleaſant valley ſurrounded with mountains, under which runs the River Durance. The hilly Countrey hereabouts, is the higheſt of France. 2 Brianſon, neer the head of the River Durance, called Brigantio by Antoninus.

3 Gappe,

Viennois. 3 Gappe, now a Biſhops See, formerly the chief City of the Apencenſes; the track of whom is ſtill found in the name of the adjoyning Territory, called Le Pais Gapencois: Memorable for a Synod or Aſſembly of the French Proteſtants here holden An. 1603. in which it was determined, as and for an Article of Faith, that the Pope was Antichriſt, and where the Miniſters then aſſembled, gave audience to the Ambaſſadors of forein States, as to a Common-wealth diſtinct from the Realm of France, audaciouſly importuning their King by their ſeveral Agents for liberty of going (whenſoever they liſted) or ſending whenſoever they pleaſed unto the Councels and Aſſemblies of all Forein Nations which profeſſed the ſame Religion with them; the preamble to thoſe encroachments on the Royal authority which after proved the ruine of their power and party. 4 Tricaſſin, ſo called of the Tricaſſini, the old Inhabitants of theſe parts. 5 Die, the Dia Vocontiorum of Antoninus, a Biſhops See, ſituate on the River Droſne: from whence come thoſe ſmall, but good ſtomack-wines, which we call Vin Die. Others affirm (and perhaps more knowingly) that this Wine is of the growth of Champagn, moſt plentifully growing in the fields of a Town called Hey, from whence it hath the name of Vin De Hey, and ſo contractedly Vin Day. 6 Chorges, 7 Mombrum, 8 Eſſiles, of which little memorable.

The chief Inhabitants hereof, in the time of the Romans, beſides the Tricaſſini, Apencenſes, Vacontii, and Accuſtani before mentioned, and the Allobroges, ſpoken of in the Alpine Provinces, were Segalauni about Valence, the Decenſes abovt Die, and the Cavari about Grenoble. Firſt conquered by the Romans, then by the Burgundians, and at laſt by the French: under whom made a part of the new Kingdom of Burgundy, till the ſurrender of the ſame to the German Emperors. Under them it continued, till the year 1100. when Guigne, ſurnamed the Fat, Earl of Griſinaudan, ſeeing the Emperor Henry the fourth overborn by the Popes, and not able to aſſert his own rights; ſeized upon this Province, under the title of Earl of Viennoys; to which Guigne the ſecond, his Son and Succeſſor, gave the name of Daulphine; either from his Wife ſo called, as ſome, or from the Dolphin which he took for his Arms, as others ſay. In this Family it continued, till the year 1349. under the power and government of theſe following Princes, entituled

The Daulphins of Viennois.

A. Ch.
1100	1	Guigne ſurn. the Fat, Earl of Albon and Griſinundan, at the time of the diſſolution of the kingdom of Burgundie.
1135	2	Guigne II. the firſt and abſolute proprietary Prince hereof, by the name of the Daulphin of Venice.
1146	3	Guigne III. ſon of Guigne the ſecond.
1152	4	Beatrix daughter of Guigne the third, firſt maried to Reymond the third, Earl of Tholouſe, next to Hugh the third Duke of Burgundie, and finally to Guigne of Albon, of the houſe of the former Earls: all in her right entituled Daulphins of Viennois.
1208	5	Andrew the ſon of Beatrix and of Guigne the fourth.
1242	6	Guigne V. ſon of Andrew.
1283	7	Humbert the firſt, in right of Anne his wife, daughter and Heir of Guigne the fifth.
1305	8	John the ſon of Humbert, exerciſed in continual wars, as his Father was, with the Earls of Savoy.
1322	9	Guigne VI. ſon of John, taken Priſoner by Edward Earl of Savoy, An. 1329. and at laſt ſlain, An. 1342.
1342	10	Humbert II. the younger ſon of John, and the Brother of Guigne the ſixt, the laſt Daulphin of Viennois, who beeng ſurcharged with wars by Ame (or Amade) Earl of Savoy, entred into the Order of Dominican Friers at Lyons; ſelling his Countrey at a ſmall rate to Philip de Vaiois, French King, upon condition, that the eldeſt Son of France ſhould be entituled always Daulphin of Viennois; and quarter the Arms of Daulphin with thoſe of France. The conditions willingly accepted, and Charles, the Son of King John, the Son of Philip de Valois, admitted by his Grandfather both to the title and eſtate in the very year of the ſurrendry. Since this time, the eldeſt Son of France is called generally the Daulphin of France, ſometimes the Daulphin only, by way of eminency; and many times the Prince Daulphin, to difference him from the Daulphin (or Count-Daulphin) of Auvergne, and perhaps ſome others. A title ſo annexed unto them, that it is not uſually laid by on the acceſſion of a greater or ſuperior dignity: inſomuch as Francis the eldeſt Son of Henry the ſecond, (whom he ſucceeded in the Crown) being King of Scots in the right of Mary his wife, was by the French commonly called Le Roy Daulphin, or the King Daulphin. Nor have they the bare title of this Countrey only, but the command, profits, and poſſeſſion of it; ſending their own Governors thereunto; who by an antient indulgence, have the greateſt priviledges, (conferring all Offices within the Province) of any Governors of France.

The Arms hereof are Azure, a Dolphin hauriant, Or.

19 LA BRESSE.

LA BRESSE is bounded on the Eaſt, with Savoy; on the Weſt, with Lionois; on the North, with Charolois in the Dutchie of Burgundie, and ſome part of the Franche County; and on the South, with Daulphine. The reaſon of the name I find not. The Countrey is very fruitful and pleaſant, embraced betwixt the Rivers of Soaſne and Roſne, with which very well watered. Chief Towns herein are, 1 Bellay, a Biſhops See. 2 Bourg, (for diſtinctions ſake called Bourg en Breſſe) a Town ſo well fenced, and fortified with ſo ſtrong a Citadel for command of the Countrey, that it was thought little inferior rior to the two impregnable Fortreſſes of St. Katherines and Montmelian in Savoy. The Government of which Town and Citadel, was earneſtly laboured for by the Duke of Biron, then Governor of Burgundy, after a repulſe on the like ſute for that of St. Katherine: but being ſuſpected to hold intelligence with the Duke of Savoy, at that time on ill terms with King Henry the 4th, it was alſo denyed him; which drew him into diſcontent, and thereby to his fatal ruine. Afterwards, during the minority of Lewis the 13th demoliſhed, by eſpecial order of the Councel of France, for fear of being ſurpriſed by the Duke of Savoy during thoſe confuſions. It was of old time called the Forum Secuſianorum, from the Secuſiani, the antient Inhabitants of this tract. 3 Caſtillon, 4 Mont-Real, 5 Bugey, 6 Veromen, of which, nothing obſervable.

This little Province, being antiently a part of the Kingdom of Arles & Burgundy, had its own Earls, Proprietary Lords hereof; who held it till the year 1285: at what time Sibyll, the Daughter and Heir of Ulric, Earl of Breſſe and Baugie, (or Baſgee, as ſome Writers call it) conveyed the Eſtate in mariage to Ame or Amadee, the 4th of that name, Earl of Savoy. In which Houſe it continued till the year 1600, and then ſurrendred by Duke Charles Emanuel to King Henry the 4th, to ſilence the pretences which that King had made unto the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, and put an end unto the war then begun about it; the politick Duke chooſing rather to part with an Eſtate on this ſide of the Mountains, than to give that active King occaſion to look into Italy; to which Savoy muſt have been a Thorow-fare. Piemont an ordinary Paſs; and where no end could be expected, but the loſs of all. Surrendred then it was on good reaſon of State, and upon that Surrendrie united and incorporated with the Crown of France, and put under the Government of the Parliament of Digion, as it ſtill continueth.

THe Countrey of LIONOIS is bounded on the Eaſt, with Breſſe; on the Weſt, with Beaujolois, Forreſt and Auvergn; on the North, with Burgundy Dutchie; and on the South, with Daulphin, and a part of Languedoc. So called from Lions the chief City, and under that title made an Earldom by Charles the Groſſe, in the cantoning and diſmembring of the Kingdom of Burgundy: The Earldom containing at that time, not only Lionois it ſelf, but alſo Forreſt and Beaujolois, before deſcribed. The Earls hereof were at firſt only Provincial Governors, but under the diſtractions of the German Empire they ſhifted for themſelves, and became hereditary; but long it held not in one hand. For firſt, the Earldom of Forreſt, and the Lordſhip or Signeury of Beaujeu being taken out of it, about the year 990. the reſt of the Eſtate fell in ſome tract of time to the Biſhops and Church of Lions, but under the Soveraignty of the French Kings, as Lords Paramount of it.

The places in it of moſt note are, 1 Maſcon, (Matiſconum) a Biſhops See, ſituate on the Soaſne, antiently a diſtinct Earldom from that of Lions, one of the five (as that of Lions was another) which made up the Dukedom of Burgundy on this ſide of the Soaſne: one of the Earls hereof called William, flouriſhing in the year 1000 or thereabouts; whoſe ſon and ſucceſſor named Otho, maried Elizabeth daughter of Humbert the firſt Earl of Maurienne (a Title afterwards exchanged for that of Savoy.) Continuing for ſome ages after in this poſterity, it was purchaſed of William the laſt Earl hereof, and of Elizabeth his Wife, by King Lewis the 9th; and afterwards ſubjected to the Juriſdiction and Court of Lions, as it ſtill continueth. 2 Eſchalas, on the Rhoſne, on the South of Lions, oppoſite to Vienne, the chief City of the Lower Daulphin. 3 Dandilli, 4 Francheville, 5 Chaumont, and 6 Lebrelle, all ſomewhat Weſtward of that River, but not much obſervable. 7 Lions it ſelf, pleaſantly ſeated on the confluence of the Soaſne and the Rhoſne, antiently a Roman Colony, (teſtified by many old Inſcriptions) and honored with a magnificent Temple, dedicated by the Cities of France to Auguſtus Cæſar: now the moſt famous Mart of France, and an Univerſity; by our Latin Writers called Lugdunum. Theſe Marts in former times were holden at Geneva, from thence removed hither by King Lewis the 11th, for the enriching of his own Kingdom. When Julio the ſecond had excommunicated Lewis the 12th, he commanded by his Apoſtolical autority that they ſhould be returned to Geneva again; but therein his pleaſure was never obeyed: the Marts continuing ſtill at LIONS, as a place more couvenient and capacious of that great reſort of French, Dutch, and Italian Merchants, which frequent the ſame. As for the Univerſity, queſtionleſs it is very antient; being a ſeat of learning in the time of Caius Caligula. For in thoſe times, before an Altar conſecrated to Auguſtus Cæſar in the Temple ſpoken of before, this Caligula did inſtitute ſome exerciſes of the Greek and Roman eloquence: the Victor to be honored according to his merit; the vanquiſhed either to be ferulated, or with their own tongues to blot and expunge their writings, or to be drowned in the River adjoyning. Hence that of Juvenal, ut Lugdunenſem Rhetor dicturus ad Aram, applyed to dangerous undertakings. In the time of the Romans firſt coming into Gaule, it was the chief City of the Hedui and Secuſiani; afterwards the Metropolis of Lugdunenſis Prima. The Archbiſhop hereof is the Metropolitan of all France; and was ſo in the time of S. Ireneus, one of the renowned Fathers in the Primitive Church, who was Biſhop here.

In this Town lived Peter Waldo, a wealthy Citizen, about the time of Frederick Barbaroſſa, Emperor of Germany: who being a devout and conſcientious man, ſenſible of the many errors and corruptions in the Church of Rome, diſtributed the greateſt parts of his riches amongſt the poor, and betook himſelf to meditation and ſtudying of the holy Scriptures. In the carnal eating of CHRISTS body, the ſubſtraction of the Cup in the bleſſed Sacrament, in matter of Purgatory, the Supremacy, adoration of Images, Invocation of the Saints departed, and many other points of moment; he held opinions contrary unto those of Rome, and little different from those of the present Reformed Churches. And yet it may not be denied, but that amongst some good Wheat there were many Tares; which gave the juster colour to their Adversaries to exclaime against them. Being much followed, in regard of his piety and charity, he got unto himself and them the name of Pauperes de Lugduno, or the Poor men of Lions, given in derision and contempt. Afterwards they were called Waldenses, by the name of Waldo, the beginner of this Reformation; and by that name opposed, and writ against by Frier Thomas of Walden. The French, according to their manner of Pronunciation, drowning the L. and changing the W. into V. call them commonly Vaudois; by which name they occurre in the stories of that State, and Language. But Lions proving no safe place for them, they retired into the more desert parts of Languedoc, and spreading on the banks of the River Alby, obtained the name of Albigenses, as before was said. Supported by the two last Earls of Tholouse, they became very masterfull and insolent: Insomuch, that they murdered Trincanell their Viscount in Beziers, and dashed out the teeth of their Bishop, having taken Sanctuary in S. Magdalens Church, one of the Churches of that City. Forty years after which high outrage, the divine Providence gave them over to the hand of the Croisadas, under the conduct of the French Kings, and many other noble Adventurers; who sacrificed them in the self-same Church, wherein they had spoiled the bloud of others. About the year 1250, after a long and bloudy War, they were almost rooted out of that Countrey also. The remnants of them being bettered by this affliction, betook themselves unto the mountains lying betwixt Daulphine, Province, Piemont, and Savoy, where they lived a godly and laborious life; painfully tilling the ground, re-building Villages, which formerly had been destroyed by War; teaching the very Rocks to yield good pasturage to their Cattel: insomuch, as places which before their coming thither scarce yielded four Crowns yearly, were made worth 350 Crowns a year, by their care and industry. Lasciviousnesse in speech they used not; Blasphemy they abhorred, nor was the name of Devil (in the way of execration) ever heard amongst them; as their very enemies could not but confess, when they were afterward in troubles. The Crimes alleged against them were, That when they came into any of the neighbouring Churches, they made no address unto the Saints; nor bowed before such Crosses as were erected in the high-ways, and streets of Towns. Great crimes assuredly, when greater could not be produced. And so they lived, neither embracing the Popes doctrines, nor submitting unto his Supremacie, for the space of 300 years, untouched, unquestioned; even till the latter end of the reign of King Francis the first. But then the Persecution raging against the Lutherans, they were accused, condemned, and barbarously murdered, in the Massacres of Merindol, and Chabriers before mentioned. After which time, joyning themselves with the rest of the Protestant party, they lost the name of Vaudois, by which called before; and passe in the accompt of the Reformed Churches of France; enjoying the same privileges and freedom of Conscience, as others of the Reformed do. And though I look not on these men and their Congregations, as founders of the Protestant Church, or of the same Church with them, as I see some do: yet I behold them as Assertors of some doctrinall truthes, and professed Enemies of the errours and corruptions of the Church of Rome, and therein as the Predecessours of the present Protestants.

The old Inhabitants of this tract were a part of the Hedui, that Nation overspreading not this Countrey only, but Bourbonois, with the whole Dukedom of Burgundie. And of these Hedui, the Insubres are thought by some learned men to have been a Tribe; who passing over the Alpes, together with the Senones, and others of the Gallick Nations, possessed themselves of those parts of Italie which now make up the Dukedoms of Millain, Parma, Mantua, with the parts adjoyning. The residue of the story which concernes this Countrey, we have had before.

THe Dukedom of BURGUNDIE hath on the East, the French County, and some part of Savoy; on the West, Bourbonois; on the North, Champagne; on the South, La Bresse, Lionois, and some part of Beau joulois. A Province so well watered with pleasant and profitable Rivers, that as Qu. Katharine de Medices used to say of France, That it had more fair Rivers then all Europe; so we may say of this Countrey, That it had more fine Riverets then all France: here being the Rivers of 1 Armacan, 2 Serum, 3 Curi, 4 Torney, 5 Valence, 6 Dove, 7 Brune, 8 Sein, 9 Louche, and 10 Soasne, (the Araris of the antient Writers) this last dividing the two Burgundies from one another. Yet notwithstanding this great plenty of waters, the Countrey generally is lesse fruitful then the rest of France; hardly yeelding sufficient for its own inhabitants, except wines only.

Chief Cities in it, are, 1 Dijon, the birth place of S. Bernard, seated upon the Soasne and L'ouche, in a champian Countrey: the Town large, populous, and of much resort, as being the Seat of the Governour, and Parliamentary for the Province; a Parliament being here erected, Anno 1476. Well fortified on all parts, but specially defended by a strong Castle called Talente, situate on an hill adjoyning. It is called Divio in the Latine, the Bishop hereof Divionensis. 2 Chalons, (in Latine, Caballinum) called for distinctions sake, Chalons upon Soasne, to difference it from Chalons upon Marn, in Champagne: a Bishops See also, as the other is; and gives name to that noble Family of Chalons, (out of which the Princes of Orange are extracted) being one of the four antient families of Burgundie; the other three, Vienne, Neufchatell, and Virgie. 3 Autun, by Ptolemie called Auguſtodunum, the chief City of the Hedui, now a Biſhops See: heretofore the chief of all the Countrey, ſome marks of the old ſplendour being ſtill to be ſeen; now very ordinary and mean, beautified only with ſome fair Churches, which the ruins of time have not yet demoliſhed. 4 Beaune, ſeated on the Burſoize, in the beſt and richeſt ſoil of all Burgundie; and yielding the beſt Wines in France: remarkable for an Hoſpital of ſo fair a building, that it is thought equal to any Princes Palace in Europe; and an impregnable Caſtle built by King Lewis the 12th. 5 Alize, now a ſmall Village, but of great name and power in the time of Cæſar, then called Alexia, the chief Fortreſs of Vercingetorix, beſieged herein by the ſaid Cæſar; but ſo beſieged, that he had 70000 men in the Town for defence of the place; and an Army of 300000 Galls at the back of Cæſar, to relieve their fellows. So that he was fain to fortifie his Camp with two Wals, the one againſt them within the City, and the other againſt them without: which done, he kept ſuch diligent watch and ward on both ſides, that the beſieged heard ſooner of the diſcomfiture of their Friends, than they did of their coming. Which fatall news being brought unto them, the Town was yielded. And Vercingetorix bravely mounted, rode round about Cæſar, then ſitting in his Chair of State, diſarmed himſelf, took off his Horſes capariſons, and laying all upon the ground, ſat down at Cæſar feet and became his Priſoner. 6 Tournus, encompaſſed with the Soaſne. 7 Semur, conſiſting of three parts, each of them ſeverally Walled, and ſtrongly fortified. 8 Verdun, 9 Nayz. 10 St. Ligier, famous for medicinal Bathes. 11 Noyers, on the Borders towards Champagne. 12 Auxerre, by Antonine called Antiſiodorum; of moſt note for the Councill held here, Anno 627: the Countrey about which is called Auxerrois, and was an Earldom of it ſelf. The Title and poſſeſſion of that Peter Earl of Auxerre, who was the third Emperour of the Latines reigning in Conſtantinople; to whom it came in mariage with his firſt Wife Agnes, the daughter of the laſt Earl of the former Race. On the failer of which houſe, it fell unto that of Chalons, by the mariage of Iſabel Neece of the ſaid Peter by his brother Robert, to John of Chalons Earl of Burgundie: to whom ſucceeded John de Chalons his eldeſt Son by that Venter (his ſecond wife) and finally was ſold by John of Chalons, great Grandchild of the ſaid John Earl of Burgundie, to Charles the fifth of France, Anno 1370; by whom united to the Crown, ſubjected to the Parliament of Paris, and made part of Champagne. Here is alſo within this Countrey the great and famous Monaſtery of Ciſteaux, the mother of ſo many Religious houſes, diſperſed up and down in Europe, from hence denominated, and ſubject to the diſcipline and Rules hereof. Burgundie Dukedom.

Vienne,

Within the limits of this Dukedom (on the South parts of it) ſtands the Earldom of CHAROLLOIS, heretofore the title of the eldeſt Son of the Dukes of Burgundie; ſo called from Charolles, the chief Town hereof, ſituate in the borders of it, towards La Breſſe: ſeized upon, with the reſt of this Dukedom, by Lewis the 11th, immediately on the death of Duke Charles the Warlike; reſtored again to Philip, the ſecond, King of Spain, by Henry the ſecond, of France, on the peace made at Cambray; and ſubjected to the Parliament of Dole in the County of Burgundie, as a part or member of that Eſtate. So that neither the Governour of the Dukedom for the French King, nor the Parliament of Digion, have any thing to do in it. The Arms hereof are Gules, a Lion paſſant regardant Or, armed Azure.

The antient Inhabitants of the whole Dukedom, according to the limits before laid down, were the Hedui, one of the moſt potent Nations of all Gaule: who called in the Romans, to aid them in their quarrels againſt the Sequani and Arverni, made them all ſubject unto Rome. In the proſperity whereof they made up the Province of Lugdunenſis Prima, of which Lions was the Metropolis or principall City. Afterwards, in the diviſion of the French Kingdom of Burgundie, by Charles the Bald; this part thereof, being called the Dukedom of Burgundie on this ſide of the Soaſne, was cantoned into the five Earldoms of Dijon, Chalons, Autun, Lions, and Maſcon: whereof the three firſt laid together by Odo or Eudes King of France, during the minority of Charles the Simple, were given unto his brother Richard (both Sons of Robert Earl of Anjou) under the ſtyle and title of Duke of Burgundie. The iſſue of this Robert failing, it fell unto another Robert, Son of Hugh Capet King of France: and the male iſſue failing of that Line alſo, it was involved partly by eſcheat for want of heirs male, and partly in the right and title of the heir Generall, to King John of France the ſon of Philip de Valois, and of Joan his wife, one of the daughters of Robert the third, who with the conſent of Charles his eldeſt Son, ſurnamed the Wiſe, gave it unto his ſecond Son Philip, (more worthily ſurnamed the Hardie) together with the mariage of the Heir of Flanders, Artois, and the County of Burgundie. An Argument of no great wiſdom, as was judiciouſly obſerved by King Lewis the 11th. For by this means, thoſe great Eſtates being united in one perſon, and afterwards theſe Eſtates improved by as proſperous mariages; this houſe of Burgundie grew formidable to the Kings themſelves: who never left practiſing againſt it, till they had brought it to ruine; and once again united this Dukedom to their own Eſtate from which at firſt it was diſmembred.

The Dukes of Burgundie.

890 1 Richard of Saxonie, the ſecond Son of Robert Earl of Anjou, brother of Eudes, and Father of Rodolph Kings of France.

938 2 Gilbert, the ſecond Son of Richard.

964 3 Otho, Son of Hugh Earl of Paris, ſurnamed the Great, and Brother of Hugh Capet King of France; was Duke of Burgundie, in right of his Wife the Daughter of Gilbert.

976 4 Henry,

Burgundie County.

976 4 Henry, the Brother of Otho.
1001 5 Robert, King of France, Son of Hugh Capet, ſucceeded in the Dukedom, on the death of his Unkle Henry.
1004 6 Robert II. Son of this Robert, and Brother of Henry King of France.
1075 7 Hugh, the Nephew of Robert by his Sonne Henry, became afterwards a Monk of Clugny.
1097 8 Odo, or Otho II. Brother of Hugh.
1102 9 Hugh II. Son of Otho the 2d.
1124 10 Odes, or Otho III. Son of Hugh the 2d.
1165 11 Hugh III. the Companion, but great Enemy of our Richard the firſt, in the Wars of the Holy-Land.
1192 12 Odes or Otho IV. Son of Hugh the 3d.
1218 13 Hugh IV. an Adventurer with King Lewis the 9th in the Holy-Land.
1273 14 Robert III. Son of Hugh the 4th, which Robert was the Father of Margaret, the Wife of Lewis Hutin King of France and Navarre; and of Joan, the Wife of Philip de Valois, French King, and Grandmother of Philip the Hardie, after, Duke of Burgundie.
1308 15 Hugh V. Son of Robert the 3d.
1315 16 Eudes, the Brother of Hugh, was Earl of Burgundie alſo in right of his Wife.
1349 17 Philip, the Grand-child of Eudes by his only Son Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundie by deſcent (who if he had lived, had been alſo Earl of Flanders and Artois in right of Margaret his Wife) But dying young and without iſſue, he was ſucceeded in all his titles and eſtates by 1363 18 Philip II. ſurnamed the Hardie, Son of John King of France, Son of Philip de Valois, and of Joan Daughter of Robert the 3d, by King John his Father, with the conſent of Charles the 5th his Brother, (in whom the right of this Dukedom was then pretended to remain) made Duke of Burgundie, and maried Margaret daughter of Lewis de Malaine (and conſequently Heir of Flanders, and the County of Burgundie) the Widow of his Predeceſſor.
1404 19 John, ſurnamed the Proud, Son of Philip the 2d, Duke and Earl of Burgundie, and Earl of Flanders and Artois.
1419 20 Philip III. ſurnamed the Good, who added moſt of the Netherlands to his Eſtate.
1467 21 Charles the Warlike, Earl of Carolois, Son of Philip the Good. After whoſe death, ſlain by the Switzers, at the battell of Nancie, Lewis the 11th ſeized upon this Dukedom, Anno 1476. pretending an Eſcheat thereof, for want of Heirs males; and ſo uniting it for ever to the Crown of France: as by like colour of Eſcheat, King John had formerly entred on it, and given it unto Philip his younger Son, to the prejudice of the Earls of Eureux deſcended from the daughter and heir of Lewis Hutin, and of Margaret his Wife, the elder Siſter of the Mother of the ſaid King John.

Of the great wealth and potencie of theſe laſt Dukes of Burgundie, we ſhall ſpeak further when we come to the deſcription of Belgium: the acceſſion whereof to their Eſtates, made them equall to moſt Kings in Chriſtendom. But for their Arms, which properly belonged to them as Dukes of Burgundie, they were Bendwiſe of Or and Azure, a Border Gules. Which Coat is uſually marſhalled in the Scutchions of the Kings of Spain; that of the Earldom being omitted, though in their poſſeſſion. The reaſons of which are probably (for I go but by gueſs) partly becauſe this being the older and Paternal Coat, comprehends the other; and partly to keep on foot the memory of his Title to the Dukedom it ſelf, in right of which he holdeth ſuch a great Eſtate.

22. The County of BURGUNDIE.

The County of BURGUNDIE hath on the Eaſt, the Mountain Jour, which parts it from Switzerland; on the Weſt, the Dutchie of Burgundie, from which divided by the Soaſne; on the North, a branch of the Mountain Vauge, which runneth betwixt it and Lorreine; on the South, La Breſſe. It is reckoned to be 90 miles in length, about 60 in breadth: and with the Provinces of Daulphine, La Breſſe, and Provence, made up the Dukedom of Burgundie beyond the Soaſne; on the Eaſtern ſide of which it is wholly ſituate. This part thereof, now generally called the Frenche Comtè, or the Free County, becauſe not under the command of the French Kings; but living in a more free Eſtate than any Subjects of that Kingdom.

The Country in ſome parts very Mountainous, but thoſe Mountains yielding excellent Vineyards; and having in recompence of a little barrenneſs, an intermixture of moſt pleaſing and fruitful vallies: ſwelling with plenty of all naturall commodities uſefull unto the life of man; and for the variety of freſh ſtreams, and delightfull Riverets, inferiour only to the Dutchie.

The principall Towns and Cities of it, are, 1 Beſanſon, called by Cæſar, Veſontio, then the chief City of the Sequani, as afterwards the Metropolis of the Province entituled Maxima Sequanorum; by conſequence an Archbiſhops See. Seated betwixt two Mountains on the banks of the River Doux, by which it is almoſt encompaſſed; ſuch artificiall Fortifications being added to it, as make it very ſtrong both by art and nature. But this is an Imperiall City, not ſubject to the Government and Command of the Earls of Burgundie; honoured with a ſmall Univerſity founded here, Anno 1540. by Pope Julio the ſecond, and Charles the fifth. 2 Dole, ſeated on the ſame River Doux, for riches, ſtrength, and beauty, to be preferred before any in all the County; of which it is the Parliament City, and conſequently of moſt reſort for diſpatch of buſineſſe. Antiently it was an Univerſity for the ſtudy of the Civill Lawes; but now the Univerſity is devoured by a Colledge of Jeſuites: who fearing leſt the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches might creep in amongſt the people, not only have debarred them the uſe of the Proteſtants Books; but have expreſſely forbid them to talk of GOD, either in a good ſort or in a bad. 3 Salins, ſo called from its ſalt fountains, out of which came the greateſt part of the Earls Revenue; in which reſpect, or that it was the title of Otho, the Son of Frederick Barbaroſſa, before he did attain the Earldom: the Earl of Burgundie ſince that time, and the Emperours of Germany in their right, retain the name of Lords of Salines in their uſual ſtyle. A City honoured for a while with the ſeat of the Parliament, removed hither from Dole by King Lewis the eleventh at ſuch time as he held this Countrey; beholding to him (being a wiſe and politick Prince) for many wholeſome Ordinances, ſtill obſerved amongſt them. 4 Poligni, the Bailliage of the Lower; as 5 Veſcal is of the Higher Burgundie. 6 Arboiſe, noted for the beſt Wines; and 7 Luxoal for medicinable Bathes. 8 Nazareth, on the borders of Switzerland, fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle; the ordinary ſeat and retreat from buſineſſe of the firſt Princes of Orange, of the houſe of Chalons, who had great poſſeſſions in this Countrey. 9 Gray, and 10 Chaſtel-Chalon. 11 Quingey. 12 Orgelet. Here is alſo the great and famous Abby of Clugny, neer the Town of Beaum; out of which ſo many Monaſteries in the Weſtern Church, had their firſt Originall.

The old Inhabitants of this County were the Sequani, a potent name, contending with the Hedui and Arverni for the Soveraignty of Gaul; till the ſtriſe was ended by the Romans; under whom it made together with Switzerland, the Province of Maxima Sequanorum. In the declining of which Empire, it fell to the Burgundians; and by Rodolph the laſt King of the French Kingdom of Burgundie, was given to Conrade the ſecond Emperour of Germanie. After that reckoned as a part of the German Empire, and governed by ſuch Earls or Provincial Officers, as thoſe Emperours ſent hither. Otho of Flanders, Son to a Siſter of the Emperour Conrade, was the firſt that held it as Proprietary: the other three whom Paradine ſets before him in his Catalogue of the Earls of Burgundie, being meerly Official. It was firſt united to the Dutchy by the mariage of D. Eudes, with Joan the Counteſs. But no iſſue coming of this bed, it fell into the houſe of Flanders; and with the Heir of Flanders, unto Philip the Hardie, the firſt Duke hereof, of the Royall Race of Valois, Anno 1369. Philip the Grand-child of this Philip, united moſt of the Belgick Provinces unto his Eſtate: after whoſe death, and the death of Charles his Son at the battle of Nancie; the Dutchie was ſurprized by King Lewis the eleventh, as holden of the Crown of France, eſcheated to him for want of Heirs males. But the County, holden of the Empire, though ſubdued alſo by this Lewis, was reſtored again to Mary, the Daughter and Heir of Charles; continuing hitherto in her iſſue, as appears evidently by this Catalogue of

The Earls of Burgundie.

1001 1 Otho Guillaume, the firſt Earl of Burgundie, by the power and aid of Robert King of France.

1118 2 Reinald, Couſin and Heir of Otho.

1183 4 Otho, the youngeſt Son of Frederick.

1200 5 Otho II. Duke of Meranie, part of the Province of Tirol in Germany, was Earl of Burgundie in right of Beatrix his Wife, the Daughter of Otho the firſt.

1208 6 Stephen, Earl of Chalons, next Heir of Gerard of Vienne, and Joan his Wife, the ſecond Daughter of Otho the firſt, and Siſter of Beatrix, acknowledged by his faction there for Earl of Burgundie, in the life of Otho the ſecond, whom he diſpoſſeſſed; and left the ſame unto his Son, to the prejudice of Alice the Daughter of Otho.

1234 7 John, Son of Stephen de Chalons.

1269 8 Hugh the Son of John, maried to Alice Daughter of Otho of Meranie, ſo getting in that pretention alſo.

1270 9 Othelin, the Son of Hugh; Earl of Artois in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter of Robert Earl of Artois.

1315 10 Philip the Long, King of France; Earl of Burgundie and Artois, in right of Joan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Othelin.

1331 11 Eudes, Duke of Burgundie, husband of Joan of France, the eldeſt Daughter of King Philip the Long, and of Joan the Counteſſe.

1349 12 Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundie, Grand-child of Eudes, and of Joan his Wife, by their Son Philip.

1361 13 Margaret, the Widow of Lewis Earl of Flanders, and ſecond Daughter of Philip the Long, and of Joan the Counteſſe, was Counteſſe of Burgundie and Artois, after the death of her Couſin Philip.

French Islands.

14 Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders by his Father, and of Burgundie and Artois by his Mother.

1383 15 Philip II. called the Hardie, Duke of Burgundie by the gift of King John his Father, with the conſent and approbation of his Brother Charles the fifth; was Earl of Burgundie, Flanders, and Artois, as alſo Duke of Nevers and Rethel, in right of Margaret his Wife, ſole Daughter of Lewis de Malain.

1404 16 Antony the Proud, Duke and Earl of Burgundie; his younger Brother Philip ſucceeding in the Earldoms of Nevers and Rethel.

1419 17 Philip III. called the Good, Duke and Earl of Burgundie.

1467 18 Charles the Warlike, Dake and Earl of Burgundie.

1476 19 Mary, the Daughter of Charles, maried to Maximilian of Auſtria, Son of Frederick the third, Emperour of Germanie, in which honour he ſucceeded his Father.

1482 20 Philip IV. Son of Mary and Maximilian, King of Caſtile, in right of his Wife Joan, Daughter to Ferdinand and Iſabel King of Caſtile, &c.

1506 21 Charles, the Son of Philip, King of Spain, and Emperour of Germany, by the name of Charles the fifth.

1558 22 Philip V. of Burgundie, and the II. of Spain.

23 Philip VI. of Burgundie, and the III. of Spain.

24 Philip VII. of Burgundie, and the IV. of Spain; in whom reſteth the poſſeſſion of the County of Burgundie, and the Earldom of Charalois: herein not troubled by the French upon the death of Charles the Warlike, partly becauſe it was accompted as a Feif of the Empire; but principally for fear of giving offence to the Cantons of Switzerland, upon whom it bordereth; jealous enough already of the greatneſſe and power of France, and ſo not willing to admit ſuch a potent Neighbour.

The Armes of this Earldom are Azure, a Lion rampant Or, Seme of Billets Argent.

23. The ISLANDS in the AQUITAN and GALLICK OCEAN.

HAving thus took a view of the ſeveral Provinces, within the Continent of France, let us next look upon the ISLANDS which belong unto it; diſperſed in the Mediteranean Sea, and the Weſtern Ocean. Thoſe in the Mediterranean Sea, are of little note, as the Iſles of Eres, and 2 Pomegues, lying againſt Provence; 3 Maguelone, lying againſt Languedoc; and 4 L' Anguellade, betwixt both, at the mouth of the Rhoſne: of which there is nothing to be ſaid, but that thoſe of Eres are thought to be the Stoechades of Ptolemie, and his Blaſcon, to be Anguillade. And of as little note in the Weſtern Ocean, are Belle Iſle, againſt Vannes in Bretagne; the Iſle de Deiu, having in it two or three good Villages; and Marmoſtier, plentifull in Salt, and beautified with a Monaſtery called the White Abbie. Of which three laſt, that of Belle-Iſle, hath been of late ſo fortified by Art, as of old by Nature, that it is thought to be inpregnable; the Abby of the laſt, endowed with ſo plentifull a Revenue that it was thought a competent preferment for Anthonine, of Burbon, Baſe Brother to King Henry the fourth, to be made Lord Abbat of the ſame. Thoſe of moſt note are, 1 Oleron, and 2 Ree, on the Coaſt of Aquitaine; and thoſe of 3 Jarſey, 4 Gernſey, 5 Sarke, and 6 Alderney, on the ſhores of Normandie: Of which, the four laſt are under the Kings of England, the reſt poſſeſſed by the French.

1 OLERON, is an Iſland ſituate over againſt the Provence of Xaintogne, and South unto the Iſle of Ree, from which little diſtant. It is the biggeſt of the two, and makes yearly very great quantity of Salt, wherewith moſt of the Provinces on the Weſtern Ocean uſe to be furniſhed. But it is eaſie of acceſs, and not very defenſible, which makes it of leſſe note both in antient and modern ſtories. The principal Town of it is called Oleron, by the name of the Iſland. One thing there is, for which indeed this Iſland is of ſpeciall fame, and that is, that the Marine Laws, which for neer 500 years have generally been received by all the States of the Chriſtian World, which frequent the Ocean, (the Rhodian Laws being antiquated and worn out of uſe) for regulating of Sea affairs, and deciding of Maritime Controverſies, were declared and eſtabliſhed here; and from hence called the Laws of Oleron. And here they were declared and eſtabliſhed by King Richard the firſt of England, as Lord Paramount of the Seas, immediately on his return from the Holy-Land: this Iſland being then in his poſſeſſion, as a Member of his Dukedom of Aquitaine. Quæ quidem Leges & Statuta per Dominum Richardum quondam Regem Angliæ, in reditu à Terra Sancta, correcta fuerunt, interpretata, declarata, & in Inſula de Oleron publicata & nominata in Gallica Lingua La Loy d' Oleron, &c. ſaith an old Record which I find cited in a M. S. Diſcourſe of my late learned Friend Sir John Burroughs (once Keeper of the Records in the Tower of London, but afterwards Principall King of Arms, by the name of Garter) entituled, The Soveraignty of the Britiſh Seas. So powerful were the Kings of England in the former times, as to give Laws to all that traded on the Ocean.

French Islands.

2 The Isle of RE, is situate over against Rochel; to which it served for an Outwork, on that side thereof. It is in length ten English miles, and about half as much in breadth, well fortified with deep marishes at the entries of it; to which the many Salt-pits every where intermingled, add a very great strength. Chief places in it, are, 1 La Butte de Mont. 2 St. John de Mons. 3 St. Hillary. 4 St. Martins, the largest and strongest of them all, from whence the whole Island hath sometimes been called St. Martins. After the taking of this Town by Lewis the 13th, Anno 1622. (The Duke of Soubize then commanding in it for those of Rochell) it was very well fortified; and since made unfortunately famous for the defeat of the English Forces under the command of George Duke of Buckingham, sent thither to recover the Town and Island, on the instigation of Soubize, who before had lost it, Anno 1627.

3 JARSEY, by Antonine called Cæsarea, is situate about ten miles from the Coast of Normandie, within the view and prospect of the Church of Constance, part of which Diocese it was: in length containing 11 miles, 6 in breadth, and in circuit about 33. It is generally very fruitfull of Corn, whereof they have not only enough for themselves, but some overplus to barter at St. Malos, with the Spanish Merchants: and of an Air not very much disposed to diseases, unless it be an Ague in the end of Harvest, which they call Les Settembers. The Countrey stands much upon inclosures, the hedges of the ground well stored with Apples, and those Apples making store of Sider, which is their ordinary drink: watered with many pleasant Rivulets, and good store of Fishponds, yeelding a Carp for taste and largeness inferiour unto none in Europe, except those of Gernsey; which generally are somewhat bigger, but not better relished. The people for the most part, more inclinable to husbandry, then to trades or merchandise; and therein differing very much from those of Gernsey, who are more for merchandize than tillage. It containeth in it 12 Parishes, or Villages, having Churches in them, besides the Mansions of the Seigneurs, and chief men of the Countrey. The principall is St. Hilaries, where is the Cohu, or Court of Justice for all the Island. It is about the bigness of an ordinary Market Town in England; situate on the edge of a little Bay, fortified on the one side with a small Block-house called Mount St. Aubin; but on that side which is next the Town with a very strong Castle called Fort Elizabeth, situate upon craggy Rocks, and encompassed with two armes of the Sea: so named from Queen Elizabeth, who built it to assure the Island against the French, and furnished it with 30 piece of Ordinance, and all other necessaries. There is also on the East side, opposite to the City of Constance, high mounted on steep and craggy Rocks, the strong Castle of Mont-Orgueil; of great antiquity, repaired by King Henry the fifth, now furnished with 40 piece of Cannon, and made the ordinary residence of the Governours for the Kings of England.

4 On the North-west of Jarsey, lyeth the Island of GERNSEY, called Sarnia by Antoninus, in form Triangular, each side of nine miles in length. The Countrey is of as rich a soil as the other of Jarsey, but not so well cultivated and manured: the poorer people here being more given to manufactures, (especially to the knitting of Stockings and Wast-coats) and the rich to merchandize; many of which are Masters of good stout Barks, with which they traffick into England and other places. The whole Island containe ten Villages with Churches; the Principall of which St. Peters Port, a very neat and well-built Town, with a safe Peer for the benefit of Merchants, and the securing of the Haven, capable of handsom Barks: a Market Town, beautified with a very fair Church, and honoured with the Plaiderie or Court of Justice. Opposite whereto, in a little Islet standeth the Castle of Cornet, taking up the whole circuit and dimensions of it; environed on all sides with the Sea, having one entrance only, and that very narrow: well fortified with works of Art, and furnished with no lesse then 80 pieces of Ordinance for defence of the Island; but chiefly to command the adjoyning Harbour, capable of 500 as good ships as any sail on the Ocean. A piece of great importance to the Realm of England, and might prove utterly destructive of the trade hereof, if in the hands of any Nation that were strong in shipping. For that cause made the Ordinary Seat of the English Governours; though of late times not so much honoured with the presence of those Governours, as a place of that consequence ought to be. Pertaining unto Gernsey are two little Islets, the one called Jet-how, the Governours Park, wherein are some few Fallow Deer, and good plenty of Conies: the other named Arme, some three miles in compass, a dwelling heretofore of Franciscan Friers; now not inhabited but by Pheasants, of which, amongst the shrubs and bushes, there is very good store.

5 ALDERNY, by Antonine called Arica, by the French, Aurigni, and Aurney, is situate over against the Cape of the Lexobii in the Dukedom of Normandie, which the Mariners at this day call the Hagge: distant from which but six miles only. Besides many dwelling houses scattered up and down, there is one pretty Town or Village of the same name with the Island, consisting of about an hundred Families; and having not far off an Harbour, made in the fashion of a Semi-Circle, which they call La Crabbie. The whole about 8 miles in compass, of very difficult access, by reason of the high rocks and precipices, which encompass it on every side; and with a small force easily defensible, if thought worth attempting.

6 And so is also SARK, the adjoyning Island, being in compasse six miles; not known by any special name unto the Antients: and to say truth, not peopled till the fifth year of Q. Elizabeth: who then granted it in Fee-farm to Helier de Carteret, the Signeur of St. Oen in the Isle of Jarsey, who from thence planted it, and made Estates out of it to severall Occupants; so that it may contain now about 50 Housholds. Before which time it served only for a Common or Beasts pasture to those of Gernsey; save that there was an Hermitage, and a little Chappel, for the use of such, as the solitarineſſe of the place invited to thoſe retirements.

Theſe two laſt Iſlands, are ſubject to the Governour of Gernsey, all four to the Crown of England, holden in right of the Dukedom of Normandie; to which they antiently belonged, and of which now the ſole remainders in the power of the Engliſh. Attempted often by the French (the two firſt I mean) ſince they ſeized on Normandie, but alwayes with repulſe and loſſe: the people being very affectionate to the Engliſh Government, under which they enjoy very ample Priviledges; which from the French they could not hope for. Their language is the Norman-French (though the better ſort of them ſpeak the Engliſh alſo): their Law, the Grand Cuſtomaire of Normandie, attempered and applyed to the uſe of this people in their ſuites and buſineſs, by the Bailiffs, and Juſticiars of the two chief Iſlands. Their Religion for the main, is that of the Reformed Churches: the Government in Jarſey by the Dean thereof, Suffragan heretofore to the Biſhop of Conſtance, now to the Biſhop of Wincheſter; in Gernſey, by a mixt Conſiſtory of Clergie and Lay-Elders, according to the new Modell of Geneva, a Government firſt introduced in both Iſlands, Anno 1565. being the eighth year of Queen Elizabeth; and aboliſhed again in Jarſey, Anno 1619. being the ſeventeenth of King James.

But to return again to the ſtory of France, thorow which we have now made our Progreſs, both by Sea and Land: It took this name from the Frankes or French, a German People, who in the Wane of the Roman Empire poſſeſſed themſelves of it: not mentioned by that name by Cæſar, Strabo, Ptolemie, or any of the more antient Writers. Nor was it taken up by them, for ought appeareth, till an hundred years after the death of Ptolemie: the firſt expreſs mention of them occurring in the reign of Gallienus; then ranſacking the coaſts of Gaul, and joyning with Poſthumus the Rebell, againſt that Emperour. Afterwards often ſpoken of in the courſe of the Roman ſtories, under the Empire of Claudius, Probus, Diocletian, and the Sons of Conſtantine: though only in the way of pillage and depredation. Their habitation in thoſe times, was from the meeting of the Rhene with the River Moenus, not far from Franckford, where they confined upon the Almans, to the German Ocean: containing the particular Nations of the Bructeri, Sicambri, Salii, Cheruſci, Friſii, and Tuctteri, beſides ſome others of leſſe note: and taking up the Countries of Weſtphalen, Bergen, Marck, and ſo much of Cleve, as lyeth on the Dutch ſide of the Rhene, the Lantgravedom of Haſſia, the Dutchie of Gueldres, the Provinces of Zutphen, Utrecht, Over-yſell, both Frieſlands, and ſo much of Holland as lyeth on the ſame ſide of the Rhene. United in the name of Frankes, to ſhew that Liberty or Freedom from the yoak of ſervitude which the Romans had endevoured to impoſe upon them; and wherewith all the Nations on the other ſide of the River, were ſuppoſed to ſuffer: Governed by Dukes, till the year 420. when Pharamond firſt took upon himſelf the name of King. Meroveus their third King, having diſpoſſeſſed the Sons of Clodion, the Son and Succeſſor of Pharamond, was the firſt that fixed his ſeat in Gaul: when ſeeing the Romans, on the one ſide put to the worſt by Theodorick and the Gothes; and on the other ſide, by the Burgundians; they paſſed over the Rhene, and poſſeſſed themſelves of the Province of Germania Secunda, containing all the Belgick Provinces on the French ſide of that River, together with the Diſtrict of Colen, Gulick, and the reſt of Cleve, then paſſing in the account of Gaul. His victories and fortunes were inherited by Chilperic, his Son and Succeſſor, who added Picardie, Champaine, and the Iſle of France, to the former conqueſt; took Paris and made it the ſeat of his Kingdom. Afterwards when they had fully ſeated themſelves here, and thereby opened a free paſſage to the reſt of the Countrey, they quickly made themſelves Maſters of all that which formerly had been poſſeſſed by the Romans; whom they outed of their laſt hold in Soiſſons, under Clovis their fifth King; who alſo took Aquitain and the parts adjoyning, from the Viſi-Gothes, or Gothes of Spain: for theſe and many ſignal victories againſt the Almans, deſervedly ſurnamed the Great; but greater in ſubmitting to the Faith of CHRIST, and receiving Baptiſm, than by all his victories. Childebert, and Clotaire, the Sons of this Clovis, vanquiſhed the Burgundians, adding that Kingdom to their own: as Theodebert his Grandchild, King of Mets, or Auſtraſia, did the Countrey of Provence, reſigned unto him by Amalaſunta, Queen of the Oſtro-Gothes, or Gothes of Italy; by whom it had been wreſted from the Gothes of Spain. In the perſon of Clotaire the ſecond, the Realm of France improvidently diſmembred into many Kingdoms, amongſt the Children of Clovis the firſt, that is to ſay, the Kingdoms of France, Soiſſons, Orleans, and Auſtraſia, (of which Orleans and Auſtraſia were of long continuance) were again united: Whoſe Succeſſor Dagobert the firſt, was the laſt conſiderable Prince of the Merovignians. After this time, the reputation of the French Kings of this line, began to diminiſh, ſcarce doing any thing that might ennoble and commend them to ſucceeding Ages; or leaving any monument behind them but their empty Names; which I ſhall repreſent in the following Catalogue according to their ſeverall times: firſt taking notice, that though the Kings of this firſt race did many times divide the Kingdom, as before was ſaid; yet none of them were called Kings of France, but thoſe that had their Royal ſeat in the City of Paris; the reſt being called only Kings of Soiſſons, Mets, or Orleans, according to the name of their Principal Cities. And therefore leaving thoſe to their proper places, we will here only take a ſurvey of thoſe, who paſſed in common eſtimate for the Kings of France.

The

The Kings of France of the French or Merovignian Line.

449 1 Merovæus, Maſter of the horſe to Clodion the Son of Pharamond, from whom this line of Kings were called Merovignians. 10.

459 2 Chilperic, the Son of Merove. 26.

485 3 Clovis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French. 30.

515 4 Childebert, eldeſt Son of Clovis, his other Brethren Reigning in their ſeveral places. 45.

560 5 Clotaire, Brother of Childebert, firſt King of the Soiſſons, afterwards ſole King of the French.

565 6 Cherebert, Son of Clotaire.

574 7 Chilperic II. King of Soiſſons, and Brother of Cherebert, whom he ſucceeded in the Kingdom. 14.

588 8 Clotaire II. Son of Chilperic the ſecond. 44.

632 9 Dagobert, Son of Clotaire the ſecond. 14.

645 10 Clovis II. Son of Dagobert. 17.

663 11 Clotaire III. Son of Clotaire the ſecond. 4.

667 12 Chilperic III. Brother of Clotaire the third, and Son of Clovis the ſecond.

680 13 Theodorick, Brother of Chilperic. 14.

694 14 Clovis III. Son to Theodorick. 5.

698 15 Childebert II. Brother to Clovis the third. 15.

716 16 Dagobert II. Son of Childebert the ſecond. 5.

722 17 Chilperic IV. Son of Childebert the ſecond, and Brother of Dagobert the ſecond, oppoſed by Charles Martell in behalf of Clotaire the fourth Son of Theodorick, and Brother of Childebert the ſecond. 5.

727 18 Theodoric II. Son of Dagobert the ſecond. 15.

742 19 Chilperic V. Son of Theodorick the ſecond, the laſt of the Merovignian Family, depoſed by Pepin, Son to Charles Martel; the Pope giving approbation to his proceedings.

This Pepin and his Father Martel were Mayres of the Palace to the former Kings: which Mayres were originally Controllers of the Kings Houſe, and had nothing to do with the affairs of State. But Clotaire the third, to eaſe himſelf and his ſucceſſors of a burden ſo weighty, made the Mayres, Vicars generall of his Empire. From henceforward the Kings followed their pleaſures, ſhewing themſelves only on May-day: and then being ſeated in a Chariot, adorned with Flowers, and drawn by four Oxen. As for the Mayre, he openeth packets, heareth and diſpatcheth forain Ambaſſadors, giveth remedy to the complaints of the Subjects, maketh Laws and repealeth them. An authority ſomewhat like that of the Præfecti Prætorio, in the declining times of the Roman Empire, or that of the Sultans under the Mahometan Caliphs, and the Vice-Roys of the old Egyptian Pharaohs. An office which had been long born by the Anceſtors of this Martel, ever ſince the reign of Clotaire the ſecond: in whoſe time the Palatine or Mayre was one Arnulphus, deſcended lineally from Utilo the ſecond Son of Theodon the firſt Duke, and Nephew of Aldagerie the laſt King of the Boiarians, or Bavarians. Which Utilo being a military Prince, and having done good ſervice to Theodorick the firſt King of Auſtraſia, or Metz, againſt the Danes then grievouſly infeſting the Coaſts of the Lower-Germany; was by him made Warden of thoſe Marches, honoured with the mariage of his Daughter Clotilde, and liberally endowed with fair poſſeſſions in that tract. The fourth from Utilo was this Arnulph, the firſt Mayre of this houſe; which office having long enjoyed, he reſigned it to Anſegiſus his eldeſt Son (the firſt who drew unto himſelf the Managery of the whole Eſtate) and bidding farewell to the affairs of the World became a Prieſt, and dyed Biſhop of Mets, Anno 641. Afterwards Canonized a Saint. Anſegiſus dying in the year 679. left his authority and office to his Nephew Martin, Son of Ferdulphus his younger Brother. But he being ſlain by Ebroinus, one of the Competitors, who a while enjoyed it; Pepin ſurnamed the Fat, Son of Anſegiſus, revenging his Couſens death upon Ebroinus, and cruſhing all the oppoſite factions which were raiſed againſt him, obtained that honour for himſelf. And having much advanced the affairs of France, by the conqueſt of the Sueves and Friſons, dyed in the year 714. Succeeded to in this great Office after his deceaſe, (for Grimold his only lawful Son, and Theobaldus the Son of Grimold, whom he had ſucceſſively ſubſtituted in the ſame, dyed not long before him) by Charles his natural Son, begotten on Albieda his Concubine; from his martial proweſs called Martel. Who in his time, did to the Kings of France great ſervice, eſpecially in routing that vaſt Army of the Moores and Saracens, in the battel of Tours before mentioned: thereby not only freeing France from the preſent danger, but adding Languedoc to the Crown, formerly in poſſeſſion of the Gothes and Moores; for which he was created Duke or Prince of the French, yet would he not uſurp the Kingdom, or the title of King, though both at his diſpoſal wholly; it being his ordinary ſaying, that he had rather Rule a King, then be one.

To him ſucceeded Caroloman his eldeſt Son, Anno 741. who held the office but a year, and then left it to his Brother Pepin. Who being of leſſe moderation then his Father was, made ſuch uſe of his power; that partly by that means, and partly under colour of an election, confirmed by Pope Zacharie the firſt, he took the Kingdom to himſelf: and the unfortunate King Chilperick had his poll ſhaven, and was thruſt into a Monaſtery. For this inveſtiture both Pepin and Charles his Son, did many good ſervices for the Popes, deſtroying on their quarrel the Kingdom of the Lombards, and giving them moſt of the Lands, which formerly belonged unto the Exarchs of Ravenna. And on the other ſide the Popes to requite theſe curteſies, confirm'd the former in this Kingdom by their Papal Power (which then began to bear ſome ſway in the Chriſtian World): and gave the laſt (beſides the opportunity of attaining the Weſtern Empire) the Title of Moſt Chriſtian King, continued ever ſince unto his ſucceſſors. And to ſay truth, he well deſerved thoſe honours, had they been far greater, by many victories obtained againſt the Enemies of the Goſpel; the ſeveral Heathens, by his means converted to the Faith of Chriſt; the great abilities he had of eſtate and judgement, inabling him to ſupport the Majeſtie of the Roman Empire. For he not only was ſole Monarch of the Kingdom of France, not parcelled out as formerly, and in times ſucceeding, into ſeveral petit Kingdoms and Principalities; but had added thereunto by his own proper vertue the greateſt part of Italy, the beſt part of Germany, all Belgium, the two Pannonia's, and a great part of Spain.

But this vaſt Empire falling into weak hands which were not able enough to manage it, decaied in as little time as it was in raiſing: partly by the unnaturall Ambition of the Sons of King Lewis the Godly, the next Succeſſor of this Charles, who to make themſelves all Kings, firſt depoſed their Father, and then divided his Eſtate amongſt them, into the Kingdoms of Italy, Burgundie, France, Lorrain, and Germany; four of which falling at laſt into the hands of ſtrangers, ceaſed to be French, and paſſed into ſuch Families as proved the greateſt enemies of the Crown of France: partly by alienating the beſt and goodlieſt Provinces of France it ſelf, never again united till theſe later days; which made the French Kings leſſe conſiderable, both at home and abroad, which we have touched upon before: and partly by the weakneſs and unworthineſs of the Kings of his Race; there being no queſtion to be made, but Lewis the Stammering, Charles the Bald, the Groſs, and the Simple, would have found better Attributes, if they had deſerved them. For by this means, the iſſue of this brave Prince grew ſo deſpicable, in the eyes of their Subjects, that firſt Eudes the Son of Robert Duke of Anjou: and after, Rodolph Duke of Burgundy, the Uncle of Eudes; (both of the race of Witikindus the laſt Prince of the Saxons (and conſequently both Aliens to the houſe of Charles) poſſeſſed themſelves ſeverally of the Kingdom. And though they did not hold it long, being depreſſed and overborn by their oppoſite factions; yet did they lay a fair ground for Hugh Capet to build his hopes on. Who being Son of Hugh the Great, Conſtable of France, and Earl of Paris, the Son of Robert Duke of Anjou, younger brother of Eudes, and neer kinſman of Rodolph; never left practiſing his party in the Realm of France, till he had got poſſeſſion of the Regall Diadem, wherewith two Princes of his houſe had been inveſted formerly by the like Elections. But for the Kings of this ſecond Race, founded by two brave Princes, but on the unjuſt grounds of an uſurpation; they are theſe that follow.

The ſecond Race of the Kings of France, of the Carolovinian or Boiarian Line.

A. Ch.
751	1	Pepin, the Son of Charles Martel, ſucceeded in the Office of Mayre, Anno 742, and having got the Regal Crown, vanquiſhed the Lombards, made the Boiarians tributary, and cruſhed the Saxons. 18.
769	2	Charles, ſurnamed the Great, the Son of Pepin, ſubdued the Kingdoms of the Lombards and Saxons; conquered the Boiarians, and Avares, and vanquiſhed the Saracens of Spain: Crowned Emperour of the Weſt, upon Chriſtmas day, by Pope Leo the third, Anno 800. 46.
815	3	Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles King of France and Emperour, the laſt ſole Monarch of the French, depoſed by his ambitious and unnatural Sons: the Empire of the French after his deceaſe, being divided into the Kingdoms of Italy, Burgundy, Germany, France, and Lorrein; and France it ſelf diſtracted into many Soveraign Eſtates, and Principalities. 26.
841	4	Charles II. ſurnamed Calvus, or the Bald, youngeſt Son of Lewis, King of France and Emperor; vanquiſhed by Charles the Groſſe, in the War of Italy. 38.
879	5	Lewis II. ſurnamed Balbus, or the Stammering, Son of Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperour.
881	6	Lewis III. with Caroloman his Brother, the baſe Sons of Lewis the Stammering; Uſurpers of the Throne in the infancy of Charles the Simple.
886	7	Charles III. ſurnamed Craſſus, or the Groſſe, King of Germany and Emperour; called into France, and elected King, during the Minority of Charles the Simple. 5.
891	8	Odo or Eudes, Son of Robert Earl of Anjou, of the race of Witinkindus the laſt King of the Saxons; elected by an oppoſite Faction, outed Charles the Groſſe. 9.
900	9	Charles IV. ſurnamed Simplex, or the Simple, the Poſthumus Son of Lewis the Stammerer, reſtored unto the Throne of his Fathers: which after many troubles raiſed againſt him by Robert the ſecond, Earl of Anjou (whom he ſlew in battel) he was forced to reſigne. 27.
927	10	Rodolph of Burgundy, Son of Richard Duke of Burgundy the Brother of Eudes, ſucceeded on the reſignation of Charles the Simple. 2.
929	11	Lewis IV. Son of Charles the Simple, ſurnamed Tranſmarine, in regard that during his Fathers troubles he had lived in England; reſtored unto the regal Throne on the death of Rodolph: oppoſed therein by Hugh Earl of Paris and Anjou, the Nephew of King Eudes by his Brother Robert before mentioned.
958	12	Lotharius,

958 12 Lotharius, Son of Lewis the 4th, diſturbed in his poſſeſſion by Hugh Capet, the eldeſt Son of the ſaid Hugh, on the pretenſions of that houſe, by which at laſt he got the Kingdom.

977 13 Lewis V. Son of Lotharius, the laſt King of the Houſe of Charles the Great. After whoſe death (being King only for a year) the Crown was ſeized on by Hugh Capet; Charles Duke of Lorreine, Brother of Lotharius, and Uncle unto Lewis the fifth, being pretermitted.

And now we are come to the preſent race of the Kings of France, founded in Hugh Capet, ſo called from the greatneſs of his head; Son of Hugh the Great, Earl of Paris and Anjou, and Grandchild of Robert the ſecond Earl of Anjou: which Robert was the Brother of Eudes, and Couſin german of Rodolph, Kings of France. Who partly by his own wits, but chiefly by the weakneſs of the mungrel iſſue of Charles the Great, having got the Diadem; tranſmitted it unto his poſterity: the Crown deſcending in a direct line from Father to Son, till the death of Lewis the tenth, ſurnamed Hutin. But here we are to underſtand, that the Realm of France was at that time ſhut up within narrower bounds, than it is at the preſent: the large and rich Countries of Champagne, Normandy, Bretagne, Anjou, Poictou, Languedoc, and the great Dukedom of Aquitain; beſides thoſe Provinces which conſtituted and made up the Kingdom of Burgundy, being alienated and diſmembred from it. How they became reduced to the Crown again, will be diſcerned in the enſuing Hiſtory, and Succeſſion of 988 1 Hugh Capet, of whom ſufficiently before. 9.

997 2 Robert, the Son of Hugh Capet, Duke of Burgundy alſo. 34.

1031 3 Henry, the eldeſt Son of Robert; his younger Brother Robert being ſetled in the Dukedom of Burgundy. 39.

1061 4 Philip, the Son of Henry, who added Berry to the Crown. 49.

1110 5 Lewis VI. Son of Philip, ſurnamed the Groſſe. 28.

1138 6 Lewis VII. Son of Lewis the ſixth, an Adventurer in the War of the Holy Land: as alſo was his Son and Succeſſor.

1181 7 Philip II. ſurnamed Auguſtus, by whom Normandy, Aquitain, and Anjou, with their ſeveral Appendixes, were taken from King John of England. 43.

1224 8 Lewis VIII. Son of Philip Auguſtus. 3.

1227 9 Lewis IX. ſurnamed the Saint, renowned for his Wars in Egypt, and the Holy-Land. He reſtored Guienne to the Engliſh, and added the Earldoms of Tholouſe and Maſcon, to the Crown of France. 44.

1227 10 Philip III. Son of Lewis the ninth. 15.

1314 12 Lewis X. ſurnamed Hutin, King of Navarre in right of his Mother, whom he ſucceeded in that Kingdom, An. 1305. After whoſe death the Kingdom of France was to have deſcended on Joan his Daughter. 2.

1315 13 Philip V. called the Long, Brother of Lewis Hutin, partly by threats, promiſes, and other practices, cauſed a Law to paſs (to which he gave the name of the Salique Law) for diſabling Women from the Succeſſion to the Crown; and thereby quite excluded his Brothers Daughter; ſerved in the ſame kind himſelf, by his Brother Charles; who following his example, excluded, on the ſame pretence, his Neeces Joan, and Margaret, the Daughters of Philip. 5.

1320 14 Charles IV. but in true accompt the fifth of that name, moſt commonly called Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip and Lewis the two laſt Kings. After whoſe death began the Wars of the Engliſh for the Crown of France; challenged by King Edward the third, as Son and Heir of Iſabel, the Daughter of King Philip the Fair, and Siſter to the three laſt Kings. 7.

1328 15 Philip VI. ſurnamed de Valois, Son of Charles Earl of Valois, the ſecond Son of King Philip the third, and Uncle to the three laſt Kings; ſucceeded under colour of the Salique Law: of which Charles it is ſaid, that he was Son to a King, Brother to a King, Uncle to a King, and Father to a King; yet himſelf was no King. In this Kings days was fought the famous Battle of Crecie, An. 1343. in which the French Army conſiſted of about 70000 Souldiers; the Engliſh, of 11800 only; yet the victory fell unto the Engliſh: by whoſe valour fell that day John King of Bohemia, 11 Princes, 80 Barons, 120 Knights, and 30000 of the common Souldiers. He added unto his Eſtates, the County Palatine of Champagne, the Countrey of Daulphine, and the City and Earldom of Montpelier. 22.

1350 16 John, the Son of Philip de Valois, in whoſe reign was fought the battel of Poictiers, wherein Edward the black Prince, (ſo called for his black acts upon the French) with an handful of wearied Souldiers (but 8000 in all) overcame the French Army conſiſting of 40000 men: of which they ſlew beſides the Nobles, 10000 of the common Souldiers, and took Priſoners King John himſelf, and Philip his Son, 70 Earls, 50 Barons, and 12000 Gentlemen. 14.

18 Charles VI. a weak and diſtracted Prince, in whoſe reign Henry the fifth of England, called in by the faction of Burgundy againſt that of Orleans; maried the Lady Catharine Daughter of this King; and was thereupon made Regent of France during the Kings life, and Heir apparent of the Kingdom. But he had firſt won the great battel of Agincourt, An. 1415. in which the Engliſh having an Army but of 15000, vanquiſhed an Army of the French conſiſting of 52000 men; of which were ſlain 5 Dukes, 8 Earls, 25 Lords, 8000 Knights and Gentlemen of note, and 25000 of the Commons; the Engliſh loſing but one Duke, one Earl, and 600 Souldiers. This unfortunate Prince loſt what his predeceſſor Philip the ſecond had taken from King John of England, and had not been reſtored by King Lewis the ninth.

1423 19 Charles VII. Son of Charles the ſixth, after a long and bloody War, recovered from the Engliſh (then divided by domeſtick diſſenſions) all their Lands and Signiories in France, except Calice only.

1484 21 Charles VIII. Son of Lewis the 11th, who quickly won, and as ſoon loſt the Kingdom of Naples; which he laid claim to in the right of the houſe of Anjou. By the mariage of Anne the Heir of Bretagne, he added that Dukedom to his Crown.

1515 23 Francis, Duke of Angoleſme, Grand-ſon of John of Angoleſme, one of the younger Sons of the ſaid Lewis Duke of Orleans; ſucceeded on the death of Lewis the twelfth, without iſſue male. Took Priſoner at the battel of Pavie, by Charles the fifth, with whom he held perpetual wars; he being as unwilling to endure a ſuperior, as the Emperor was to admit an equal. 32.

1547 24 Henry II. Son of Francis, recovered Calice from the Engliſh, and drove Charles out of Germany, and took from him Mets, Toul, and Verdun, three Imperial Cities; ever ſince Members of this Kingdom. 12.

1559 25 Francis II. Son of Henry the ſecond, King of the Scots alſo, in the right of Mary his Wife.

1560 26 Charles IX. Brother of Francis the ſecond, the Author of the Maſſacre at Paris. 14.

1574 27 Henry III. elected King of Poland in the life of his Brother, whom he ſucceeded at his death. The laſt King of the Houſe of Valois, ſtripped of his life and Kingdom by the Guiſian Faction, called the Holy League. 15.

1589 28 Henry IV. King of Navarre, and Duke of Vendoſme, ſucceeded as the next Heir-male to Henry the third, in the right of the Houſe of Bourbon, deſcended from Robert Earl of Clermont, a younger Son of Lewis the ninth. He ruined the Holy League, cleared France of the Spaniards, into which they had been called by that potent and rebellious Faction; and laid La Breſſe unto the Crown, together with the Eſtates of Bearn, and Baſe Navarre; and after a ten years time of peace, was villainouſly murdered by Ravillac, in the ſtreets of Paris. 21.

1610 29 Lewis XIII. Son of Henry the fourth, the moſt abſolute King of France ſince the death of Charles the Great. For to the reduction of the ſcattered and diſmembred Provinces (the work of his many Predeceſſors) he added the reduction of all the Forts and Garriſons held by the Hugonots in that Kingdom, (three hundred at the leaſt in number) ſeized on the Dukedom of Bar, and ſurprized that of Lorreine, both which he held untill his death. 32.

1642 30 Lewis XIV. Son of Lewis the 13th, and of the Lady Anne, eldeſt Daughter of Philip the third of Spain, ſucceeded at the age of four years under the Government of his Mother: the 30th King of the Line of Capet, the 43d from Charles the Great, and the 64th King of France (or rather of the French) now living.

As for the Government of theſe Kings, it is meerly Regal, or, to give it the true name, Deſpotical; ſuch as that of a Maſter over his Servants: the Kings will going for a Law, and his Edicts as valid as a Sentence

Sentence of the Court of Parliament. Quod Principi placuerit Legis habet vigorem, was a Prerogative belonging to the Roman Emperors, as Juſtinian tels us in his Inſtitutes: and the French Kings, deſcending from Charles the Great, claim it as their own. The Kings Edicts always ending with theſe binding words, Car tel eſt noſtre Plaiſir, for ſuch is our pleaſure. And though he ſometimes ſends his Edicts to be verified, or approved, in the Parliament of Paris; and his Grants and Patents to be ratified in the Chamber of Accompts, there holden: yet this is nothing but a meer formality, and point of circumſtance; thoſe Courts not daring to refuſe what the King propoſeth. It is Car tel eſt noſtre Plaiſir, which there goeth for Law. And by this intimation of his Royal pleaſure, doth he require ſuch Taxes, as the neceſſity of his affairs, the greedineſs of his Officers, or the importunity of Suters doe ſuggeſt unto him: The Patrimony of the Crown being ſo exhauſted by the riot and improvidence of former Princes, that the King hath no other way to maintain his State, defray his Garriſons, reward ſuch as deſerve well of him, and ſupport thoſe that depend upon him, but only by laying what he pleaſeth on the backs of his Subjects; againſt which there is no diſpute by the common People, though many times the Great Princes have demurred upon it. And therefore to make them alſo inſtrumental to the publick ſlavery, the Kings are willing to admit them to ſome part of their ſpoyl, to give them ſome exemptions from thoſe common burdens; and to connive at the oppreſſing of their Tenants, againſt all good conſcience: that being ſo priviledged themſelves, they may not interrupt the King in his Regal Courſes.

As for the French Parliaments or Aſſembly of the three Eſtates, which heretofore were of great credit and renown, and looked on as the principal Bulwark of the Publique liberty, being firſt diſcontinued by reaſon of the ſharp and continual wars which the Engliſh made in this Kingdom for the ſpace of 100 years and upwards, they afterward became much weakned by the policy of King Lewis the 11th, and the Kings ſucceeding, and finally by King Lewis 13th, were layed by for ever. For finding them to retain ſomething ſtill of their antient ſtomack, and apt enough to claſh with that abſolute Soveraignty which his Predeceſſors had attained to, he reſolved to make no more uſe of them for the times to come; in ſtead whereof he ordained another kind of meeting, which he called La Aſſemble des Nattables, that is to ſay, the Aſſembly of ſome principal men, compoſed of ſome ſelected perſons out of every Order or Eſtate (of his own nomination) whereunto ſhould be added ſome Counſellor out of every one of the eight Courts of Parliament; which being fewer in number would not breed ſuch a confuſion, as the others did, and be withall more pliant and conformable to the Kings deſires. Now the eight Courts of Parliament before mentioned, being but as ſo many Courts of Judicature, (like to ours in Weſtminſter) are theſe that follow, that is to ſay, the Parliament, 1 of Paris, comprehending the Countries of France ſpecial, Champagne, Picardie, the Provinces and eſtates of Anjou, La Beauſſe, Berry, Poictou, the Provinces which make up the Dukedom of Bourbon; with the Countrey of Lionois; 2 of Rowen, for the Dukedom of Normandy; 3 of Renes, for the Dukedom of Bretagne; 4 of Bourdeaux, for the whole Dukedom of Aquitain, (except only Bearn) with the Countries of Limouſin, and Perigirt; 5 of Tholouſe, for the Earldom of Languedoc and Quercu; 6 of Aix, for the Earldom of Provence; 7 of Grenoble for the Countrey of Dauphin; and 8 of Anjou, for the Dukedom of Burgundie and the ſmall Countrey of La Breſſe; to which added of late times by King Lewis the 13th, the little Parliament of Pau for the Countrey of Bearn. Beſides which Parliaments, there are certain other Courts in ſome principal Cities, called Courts Preſidial, reſembling thoſe with us at York, and the Marches of Wales whilſt they continued in that power and juriſdiction, which at firſt they had. And for the better ordering of the whole eſtate (with reference eſpecially to matters military) it is divided into 12 ſeveral and diſtinct Governments, that is to ſay, 1 of the Iſle of France, 2 Burgundy, 3 Normandy, 4 Guien, 5 Bretagne, 6 Champagne, 7 Picardy, 8 Languedoc, 9 Provence, 10 Daulphine, 11 Lionois, and 12 Orleanois, for in this order they were named by the laſt King: over every one of which is placed a Governor with ſuch autority as the Lords Lieutenants had in England in their ſeveral Countreys; all of them carrying matters with a very high hand, on the common people, and ſometimes ſtanding on tearms alſo with the Kings themſelves, but inſtrumental notwithſtanding to the common ſervitude which hath been laid upon this Nation generally as before is ſaid.

The power of the French King over his Subjects being ſo tranſcendent, it cannot be, but that his Forces muſt be very great; and would be greater then they are, but that they dare not truſt the common people with the uſe of Arms, for fear they ſhould refuſe to pay the accuſtomed Taxes, or forſake their Trades, or turn their Farms back upon their Landlords: But for an Eſſay of what a French King is able to doe in this kind, It is ſaid, that Charles the 9th, in Gariſons and ſeveral Armies in the field, had 15000 Horſe, and 100000 Foot of his own Nation; beſides 50000 Horſe and Foot of Swiſſes, Germans, and others. Nor was this more then what was done by Lewis the 13th, within few years paſt, who had at once five Royal Armies in the field in Italy, Spain, Germany, and the Belgick Provinces; and kept no fewer then 120000 fighting men in pay and action for ſome years together. Nor did this laſt King keep up the military power of France for Land-ſervice only at ſo high a pitch, but he alſo brought the Naval power thereof into eſtimation. For whereas the French Kings before his time were very weak and inconſiderable on the Seas, and had ſcarce any men of war but what they either hired or borrowed from more Seafaring Nations; this King became ſo ſtrong in ſhipping in a little ſpace (I doubt ſome neighbouring Princes in the mean time looked not well about them) that he was able to rigge and arm 10000 ſail of good Ships and upwards fit for any ſervice. But to return turn again to the power at land, in which the force of these Kings doth consist especially, it is conceived by some and affirmed by others, that he is able to bring into the field for a sudden service, no less then 60 Companies of Men of Arms, 20 Cornets of Light Horse, and five Companies of Harquibusiers on Horse-back; which amount to 10000 in the total; together with 20 Enfignes of French Foot, and 40 of Swisses; and yet leave his Garrisons well manned, and his Forts and Frontiers well and sufficiently defended.

What the Revenues are in a State so subject to the will and pleasure of the King, it is hard to say; being also more or less, as the times and their occasions vary: according unto which the Revenues of this Crown have much altered. Lewis the 11th, gathered one Million and a half of Crowns; Francis the first, brought them to 3 Millions; his successor Henry the second, to six; Charles the ninth, to seven; Henry the third, to ten; afterwards they were inhanced to fifteen. And in the time of Henry the 4th, the Treasurer of the Duke of Mayenne did not shame to say, That his Master had more improved the Revenue of France, than any King had done before him; advancing it from two to five Millions Sterling. A fair Intrado, but far short of those infinite sums, which are extorted from the People; whereof a tenth part comes not clearly to the Kings Exchequer. But what need more be said, than that of Lewis the 11th, who used to say, that France was a Medow which he moved every year, and as often as he listed: and indeed their Impositions cannot but be great, since there are no less than 30000 under-officers imployed to gather them. Hence I believe sprung that wish of Maximilian the Emperor, which was, that he (if it were possible) might be a God; and that having two Sons, the eldest might be a God after him, and the second, King of France. And this was also the cause, that in the Wars between Charles the fifth, and Francis the first, when the Emperors Herald had bid defiance to the King, from Charles Emperor of Germany, King of Castile, Leon, Aragon, and Naples, Archduke of Austria, &c. with the rest of his titles: The King commanded the Heralds to return the challenge from Francis King of France; commanding them to repeat France as many times, as the other had petty Earldoms in his stile. And on the other side of no less bravery and fancy, was the saying of the Duke of Alva, who being disswaded by one of his Commanders from the War with the Netherlands, in regard of the great support they were like to have from the Queen of England, the King of Denmark, the Dukes of Saxony and Brunswick, the Earls of Nassaw, &c. Tush man (said he) there will be more Kings and Princes on our side, then theirs, that is to say, the Emperor of Mexico and Peru, the Kings of Naples, Sicily, and Sardinia, the Dukes of Burgundy and Milain, the Earls of Habspurg, Charolois, &c. But letting pass these flashes and conceits of wit; certain it is (to say the truth) considering the compactedness thereof within it self, the admirable fertility of the soyl, the incredible multitudes of People, and the conveniency of situation betwixt Spain, Italy, and Germany, the name of France might ballance all the others titles.

The chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, were first of the Gennet, founded by Charles Martel, Mayre of the French Palace: and so called, either from Jane his Wife, as Haillan would have it; or from the Gennets of Spain, over whom he triumphed at the battel of Tours, as Bellay writeth. It ended in the days of St. Lewis. The Knights of the order wore a Ring wherein was engraven the form of a Gennet.

2 Of the Pairrie or twelve Peers, so called, quasi pares inter se, said to be instituted by Charles the Great in his Wars against the Saracens. Six of these were of the Clergy. 1 The Archbishop and Duke of Rhemes, 2 the Bishop and Duke of Laon, 3 the Bishop and Duke of Langres, 4 the Bishop and Earl of Beavois, 5 the Bishop and Earl of Noyon, and 6 the Bishop and Earl of Challon; and six others of the temporality. 1 The Duke of Burgundy, 2 Duke of Normandy, 3 Duke of Guienne, 4 Earl of Tholouse, 5 Earl of Champagne, 6 Earl of Flanders. These are they so much memoriz'd in the Legends of the old French Writers, but sallly, and on no ground: it being impossible that those should be of the foundation of Charles the Great, in whose time there were none of those Dukes & Earls, except the Earl of Tholouse only. Therefore with better reason it may be thus concluded on, that the twelve Peers were instituted by Charles the Great, though that honor not by him appropriated unto any particular Estates and Titles; but left at large to be disposed of according to the personal merit of the best deservers: it being most sure, that neither Rowland, nor Oliver, nor Duke Naimes, nor Ogier the Dane, had any of the titles abovementioned. But for the fixing of this dignity in the Dukedoms and Earldoms before named, it is said by some to have been done by Hugh Capet, others refer it to Lewis the 7th; in whose times all those Dukes and Earls were in Rerum natura. But by whomsoever first ordained, the Temporal Pairries are extinct; and others, of no definite number, created by the Kings, as they see occasion, to gratifie a well deserver. Only at Coronations, and such publick Triumphs, the custom is to choose some principal persons out of the Nobility to represent those Temporal Peers; as at the Coronation of Lewis the 13th, the places of the Temporal Peers were supplyed by the Princes of Conde and Conty, the Earl of Soissons, the Dukes of Nevers, Elbeuf, and Espernon: the Ecclesiastical Peers remaining as at first they were. So that though Charles the great might devise this Order, and institute the first twelve Peers, as is commonly said: yet was not that high honor fixed in any of those Temporal Princes, till the times succeeding; but given to men of several houses, according to the Kings pleasure, and their well deservings.

3 Of the Star, begun by John King of France, An. 1352. They wore about their necks a collar of gold, at the which hanged a Star: the word, Monstrant Regibus astra viam. This Order was disgraced by his Son Charles, in communicating it to his Guard; and so it ended.

4 Of S. Michael, inſtituted by King Lewis the eleventh, An. 1469. It conſiſted firſt of 36 Knights, which afterwards were augmented to 300. The Habit of the Order was a long Cloak of white Damask down to the ground, with a border interwoven with Cockle ſhels of gold, interlaced and furred with Ermines; with an hood of crimſon Velvet, and a long tippet. About their necks they wore a collar woven with Cockle-ſhels: the word, Immenſi tremor Oceani. It took the name from the picture of Saint Michael conquering the Devil, which was annexed to the collar. Some think, that the invocation of S. Michael, was in alluſion unto the tenth of Daniel. Others ſay, he took S. Michael, in regard of an apparition of that Saint, to his Father Charles the ſeventh, on Orleans Bridge in his wars againſt the Engliſh. The Seat thereof was firſt at S. Michaels Mount in Normandy, a place which had held longeſt for the French Kings againſt the Engliſh; but it was afterwards removed to Bois de Vincennes, not far from Paris. S. Michaels day, the time of the Solemnity; and Mount S. Michael the name of the Herald which did attend upon the Order; which in moſt things was precedented by that of the Garter.

5 Of the Holy-Ghoſt, ordained by Henry the third, An. 1579. to rectifie the abuſes which had crept into that of S. Michael, having been of late times given to unworthy perſons: to reduce which to its firſt eſteem, he ordered that the Collar of S. Michael ſhould be given to none who had not firſt been dignified with this of the Holy-Ghoſt; into which none to be admitted, but ſuch as can prove their Nobility by three deſcents. Their Oath is to maintain the Romiſh-Catholick Religion, and perſecute all Opponents to it. Their Robe a black Velvet Mantle, powdred with Lillies and Flames of Gold: the Collar of Flower de Lyces, and Flames of Gold, with a Croſs and a Dove appendant to it. And hereunto he gave the name of the Holy-Ghoſt, becauſe he was on a Whitſunday choſen King of Poland.

I omit the other petit orders, as thoſe of the Cock and Dog, by them of Montmorencie; of the Porcupine, by them of Orleans; and of the Thiſtle, by them of Bourbon.

The Arms of the French Kings in the days of Pharamond and his three firſt Succeſſors, were Gules, three Crowns, Or. Clovis the Great altered them to Azure, Seme of Flower de Lyces, Or; and Charles the ſixt to Azure, 3 Flower de Lyces, Or. In which laſt changes they were followed by the Kings of England, varying the Coat of France, which they enquartered with their own, as the French Kings did: and by the Princes of the blood, who bare the Arms of France, with ſome difference only, for the diſtinction of their Houſes.

PYRENEAN HILS.

BEtwixt France and Spain are the Mountains called Pyrenei, the reaſon of which name is very differently reported. Some fetch the Original thereof from Pyrene, a Nymph, the Daughter of one Bebrix, ſaid by old Fablers to have been here raviſhed by Hercules: others conceive they were ſo called, becauſe much ſtricken with Lightnings, thoſe Celeſtial Flames. But being the name doth moſt undoubtedly proceed from a Greek word which ſignifieth Fire; the more probable opinion is, that they took this name from being fired once by Shepherds, (theſe Hils being then extremely overgrown with woods:) the Flame whereof raged ſo extremely, that the Mines of Gold and Silver being melted by the heat thereof, ran ſtreaming down the Mountains many days together; the fame of which invited many Forein Nations to invade the Countrey. Which Accident they place 880 years before the birth of our Saviour. Hereunto Diodorus Siculus, an old Greek Writer addes no ſmall authority, who ſpeaking of this conflagration (as Ariſtotle and Strabo alſo do,) addeth withall, τὰ μὲν ὄρη διὰ τὸ συμβεβηκὸς κληθῆναι Πυρηναῖα, ἀπὸ τῆς πυρὸς συχνὰς ἡμέρας συνεχῶς ἐπιφλέξαντος, that is to ſay, theſe Mountains had the name of Pyrenees, from the fire, which many days together ſo extremely raged. And this tradition backed by ſo good autority, I ſhould rather credit, than fetch the derivation (as Bochartus doth) from Purani, a Phœnician word, ſignifying dark or ſhadie; though true it is, that theſe Mountains antiently were very much overgrown with woods, as before was noted.

But whatſoever was the reaſon why they had this name, certain it is, that they have been of long time the natural bound, betwixt the great and puiſſant Monarchs of France, and Spain; terminating (as it were) their deſires and purpoſes againſt each other, as well as their Dominions: if any thing could put a bound to the deſigns of ambitious Princes. Yet not more ſeparated by theſe Mountains, than by thoſe jealouſies and fears, which they have long ſince harboured of one another; each of them manifeſtly affecting the Supreme command. So that we may affirm of them, as the Hiſtorian doth of others, on the like occaſion, Aut montibus, aut mutuo metu ſeparantur. The Mountains alſo make that Iſthmus, or neck of Land, which conjoyn Spain to the reſt of Europe: the Cantabrian Ocean fiercely beating on the North-Weſt, the Mediterranean Sea more gently waſhing the South-Eaſt thereof. Their beginning at the Promontory now called Oiarco, (the Ocaſo of Ptolemie) not far from the City of Baionne in France, bordering on the Sea Cantabrick: From thence continued South-Eaſt-wards betwixt both Kingdoms, to Cabo de Creux, (by the antients called Templum Veneris) on the Mediterranean, not far from the City of Rhoda, now Roſas, one of the Port Towns of Catalonia.

The whole length, not reckoning in the windings and turnings, affirmed to be 80 Spaniſh leagues, at three miles to a league. The higheſt part thereof, by the Spaniards called Canigo, and by the Latines, named Canus: from which (as it is ſaid by ſome) there is a Proſpect in a clear day, into both the Seas. But whether this be true or not, (for I dare not build any belief upon it) it is no doubt, the higheſt part of all theſe Mountains; and took this name from the whiteneſs and hoarineſs thereof, as having on its top or ſmmit a Cap of ſnow for moſt part of the year. In which reſpect, as the Alpes took their name ab albo; that in the Sabine Dialect, being termed Alpum, which by the Latines was called Album, which before we noted: ſo did Mount Lebanon in Syria take its name from Leban, which in the Phœnician Language ſignifieth white, and Lebanah whiteneſs. Such people as inhabit in this Mountainous tract, have been, and ſhall be mentioned in their proper places. I only adde, and ſo go forwards towards Spain, that the barbarous people of theſe Mountains compelled Sertorius in his haſty paſſage into Spain, when he fled from the power of Sylla's Faction, to pay them tribute for his paſs; at which when ſome of his Souldiers murmured, as thinking it diſhonorable to a Proconſul of Rome to pay tribute to the barbarous Nations; the prudent General replyed, that he bought only time; a Commodity, which they that deal in haughty Enterpriſes muſt needs take up at any rate.

SPAIN.

HAving thus croſſed the Pyrenees we are come to Spain, the moſt Weſtern part of all the Continent of Europe; environed on all ſides with the Sea, except towards France, from which ſeparated by the ſaid Mountains: but more particularly bounded upon the North, with the Cantabrian; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the South, with the ſtraits of Gibraltar; on the Eaſt, with the Mediterranean; and on the North-eaſt with thoſe Pyrenees. The Figure of it compared by Strabo to an Oxes Hide ſpread upon the ground; the neck whereof being that Iſthmus, which unites it to France.

This Countrey hath in divers Ages been as diverſly named. 1 Heſperia, either from Heſperus a ſuppoſed King hereof; or from Heſperus the Evening Star, under which it was ſuppoſed to be ſituate, as being the furtheſt Countrey Weſt-ward: to difference it from Italy, which many of the Greek Authors termed Heſperia alſo, named Heſperia minor. 2 It was called Iberia, either from the famous River Iberus; or from the Iberi, inhabiting that Countrey of Aſia which we now call Georgia: as Celtiberia, from the mixture of thoſe Aſian Iberi, and the Celts of Gaul; by which name it occurreth often in Appian of Alexandria, and ſometimes in Strabo. 3 Hiſpania, as the ſoundeſt judgements agree, from Panus the Iberian Captain. For the Græcians call it Σπανία Spania, as may be proved in many places, that eſpecially of the 15 to the Romans, verſe 28. Απελεύσομαι δ' ὑμῶν ἐς τὴν Σπανίαν, I will come by you into Spain. No doubt but from the Grecians, the old Romans borrowed the name of Spania, which they often uſed: to which the Spaniards according to their cuſtome adding E, (as in Eſcola, Eſcuda, &c.) made it Eſpania, and now Hiſpania. In like manner as the famous City of Sevil, called at firſt Spalis, (according hereunto the Biſhop hereof in the Councel of Eliberis ſubſcribed himſelf by the name of Sabinus Spalenſis) in tract of time was called Hiſpalis. And yet I muſt not pretermit the fancy of Bochartus, who fetching the names of moſt places from the Punick Language will have it to be called Spauija, or Sphanija, by the Carthaginians, or Phœnicians, at their firſt diſcovery; from Saphan, which in the Punick tongue ſignifies a Conie; with which that Countrey much abounded in the former times, the Romans being hence furniſhed with them. Let the Reader like it as he liſt.

The greateſt length hereof is reckoned at 800 miles, the breadth where it is broadeſt, at 560; the whole circumference 2480 Italian miles: But Mariana meaſuring the compaſs of it by the bendings of the Pyrenees, and the creeks and windings of the Sea; makes the full circuit of it to be 2816 miles of Italian meaſure. And though according to the ſmalleſt computation, it be above 460 miles in compaſs more than France, yet is it far ſhort thereof in numbers of people: France being thought to contain in it 15 millions of living ſouls; whereas Spain is reckoned to contain but 8 millions only, which is little more than half the number of the French. The reaſons of which diſproportion are, 1 The continual wars which they had for 900 years together againſt the Moores, in their own Countrey; by which they were conſumed in the very growth. 2 The Expulſion of ſo many thouſand Families of Jewes and Moores, 124000 Families of the one in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick; and 110000 of the other by King Philip the third: which was as the lopping off of a main limb from the body Politick, though without any loſs to the Eccleſiaſtical. 3 The unneceſſary wars maintained againſt all the reſt of Chriſtendom, ever ſince the time of Charles the fifth, out of meer ambition; before they were well cured of their former wounds. 4 The infinite Plantations made by them in the Eaſt and Weſtern Indies, and all along the Sea-coaſts of Africa; and thoſe great Garriſons maintain'd in Milan, Naples, Sicil, the Low-countreys, and their Towns in Africk; conſiſting for the moſt part of natural Spaniards. 5 The barrenneſs of the Countrey in many places, unable to ſuſtain great multitudes, but made more barren than it would be, for want of men to labour and manure the Land. And 6 and laſt of all, the Impotency of both Sexes for Generation; the men being generally more hot upon their luſts, than able for Generation; and the women for the moſt part beginning to be Mothers ſo extremely young, that nature is decay'd, and ſpent in them, before they have run half their courſe. And 'tis a moſt true and undoubted Maxime, that the greatneſs of Cities, and populouſneſs of Kingdoms and Common-wealths, do much depend on the generative vertue of the men, and the nutritive vertue of the ſoyl in which they live.

It is ſituate in the more Southernly part of the Northern temperate Zone, and almoſt in the midſt of the fourth and ſixth Climates: the longeſt day being fifteen hours and a quarter in length, in the moſt Northern parts hereof; but in the extreme South near to Gibraltar, not above fourteen. Which ſituation of this Countrey rendreth the Air here very clear and calm, ſeldom obſcured with miſts and vapours, and not ſo much ſubject to diſeaſes as more Northern Regions.

They are a mixt People, deſcending from the Gothes, Moores, Jewes, and the ancient Spaniards. From the Jewes they borrow Superſtition, from the Moores Melancholy, Pride from the Gothes, and from the old Spaniards the deſire of Liberty. The Jewes firſt planted here by the Emperor Adrian, who having totally baniſhed them their Native Countrey, ſent them hither to dwell: the total number of which Plantation is ſaid to amount to 500000 men, women, and children; and yet their numbers much increaſed in the time of Ulidor Ulet the great Caliph of the Sarazens, who having made a Conqueſt of Spain, ſent hither 50000 Families of Moores and Jewes, the better to aſſure it to him. And ſo we have the coming in of the Moores and Jewes; the Conqueſt of it by the Gothes, and their ſetling here, ſhall be ſhewn hereafter: which ſeveral Nations by long time, and intermariages together, were at laſt incorporated into one. For their condition, it is ſaid that they are highly conceited of themſelves, great Braggards, and extremely proud, even in the loweſt ebbe of Fortune. Which laſt appeareth by the tale of the poor Cobler on his death-bed, who (as Barklay in his Icon Animorum reporteth the ſtory) commanded his eldeſt Son, coming to him for his laſt bleſſing, to endevour to retain the majeſty worthy ſo great a Family; Memineris (ſaid he) in majeſtatem aſſurgere familia tua dignam. The ſame Author relateth another ſtory to the like purpoſe. A woman of this Countrey attended on by three of her brats, went a begging from door to door. Some French Merchants travelling that way, and pitying her caſe, offered her to take into their ſervice the bigger of her boyes. But ſhe proud though poor, ſcorning, as ſhe ſaid, that any of her lineage ſhould endure a Prentiſhip, returned this anſwer: Qui aut tu, aut ego, ſciamus, in quæ fata ſit genitus? For ought that ſhe or any knew, her Son (ſimply as he ſtood there) might live to be King of Spain. Not much unlike to theſe is that tale of a Spaniſh Cavaleiro, who being for ſome faults by him committed, whipped through the principal ſtreets of Paris; and keeping a ſober pace, was adviſed by a friend to make more haſt, that he might the ſooner be out of his pain: But he half in choler replyed, That he would not loſe the leaſt ſtep of his pace, for all the whipping in Paris. For indeed their gate is Gennet-wiſe, very ſtately and majeſticall.

Of temperature they are hot and dry, which makes them very much given to women, and yet not very able for Generation. And this ſtrong inclination unto women which they finde in themſelves, makes them ſo jealous of their Wives, that they permit them not to walk abroad, but when they go to Church: and then too veiled and ſo hooded, one can hardly ſee them; and not that neither, but attended with their Damoſels, and ſome truſty ſhe-friend, that is to give an accompt of them at their coming back. Mendoza, an Ambaſſador from Spain, in Queen Elizabeths time, uſed to finde fault with the promiſcuous ſitting of men and women in the Church, uſed here in England; accounting it to be a very great incentive unto laſciviouſneſs. To whom Doctor Dale, one of the Maſters of the Requeſts, is ſaid to have replied, that indeed in Spain, where the people even in the time of Divine Service could not abſtain from impure thoughts, and unclean geſtures, that mingled kinde of ſitting was not ſo allowable: but the Engliſh were of another temper, and did not finde any inconvenience in it. And it is poſſible, this humour of jealouſie might be derived on them from the Moores, who in the ſtrict guarding of their women, were the Spaniards Tutors: it being death in Barbarie, to this very day, for any man to ſee one of the Xeriffes Concubines; and for them too, if when they ſee a man, though but through a caſement, they do not preſently cry out. A frenzie which much rageth in moſt Southern people, but not predominant in the Northern; who do not only ſuffer their Wives to ſit with other men in the Church, but even in the open and common Bathes alſo; two things which a true Spaniard would rather die an hundred deaths, than give conſent to. But though the women are not permitted to ſtir abroad, the men take liberty enough; and are as good ſmel-feaſts as in any Countrey: it being obſerved of them by a very good Writer, that howſoever in their own houſes they are temperate and content with little; yet when they go unto a Feaſt, they are as gluttonous, dainty, and deſirous to make good cheer, as any people whatſoever.

But not to conceal their vertues, and make our ſelves merry at their follies, (wherein all other Nations have a ſhare with them) they are queſtionleſs a people very grave in their carriages, in offices of piety very devout, and to their King very obedient; whoſe greatneſs they affect more cordially than any ſubjects in the world: exact in doing juſtice upon all Offenders, which commonly they adminiſter without partiality; indulgent unto one another, and of their duties to their betters not unmindfull. But that which deſerveth the greateſt commendation in them, is an unwearied patience in ſuffering adverſities, accompanied with a reſolution to overcome them. A noble quality, of the which in their Indian Diſcoveries they ſhewed excellent proofs, and received as glorious rewards: withall of very daring ſpirits, great undertakers for the moſt part, and to ſay truth, the greateſt inlargers of their Dominions (according to the advantages of their ſituation) of any Nation under heaven. For having firſt either exterminated or ſubdued the Moores, which for many hundreds of years were poſſeſſed of this Continent, the Aragonians lying on the Mediterranean, added to their eſtate the Iſlands of Majorca, and Minorca, the Kingdoms of Sicilie, and Sardinia, and the Realm of Naples; the Caſtilians, lying on both ſides of the Straits, firſt took in ſome of the oppoſite Towns on the coaſt of Africk, next conquered the Canaries or Fortunate Iſlands, and finally diſcovered and ſubdued the moſt part of America; the Portugals lying with a long Sea coaſt on the Weſtern Ocean, poſſeſſed themſelves of the Azores, moſt of the Sea Towns of Morocco, and the land of Guinnia, and doubling the Cape of good hope made themſelves Maſters of many Ports and Iſlands of great conſequence in the Eaſt-Indies, adding thereto in fine the large Countrey of Brazill in that part of America which lay fitteſt for them; and the Navarrois (to conclude) (though locked up by their greater neighbours from all trade at Sea and conſequently enlarging their Dominions that way) adding to their eſtates the moſt part of Gaſcoigne, the Palatinate of Champagne, the Earldom of Eureux, with many fair and large poſſeſſions in the Realm of France thereupon depending.

In reference to the French, it is ſaid that the French are wiſer than they ſeem, and the Spaniards ſeem wiſer than they are: wherein they agree with many particular men of other Nations, who according to the Philoſopher, Sapientes potius cupiunt videri & non eſſe, quam eſſe & non videri.

In matters of war the Spaniards are obſerved to be generally too heavy, ſlow, and dull; the French too heady and precipitate; the one loſing as many fair occaſions by delaies, as the other overthroweth by too much haſte: but between them both they make one good ſouldier; who according to the preſent opportunities, is to make uſe of the ſpur of courage, or the bit of reſpect. But of the ſtrange and many differences in temper, humour and affections, between the Spaniards and the French, we have ſpoke more at large already when we were in France.

The Women are ſober, loving their husbands or friends; wonderful delicate, curious in painting or perfuming: and though they have Wine in abundance, yet are they not permitted to drink it; verifying therein the old Engliſh Proverb, that none are worſe ſhod than the ſhoomakers wife. Herein in worſe condition than the Women of France, who though they are reſtrained from Wine before their marriage; yet after that they take what liberty they liſt, and are no more reſtrained from it than the other ſex. But this is the leaſt liberty, which the French Women have above the Spaniſh: theſe being ſo watched and overlooked, that it is hardly poſſible for them to hold ſpeech with any man, in buſineſs of moſt importance, and much leſs in matters of civilities only; thoſe having liberty to be courted at all times and places, even in the preſence of their husbands, without any diſtruſt or interruption. Heretofore they were wondrous ſtrong, and beyond belief, patient of the throwes of Childbed: Strabo relating how one of theſe women being hired for harveſt work, and finding her travel come upon her, becauſe ſhe would not loſe her daies wages, withdrew her ſelf into a buſh; where being eaſed of her burden, ſhe returned from one labour to another. And many of them at this day uſe not to keep their Chambers, above three daies after their delivery, and then apply themſelves to their houſhold buſineſs without either danger or delay.

The language is not the ſame in all places, though all called the Spaniſh. In Portugal, Catalogne, and ſome parts of Valentia, it hath a great mixture of the French; who in theſe parts have had much trade and negotiation. In Granada, and ſome parts of Andaluzia, it partakes much of the Moor; and in the mountains of Alpuxarras, the Arabick or Mooriſh language ſtill remains in uſe. The Countreys bordering on the Pyrenees, and Cantabrian Ocean, (but Biſcay ſpecially) have much in them of the Language of the ancient Spaniards, before made ſubject to the Romans. That which is common to them all, is the vulgar Spaniſh or Caſtilian, and hath much affinity with the Latine; Breerwood in his Enquiries reporting that he hath ſeen a letter, every word whereof was both good Latine and good Spaniſh. Merula ſhewes a Copy of the like, pag. 300. By reaſon of which conſonancy with the Latine, the Spaniards call their Language, Romance. The other ingredients of this Tongue are generally the Gothiſh, Arabick, and old Spaniſh, and in ſome places the French alſo, as before is ſaid; thoſe people having made great conqueſts, and having had great negotiations in this Countrey. It is ſaid to be a very lofty ſwelling ſpeech, as if it were faſhioned to command.

And as their Language, ſo their Lawes do owe a great part of themſelves to the Lawes of Rome: the Civil or Imperial Lawes being generally uſed amongſt them, but intermixt with many cuſtomes of the Gothes, and the Edicts or conſtitutions of their ſeveral Kings. Thoſe of the Gothes being firſt committed unto writing, and reduced to order by Euricus the firſt King of the Gothes in Spain: thoſe of Caſtile digeſted by the command of Ferdinand the third, Anno 1296. into ſeven Books called the Partidos; not finiſhed till the time of his Son Alfonſo. Leges Hiſpaniarum quas Partitas vocant, in volumen redegit, as Tarupha hath told us of him in his Spaniſh Hiſtory. The like done by King James the firſt for the Realm of Aragon, Anno 1248. reſpectively confirmed and ratified by the Kings ſucceeding. Authoriſed to be read and diſputed on in the publick Schools, as well as the Decretals, the Code, the Pandect, or any other part of the Civil or Canon Lawes.

The Soil hereof, where it is fertile and productive of the fruits of Nature, yeelds not to any part of Europe, for delight, pleaſures, and commodities; which here appear in greater ripeneſs and perfection than in other places. But for the moſt part, it is either overgrown with Woods, cumbred with wilde and rocky Mountains, or of ſo hot a nature, and ſo ſandy withall, that it is not very fit for tillage; and ſo deficient in Water, as not good for Paſturage. So that we may affirm thereof, as of the Figs in the Prophet Jeremie, where it is good, no Countrey better; where bad and barren, few ſo inconvenient, and not any worſe. But this defect of outward beauty and Commodities, is recompenſed by thoſe within; affording great plenty of Mines, both of Steel and Iron, and ſome Mines of Silver: of which laſt ſo abundant in preceding times, that it was never free from the Rovers of all Nations; and it is ſaid of Annibal, that out of one Mine only in the Countrey of the Turdetani (now part of Andaluzia) he received 3000 pound weight daily, for long time together. The principal commodities which they vend into other Countreys, are Wines, Oyl, Sugars, Metals, Rice, Silk, Liquoras, a fine ſort of Wool, Cork, Roſin, Limmons, Raiſins, Orenges, and fruits of the like nature. In Corn, which is the ſtaff of life, they are ſo defective, that they receive the greateſt part of what they ſpend, from Italie, Sicilie, and France. Their Cattel neither fair nor many, the Countrey being not able to breed them, ſo that their Diet is on Salads, and fruits of the Earth; every Gentleman being limited what fleſh he ſhall buy for himſelf and his Family: which if he ſend for to the Butcher, or Poulterer by the ſmalleſt childe, able to do the Errand for him; he is ſure not to be defrauded in price, or quality. And yet they talk as highly of their gallant fare, as if they ſurfeited with the plenty of all proviſions: handſomly checked in that fond humour, by that worthy Souldier Sir Roger Williams. Of whom it is ſaid, that hearing once a Spaniard thus fooliſhly bragging of his Countrey ſalads, he gave him this anſwer, You have indeed good ſawce in Spain, but we have dainty Beefs, Veals, and Muttons to eat with that ſawce; and as God made beaſts to live upon the graſs of the earth, ſo he made men to live upon them. And it is obſerv'd, that if a Spaniard have a Capon, or the like good diſh to his Supper, you ſhall finde all the feathers ſcattered before his door by the next morning.

And as it is in private houſes, ſo for travelling alſo, the Innes and Vents of this Countrey are very ill provided: inſomuch, that moſt men that would not go ſupperleſs to ſleep, carry their proviſion at their ſaddle bowes; and men of worth, their bedding alſo. So poor and mean is the entertainment in theſe places.

Here lived in ancient times the Giants Geryon, and Cacus, which were quell'd by Hercules: and in the flouriſhing of the Empire, 1 Seneca the Tragœdian,, and 2 the Philoſopher of the ſame name; a man of that happy memory, that he could repeat 2000 names in the ſame order that they were rehearſed: as alſo 3 Quintilian the Oratour, 4 Lucan, and 5 Martial, excellent in their kindes, 6 Pomponius Mela the Geographer, 7 Trogus Pompeius, with his Epitomator 8 Juſtin, and 9 Paulus Oroſius the Hiſtorian, this laſt a Chriſtian. In the middle times 10 Iſidore Biſhop of Sevill, 11 Julian, and 12 Hildephonſus Biſhops of Toledo; and after them Eulogius the Saint and Martyr; men learned for the times they lived in. Then for the later Ages, 1 The renowned Cardinal Francis Ximines, and 2 Arias Montanus, famous for the Editions of the holy Bible; 3 Maſius, a learned Commentator; 4 Oſorius, well ſeen in the Latine elegancies: and before all, as well in induſtry as time, 5 Toſtatus Biſhop of Avila, a man ſo copious and induſtrious in his writings, that it is thought he writ more ſheets than he lived daies. But of late times we finde but few of their Works which have paſſed the Mountains, the Latine which they write being very courſe, and ſavouring too much of the Schoolman, (wherein their excellency conſiſts) and therefore they ſet out their Works moſt commonly in their own tongue only. The chief for Souldiery amongſt them were formerly Viriathus, who held out ſo long againſt the Romans; Trajan and Theodoſius, both Roman Emperours; Theodorick the ſecond, King of the Gothes, the victorious Conquerour of the Swevians; Bernardo del Carpio, and Cid Ruis Diaz, famous for their atchievements againſt the Moors: and in late times, Gonſalvo the Great Captain; who ſubdued Naples; Ferdinand Duke of Alva, who conquered Portugal, &c.

The Chriſtian Faith, if we may believe the old Spaniſh Tradition, was firſt here planted by S. James the Apoſtle, within four years after the death of our Redeemer. To which Tradition, though they held very conſtant a long time together, yet of late daies, Baronius, and other learned men of the Church of Rome, do moſt deſervedly reject it. That St. Paul had a purpoſe of coming hither, is evident in his 15 Chapter to the Romans: and that he did come hither accordingly, is poſitively affirmed by S. Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and divers others of the Fathers; which was in Anno 61, as Baronius thinketh. Nor did St. Peter want his part in this great ſervice, but joyned with St. Paul, though not in the journey, yet in the ſending of Biſhops and other Presbyters, to ſecond the beginnings made by that Apoſtle. For it is ſaid expreſly in the Martyrologies, that Cteſiphon, Torquatus, Secundus, Cecilius, Judaletius, Heſychius, and Euphraſius, being at Rome ordained Biſhops by the two Apoſtles, ad prædicandum verbum Dei in Hiſpanias directi, were diſpatched into Spain to preach the Goſpel. Biſhops moſt likely, of thoſe Cities where they ſuffered death, the names of which occurre in the Martyrologie. Under the Empire of the Gothes, the faith of CHRIST, which at their coming hither they found right and Orthodox, was defiled with Arianiſm: not ejurated till the year 588. when that whole Nation did ſubmit to more Catholique tendries. But Spain being conquered by the Moores under the conduct of Muſa Lieutenant General to Ulidor Ulit the Arabian Caliph, and Mahometaniſm overſpreading the whole face of the Countrey: ſuch Chriſtians as remained under their obedience, but few and inconſiderable both for power and quality, had the name of Muſarabes. Increaſing in eſtate and numbers by the fortunate ſucceſſes of the King of Leon and Navarre, and other Chriſtian Principalities growing up apace; they ſtill retaining their old name and their ancient ſervice; diſtinct from that obſerved in the Church of Rome: this being called the Muſarabique, the others the Gregorian Miſſal; the one pretending S. Iſidore Archb. of Sevil, the other S. Gregorie Pope of Rome, for the Author of it. And it continued in this State, till the taking of the City and Kingdom of Toledo by Alfonſo King of Caſtile and Leon, Anno 1083. At what time Bernard a French man being made Archbiſhop of that City and Primate of Spain, endevoured the introduction of the Roman or Gregorian Service; but therein was oppoſed by the other Prelates, & generally by all the People, ſufficiently tenacious of their ancient Formes. At laſt it was concluded (as the ſtory telleth us) to commit the deciſion of the Controverſie to a fiery triall: both Books being being cast into the fire, the Gregorian leaping presently out, and the Musarabique remaining unhurt in the midst of the flames. Convinced by this experiment that both Forms were pleasing to Almighty God, they yeelded so far to the desires of the King (who was zealous in it) that the Musarabique being retained in six of the Churches of Toledo (where it is sung to this day in a Chappell of the Great Church, called Corpus Domini) the Gregorian or Roman Service should be entertained in the rest of Spain. According unto which decree the Musarabique (but not untill some tract of time) came to be disused: and the Gregorian Service first admitted in the Cathedrall of Toledo, May, 29. An. 1091 and after by degrees in the rest of the Countrey.

Since that they have been constant to the Rites of the Roman Church, and of the Faith and Doctrine therein professed, notwithstanding the great intermixture of Jewes and Moors; especially since the setting up of the Inquisition: devised at first about the year 1478. by Pedro Gonsales de Mendoza, Arch-bishop of Toledo, against such converted Jewes, and Moors as did return again to their superstition. But he and those that had the first execution of it, being found so cruel, that in the compasse of nine years, no fewer than 3000 Families had been destroyed in that Diocese only; in the year 1481. it was thought fit to moderate the rigor of it, and to commit the managing thereof to some Jacobins or Dominicall Friers; who in the first place were to have an eye unto such Apostates, and to Hereticks, Magicians, Sodomites, Blasphemers of the name of God, &c. Confirmed in this Authority by Pope Sixtus the 4th. This institution in it self was not only necessary (as the condition of affairs then was) but exceeding laudable, had it been kept within the bounds at first intended. But of late in stead of being used on the Jewes and Moors it hath been turned upon the Protestants, and that with such violence and extremity of torture, that it is counted the greatest tyranny, and severest kind of persecution under heaven. Insomuch that many Papists who would willingly die for their Religion, abhor the very name and mention of it, and to the death withstand the bringing in of this slavery among them. This is it that made the people of Aragon and Naples rebell; Countreys where the people are all of the Papall side: and this was it which caused the irremediable revolt of the Low Countrey, the greatest part of that Nation at the time of their taking Arms being Romish Catholiques; yet it is planted and established in Spain and all Italy (Naples and Venice excepted) the managing thereof committed to the most zealous Friers, and rigorous Friers in the whole pack; the least suspicion of heresie, affinity or commerce with Hereticks, reproving the lives of the Clergy, keeping any Books, or Editions of Books prohibited, or discoursing in matters of Religion, are offences sufficient. Nay they will charge mens Consciences under pain of damnation, to detect their neerest and deerest Friends, if they do but suspect them to be herein culpable. Their proceedings are with great secresie and severity: For first, the parties accused shall never know their accuser, but shall be constrained to reveal their own thoughts and affections. 2 If they be but convinced of any errour in any of their opinions, or be gainsayed by two witnesses, they are immediately condemned. 3 If nothing can be proved against them, yet shall they with infinite tortures and miseries be kept in the house divers years, for a terror unto others. And fourthly, if they escape the first brunt with many torments, and much anguish; yet the second questioning or suspicion brings death remedilesse. And as for torments and kinds of death, Phalaris and his fellow Tyrants come far short of these Bloud-hounds.

The administration of this office, for the more orderly Reglement and dispatch thereof, distributed into twelve Courts, or supreme Tribunals, for the severall Provinces of Spain; no one depending on another, but in some, sort subordinate to the generall Inquisition, remaining in the Court near the Kings person, which hath a kind of superintendency over those Tribunals: in all of which those of the secular Clergy sit as Judges, the Friers being only used as Promoters to informe the Court, and bring more Grist unto the Mill. Of these Inquisitors every one hath the title of Lord, and are a great terror to the neighbouring Peasants. There goeth a Tale, how one of their Lordships, desirous to eat of the Pears which grew in a poor mans Orchard, not far off, sent for the man to come unto him, which put the poor soul into such a fright, that he fell sick upon it, and kept his bed: Being afterwards informed that all his Lordships businesse with him, was to request a dish of his Pears, he pulled up the tree by the roots, and carryed it unto him with the fruit upon it. And when he was demanded the reason of that rash and improvident action, he returned this answer. That he would never keep that thing in his house, which should give any of their Lordships cause to send further after him. Certain it is that by this means the people of this Kingdome are so kept under, that they dare not hearken after any other Religion, than what their Priests and Friers shall be pleased to teach them, or entertain the truth if it come amongst them, or call in question any of those palpable and grosse impostures which every day are put upon them.

For by this means the people of this Kingdome have been and still are punctuall followers of the Church of Rome, and that too in the very errors and corruptions of it; taking up their Religion on the Popes authority: and therein so tenacious or pertinacious, that the King doth suffer none to live in his Dominions, which professe not the Roman Catholique Religion. Of which they have been, since the times of Luther, such avowed Patrons, that one of the late Popes being sick, and hearing divers men to moan his approaching end; uttered some words to this effect: My life (said he) can nothing benefit the Church, but pray for the prosperity of the King of Spain, as its chief Supporter. And though he spoke these words of King Philip the 2d, yet they hold good in his Successors ever since; being esteemed the greatest Patrons and Protectors of the Catholick Cause: Which is indeed the proper interest of this King. For seeing that they have framed to themselves an hope of the Western Monarchy; and finding no fitter means of enlarging their own Temporall, than by concurring with the Pope in uphold-upholding his Spirituall Empire; they have linked themselves most fast to that See. To which end, they have taken upon them, to be the Executioners of the Popes Excommunications, by which Office Ferdinand the Catholique surprized Navarre; not without hope of working the like effect, in some course of time, on the rest of the inderdicted Estates of Europe; as may be seen, by the eager following of the French War against Henry the 4th, till he had reconciled himself to the Church of Rome; and the like War managed for many years together, against Queen Elizabeth of England. And the pursuite of this Spanish Monarchy is so hotly followed by the Jesuits, who in all their perswasions speak not more of one God, or of one Pope, than they do of one King; that they hold it forth for the only means to unite the differences of the Church, and subdue that great enemy of Religion, the Turk. Nor is this only a Conjecture, or a project of the Jesuits only, but a design avowed and declared in Print, that all the World may take notice of it: and that too in a Book not only licensed by the Provincial of the Dominicans, and the supreme Councel of the Inquisition; but by Order from the Lords of the Councell, with the Kings Privilege and Commendation prefixt before it, The Book entituled, La Convenientia de los dos Monarquias Catolicas, &c. The agreement of the two Catholick Monarchies of Rome and Spain; set out in the year 1612. by one John de Puente. In the Frontispice whereof are set two Scutcheons, the one bearing the Crosse-Keyes of Rome, the other the Arms of Castile and Leon; in Vinculo pacis for the Motto. On the one side of this there is a Portraiture representing Rome, with the Sun shining over it, and darting his Beams upon the Keyes, with this Inscription, Luminare majus ut præsit Orbi et Urbi, the Greater light to govern the City and the World. On the other side, another Image designing Spain, with the Moon shining over that, and darting her Rayes on the Spanish Scutcheon, with this Impresse; Luminare minus ut subdatur Urbi et dominetur Orbi, i. e. The lesser light made to be subject to the City, (understand of Rome) but to govern all the World besides. Over all in the top of the Front or Title-page, in Capitall Letters, Fecit Deus duo Luminaria magna, God made two great Lights. The whole Book being an indifferent large Folio, is but a Comment on this Text; which for substance is contained wholly in the Frontispice, but more at large discoursed of in the Volume it self; and plainly shewes what is intended, and by whom. And yet perhaps the Pope and the Jesuits both, may fail in that which is the main of their expectation: and if the project take effect, the Spaniard will then write himself Luminare majus, and make the Pope content with Luminare minus, for his part of the spoyl; and glad to borrow all his light from the Sun of Spain. For though the Kingdome of Spain, and Popedome of Rome be thus straitly combined, yet herein the Popes have overshot themselves; in that leaning so much to the Spaniard, and so immoderately encreasing his dominion, they do in a manner stand at his devotion; and may peradventure in the end, be forced to cast themselves into his arms as their good Lord and Master. For certain it is, that the Spanish Agents have openly braved the Cardinals, and told them, That they hoped to see the day, wherein the King should offer to the Pope half a dozen to be made Cardinals, and he not dare to refuse any; and that they themselves should choose no Pope, but one of their Masters naming. So great an inconvenience it is more than possible it may be to the Popes, in making this Prince the one and only string to their bow; and fastning the dependencies of his Roman Catholiques upon him alone, excluding France and all other Kings in Christendome, of the Romish party, from the honour of it. And yet so firm they are to their Spanish Principles, that no favours either granted to their persons, or Religion, are of value with them, or thought worthy of their acceptation; if it come from any other Fountain of Grace than the Court of Spain. Insomuch as I have heard from a great Minister of State, that when some favours were obtained for the English Papists, on the treaty of the Match with Spain; they were ready with great greedinesse to embrace the same. But when the same favours were obtained for them on the Treaty with France, not a man of them would accept them. For which some of their Chiefs being asked the reason, returned this answer. That by applying themselves to the French, they might lose the Spaniard; and it were great improvidence in them, to change an old and constant Friend, who had never failed them, for one of whose affections they had no assurance; and such a one as by tolerating Hereticks in his own Dominions, shewed that he was no fit Patron for the Catholicks to relie upon.

The chief Rivers are, 1 Tagus, celebrated for his Golden Sands; of which the Scepter of the old Kings of Portugal is affirmed by some Writers to be made, but I have not Faith enough to believe the same. The head of it is in the Mountain Seira Molina, neer to Cuenca; from the which it runneth by the City Toledo; and then smoothly gliding by the Walls of Lisbon, doth pay his tribute to the Western Ocean. 2 Ana, (now Guadiana) which arising about the same place, runneth afterward under the ground, the space of 15 miles: and hence the Spaniards use to brag, that they have a Bridge, whereon 10000 Cattle dayly feed. An accident common to many other Rivers, as to Mole, a small River in Surrey; Erasinus in Greece; and Lycus, in Anatolia; of which last thus Ovid:

Sic ubi terreno Lycus est epotus hiatu,
Existit procul hinc, alioque renascitur ore.

So Lycus, swallowed by the gaping ground,
At a new mouth, far off, is rising found.

But having gotten up again, it loseth it self without recovery in the Western Ocean; on the South of Portugal, which it separateth from Extremadura. 3 Bætis, now called Guadalquivir (which in the Arabick Language signifieth a great River) ariseth out of the Mountains of Sierra Morena; and passing by Corduba, and Sevil, disburdeneth it self into the Southern Ocean, at the Haven of S. Lucars de Barameda. 4 Iberus, which having its head amongſt the Mountains of Biſcay, paſſeth on Eaſtwards by Saragoſſa, and Tortoſa, into the Mediterranean: the whole courſe thereof being 460 miles, of which it is navigable 200. A River of ſuch note in the time of the Romans, that it divided this whole Countrey into Citeriorem, and Ulteriorem; of which more anon. 5 Duerus, which riſing in the ſame Mountains paſſeth through Portugal, and ſo unto the Weſtern or Atlantick Ocean. 6 Minius, of which more in Portugal.

Chief Mountains next unto the Pyrenees ſpoken of before, 1 The Cantabrian Mountains, called by Pliny, Juga Aſturum; which riſing out of a ſpur or branch of the Pyrenees, overſpread the Provinces of Biſcay, Aſturia, and Gallicia (coaſting along the ſhores of the Cantabrian Ocean) where at laſt they end. 2 Idubeda, Iubalda, or Aurantius Saltus, ſo called by Ptolemie, and others of the ancient Writers; which beginning not far from the head of the River Iberus, followeth the courſe of that River by the City of Burgos, and endeth not far from the influx of it into the Mediterranean. 3 Sierra Morena, by Cæſar called Saltus Caſtulonenſis, and Mons Marianus by Ptolemie; which beginning about the Town of Alcoraz, coaſteth along the right-hand ſhores of the River Bætis, to the Southern Seas. 4 Sierra Nevada, by Ptolemie called Mons Illipulus, and Oroſpeda by Strabo, but by the Moors the Mountains of Alpuxaras. A chain of hils which thwart the Kingdom of Granada, from Eaſt to Weſt; and amongſt which the people, to this day, ſpeak the Arabick tongue.

The Countrey is ſaid to have been firſt inhabited by Tubal, the Son of Japhet. Of whom it is affirmed in the Beroſus of Frier Annius, and by ſuch Chronologers as he hath impoſed on by the name of that Author; that in the twelfth year of Nimrod, which was 140 years after the Floud, he ſeated himſelf in the Aſturias, a part of Spain, and there built the Town of S. Uval. A device ſo fooliſh and abſurd, that it is not to be honoured with a confutation: for either Tubal, muſt come hither by Sea or by Land. If by Land, then muſt he in the compaſs of a year or two, travel not leſs than 4000 miles (for ſo far it is at leaſt from Biſcay to the valley of Shinaar) with women and children; through moſt unpaſſable Woods and Mountains: which no underſtanding man can give belief to. If by Sea, beſides the ſhort time he had to provide ſhipping for ſo great a company, and ſo long a voyage, nothing is more improbable to a ſober man, than that he ſhould leave Italie and Africk upon either hand; or pretermit the opportunity of poſſeſſing Valentia, Andulazia, Portugal, being fruitful Countreys; to fix himſelf in the moſt mountainous, woody, and barren Province of all this Continent. Yet moſt of our Beroſians are ſo confident in it, that they make him the firſt King of Spain, from whom to Gargarus Melicola, they numbred 25 Kings more, who laſted 988 years: the chief of which are ſaid to be, 1 Heſperus, who ſubduing alſo Italie, named both Countreys Heſperia: but ſo, that Italie was called Heſperia the greater; and Spain, Heſperia the leſs. 2 Hiſpanus, whence they conceit the name of Hiſpania to be derived. 3 Tagus, 4 Bætus, and 5 Anus, whence the three famous Rivers in Spain ſo called, muſt by all means be derived. 6 Idubeda, God-father no doubt, to the great Mountain ſo named. 7 Sicileus, from whom the Iſle of Sicilie is ſaid to take denomination. 8 Hiſpalis, who is reported to have built the City Sevill, or Hiſpalis. 9 Brigus, the Founder of Flavis-Briga, and other Towns ending in Briga. 10 Luſus, who gave name to Luſitania or Portugal. The Catalogue of which Kings I deſire no man to believe farther, than that of our own State from Brutus to Caſſibeline. A Catalogue ſo ill contrived, that whereas Juſtin ſpeaks of Habis, and Herodotus of Argunthonius; Macrobius of Heron, and Plutarch of Indibilis; all Kings of Spain; none of all theſe are mentioned in it. So that the coming of Tubal (in perſon) hither, is a ſilly vanity; though we deny not but the Spaniards, or ſome nations of them, may derive their Pedegree from Tubal, as being the deſcendants of the Iberi, whom Joſephus ſaith to have been anciently called Thobelos: a name in which are all the Radical Letters of Tubal, and which differeth not much from it in ſound. For ſomewhat before the ſuppoſed time of Gargarus Melicola, the Iberians are ſaid to come in under Panus: divided after his deceaſe amongſt many petit Kings and Princes, for the ſpace of 900 and odd years, even till the firſt Attempts which the Carthaginians made upon it: who found here no ſuch Univerſal or Supreme Monarch, as the Beroſian Fablers dream of. During which time, we finde nothing more obſervable and certain in the ſtory of it, than the planting of Colonies on the Sea-coaſts by divers Nations, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe elder times. Of which ſort were the Towns of Emporia, and Dianium, founded by the Maſſilians; Saguntum, by the Zacynthi, or people of Zant; Rhodope, by the Rhodians, as ſome think; the City and Iſle of Gades, planted by the Tyrians, who after ſpread themſelves over all the coaſts of Andaluzia. The firſt that came in bodies hither, in the way of Conqueſt, were the Celtæ, a great and potent Nation of Gaul; who mixing themſelves with the Iberi, cauſed the whole Countrey to be called Celtiberia: but the time when they came into it, is very uncertain. Of the invaſion of it by the Carthaginians, there is greater certainty. Who being beaten out of Sicil by the conquering Romans, Ann. U. C. 512. and not daring to look any more that way, bended their Forces to the Weſt; and paſſing through the ſtraights of Gibraltur, by the Iſle of Gades (their own long before) landed in Spain, under the conduct of Amilcar, the Father of Annibal, four years after the loſs of Sicilie. In leſs than 20 years following, Amilcar, Aſdrubal his Son-in-law, and Annibal the Son of Amilcar, had made almoſt all Spain ſubject to the Carthaginians, even from the Weſtern Ocean to the Pyrenees; deſtroyed Saguntum, built new Carthage, and ſtrook ſo great a terror into all the Countrey, that had not Annibals deſign carried him to Italie, the State of Carthage had been abſolute Maſters of it without further oppoſition or reſiſtance. But Annibal having taken all his old Souldiers with him; and thoſe that came from Carthage to command in chief, not being men of parts ſufficient to go through with it; they loſt it piece-meal to the Romans, but in leſs time than they had been getting it from the Spaniards; the valour and good fortune of Corn. Scipio, over-ruling the declining power of that mighty State. The laſt that here commanded for the State of Carthage was Asdrubal the Son of Gisco; who being beaten by Scipio into the Island of Gades, left that also to the keeping of Mago, one of his Commanders; by whom being pillaged and deserted, it forthwith yeelded to the Romans; the Carthaginians after this never possessing foot of ground in all this Continent.

The Romans thus becoming Masters of a great part of it, divided it into Ulteriorem, lying from the River Iberus Westward, because the furthest off from them; and Citeriorem, between the said River, and the Pyrenees. But having totally subdued it, they divided it into three main parts, 1 Tarraconensem, so called of Tarragon the chief City of it, containing Aragon, Navarre, Biscay, Gallicia, &c. 2 Baticam, so named of the River Bætis, which runneth through it, comprehending the now Countreys of Granada, Andaluzia, and part of Extremadura. 3 Lusitanicam, denominated from the Lusitani, the most potent people of that part, differing in extent from the present Portugal, (though this called Lusitania by our modern Latinists.) For the old Lusitania comprehended part of Extremadura, and some part of the two Castiles; and no more of the present Portugal, than what lieth betwixt the two Rivers, Ana and Duero: that on the South of Ana being laid to Batica; and that on the North of Duero, unto Tarraconensis. Of these three parts, Batica was in most esteem under the Romans; insomuch, that it contained 8 Roman Colonies, 8 Municipal Cities, and 29 other Towns, endued with the rights and priviledges of the Latins. The reason thereof was, that the people of this Countrey having been formerly broken by the Carthaginians, with more quiet endured the yoke of the Romans; whereas the rest, for a long time resisted the entry and Empire of that prevailing City. But to proceed to the affairs of Rome in Spain, Scipio Africanus laid the first foundation of the Roman Government in this Countrey: which building, though undertaken by many excellent work-men, was not throughly finished till the daies of Augustus, being almost 200 years since the first attempt. He roofed it, strengthned it, and made it a principal building in his Monarchical City. For the old Incolæ were exceeding valiant and resolute, sometimes disgracing, sometimes endangering the Roman reputation; insomuch that there were more Commanders lost in those wars, than any other. At first the Romans fought not with the Spaniards, but with the Carthaginians in Spain: then perished both the Scipio's, viz. The Father and the Unkle of Africanus. Viriathus held war for 20 years, Numantia held out 15, the Astures remained unconquered till the time of Augustus; and also resolutely maintained their particular liberties, ut dijudicari non poterat (saith Paterculus) Hispanis an Romanis plus esset in armis roboris, & uter populus alteri pariturus foret. Such manner of men were the ancient Spaniards under Rome, and Carthage; the first people of the Continent of Europe (excepting Italie) on which the Romans did begin to enlarge their Empire; and the last that wholly were subdued and conquered by them. But being conquered at the last, and brought under the form of a Province by Augustus Cæsar; it was governed by their Proconsuls, Prætors, and other Magistrates, according to the division before-mentioned. But Constantine the Great in his new modelling of the Empire, laying some part of Africk to it, made it a Diocese of the Empire; made subject to the Præfectus Prætorio for Gaul, by whose Vicarius it was governed: the whole being then divided into these seven Provinces, viz. 1 Batica, 2 Lusitania, bounded as before; 3 Gallicia, containing the modern Gallicia, Leon and Oviedo, the greatest part of the Old Castile, and so much of Portugal as lieth betwixt the two Rivers of Minio and Duero. 4 Carthaginensis, so called from the City of New Carthage, comprehending New Castile, Murcia, and Valentia, with part of the Old Castile, Aragon, and Andalusia. 5 Tarraconensis, embracing all Biscay, Navarre, and Catalogn, with the greatest part of the Kingdome of Aragon. 6 Tingitana, so called from Tingis (now Tangier) a Town of Africk, on the opposite Coast, in which are now the great Kingdoms of Fesse and Morocco: And 7 the Province of the Islands, containing Majorca, Minorca, Ebusa, and Frumentaria. Of which seven Provinces, the three first were Consulares, governed by Proconsuls; the other four from their being under Presidents were called Presidiarie. Being thus setled, it continued a Roman Diocese till about the year 400, when it was subdued by Gundericus, King of the Vandals; of which people, their beginning, atchievements, and final Period, we will speak more when we come to Africk, where they fixed themselves: invited thereunto, partly to eschew the ill neighbourhood of the Gothes, who began to grow too potent for them; and partly to satisfie the desires of Boniface, Governor of that Province for the Emperor of Valentinian the third, against whom he had then rebelled, and wanted such support to make good his action. These being gone, the Suevi and Alani, who entred with them, could not long subsist; but were finally broken by the Gothes, and afterwards dispossessed of their Kingdoms also, (though suffered to remain in the Countrey still) as shall be shewn hereafter in its proper place. As for the Gothes (of whom we shall speak more in Sweden, and have already made some mention when we were in Gaul) having sacked Rome, and wasted Italie, under the conduct of Alaric; they were bought out of that Countrey by the gift of Narbonensis in Gaul, and so much of Tarraconensis in Spain as now makes up the Province of Catalogne: the composition being ratified by the mariage of Athaulfus, the Successor of Alaric, with Placidia, Sister to Honorius the Western Emperor. Vallia, or Wallia, the next of name and note (for Sigeric who interposed reigned but one year only, and did nothing in it) Successor of Athaulfus, having beaten the Alani out of Lusitania and Carthaginensis, added those Provinces also unto his Estates, and confined the Vandals within Batica; was the first of the Gothes which entituled himself King of the Gothes in Spain. By their Agreement with the Romans, they were to keep those Provinces for the use of the Empire, which they did conquer and recover from the barbarous Nations: but contrary to all Faith, and the Articles of their Agreement, having once beaten the Alani out of Lusitania, by the prowess of Vallia, and the Swevi out of Batica, under the conduct of Theodorick, the Brother of Torisimund; they fell upon the Romans themselves; whom Euricus cus and his Succeſſors, by little and little, diſpoſſeſſed of all Spain on this ſide of the Straights. Tingitana held out longeſt, as furtheſt off, unfortunately attempted by Theudes the ninth King of the Gothes; whoſe Souldiers being ſet upon by the Romans on the Lords day, or Sunday, refuſed to fight in their own defence; and were ſo miſerably defeated, that there was never a man of them left to carry newes of the overthrow. So early did the Superſtition of a Lords day Sabbath prevail upon this melancholick and devout people. But what this Theudes could not do, was performed by Suintilla; who in the ſhort time of his Reign, An. 642. made the Conqueſt abſolute.

Let us next look upon the Gothes as Lords of Spain, and we ſhall find them to have been Chriſtians in Religion; and ſomewhat civilized by their long neighbourhood and converſation with the Græcians, before they turned their Forces into the Weſt. Their company more deſired in this reſpect than that of the Vandals; who were not only Pagans, but far more barbarous. But theſe Gothes being for long time of the Arian Faction, did grievouſly afflict and perſecute the Orthodox Prelates: continuing in this error till the death of Leonigild (or Leutigildis as ſome call him) the laſt Patron and Aſſertor of it. Their Government Monarchicall, but the Kings Elective, (though for the moſt part they kept themſelves to the Regall Family:) an Excommunication being laid on ſuch, by the fifth Councell of Toledo, as went about to alter that eſtabliſhed courſe. Their Rule of Government was Cuſtom, and that not left in writing, but committed to Memory and Tradition: written Lawes being firſt made by Euricus, which the enſuing Princes confirmed and perfected. What elſe concerneth them, we ſhall find in the cloſe of this Catalogue of

The Kings of the Gothes in Spain.

716	31	Roderick, the laſt King of the Gothes in Spain, elected to the prejudice of the Sonnes of Vitiza, which after proved the ruine and overthrow of the Kingdome.

For though the Kingdome went for the moſt part by Election, and that they had reſpect to the next of blood, (as at this time in Poland, and Bohemia) very few interlopers being here admitted: yet ſome there were, who either by their merit, or ſome opportunity, got the poſſeſſion of the Kingdome; though not at all relating to the Royall Family. Of which kind were Thendes, an Oſtro-Goth, ſometimes the Governour hereof for Theodorick King of the Gothes in Italy, Protector of this Kingdome, in the minority of Amalaric; and Theudegiſolus, Nephew to Totilas, one of the Succeſſors to Theodoric. The reſt of principall note were, 1 Theodoric the firſt, ſlain in the battell neer Tholouze againſt Attila the Hunn; in defence of his own Countreys, and the Roman Empire. 2 Theodorick the ſecond, who beat the Nation of the Suevi out of Bætica; and 3 Leonigild or Leutigilde, who deprived them of Gallicia alſo. 4 Reccaredus the firſt, who firſt embraced the Catholick Doctrine of the Church, and rejected Arianiſme; and for that cauſe firſt honoured with the title of the Catholick King; afterwards reſumed by Alfonſus the firſt King of Leon, and made hereditary by Ferdinand the King of Caſtile, Aragon, &c. Grandfather unto Charles the fifth. 5 Euricus, or Henricus as ſome call him, as remarkable for Civil Polity, as Reccaredus for piety: as being the Lycurgus or Legiſlator of this people, not governed till his time by a written Law, but either by uncertain cuſtomes, or at the pleaſure of ſuch Officers as the Kings ſet over them. 5 Suintilla, Son of Reccaredus the ſecond, who having in the ſhort time of his Reign expelled the Roman Forces out of Tingitana, An. 642. was the firſt Monarch of all Spain, whereof Tingitana (though on the other ſide of the Sea) had been made a Province by the Emperour Conſtantine, as before was ſaid. And of this Province was Iulianus Governour in the time of Roderick, who being of the Faction of the ſonnes of Vitiza, ſtomacked his advancement to the Kingdome; and therby got the greater portion of the Kings diſpleaſure. Who ſending him upon an Embaſſie to the Moors of Africa, in the mean time defloured his Daughter named Cana: which the Father took in ſuch indignation, that he procured the Moors (amongſt whom he had gotten much credit) to come over into Spain. This requeſt they performed under the conduct of Muſa and Tariffe; and having made a full Conqueſt, ſubjected it to the great Caliphs or Mahometan Emperours. It is recorded in a MS. Hiſtory of the Saracens, that at the firſt coming of Tariffe into Spain, a poor woman of the Countrey being willingly taken Priſoner, fell down at his feet, kiſſed them, and told him, that ſhe had heard her Father (who was lettered) ſay, that Spain ſhould be conquered by a people whoſe Generall ſhould have a Mole on his right ſhoulder,

Navarre. and in whom one of his hands ſhould be longer than the other. He, to animate his Souldiers againſt the next encounter, uncloathed himſelf, and ſh ewed the mark; which ſo encouraged them that they now doubted not the Victory. Roderick had in his Army 130000 Foot, and 35000 Horſe. Tariff had 30000 Horſe, and 180000 Foot. The battell continued ſeven dayes together, from morning to night; at laſt the Moors were victorious. What became of King Roderick was never known. His Souldiers took one arrayed in their Kings apparel, whom upon examination they found to be a Shepheard; with whom the King, after the diſcomfiture, had changed clothes. It is written alſo in Rodericus Toletanus, that before the coming of thoſe Saracens, King Roderick upon hope of ſome treaſure, did open a part of the Palace, of long time forbidden to be touched: but found nothing but Pictures which reſembled the Moors; with a Propheſie, that whenſoever the Palace was there opened, the people there reſembled ſhould overcome Spain; and ſo it happened, An. 724.

The Moors, now Lords of Spain by the treaſon of Iulian, (who having ſeen the miſerable death of his wife and children, was ſtarved in Priſon by the Africans) permitted the free uſe of Religion to the old Inhabitants; leſt they ſeeking new dwellings for the liberty of Conſcience, ſhould leave their native Soyl deſolate. The Moors finiſhed their conqueſt in five years, ſay ſome; others in two, and ſome again in eight Moneths. To keep the new conquered Countrey in ſubjection, no way was ſo convenient as to plant Colonies: but the Moriſco women would not abandon their old ſeats. Hereupon Muſa and Tariffe, by gifts, pardons, and perſwaſions, drew many Chriſtian women to forſake their Religion, whom they maryed to the Souldiers. Not long after Vlidor Vlit, the great Caliph, ſent over about 50000 Families of Moors and Jewes; aſſigning them a convenient portion of Lands, to be held with great immunities, and upon ſmall rents. Theſe politick courſes notwithſtanding, the Moors long enjoyed not the ſole Soveraignty herein: for the Chriſtians having now recovered breath, choſe themſelves Kings; and the Authority of the Caliphs declining, gave the Moors liberty to erect divers petit Royalties: So that at laſt Spain fell into a fifteenfold diviſion, viz. into the Kingdomes and proprietary Eſtates of 1 Navarre, 2 Biſcay, and 3 Guiprſcoa, 4 Leon and Oviedo, 5 Gallicia, 6 Corduba, 7 Granada, 8 Murcia, 9 Toledo, 10 Caſtile, 11 Portugall and the Members of it, 12 Valentia, 13 Catalonia, 14 the Kingdome of Majorca, and 15 that of Aragon: not to ſay any thing of the petit Kingdoms of Iaen, Algozire, and Sevill, beſides others of like nature to them; erected by the factious and divided Moors, but of ſhort continuance all of them, and of little note. All now reduced at this day, under the three Governments of Caſtile, Portugal, and Aragon; the Kingdoms and Eſtates of Leon, Navarre, Corduba, Granada, Gallicia, Biſcay, Murcia, and Toledo, being under Caſtile; Portugall with Algarve, and the Iſles of Azores, an entire Government of it ſelf; Valentia, Catalonia, and Majorca, under that of Aragon.

1 NAVARRE.

NAVARRE, the ſecond Kingdome for antiquity in Spain, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Principality of Bearn, in the Kingdome of France; on the Weſt firſt with the River Ebro, or Iberus; and after with a little River falling into it, neer Calahorra, by which divided from Caſtile; on the North, with the Cantabrian Mountains, by which parted from Guipuſcoa; and the South, with the River Aragon, by which divided from that Kingdom. Of larger extent antiently than it is at the preſent, the little Province of Alara, lying towards Guipuſcoa, and the whole Countrey of Rioye (on the Weſt ſide of the River Ebro) being taken from it, and reckoned Members of Caſtile, by Alfonſo: Howſoever, we ſhall look upon it in its antient bounds, and ſhall accordingly take notice of the Cities and chief Towns thereof.

It was called at firſt the Kingdom of Sobrarbe, from a Town of that name, ſituate in the moſt inacceſſible part of the Pyrenees; and therefore choſe by Garcia Ximines the firſt King hereof, for the ſeat of his Kingdome, as moſt defenſible againſt the fury of the Moors. Afterwards it took the name of Navarre, either from Navois, ſignifying a plain and champagn Countrey: firſt uſed by Inigo Ariſta the ſixth King, who having taken Pampelune, abandoned the hill Countreys, and betook himſelf unto the Plains; or from Navarriere, the chief of the three parts into which that City was divided, not only at the taking thereof, but a long time after.

The Countrey though environed on all ſides with mighty Mountains, yet of it ſelf is ſaid to be reaſonably fruitfull; well watered, and for the moſt part plain and level, as before is ſaid. It taketh up ſome parts of both ſides of the Pyrenees: the Spaniſh ſide being fertile, and adorned with trees; the French ſide generally very bare, and naked. That on the Spaniſh ſide, and on the ſummits of the Mountains, now poſſeſſed by the Spaniard, is called High Navarre: that on the French ſide, now called Baſe, or Low Navarre, eſtimated at a ſixth part of the whole Kingdome, is enjoyed by the French; incorporated by King Lewis the 13th, to the Realm of France, An. 1620.

Places of moſt importance in Baſe Navarre, 1 S. Palai, formerly the place of Judicature for this part of the Kingdome; but in the year 1620. removed to Pau in the Principality of Bearn: both Bearn and Baſe Navarre, which had before been governed as diſtinct Eſtates, from the Realm of France, being then incorporate to that Crown. 2 Navarreux, a Town of great importance, ſeven Leagues from Pau; well fortified, and as well munitioned: King Lewis the 13th, finding in it at his coming thither, An. 1620. no fewer than 45 Canons all mounted, beſides 40 Culverins and ſmaller Peeces;

Peeces; with Powder, Bullet, and Victuals anſwerable thereunto. 3 Pied de Port, or S. John de Pied de Port, bordering on the edge of France, againſt which formerly a Peece of eſpeciall ſtrength. 4 Roncevallis or Roncevaux, ſituate in the moſt pleaſant Countrey of all Navarre, in the entrance of a ſmall but delightfull Valley: famous for the great battel fought neer unto it, in the Straights or entrances of the Mountains leading to this Valley; betwixt the French under Charlemagne, and a great Army of Moors and natural Spaniards, confederate together in defence of their common Liberty. In which battel, by the treachery of Gavelon, 40000 of the French were ſlain; and amongſt them Rowland Earl of Mans, the Nephew of Charles, and others of the Peers of France, of whom ſo many Fables are reported in the old Romances, the firſt Author of which Fables paſſeth under the name of Archb. Turpin, ſaid to be one of thoſe twelve Peers; who taking on him to record the Acts of Charles the Great, hath interlaced his Story with a number of ridiculous vanities: by means whereof the noble Acts of that puiſſant Emperour, and his gallant Followers, are much obſcured and blemiſhed by thoſe very pens, which in the times ſucceeding did employ themſelves to advance the ſame. Navarre.

Of ſpeciall note in High Navarre, 1 Victoria, firſt built or rather reedified by Sancho the 4th, King of Navarre, An. 1181. by whom thus named in memory of ſome victory obtained thereabouts, againſt the Caſtilians, whereas before his time it was called Gaſteiz: as in like caſe there had been many Towns built by the Greeks and Romans, by the name of Nicopolis, or the City of Victorie, which we ſhall meet withall hereafter. Situate in the place of the antient Vellica, but graced with the priviledges, and name of a City by John the ſecond of Caſtile, after it came under the command of that Crown, An. 1432. A Town belonging properly to the little Province of Olava, and the chief thereof. Which Province being wholly in and amongſt the Cantabrian Mountains, was of old a member of Navarre: but being extorted from it, An. 1200, by Alphonſo the 4th, of Caſtile, it was in the yeer 1332 incorporated into that Crown as a part thereof; as were ſome other Towns and Members of this Kingdome alſo, won by the Caſtilians. 2 Viane, on the Eaſt of the River Ebro, well fortified, after the taking of Legragno on the other ſide of the water (from which diſtant not above a League) as the Frontier Town againſt Caſtile. Of greateſt note for being the title of the eldeſt Sonne of Navarre, who was called Prince of Viane; advanced unto this honour by King Charles the third, An. 1421. in imitation of the like cuſtom in Caſtile, where the eldeſt Sonne was called Prince of the Aſturias: but not leſſe memorable for the death of Caſar Borgia, ſlain neer unto it in an ambuſh, after all his wanderings, and interchangableneſs of fortunes. For being ſonne of Pope Alexander the ſixth, by birth a Spaniard, he was by his Father made a Cardinal; but relinquiſhing that Title, by Charles the eighth of France created Duke of Valeatinois in the Province of Danlphine: during his Fathers life, he had reduced under his obedience, divers of the Eſtates which antiently had belonged to the Church of Rome; but after his deceaſe impriſoned by Pope Julio the ſecond, who was jealous (not without good cauſe) of his plots and practiſes. From Rome he ſtole unto Gonſalvo, then Vice-roy of Naples for Ferdinando the Catholique; who notwithſtanding his ſafe conduct, ſent him priſoner to Spain: but breaking Priſon (deſperately ſliding down a window) he came at laſt into this Kingdome, and was here ſlain in an Ambuſcado, as before was ſaid. So many times was Machiavels great Politician over-reached by Bookmen and Souldiers. 3 Sobrarbe, in the moſt inacceſſible parts of the Pyrenees, for that cauſe made the firſt ſeat of the Kings of Navarre, entituled from thence the Kings of Sobrarbe. Made afterwards a diſtinct Kingdome from Navarre by Sancho the Great, who gave it to Gonſales his youngeſt Sonne: after whoſe death (not having iſſue) it was ſeized on by Don Raymir the firſt King of Aragon, and made a Member of that Crown. 4 Sangueſſa, a Town of a large Territory and juriſdiction, priviledged with a Suffrage in the Convention of Eſtates, and a ſtrong Fortreſſe on the borders towards Aragon: for which cauſe formerly aimed at by the Kings thereof, who have had it ſometimes in their hands. 5 Pampelun, in the Champagn Countrey, on the banks of the River Arga, the Metropolis of this Kingdome; and the ſeat Royall of its Kings ſince the Conqueſt of it from the Moors by Inigo Ariſta the ſixth King of Navarre. Of old divided into three parts, that is to ſay Bourg, Peuplement, and Navarriere; each having ſeverall Officers and Juriſdictions (the cauſe of many quarrels and much blood amongſt them) till all united into one body, and reduced under the command of one chief Magiſtrate, by King Charles the third. An antient Town firſt built by Pompey at the end of his Wars againſt Sertorius; in memory of whom called Pompeiopolis by our modern Latiniſts; but Pampelon, more neer unto the preſent name, by Ptolemy and Antoninus: now an Epiſcopall See, the ſeat of the Vice-roy, and one of the beſt fortified Towns of all Spain. 6 Moia, not far from the borders of France, where it joyneth on Guipuſcoa, a place of principall importance: the Caſtle whereof was one of the laſt peeces on this ſide of the Mountains, which held out for King John of Albret againſt Ferdinand the Catholique, in his ſurprizall of this Kingdome. 7 Montreal. 8 Olite, and 9 Tafalla; all yeelded with the reſt of this Kingdom, to Frederick of Toledo, Duke of Alva: Who had the happineſs to ſubdue this Realm to the Crown of Caſtile, as his Sonne Ferdinand had to conquer the Realm of Portugall. 10 Tudele, on the Eaſtern bank of the River Ebro, took from the Moors, by a ſurprize by Rotrou Earl of Perch, (a French man) coming with many other noble perſons to the aid of Alfonſo, K. of Navarre and Aragon, at the ſiege of Saragoſſa, An. 1110. Given by that King unto him, for the reward of his ſervice; and afterwards united to the Crown of Navarre, by the mariage of Magdalen Daughter of Earl Rotrou, with Garcia the ſeventh King of Navarre, Succeſſor in that Kingdom to the ſaid Alfonſo. Of late times honoured with a little Univerſity there founded by Ferdinand the Catholique, on his ſurprizall of that Kingdome. 11 Calahorra, ſituate on the Weſtern banks of the Iberus or Ibro, by Ptolemy called Calagorina, by Strabo, Calaguris, now a Biſhops See; taken from Raimir the ſecond King of Navarre, by Alfonſo the ſecond of Caſtile, and made a Member of that Kingdome.

As

Navarre. As also was 12 Logrogno, in the Countrey of Rioye, on the same banks of the River also. 13 Estella, bordering on Castile, to which adjudged (though on the Eastern side of the River) by Lewis the 11th, of France; made Umpire for the atonement of some differences betwixt Henry King of Castile, and John King of Navarre and Aragon; to satisfie that King for his charges in the former quarrell.

The old Inhabitants thereof, were the Vascones, possessed not only of this tract, but of Biscay and Guipuscoa also, from them denominated: who passing over the Pyrenees, made themselves masters of that Province which is now called Gascoigne by the French, and Vascovia in Latin. Won from the Romans by the Gothes, and from them by the Moors; it began to be a Kingdom under Garcia Ximines, a noble man of the Gothish blood: who with 600 men only began to make head against the Saracens, An. 716. first under the title of the Kingdome of Sobrarbe, and after that of Navarre; for the reasons formerly delivered. The sixth from Garcia Ximines, was Inigo surnamed Arista, (so named from his vehemency and heat in War) the Sonne of Simon Earl of Bigorre in Gascoigne; elected to this Kingdom, on the death of Ximines the fifth King, An. 840. or thereabouts, as the next Heir (but in the collaterall Line) of Don Garcia Ximines the first King of Sobrarbe. To him the taking of Pampelune is ascribed most generally, though Turquet in his History referre the same to Garcia the second King. But certainly the Town was in the hands of the Moors till forced from them by the prowess of Charlemagne; by them again recovered after the defeat of Roncevals, and held till the time of this King, who possessed himself of it. To this King also is ascribed the first beginning of the ceremony of Crowning and Anointing, after the manner used by the Kings of France. But the old Roman Provinciall cited in the titles of Honour, acknowledgeth no such honour to these petit Kings; communicated only, in that time, to the Emperours of the East and West, the Kings of Hierusalem, England, France, and Sicil. And therefore probable it is, that the custom came into Navarre with the house of Champagne. Other Kings of most note in the course of Story were, 3 Fortun, the second, Nephew of Inigo Arista, by his sonne Garcia the third; who added unto his Estate the Earldom of Aragon, descended to him by his Mother, the Daughter and Heir of Asnarius, or Aznario, the last Earl thereof. 4 Sancho the fourth, surnamed the Great, who first assumed unto himself the title of King of Spain: his Predecessors using no other title than Kings of Sobrarbe or Navarre; his Cotemporaries calling themselves Kings of Leon, Toledo, Sevil, Corduba, according to the names of their severall Kingdoms; the Gothes, Kings of the Gothes in Spain; and so the Vandals, and the Suevi. Only the Earls of Barcelone, at their first erection by the French, entituled themselves the Dukes and Marquesses of Spain, as if all were theirs; with brag and vanity enough. But this Prince had some good ground for it, as being by inheritance possessed of Navarre and Aragon; of Castile, in the right of his Wife Donna Nugna, or Elvira, Sister and Heir of Sancho the last Earl thereof; and by conquest of a great part of the Realm of Leon: so that almost all Spain, not possessed by the Moors, was become his own. Had these Estates remained entire to his Successors, the Moors no doubt had sooner lost their hold in Spain; and the whole Continent being brought under the obedience of one sole Monarch. But this King either loving all his sonnes alike, or else offended with the eldest, who most unnaturally had accused his own innocent mother of the crime of Adultery; divided his Estates amongst them: giving to Garcia his eldest Sonne, the Realm of Navarre, with that part of Leon which he held by conquest; to Ferdinand his second Sonne, Castile; and Aragon to his base Sonne Raymir; both which he erected into Kingdoms: and finally, to Gonsales his third sonne, the Realm of Sobrarbe, then first dismembred from Navarre. By means of which impolitick course, his Sonnes being all of equall title and Estates, in stead of opposing the common Foe, quarrelled with each other, and left the quarrell as a Legacy to their severall Successors: which mischief might have been avoided, if he had not dignified them all with the title of Kings; or left the rest as Homagers unto one Supreme. 5 Sancho the fifth, Nephew of Sancho the Great, by his sonne Garcia de Nagera, unnaturally and traiterously slain by his Brother Raymir. After whose death and the short interposition of his Murtherer, this Kingdom was seized on by the Kings of Aragon: three of which, viz. Sancho Ramyres, Pedro, and Alfonso, did severally and successively enjoy the same. 6 Alfonso the last of the three Kings of Aragon reigning in Navarre, surnamed the Warriour, who for a time was King of Castile also in right of Urraca his Wife: in which respect he took unto himself the title of Emperour of Spain, though not acknowledged so by others. But finally dying without issue, and his Brother Raymir, or Raymond called the Monk succeeding in Aragon; the Kingdom of Navarre reverted to Garcia Raymir Lord of Monsen, the direct Heir of Garcia de Nagera, by Raymir Lord of Calahorra his younger Sonne. 7 Sancho the 8th. the Nephew of this Garcias Raymir, by his Sonne Sancho the 7th, surnamed the Wise, the last King of the masculine and direct Line of the Kings of Navarre: the Kingdome after his decease passing by the Females, or Heirs generall, to the Earls of Champagne, and so unto the Kings of France, the Houses of Eureux, Foix, Albret, and Vendosme; but never holding above three descents in any one Family. By means whereof, these Kings being barred from gaining any thing on the Moors, by the interposition of the Kings of Castile and Aragon; and having no way to enlarge their Revenue or Dominions, by any undertakings and Adventures at Sea, as the Portugals did: incorporated to their Crown as fair and large possessions in the Realm of France, as any of the others did in the Spanish Continent. The Principality of Bearn, the Earldoms of Foix and Begorre, united in the person of Gaston of Foix; as those of Armaignac and Albret in the person of John Earl of Albret; all lying together on the other side of the Pyrenees, all added to this Crown by mariage with the Heirs hereof: made up a fairer and wealthier Estate than Navarre it self; inferior to few Provinces in the Realms of Spain. Not to say any thing of the accession of the County Palatine of Champagne, exchanged exchanged afterwards for some Lands in the County of La March in Limosin; or of the Earldoms of Navarre, Eureux, and the Dutchy of Vendosme; as lying further off, and of lesse importance: Nor of the great Kingdom of France now herewith incorporate, as to the person of the King, though not in the possession of this Kingdom also. With so much judgement and successe did the ensuing Kings (not otherwise able to enlarge their Territories) bestow their Daughters; that the Distaffe proved as happy to this little Kingdom, as the Sword to others. 8 Charles, the second of that name, and the 30th King of Navarre, whom I mention not for any glorious Actions atchieved in his life, (for that was full enough of ignominy) but for the strangeness and hideousness of his death. He was a Prince much given to voluptuousness, and sensuall pleasures; which so wasted his spirits, that in his old age he fell into a kind of Lethargy. To comfort his benummed joints, he was bound and sewed up naked in a sheet, steeped in boyling Aqua-vitæ. The Chirurgion having made an end of sewing the sheet, and wanting a knife to cut off the threed; took a wax-candle that stood lighted by him: but the flame running down by the threed, caught hold on the sheet; which (according to the nature of Aqua-vitæ) burned with that vehemency, that the miserable King ended his dayes in the fire. 9 John of Aragon, the second sonne of Ferdinand the first, in the life of his Brother Alfonso was made King of Navarre, in right of Blanche his Wife, Daughter of Charles the 3d, and on the death of his Brother, King of Aragon also. And though his Queen dyed long before him, in whose right he reigned, yet he kept possession of the Kingdom till his death, (reigning 54 years in all) notwithstanding the opposition made against him by Charls Prince of Viana, his only Sonne by that mariage, and Heir apparent of that Crown; whom he vanquished, imprisoned, and at last poysoned. 10 John, Earl of Albret in Gascoigne, King of Navarre in right of Katharine his Wife: in whose reign the Kingdom of Navarre was seized on by Ferdinand the Catholique, Sonne of the said John King of Aragon, and Navarre, by a second Wife. The manner of it we shall relate with more particulars, when we have summed the whole Succession of

and John of Albret, Ferdinand gathered an Army under the pretence of rooting out the Moors, and ſurprized this Kingdom, altogether unprovided, and deſtitute of means to make the ſmalleſt reſiſtance An. 1512. The pretended reaſon of this ſurprizall, was an Excommunication laid on theſe Princes by the Pope, of which this King took upon him to be Executioner: but the true cauſe was an antient deſire which this King had to poſſeſſe this frontire Kingdome; it being a ſtrong Bulwark againſt France. It hapned then that Lewis the 12th, having incurred the diſpleaſure of Pope Julio the ſecond, was together with all his adherents, excommunicated; and his, and their Eſtates given to ſuch as could or would ſubdue them. The King and Queen of Navarre were at this time both French Subjects: he in reſpect of Albret, his paternall inheritance, and ſhe of her Eſtates of Foix and Bearn; and therefore ſided with the French King. Ferdinand having (as we ſaid) levyed an Army under colour of extirpating the Moors, turneth upon the French King; and demanded of theſe Princes, not only a free paſſage through their Countrey, but alſo to have certain places of ſtrength put into his hands, for his better aſſurance. Theſe unjuſt demands the Navarroys denyed. Whereupon Ferdinand with all expedition invadeth the Kingdom, the greateſt part of which he took without a blow given: the French King being as backward in affording due aſſiſtance, as the other was unprovided of means for defence. The French netled with this loſſe, divers times attempted the recovery of it, but in vain: for the Spaniard ſtill keepeth thoſe parts of it which lie on that ſide of the Pyrenees; leaving the reſt, which lyeth on the French ſide of thoſe Mountains (being about a ſixth part of the whole) to the Deſcendents of thoſe Princes whom he had diſſeized.

The Arms of Navarre are Gules, a Carbuncle nowed Or. Which Carbuncle having a reſemblance unto chains of Gold, is ſaid to have been firſt taken by Sancho the 8th, in memory that he and his Forces had firſt broken the Fortification made with chains, about the Pavilion of Mahomet Enaſer, the Meramomolin of Morocco, at the great fight in Sierra Morena: before which time the Arms of this Kingdom had been Azure, a Croſſe Argent.

The chief Order of Knighthood was of the Lilly, begun by Garcia the ſixth; their Blazen a Pot of Lillies with the Portraiture of our Lady engraven upon it; their duty to defend the Faith, and dayly to repeat certain Ave-Maries.

3 BISCAY and GUIPUSCOA.

OF theſe two we ſhall ſpeak together, becauſe of the ſimilitude and reſemblances which are between them, both in the Countrey and the people; the names being alſo forged from the ſame Originall: Bounded on the Weſt, with the Kingdom of Leon; on the Eaſt with the Pyrenees, and Guienne in the Realm of France; on the North, with the Cantabrian Ocean; and on the South, with Navarre, and old Caſtile. Thus named from the Vaſcones, inhabiting the neighbouring Kingdome of Navarre in the time of the Romans: part of which people in the year 640. or thereabouts, paſſed over unto the further ſide of the Pyrenees, where they took up thoſe parts of France, ſince from them called Gaſcoigne. The reſt continuing in their old Seats, or ſpreading more into the Weſt towards the Cantabrians, gave to thoſe parts the name of Guipuſcoa, and Viſcaia, (for ſo the Spaniards write and ſpeak it) now by us called Biſcay: their language alſo (which is much different from the reſt of Spain) being called the Baſquiſh, more neer in ſound to that of Vaſcons, the Originall name.

The whole Countrey is very Mountainous and Woody, yeelding but little ſtore of Corn, and leſſe of Wine: the defect of the firſt being ſupplyed from other Countreys, of the laſt by Sider; for which end they plant Apples here in great abundance. But from thoſe Woods they draw continually great ſtore of Timber, for the building of Ships: and from thoſe Hills there do not only iſſue pleaſant Rivers, (ſome ſay 150 in number) of which Iberus and Duero are ſaid to be two; but ſuch infinite ſtore of Iron and Steel, that no Countrey yeeldeth better or in greater plenty. Called and accounted for this cauſe, the Armory of Spain; and giving occaſion unto Pliny to report, that there was in this Countrey, a whole Mountain of Iron: In Maritima Cantabriæ parte Mons præruptè altus (incredibile dictu) totus ex ea materia eſt, lib. 34. cap. 45. Nor they only furniſh all Spain with Iron, which they make into Inſtruments of War, and others for domeſtick uſes; but with Timber alſo for their ſhipping: with which ſo ſtored, that whole Fleets may be built and armed from this Countrey only.

It is divided commonly into two parts, the Eaſtern bordering on the Pyrenees, and the Realm of France, which is called GUIPUSCOA; and the Weſtern bordering on the Kingdom of Leon, which properly is called BISCAY: the Town of Montrico ſtanding in the confines of both. Both of them heretofore of the ſame Originall, though by ſeverall means united to the Crown of Caſtile; both ſpeak the ſame Cantabrian language, now called the Baſquiſh; the people of both being more rude, and ſimple, than the reſt of Spain; but ſtanding much upon their Gentry, according to the cuſtom of moſt mountainous and unconquered Nations. The difference is, that thoſe of Guipuſcoa, by reaſon of their traffique and commerce with other Countreys, ſavour a little more of Chriſtianity, than the others do: in which the common Biſcains are ſo far to ſeek, that though they have ſome generall notions of God and CHRIST, yet very few of them are able to render an account of their Faith, in any tolerable meaſure. And thus a view being taken of thoſe generall notions in which both Countreys are concerned; let us next look upon them in their ſeverall and diſtinct capacities, with reference to their chief Towns and Stories.

And firſt for GUIPUSCOA. The places of chiefeſt note in it are, 1 S. Sebaſtians, (Don Baſtia, as the Vnlgar call it) a noted and well-traded Port, at the mouth of the River Gurvineo, beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, defended at the entrances with two ſtrong Caſtles founded upon the oppoſite Rocks; and honoured with an Epiſcopall See. 2 Toloſa (commonly called Toloſette) at the confluence of the Rivers Oria, and Duarzo. 3 Placenza, on the River Denia, inhabited by none but Black-ſmiths, who do attend their Hammers with ſuch endleſſe diligence, that Vulcans Forge may ſeem to be tranſlated hither out of the Iſle of Lemnos. 4 Guetaria, beautified with a ſafe and convenient Haven, defended from all winds by a little Iſland lying before it: the birth-place of Sebaſtian del Cano that famous Pilot, the firſt that ſailed about the World; Magellanus who went chief in that expedition periſhing in the Action. 4 Fonterabia at the mouth of the River Vidoſa, which divides this Countray from Guyenne in France; for that cauſe very well fortified, and as ſtrongly garriſoned. 6 Renteria, ſituate neer a Brook abounding with moſt excellent Salmons. 7 Montrico at the mouth of the River Denia, the fartheſt Town hereof on the edge of Biſcay. Moſt of which ſtand upon or neer the Sea; there being but few Towns of note within the Land (though ſtore enough of ſcattered Villages, as in Biſcay alſo) becauſe of the roughneſſe of the Mountains. Biſcay.

(Don

As for the Fortunes and affairs of this part of the Countrey, after the ſubverſion of the Kingdome of the Gothes in Spain (for till that time they followed the ſame fortunes with the reſt of this continent) it was at firſt a member of the Crown of Navarre; afterwards wreſted from King Sancho the ſixth, by Alfonſo the firſt of Caſtile, An. 1079. by whom committed to the Government of Lopes Diaz de Haro, Lord of Biſcay. Reſtored again to the Kings of Navarre, upon ſome following Capitulations; it ſo continued till the year 1200. when having experience of the Government of both Kingdoms, and liking better that of Caſtile, they offered themſelves to the ſubjection of Alfonſo the fourth; who without ſo much as one blow ſtrook, became Maſter of all the Countrey, and left it ſetled and confirmed unto his Succeſſors, as it hath ever ſince remained.

2 For BISCAY next, the Principall Towns thereof are, 1 Larrabecua, the chief Town of this Province in elder times, in the chief Church whereof the Kings of Spain, as Lords of Biſcay, uſe to be ſolemnly inaugurated; here making Oath to maintain the liberties of the Countrey, and receiving the Homage and Allegiance of the people of it. 2 Berneo, an old Town alſo, and amply priviledged; the franchiſes whereof the Kings are ſolemnly ſworn to keep, in the Church dedicated to the honour of S. Euphemia. 3 Guernica, the third Town for antiquity in this part of theſe Countreys. Then of a later date we have 4 Bilbo, or Bilbao, ſituate ſome two Leagues from the Sea, but on a fair and deep Creek thereof; on the other ſide ſurrounded with Mountains; built out of the ruines of the old Flaviobriga, by Diego de Haro Lord of Biſcay, An. 1300. and ſituate the beſt of any Town in this Countrey for plenty of Victuals, eſpecially for fleſh and moſt excellent bread. Exceedingly enriched by making of Armour, and all ſorts of weapons (their chiefeſt Manufacture) the Bilbo Blades in ſuch requeſt being brought from hence. Beſides which trade of Arms and Iron, they deal alſo in Wooll, by the vent of which Commodities they are grown ſo wealthy, that here are many private Merchants, which build yearly three or four good Ships for their own trade only. 5 Laredo, a Sea Town alſo with a capable Port: The landing place of Charles the 5th, when he had relinquiſhed the Empire, and all his other Eſtates, with reſolution to ſpend the reſt of his life in Spain, in a private manner: it being obſervable, that he was no ſooner landed, but the Admirall Shippe in which he came, and the greateſt part of the Navy which came with him, periſhed in the Haven, to ſhew him (as it were) that there was no receding from this reſolution. 6 Portugaletre, commodiouſly ſeated on an Arm of the Sea, which floweth up to their very houſes; and ſerveth them exceeding fitly, for the lading and unlading of their commodities.

The old Inhabitants of this tract before the coming in of the Vaſcones, were the Cantabri; theſe ſubdivided into the ſeverall Nations of the Marbogi, the Cariſti, the Antrigones, the Varduli, and the Cantabri properly ſo called. From theſe deſcend the modern Biſcains. An Argument whereof may be their Language, different from the reſt of Spain, and ſaid by ſome to have continued in this Countrey ever ſince the confuſion at Babel. And though they over-ſhoot themſelves, that go as far as Babel for the Pedegree and Antiquity of it: yet that it was the antient Language of Spain, is more than probable: becauſe this people have ever continued without any mixture of forrein Nations, as being never throughly ſubdued either by Romans, Carthaginians, Gothes, or Moors; and ſo they remained, as in their liberties not Maſtered, ſo in their language not altered. In like manner the Arabick continueth uncorrupt, in the hilly parts of Granada; the Tongue of the old Britans, in our Wales; and the antient Epirotick, in the high, woody, and more mountainous parts of that Countrey. And though thoſe of Guipuſcoa ſpeak the ſame Language alſo, yet is it with a greater mixture of other words (by reaſon of their neighbourhood with France, and commerce with ſtrangers) than it is in Biſcay; where the old naturall Language, whatſoever it was, is in far more purity.

Nor do the Biſcains differ from the reſt of Spain in language only, but in Cuſtoms alſo, four of which I will here ſet down as a light to the reſt. Firſt they account themſelves free from taxes, and contributions to the Kings of Spain; yeelding them obedience with their Bodies, but not with their Purſes. And when any of the Spaniſh Kings in their Progreſſes, come to the Frontiers of this Countrey, he bareth one of his Legs, and in that manner entreth into it. There he is met by the Lords and Gentlemen there dwelling, who proffer him ſome few ſmall Braſs pieces (Maravides they call them, whereof 600 go to a Crown) in a Leathern Bag, hanged at the end of a Lance; but withall they tell him, that he muſt not take them. Which Ceremony performed, they all attend the King in his journey.

Biſcay. Secondly, they admit no Biſhops to come amongſt them: and when Ferdinand the Catholick came in Progreſs hither, accompanyed amongſt others by the Biſhop of Pampelune; the people aroſe in Arms, drave back the Biſhop, and gathering all the duſt on which they thought he had trodden, caſt it into the Sea. Which averſneſſe unto Biſhops, as they firſt took up in all probability, on ſome hard uſage which they found at the hands of their Prelates; and ſtill retain it out of a ſtubbornneſſe of nature, moſt peculiar to them: ſo poſſible enough it is, that the want of Biſhops, and of Epiſcopall Viſitations amongſt the Biſcains, is not the leaſt cauſe of that ignorance and rudeneſſe (ſpoken of before) which is found amongſt them. Thirdly, they allow not any Prieſts to live in their Villages, except he bring his Concubine with him: conceiving it unpoſſible for them to keep their Wives unto themſelves, if the Curate hath not a Woman of his own. Fourthly, the Women at all meetings do firſt taſt of the Cup, and ſo diſpoſe of it to the men; which Cuſtom they have had amongſt them ever ſince Ogne, the Counteſſe of Caſtile, attempted to have poyſoned her Sonne Sancho, in a Cup of Wine.

But to return again to the old Inhabitants, they were a people of that courage, that they defended the liberty of their Countrey againſt the Romans, when the reſidue of Spain was ſubdued; and were at laſt, not without great effuſion of blood, and manifeſt tokens of manly reſolution, and heroick ſpirits on their parts, vanquiſhed by the darling of Fortune, Auguſtus. Such hilly and mountainous people are alwayes the laſt that are conquered, and the firſt that ſtand on their own guard: as beſides theſe Biſcains, the Navarrois and Aſturians, here in Spain, in reſpect of the Moors; and our Britans, in relation to the Saxons. Whether it be, that living in a ſharp air, and being inured to labour, they prove on occaſion good and able men; or that the Forts of Natures own building are not ſo eaſily wonne, as defended; or that the unpleaſantneſs of the Countrey, and unfruitfulneſs of the ſoyl, yeeld no occaſion to ſtrangers, to deſire and adventure for it; I take not on me to determine. But being overcome at laſt, they were firſt caſt into the Province of Tarraconenſis; and ſo continued after the new modelling of Spain, by the Emperour Conſtantine. Under the Romans they continued, till that Empire fell; and then not conquered by the Gothes, but reſigned over to them by the Romans, with the reſt of that Province. Nor loſt they any thing of their antient and naturall courage, by the intermixture of the Vaſcons; continuing ſtill good Souldiers both for Sea and Land: a ſtubborn, fierce, and couragious people; impatient of ſervitude, and not eaſie to be forced to any thing which they like not of. The laſt of all the Spaniards that ſubmitted to the fury of the Moors, (excepting thoſe of the Aſturias never conquered by them) and one of the firſt Provinces which ſhook off that yoak: animated and conducted in that undertaking, by Soria, deſcended of the blood Royall of Scotland, An. 87. made upon that good ſervice the firſt Lord of Biſcay. After this they continued a free and diſtinct Eſtate under their own Proprietary Lords and Princes of the noble Family of Haro; til that Nero of Spain, Don Pedro the Cruel, violently took it from Donna Ieanne, the right heir of it, An. 1358. From which Donna Ieanne, the eldeſt Daughter maryed to Ferdinand the younger Sonne of Ferdinand de la Cerde, the right Heir of Caſtile, iſſued the Lady Ieanne Manuel, the Wife of Henry the ſecond, and Mother of John the firſt, both Kings of Caſtile: by which laſt, this Countrey was united to that Crown for ever, An. 1379. The names of the Proprietary Lords of this Eſtate, we have in this following Catalogue of 870 1 Soria, the ſonne of Lope of Biſcay, but Nephew by the Mothers ſide to a King of Scotland, the firſt Lord of Biſcay.

The Lords of Biſcay.

2 Manſo Lopes the ſonne of Soria.
3 Inigo the Deaf, ſonne of Manſo Lopes.
4 Lopes Diaz, the ſonne of Inigo.
5 Sancho Lopes, the ſonne of Lopes Diaz.
6 Inigo II. the baſe ſonne of Lopes Diaz; the two ſonnes of Sancho Lopes by reaſon of their tender years, being ſet aſide.
7 Lopes Diaz II. ſonne of Inigo the ſecond.
8 Diego Lopes ſurnamed the White, ſonne of Lopes Diaz the ſecond.
9 Lopes Diaz III. ſonne of Diego Lopes, the firſt who took unto himſelf the ſurname of Haro, from a Town of that name of his Foundation.
10 Diego Lopes Diaz de Haro, ſonne of Lopes Diaz the 3d.
11 Lopes Diaz IV. ſonne of Diego Lopes Diaz de Haro.
1257 12 Diego Lopes Diaz II. aſſiſted Sancho the ſecond ſonne of King Alfonſo the fifth of Caſtile, in excluding the Children of Don Ferdinand de la Cerde his elder Brother; by which Sancho he was after ſlain. A reward not unſuitable to his bold attempt.
1289 13 Diego Lopes de Haro, the ſonne of Diego.
1290 14 Diego Lopes III. the Brother of Diego Lopes Diaz the 2d the Founder of the Town of Bilbo.
1309 15 John of Caſtile, Brother to King Sancho, and Husband of Mary Diaz de Haro, Daughter of Diego Lopes the 2d.
1319 16 John the Blinde, ſo called becauſe he had loſt an eye, ſonne of John of Caſtile, and Mary Diaz of Haro, ſlain by King Alfonſo.
1329 17 John Nugnes of Lara, in right of his Wife, Daughter and Heir of John the Blind (whoſe name I find not) ſucceeded after the deceaſe of Donna Maria Diaz.

1350 18 Nugno de Lara, an Infant of two yeers old, ſucceeded John Nugnes of Lara his Father. Leon & 1351 19 Jean and Iſabel, the Siſters and Heirs of Nugno de Lara, ſeized upon by Don Pedro; and Oviedo.
the whole Signeury of Biſcay ſubjected by ſtrong hand to the Crown of Caſtile, with many other fair Eſtates which depended on it.

The Arms of theſe Lords of Biſcay, were Argent, two Wolves Sable, each of them in his mouth a Lamb of the ſecond.

4 LEON, and OVIEDO.

THE Kingdom of LEON and OVIEDO hath on the Eaſt, the Countrey of Biſcay; on the North, the main Cantabrian Ocean; on the South, Caſtile; on the Weſt, Gallicia. So called from Leon, and Oviedo, the chief Cities of it, and firſt ſeat of their Kings; the antienteſt Kingdome in all Spain. By a more antient name it was called Aſturia, from the Aſtures, who poſſeſſed it in the time of the Romans: divided into the two generall names of Auguſtani, and Tranſmontani; but comprehending the particular tribes or Nations of the Peſici, Gigari, Zoelæ, and Lancienſes.

The Countrey mountainous and woody, but formerly of ſome eſteem for thoſe ſmall, though ſwift Horſes which the Romans (from hence) called Aſturcones; we may read it, Hobbies; which afterwards became a common name for all Nags or Gueldings: Aſturco Macedonicus being uſed for a Macedonian Nag, by Petronius Arbiter.

It is divided commonly into two parts, that is to ſay, Aſturia de Oviedo, bordering on Gallicia, towards the Weſt; and 2 Aſturia Santillana, confining on Biſcay, towards the Eaſt. From which diviviſion of the Countrey, the eldeſt Son of Caſtile is called Prince of the Aſturias, in the plurall number; which Title ſome ſuppoſe to be given unto them, becauſe it was the firſt Countrey which held up againſt the Moors. But indeed the true Originall hereof is referred by the beſt Spaniſh Writers, to the time of the mariage of Catharine, Daughter of John of Gaunt, and in right of her Mother Conſtance, the right Heir of Caſtile; unto Henry Sonne of John the firſt, then in poſſeſſion of that Kingdom. For to this new maryed Couple it was granted, ſaith Mariana, that after the manner of England, where the Heir apparent is called Prince of Wales, they ſhould be called Princes of the Aſturias. In times ſucceeding the Towns of Iaen, Ubeda, Biatia, or Baeca, and Andujar, all ſituate neer together in Andaluſia, and each of them inveſted with a goodly Territory, were added to the Patrimony and Eſtate hereof; and ſo continue to this day.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Sublanco, now a ſmall Village, but once a Town of ſo great ſtrength, that it was deſtroyed by the command of the Emperour Nerva, leſt it might animate theſe Mountainers unto a revolt. 2 LEON, ſituate at the foot of the Mountains, not far from the place of the old Sublanca, (as it was then called.) The Town but mean, were it not beautified by a fair and large Cathedrall; the Biſhop whereof acknowledgeth no Metropolitan but the Pope alone. Recovered from the Moors, An. 722. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of the Kings of Leon: by ſome called Legio, becauſe the ſeventh Legion was here lodged; by Ptolemy called Legio Germanica, and by others Gemina. 3 S. Andera, ſo named from a Church there built to the honour of S. Andrew; by Ptolemy called Flavionavie, now a well traded Port on the Cantabrian Ocean. 4 Santillana, which gives name to the Eaſtern part of Aſturia. 5 Llanes, where the two Aſturias meet together. 6 Cividad Real, in the Weſtern part of Aſturia, called Aſturia de Oviedo. 7 Villa Vicioſa, the only-noted Port in this part of the Countrey. 8 Aviles, on the borders of Gallicia, neer the Sea, and not far from the Promontory called of old Promontorium Scythicum, but now Cabo de Pinus. 9 OVIEDO, called for a time the City of Biſhops, becauſe many of the Biſhops of Spain, diſpoſſeſſed of their Churches by the Moors, had retired thither; and there preſerved the Line of Epiſcopal Succeſſion, till their Sees were filled again with Biſhops in more happy times. Antiently it was called Lucus Aſturum, and was of old a Biſhops See; reedified by King Fruela the firſt, in the year 757. Famous enough in giving the title of a Kingdom to the firſt Chriſtian Princes, after the Conqueſt by the Moors; called from hence Kings of Oviedo. Afterwards, An. 896. in the time of K. Ordogno the firſt, they began to be ſtyled Kings of Oviedo and Leon; and at laſt Kings of Leon only: Oviedo being quite left out of the Regal ſtile by Raymir the 2d, An. 940. More toward the Inlands of this Kingdome (now reckoned part of old Caſtile) are 10 Palenza, the Pallantia of Ptolemy and Antoninus, ſeated on the River Carrion; once a ſmall Univerſity, till the tranſlation of it unto Salamanca, by King Ferdinand the third. This Town firſt felt the fury of the Suevians, when they maſtered theſe parts of Spain. 11 Aſtorga, antiently called Auguſta Aſturica, whence the Aſtures of this tract were called Auguſtani; a Biſhops See, frontiring on Gallicia: happy in this, that it felt not the fury of the luſtfull King Vitiza; who to ſecure himſelf in his unlawfull pleaſures, and to weaken his ſubjects, if they ſhould attempt any thing againſt him, diſmantelled all the Towns in his Dominions, except Leon, Toledo, and this Aſtorga. 12 Benevent, on the South-eaſt of Aſtorga, which gave the title of Duke to Frederick the Baſe ſon of K. Henry the 2d, (of Caſtile) the ſtemme of the moſt potent Family of Spain, for the times they lived in. 13 Toro, the moſt Southern Town of all this Kingdom; and for that ſo well fortified againſt the encroachments of the Caſtilians, till the uniting of the Kingdoms; made afterwards (as lying neereſt to Caſtile, and the Court or the King) the ordinary place of conference with the States of Leon.

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Countrey hath been ſhewn already. When conquered by Auguſtus

Leon. guſtus Caſar they were made part of the Province of Tarraconenſis; part afterwards of the Province of Gallicia, by the Emperour Conſtantine. Won from the Romans by the Gothes, and from them by the Moors, though long they did not lie under their command. For as the luſt of Roderick the laſt King of the Gothes in Spain, occaſioned the coming in of the Moors; ſo the luſt of Magnutza, a Mooriſh Vice-roy, occaſioned (though in long courſe of time) their expulſion thence. For Magnutza having employed Pelagius a young Prince of the Aſturias, on an Embaſſie to Muſa, the Lievtenant Generall of the Moors, then reſiding at Corduba; in his abſence raviſhed his Siſter, and at his return dyed by the edge of his ſword. Deſpairing of pardon for this Act, he was fain to ſtand upon his Guard, and fortifie himſelf in the mountainous places of this Countrey; to which many of the old Inhabitants reſorted, put themſelves under his command, and elected him to be their King: firſt by the name of King of the Aſturias, and after by the title of King of Leon, when he had got that City into his hands; as being the City of moſt note, and the ſtrongeſt hold that he was poſſeſſed of. The Kingdome at the firſt beginning, contained only the more mountainous parts of the two Aſturias; enlarged a little further South on the taking of Leon by this firſt Pelagius. Afterwards by the valour of Ordogno the 2d, it extended over both Aſturias, Gallicia, and the old Caſtile: divided from the Moors by the Mountains of Avila, and Segovia; but more defended by the valour of the people, and Gallantry of their Princes, than it was by thoſe Mountains. Kings of moſt note, beſides the two before remembred, were 1 Mauregate, the baſe Sonne of Alfonſo the firſt, who having by the help of Abderamen King of the Moors obtained the Kingdome, came to a baſe agreement with them, in which he bound himſelf to pay them as an yeerly tribute 50 Virgins of noble Families, and as many of inferior birth; for which he dyed hated and deteſted of all men. 2 Raymir the firſt, who ſo diſcomfited the Moors at the battell of Clavigio, neer Calahorra, in Navarre, An. 836. that from that time the power and reputation of the Kings of Corduba began to languiſh. 3 Alfonſo the 3d, who refuſed to pay unto the Moors the ſaid tribute of Virgins; and for his many victories againſt the Moors, was ſurnamed the Great: who being outed of his Kingdome by his Sonne Garcia, not only patiently digeſted ſo great a wrong; but willingly became his Sonnes Lievtenant againſt the Moors. 4 Veramund the 2d, choſen King in the minority of Raymir the 3d, in whoſe time the Moors took Leon, and ſpoyled the Church of S. James in Gallicia; but were after beaten to their homes, with the loſſe of many of their own places. 5 Veramund the 3d, who making war againſt Ferdinand the firſt King of Caſtile, was by him ſlain in battel; the Conquerour ſeizing on his Kingdom, in right of Sancha, his Wife, the Siſter of Veramund; the three Kings next ſucceeding being Kings of both. 6 Ferdinand the 3d, Son of Alphonſo the 9th, and of Berengaria the younger Siſter of Henry King of Caſtile; by the power and policy of his Mother, ſeized on the Caſtiles, of right belonging to Blanch the elder Siſter, Wife of Lewis Sonne to Philip the 2d, King of France: and after the death of his Father; ſucceeded in Leon. Of whom we ſhall hear more when we come to Caſtile. After this time theſe Kingdoms never were divided; but incorporate into one Eſtate, called for long time the Kingdom of Caſtile and Leon: though afterwards Leon was left out of the Regall ſtyle; and only that of Caſtile mentioned; except in Legal Inſtruments, Letters Patents, and Inſtruments of Negotiation with forain Princes. The whole ſucceſſion of theſe Kings, the Hiſtories of Spain thus preſent unto us.

The Kings of Oviedo and Leon.

Siſter of Henry of Caſtile, by the power and practiſes of his Mother ſucceeded in the Realm of Caſtile, whileſt his Father lived, Anno 1217. to the prejudice of Blanch her elder Siſter, maried to Lewis the eighth of France, by whom ſhe had Lewis the ninth, and other children. Which Lewis the ninth on the mariage of Blanch his eldeſt daughter, with Ferdinand, the eldeſt Son of Alfonſo the fifth, ſurrendred all rights in the Crown of Caſtile, and ſo confirmed the ſame more abſolutely to the houſe of Leon, Anno 1267. though neither this Ferdinand nor Blanche, nor any of their Heirs did attain that Kingdom; diſſeized thereof by Sancho a younger Son. The Kingdoms never ſince that time disjoyned, as they had been twice before ſince the firſt uniting. Gallicia.

The Armes of this Kingdom are Argent, a Lion Paſſant, crowned Or. Which Armes when it was joyned to the Kingdom of Caſtile, were quartered with the Coat thereof: that being the firſt time, (as Camden notes) that ever Armes were born Quartered. Followed herein by Edward the third of England, who not only took unto himſelf the title of King of France, but (to ſhew his right unto that Crown) quartered the Flower de Lices, with his Engliſh Lions.

GALLICIA, or GALLÆCIA, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Aſturias, from which parted by the River Mearo; on the South, with Portugal, from which divided by the River Minio; on the North, with the Cantabrian; and on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Oceans. The ancient Inhabitants of it were the Gallaici, (whence it had the name) diſtinguiſhed into the ſeveral Tribes of the Bedyi, Sueri, Cilini, Capori, and Lemavi, ſpoken of by Ptolemie.

The Countrey like that of the Aſturias, mountainous and almoſt inacceſſible, overſpread with the Cantabrian hils; and ſo the fitter to hold out againſt forein invaſions, in defence of Liberty and Religion; in that regard choſen for a retiring place by the diſtreſſed and vanquiſhed Chriſtians, in their firſt wars againſt the Moores. Not well inhabited to this day, not ſo much for the hillineſs of the Countrey, as for want of Water; which defect makes the people generally draw more towards the Sea, where they improve their fortunes by trade, and fiſhing. The barrenneſs of the Countrey recompenſed heretofore by the rich mines of Gold and Silver; which in this Countrey, and the Aſtures, and ſome part of Luſitania, afforded yearly 20000 pound weight of Gold unto the Romans, amounting in our money to two millions of Crowns; but now no mines found in it of any value. In ſtead of which, it yeeldeth the beſt mines for Iron, of any Province of Spain, for which their Waters are ſo proper, that they are ſaid to fortifie and improve the metal.

Places of principal importance are, 1 Compoſtella, an Univerſity and Archbiſhops See, vulgarly called St. Jago, in honour of St. James, the Son of Zebedee, whom they pretend to be buried here; and of whom there is denominated an Order of Knights: his Relicks ſaid to be kept in the chief Church of it, worſhiped by the Romaniſts with great devotion; and drawing to this place a wonderful concourſe of people, coming thither on pilgrimage. 2 Baiona, not far from the mouth of the River Minio. 3 Corunna, by Ptolemie called Flavium Brigantium, by us Engliſh, the Groyn; often mentioned in the ſtory of our Wars with the Spaniard, in Q. Elizabeths time; then taken by the Engliſh, but ſince very well fortified to avoid the like ſurpriſal. Divided then as now, into the High Town, and the Low: ſituate on the Cantabrian Sea betwixt the Promontory Trilencum, now Cabo Ortegal, lying towards the Eaſt; and that of old called Nerium, now Cabo Finis terre, as being the moſt Weſtern end of the then known World. 4 Oreus, upon the Minia, a Biſhops See, by Ptolemy called Aquæ Calidæ from the Bathes here being; now much commanded for the beſt Wines. 5 Tui, on the River, frontiring upon Portugal; a Biſhops See, in ancient Writers called Tude. 6 Ponte-vedre, 7 Ribadeo, both upon the ſea, both fitted with convenient Harbours.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, as before is ſaid, were the Gallaici, one of the laſt Nations which ſubmitted to the power of the Romans: by whom firſt made a part of Tarraconenſis, after a Province of it ſelf, by the name of Gallicia; the Aſturias, and ſome part of the Old Caſtile and Portugal, being added to it. In the declining of that Empire, the Suevi a potent Nation of Germanie, accompanying the Vandals and Alani in their tranſmigrations, invaded Spain, and firſt poſſeſſed themſelves of this Countrey. But not content with their Eſtate, they warred on the Silinges (a Vandal-tribe) then poſſeſſing Bætica; whom they vanquiſhed, and took that Province from them, under the conduct of Rechila their ſecond King. They added ſhortly after, Luſitania, to their former conqueſts: ſtopped in their careere, by Theodorick the ſecond, King of the Gothes, by whom vanquiſhed, and confined again within Gallicia; which they enjoyed, till the final ruine of their Kingdom by Leutigild the Goth, Anno 858. reduced then to a Province of the Gothiſh Kingdom. Their habitation before their coming into Spain, was in the Eaſtern part of Germany, beyond the Elb. Their Religion at the firſt, under Recciarius their third King, was very Orthodox, and ſound. But vanquiſhed by the Gothes, and obliged unto them for the reſtoring of their Kingdom, they fell off to Arianiſm: perſiſting in that Hereſie for the ſpace of an hundred years, and then again returning to the Catholick Faith, under Theodomire their King; therein continuing conſtant till their finall overthrow. The Kings hereof (as many as are upon Record) are theſe that follow.

The

The Kings of the Suevi in Gallicia.

1 Hermenericus, who firſt brought the Suevians into Spain, and poſſeſſed Gallicia, Arcadius and Honorius then Emperors of the Eaſt and Weſt.
2 Rechila, who conquered the Silinges, and ſubdued Bætica.
3 Recciarius, the firſt Chriſtian King, who won Luſitania; afterwards vanquiſhed and ſlain by Theodorick King of the Gothes, the Suevians for a time becoming ſubject to that King.
4 Maſdras, reſtored unto the Kingdom by Theodorick.
5 Frumarius, the Son of Maſdras.
6 Remiſmundus, Brother of Frumarius, recovered ſome part of Luſitania, and fell off to Arianiſm.
7 Theodomirus, the Reſtorer of the Catholick Faith amongſt the Suevians.
8 Ariamirus, Son to Theodomire.
9 Ebericus, the Son of Ariamirus, depoſed and ſhorn Monk by Andeca.
10 Andeca, the laſt King of the Suevii in Gallicia, or rather the Uſerper of the Regall title; ſerved in the ſame kinde by Leutigildis King of the Gothes, as he had ſerved Ebericus his Lord and Maſter. After which time Gallicia was made a Province of the Gothiſh Monarchy, and the name of Suevians no more heard of in Spain. In times enſuing it became a part of the Kingdom of Leon, by the Kings whereof it was won piece-meal from the Moores, as their fortunes favoured them. Erected to a Kingdom by Alphonſo the third, ſurnamed the Great, Anno 886. and given unto Ordogno his ſecond Son: by whoſe Succeſſion to the Crown on the death of his elder brother Garcia, it was again united to the Kingdom of Leon, but ſo as to continue a Realm diſtinct. In the year 955. the Gallicians not brooking the ill qualities of Raimir the third, elected Veramund for their King, the Son of Ordogno, the third and right heir of the Kingdom: who coming to the Crown of Leon on the death of Raymir, did once again unite it unto that Eſtate. Diſmembred from it once more by Ferdinand the firſt King of Caſtile and Leon, who gave it unto Garcia his youngeſt Son, Anno 1067. but conquered ſhortly after by Sancho the eldeſt Son of Ferdinand, by whom Garcia was diſcomfited and impriſoned, Anno 1081. Never ſince ſeparated from the Crown of Caſtile and Leon, but when Leon was ſevered from Caſtile; going along with Leon in thoſe ſeparations, till the laſt union of thoſe Kingdoms in the perſon of Ferdinand the ſecond, Anno 1230. the Caſtilians being then grown better Stateſmen, than to canton Kingdoms.

The Armes hereof were Azure, ſemee of Croſſets Fitchee, a Chalice crowned Or.

6. The Kingdom of CORDUBA.

HAving thus ſurveyed thoſe Provinces under the Government of Caſtile, which lye at the foot of the Pyrenes, and on the ſhores of the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean; we will next look on thoſe which lye more toward the Straights of Gibraltar, and the Mediterranean. And ſo come round at laſt to Caſtile it ſelf. And firſt we will begin with the Kingdome of CORDUBA, which at the firſt erection of it, contained all thoſe parts of Spain conquered by the Moores, and not again recovered by the Kings of Leon and Navarre: contracted within narrower bounds when ſubdued by the King of Caſtile; at that time comprehending only the Provinces of Andaluſia, Extremadura, Granada, and the Iſle of Gades. We will conſider it notwithſtanding in both capacities; in the firſt and largeſt notion, as unto the ſtory and affairs thereof, till diſtracted by the Moores into many Kingdoms; in the laſt and ſtricteſt, as to the Chorographie, and Deſcription of it.

The Kingdom of CORDUBA, as it ſtood when ſubdued by the Spaniards, was bounded on the Eaſt with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the Weſt, with Portugal and the Ocean; on the North, with the Mountains of Sierra Morena, and Caſtile; and on the South, with the Ocean, the ſtraights of Gibraltar, and the Midland Seas: ſo called from Corduba the chief City of it and the Seat Royal of their Kings.

It contained, as before was ſaid, the Provinces of 1 Andaluſia. 2 Gades. 3 Extremadura, and 4 Granada. But becauſe Granada had the fortune to continue a Kingdom, when the reſt were conquered, we will conſider it by it ſelf: and here proceed to the deſcription of the other three.

1 ANDALUSIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Granada; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Ocean, and Algarve, in Portugal; on the North, with Sierra Morena, and Extremadura; on the South, with the Ocean, the Straights, and the Mediterranean. By Pliny it is called Conventus Cordubenſis, from Corduba, at that time the chief City of it: and after, Andaluſia, quaſi Vandaluſia from the Vandals, who having won it from the Romans, had for ſome time, (and till their expulſion into Africa) poſſeſſed themſelves of it.

This is the moſt rich and fertile Countrey of all Spain, extremely fruitful of Wine, Oyl, and Orenges (which laſt being ſhipped at Sevil, and ſo brought for England, are by us called by the name of Sevil Orenges) and better furniſhed with corn then moſt part of this continent; watered with the Rivers 1 Anas, 2 Odier, 3 Bætis, and 4 Tenos: which makes it flouriſh with a continual greenneſs of Olives, Vines, and other Fruits; of which the Hils, though watered only with the dew of Heaven, do partake alſo in reaſon meaſure. The Air hereof, by ſome of its Southernly ſituation, is exceeding hot, in ſo much that their Corn there is ripe in April: but thoſe exceſſive heats much moderated by thoſe conſtant refreſhings which the cool winds breathing from the North, do beſtow upon it. In which reſpect King Ferdinand the Catholick did uſe to ſay, that it was beſt living in the Summer at Sevil, (one of the chief Cities of this Province) by reaſon of theſe cool refreſhings; and in the winter time at Burgos in old Caſtile, which though ſituate more Northernly, in a very ſharp air, had yet many notable defences againſt the cold. Corduba.

The Principal Cities and Towns hereof are, 1 Corduba, ſeated at the foot of Sierra Morena, on the left ſhore of Guadalquiver, over-looking towards the South, a ſpacious and fruitful Plain. Firſt founded by Marcellus a Roman Conſul, Ann. V. C. 601. employed at that time in the wars of Spain: the firſt Colony planted in this Province by the Romans, and the chief City of Bætica. For a long time the ſeat of the Mooriſh Vice-Royes, Lieutenants to the great Caliph of the Saracens; after of its own Kings of that Nation, who built here for their Palace a magnificent Caſtle. Reduced by Ferdinand of Caſtile, it was reſtored unto the honour of an Epiſcopal See, which anciently it had, and doth now enjoy. A City of great Circuit, but of very few houſes, by reaſon of the multitude of Gardens in it. Famous in former times for the birth of Lucan, and both the Seneca's.

Duoſque Senecas, unicumque Lucanum
Fœcunda loquitur Corduba: ſaith Martial.

Corduba glorying in her fruitful field,
One Lucan, and two Seneca's did yeeld.

Nor was it leſs fruitfull of good wits in the times ſucceeding. For not to ſay any thing of Hoſius that renowned Confeſſor, who was Biſhop here in the time of Conſtantine and before; it was a flouriſhing Univerſity in the time of the Moores: Avicen, Averroes, Rhaſis, Almanſor, Meſſahalah, thoſe famous Philoſophers and Phyſicians being Students or Profeſſors in it. It is now vulgarly called Cordova; and hence cometh our true Cordovan leather, made of the skin of a Sardinian beaſt. Near unto this City is a wood of 30 miles in length, having nothing but Olive trees. 2 Iaen, a Biſhops See, remarkable for nothing more, than that the Kings of Spain, ever ſince the firſt Recovery of it, have ſtiled themſelves Kings of Iaen; and uſe it to this day amongſt the reſt of their Titles; it having been before that time, the ſeat and title of ſome petit Kings amongſt the Moores. Not far hence ſtood the famous Town of Illiturgis, (by Ptolemy Illurgis) mentioned ſo often in the wars betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3 Oſſuna, of moſt note for the Dukes hereof, and a ſmall Univerſity founded here, Anno 1549. 4 Eccia, on the River Chenil, of more eſteem formerly than at the preſent; by Ptolemy and Antoninus called Aſtygi, by Pliny, Auguſta Firma; a Roman Colony, and one of the four Juridical Reſorts of Bætica. 5 Marchena, ſituate on an Hill, where is ſaid to be the beſt breed of Gennets (a ſwift race of Horſes) not of this Province alone, but of all Spain; the River Bætis (as it was thought) conveying ſome ſecret virtue into them. Of this race was the Horſe which Cæſar ſo loved, that he erected his ſtatue (when dead) in the Temple of Venus: and the ancient Luſitani thought they were begotten by the wind. 6 Xeres, ſituate more within the Mid-lands, towards the borders of Granada, and therefore called Xeres de la Frontera, (the Aſta of Ptolemy and Antoninus) famous for plenty of that wine, which we call Xeres Sack; but more for that great and fatal battel fought near unto it, betwixt K. Roderick and the Moores, the loſs of which drew along with it the loſs of Spain. 7 Medina Sidonia (ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from a Town of Caſtile, called Medina Cœli); the Duke whereof was General of all the Forces, both by Sea and Land, intended for the Conqueſt of England, Anno 1588. The Town called anciently Aſinda, and Aſido Cæſariana: the Duke whereof is of the Family of the Guzmans, and the greateſt Prince for Revenue in all Spain, his Intrado being eſtimated at 130000 Crowns per annum. 8 Algezire, on the Sea ſide, a Town of ſuch ſtrength and conſequence, that it held out a ſiege of 19 moneths for the Moores of Africk, againſt Alfonſo the 5 of Caſtile; to whom ſurrendred at the laſt upon Compoſition, Anno 1343. Since which the Kings of Caſtile have ſtiled themſelves Kings of Algezire; not yet diſcontinued. 9 Conil, a Town on the ſea-coaſt, beyond the Iſle of Gades, part of the Patrimony of the D. of Medina Sidonia. 10 Gibraltar, a ſtrong Town ſeated at the mouth of the Straights from hence denominated, lying at the foot of the mountain of Calpe, ſuppoſed to be one of Hercules Pillars; the furtheſt point Southwards of all Europe. 11 S. Lucar de Barameda (the Luciferi farum of the Ancients) the Port-Town to Sevill, ſituate at the mouth of the River Bætis, or Guadalquivir: where the Ships of that rich City ride, either for a Wind to put to Sea; or for a tide to carry them up the River, as they come from America. 11 Tariffa, ſeated at the end of the Promontory, which looks toward Africk; and ſo called, becauſe Tariff, Leader of the Moores into Spain, here landed: recovered from the Moores by Sancho the third of Caſtile, Anno 1291, or thereabouts; the firſt Governor thereof being Alfonſo Peres de Guzman, the firſt Founder of the now potent Family of Medina Sidonia. Suppoſed by ſome to be the Carteia of the Ancients. And if ſo, then a Colony of the Libertines (begotten on ſome unmaried Spaniſh women by the Roman Souldiers) placed here and indulged the priviledges of the Latines, by Decree of the Senate, Ann. V. C. 600. Not far from theſe laſt Towns, in a little Iſland made by two branches of the Bætis, where it falleth into the Sea, ſtood the famous 13 Tarteſſus, celebrated in moſt ancient Writers for the abundance of ſilver, which the mines of it did produce. Which was ſo great, that (as we read in Ariſtotle's Book de Mirabilibus) when the Tyrians or Phœnicians firſt came thither, ὥστε μηκέτι ἔχειν σιδήρου, μήτε ὁπλίζειν τὴν ἄργυρον, that their

ſhips

Gades. ſhips were neither able to contain it, or tranſport it thence: inſomuch that they were fain to make their Anchors, and other Utenſils, of Silver. The like commodity the Grecians found in their Voyages hither, of which Herodotus maketh mention Lib. IV. Hereupon ſome have been perſwaded that the ſhips which Solomon built to go for Tarſhiſh (whereof we read 1 King. 10. 22.) were bound no further than this place. But we will not enter at this time upon that diſpute. As for the ſituation of it, that it was neither Tariff, as ſome, or Carteia, as others do conjecture; (though where Carteia was be alike uncertain, if it were not the ſame with Tariff) but in a ſmall Iſland at the mouth of the River Bætis, as before is ſaid; doth appear by Strabo. Who telleth us that Bætis fals into the Sea with two mouthes or channels, πόλιν ἐν τῷ μεταξὺ χώρῳ κατοικεῖσθαι, ἣν καλεῖσθαι Τάρτησσον, &c. and that in the midſt thereof there is a City called Tarteſſus, of the ſame name with the River (for Bætis anciently was ſo named) from whence the whole Countrey thereabouts is called Tarteſſis. The like Pauſanias ſaith expreſly in his Eliaca. Which ſituation of this Town in an Iſland, at the mouth of Bætis, occaſioned Pliny and ſome others of the ancient Writers, to give the name of Tarteſſus to the Iſle of Gades; whereof more anon.

In the mean time go we on to 14 Sevil, (in Latine, Hiſpalis) the faireſt City, not only of Andaluzia, but of all Spain. It is in compaſs ſix miles, divided into the parts by two River Bætis, but joyned together by a ſtrong and beautiful Bridge; the whole environed with beautiful wals, and adorned with many magnificent and ſtately buildings, as Palaces, Churches, and Monaſteries: amongſt which, that of the Gertoſins, or Carthuſians, is endowed with 25000 Crowns of yearly revenue. It is alſo the See of an Archbiſhop, under whoſe Juriſdiction are ſaid to be 20000 Villages; and a moſt flouriſhing Univerſity, wherein ſtudied Avicen the Moore, that excellent and learned Scholar, Pope Sylveſter the ſecond, and Leander, who was Archbiſhop hereof, about the year 580. a ſtout defender of the Catholick tendries of the Church againſt the Arians. The univerſity adorned with one of the greateſt and goodlieſt Libraries in the Chriſtian world; furniſhed by Diego, the Son of Chriſtopher Columbus, the firſt founder of it, with no fewer than 12000 Volumes, in ſeveral Languages, gathered together with extraordinary charge and care; and endowed with a very fair Revenue for the maintenance and inlargement of it. Famous in former times for two Provincial Councels holden here, the firſt Anno 584, the laſt Anno 636, and at the preſent, for that here are continually maintained 30000 Gennets for the ſervice of the King; but moſt of all for the great traffique of the place. For from this Town the Caſtilians ſet forwards towards America, and here they do diſcharge the Fleets of Gold and Silver, which they bring from thence. To this Town come the Pearls of Cubagna, and the Emeralds of S. Martha, the Cochineile of Mexico, the Corals of Hiſpaniola; and in a word, the whole treaſure of the New-found-World. He is the publick Emporie of all Spain, for her Wines, Orenges, and Oyles; ſent from hence in ſo great abundance into all parts of Europe, that the People uſe to ſay in the way of a By-word, That if there enter not into Sevill 4000 Pipes of Wine every day in the year, the Farmer of the Cuſtomes is ſure to break: inſomuch as the Reveaue coming out of this City only, are worth a very good Realm to the Catholick King; Maginus reckoning it at no leſs than a Million of Crowns yearly. Laſtly, here reſteth the body of Chriſtopher Columbus, the fortunate diſcoverer of the New-world, with a Latine Epitaph upon his Tomb; but ſhort (God knoweth) of the great merit of the Man: of which more hereafter.

As for the fortunes of this City as they relate to Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual matters, it hath been long the See of an Archbiſhop (as before is ſaid) next in revenue and degree unto him of Toledo; his revenue eſtimated at 100000 Crowns per annum, his Juriſdiction reaching over all Andaluſia and the fortunate Iſlands, in which are ſaid to be contained 20000 Villages; the very Dioceſes of which being ſaid to comprehend 2000 Benefices, beſides Frieries, Nunneries, and Hoſpitals, which may make the former computation of the Villages ſubject to his power as a Metropolitan of more eaſie credit. Yet not ſo much conſiderable for its wealth and revenue, as for being once the See of Iſidore, ſo much renowned (conſidering the times he lived in) for the Univerſality of his learning, who was Biſhop here, called uſually Iſidorus Hiſpalenſis, to diſtinguiſh him from another of that name in Egypt, called Peluſiota. As for the civil fortunes of it in the declining of the Moores, when their Eſtate was broken into many Realms and Principalities, it became a Kingdome of it ſelf under a noble Moor named Allcorrexi, Anno 966. one of the Kings whereof called Almuneanuz, was of ſo great power, that he had the Regal City of Corduba, and the greateſt part of Andaluſia under his command, made ſubject with the reſt of the Moores in Spain, to the Miramomolines of Morocco, Anno 1091, till the retreat of Mahomet Enaſer unto Africk, Anno 1214. After which once more made a Kingdom in the perſon of Abeulable a great Prince of the Moores, but no longer continuing in that Royal dignity and eſtate, than till the year 1248. when taken and ſubdued by Ferdinand the ſecond of Caſtile; and made a part of his Eſtates; but ſo, that it remaineth a Realm diſtinct in the Regal ſtile, in which the Kings of Spain are called Kings of Sevill.

2 South of Andaluſia, at the mouth of Guadalquiver, ſtands the Iſle of GADES, diſtant from the main land 700 paces, and joyned unto it with a Bridge called Puento de Suaco. It is in length 13 miles, of a very fruitful ſoyl; beſides the riches which it gets by Fiſhing, and making of Salt. Firſt peopled by the Tyrians 562 years before the Birth of CHRIST; ſubdued by the Carthaginians, Ann. V. C. 236, being invited by the Tyrians to aid them in a defenſive War againſt the Spaniards: and was the laſt hold which the Carthaginians had in Spain, out of which beaten by the valour and good fortune of Scipio Africanus. Here ſtood in ancient times a Temple conſecrated to the honour of Hercules; in which all Seafaring men (at their being here) uſed to pay their vowes, and offer ſacrifice, as being arrived at the furtheſt parts of all the World.

Places of moſt importance in it, are, 1 Porto Real, a fair and capacious Haven, between the Town of Cadiz, and the main Land of Andaluſia. 2 Santa Maria, another Port more towards the North. 3 Cadis, or Gades the chief Town of the Iſland, and giving name unto the whole. Situate in the Weſtern part of the whole Iſle, on a large Bay ſerving as a Road for the Indian Fleet, by the reſort and trade whereof it is much enriched. Firſt founded by the Tyrians, afterwards made a Municipal City by the Romans, and one of the Juridical Reſorts for the Province of Bætica: in whoſe times it was held to be the nobleſt and richeſt in all Spain, not yeelding to any in the Empire for greatneſs, magnificence, or number of Inhabitants of account and quality. Inſomuch that here lived at one time 500 Roman Knights, which number was not equalled in any one place, except Padua only: beſides the great concourſe of Merchants from all parts of the World. Which great reſort, occaſioned Cornelius Balbus, a Native of it, to adde a new Town to the old; the whole circumference of both being 20 furlongs. By the Moores at their conqueſt of Spain, it was utterly ruined; but ſince repaired, well fortified, and made the Magazin for the Ammunition of the Spaniſh Navies. Taken notwithſtanding in one day by the Engliſh, under the conduct of Charles Lord Effingham, Robert Earl of Eſſex, and Sir Walter Ralegh: in which they burned the Indian Fleet, conſiſting of 40 ſhips, whoſe lading was worth 8 Millions of Crowns; overcame the Spaniſh Navie, conſiſting of 57 Men of War; took the St. Michael, and the St. Andrew, two great Gallcons, with their luggage; ſpoyled and carried away more martial furniture, than could be ſupplyed in many years; and forced the Town, in which they ſlew and took Priſoners 4000 Foot and 600 horſe, and brought thence a very great booty in the ſackage of it, Anno 1596. The fortunacy of which enterpriſe gave occaſion to one of the Wits then living, to frame this excellent Anagram on the name of the Earl of Eſſex, (who was looked on as the greateſt Adventurer in it) viz. Devereux, Vere dux. Which he afterwards caſt into this Diſtich: Gades.

Thy Beauties (Cales) but Devereux conquer'd thee.

Neer to this Iſle, is that ſo celebrated Straight called by ſome Fretum Gaditanum, from the nearneſs of it to this Iſland; by others, Fretum Herculeum, not becauſe Hercules did there break out a paſſage to let the Ocean into the Mediterranean, as the Poets fabled; but becauſe of the two Pillars which he cauſed to be erected on each ſide of it, with the inſcription of Nil Ultra, this being ſuppoſed to be the furtheſt Countrey Weſtward. But when that ſuppoſition was proved untrue by the diſcovery of America, Charles the fifth being in thoſe parts, cauſed two new pillars to be placed where the old ones ſtood, or rather where he thought they ſtood, and Plus ultra to be written on them. As for thoſe Pillars ſo much memorized in the ancient Writers, ſome place them in the Temple of Hercules, within this Iſland; others on the Promontory of Calpe in Spain, and that of Abila in Africk; and ſome again in two little Iſlands near thoſe Promontories. This therefore being a matter doubtful, and not worth the looking after, let us return unto the Straight; called now the Straight of Gibraltar, from the Town and Caſtle of Gibraltar, ſituate on the brink hereof; the Straight being in length 15 miles, and in breadth, where it is narroweſt, ſeven.

EXTREMADURA hath on the Eaſt and North Caſtile; on the Weſt, Portugal; and on the South, Andaluſia. It was firſt called Bæturia, from the River Bætis, which runneth through it; and for diſtinction ſake, Bæturia Celtica, from the Celtici, then the Inhabitants of this Tract: to difference it from Bæturia Turdulorum, containing thoſe parts of Granada, and Andaluſia, which lye neareſt unto Tarraconenſis. And when firſt it had the name of Extremadura, it was of larger extent than now it is, reaching unto the banks of the River Duero, the bounds at that time of the Kingdom of the Moriſcos; ſo called by the Chriſtians, as lying on the extremities, or furtheſt ſide of that River.

Principal places in it, are, 1 Alcantara, on the banks of the River Tagus, ſituate near the ruines of Norba Cæſarea, deſtroyed by Petronius and Afranius, two of Pompey's Captains, for adhering faithfully to Cæſar: now of moſt note for an Order of Knights here ſeated, and from hence denominated; whereof more hereafter. 2 Guadalcanal, famous for its Mines of Silver and Gold. 3 Merida, ſituate alſo on the Tagus, firſt called Auguſta Emerita, founded and made a Colony by Auguſtus Cæſar, who placed herein his old Souldiers, whom the Romans called Emeriti; hence it had the name. The chief City after that of Luſitania, and by Auſonius preferred before any in Spain; now ruinous, meanly built, and but ill inhabited: Famous for nothing but the Bridge upon the River Tagus, a Monument of the Roman greatneſs. Nigh to this Town was fought that memorable battel betwixt Wallia, the firſt King of the Gothes in Spain, and Atace King of the Alani and Silinges (this laſt a people of the Vandals): the victory whereof falling to the Gothes, cauſed the whole Nation of the Vandals to draw forth out of Spain. 4 Medelino, neer which the River Guadiana hideth it ſelf under the ground, for the ſpace of 10 leagues; but more famous for the birth of Ferdinand Cortez, the fortunate Diſcoverer and Conqueror of the Realm of Mexico. 5 Badaios, a Biſhops See on the borders of Portugal. 6 Guadalupe, on a River of the ſame name, renowned amongſt thoſe of the Church of Rome, for the miracles and Image of our Lady of Guadalupe; as much reſorted to in Spain, as our Lady of Loretto is in Italy. 7 Placenza, a Biſhops See, near the Hils of Caſtile; amongſt which hils (by reaſon of their ſtrength and ſafety) Sertorius made his laſt retreat, when perſecuted by the Romans of the contrary faction, and where he was moſt wickedly ſlain by Perpenna and ſome other of his own aſſociates: not far from whence, if it be not in the ſelf-ſame place, in a retired and ſolitary valley ſtandeth the Monaſtery of S. Juſtus, remarkable for a greater

Miracle,

Extremadura.

Miracle, than any the Lady of Guadalupe is able to boast of: which is, that Charles the fifth, that most puissant Monarch, having resigned his Empire to his Brother Ferdinand, and all the rest of his Dominions to his Son Philip the second, did here bid farewell unto the World; spending the residue of his time in prayers and devout Meditations. The greatest Monument and example of Self-denial which these later Ages have afforded. Far beyond any abnegation of the World by our cloystered Monks; or any quitting of their Crowns by some Kings and Emperors in the darker Ages of the Church; who living in the time of Ignorance and Superstition, saw not so clearly what they did (or did it out of weakness, and want of spirit); as this Masculine and Heroick Emperor.

The old Inhabitants of these Countreys, were the Turduli, the Bastuli, and the Turditani, of Andalusia, and Granada; the Celtici, and some part of the Lusitani, in Extremadura; all vanquished by the Romans, during the second Punick war, under the fortunate command of Scipio African. From them extorted by the Vandals, who passing over into Africk left it to the Suevians; lost by them to Theodorick the fourth King of the Gothes, who hereby added all Bætica to his other Dominions. Under the Gothes it remained subject till their fatall overthrow by the Moores, who having made almost an entire Conquest of all the Continent of Spain, were at first subject to the Great Caliphs, Lords of the Saracenical Empire; governing here by their Lieutenants, from Ulidor Ubit, under whom they first made this Conquest, Anno 714, to Abdalla of the House of Alaveci, Anno 757. At what time Abderamen, of the Line of Mahomet the Impostor, and first Emperor of the Saracens, flying the fury of Abdalla, by whom the old Line of the Caliphs, of the Race of Humeia (of which Race this Abderamen was) had been dispossessed of that Empire; came into Spain, and was with great joy entertained by the Spanish Moores, cordially affected to his House: whose Government he took upon him, discharged of all subjection and subordination to the Caliphs, or Mahometan Emperors; and making it an absolute Kingdom of it self. In his Race it continued without any fractions or subdivisions, till the time of Hizen the second, the tenth King of these Spanish Moores: after whose death distracted amongst many petit Tyrants, till they were all brought under by the Moores of Africk; of which more anon. In the mean time take here the Catalogue of the Kings of these Moores of Spain, called commonly from Corduba their Royal Seat

The Kings of Corduba.

939	9	Hali Haten II. Son of Alderamen the 2d.
956	10	Hizen II. Son of Hali Hatan, in the 33 year of his reign deposed for his sloth and negligence, by
989	11	Zuleima an African Moor of the Family of Alaveci; and he expelled by
993	12	Mahomet II. surnamed Almohadi of the old house of Humeia; outed again by Zuleima, and made King of Toledo. Betwixt these three and their several factions, the Kingdom wretchedly torn in pieces, never restored again to its ancient lustre: & finally made a prey to 1007	16	Abderamen IV. a K. of 7 weeks only.

1008	17	Mahomet III. poysoned by his own servants. 1.
1010	18	Hizen III. deposed by the Moores, grown weary of the house of Humeia, of which house he was.
1011	19	Ioar of Algezire. 3.
1014	20	Mahomet IV. the Son of Ioar, the last King of the Moores in Corduba, before the second Conquest of these parts of Spain by the Moors of Africa.

Concerning which we are to know, that after the great Victory obtained at Clavigio, against Abderamen the second, by Raymir King of Leon, Anno 836. in which the Moor lost 60000 of his men; the power and reputation of the Spanish Moores began to decline: brought utterly to nothing, by the sloath and negligence of Hizen the second; after a long and unprofitable reign, deposed by Zuleimea, who succeeded. But the Moores not easily brooking the command of a new Usurper, fell into many Fractions, and Divisions amongst themselves: every great man seizing on some part of the Kingdom, which he retained unto himself with the name of King; from whence we have a King of Sevill, another of Toledo; a third at Valentia; a fourth of Cordova, &c. the names of which last only do occur in the former Catalogue; as they which did pretend a Soveraignty over all the rest. And 'twas a sign the Kingdom was in the expiring, when so many Kings succeeded in so few years, after one another: there passing from the deposing of Hizen the second, to the beginning of Mahomet the fourth, not above 34 years in all; during which time we finde no fewer than 10 Kings. The often change of Princes, and short lives of Kings are the apparent signs of a ruinous State, approaching very near to its expiration;

tion: as may be ſeen by the ſhort lives and reigns of the laſt Weſtern Emperors, nine of them hardly reigning 20 years; as alſo of the Kings of the Gothes in Italie, of which the ſix laſt held the Throne no longer, than the nine Weſtern Emperors had done before them. But to proceed, Mahomet the laſt King of this firſt Rank, having left the ſtage in the thirteenth year of his reign, Anno 1027. we find no good conſtat of his Succeſſors in the Kingdom of Corduba; made inconſiderable by the withdrawing ſo many Provinces from the body of it: the pride and inſolency of which Roytelets and petit Tyrants, forced them at laſt to call unto their aid the Kings or Miramomolines of Morocco; by whom themſelves and all the reſt of their Corrivals, were in fine ſubdued. Under ſeven Princes of Morocco, the Spaniſh Moores continued ſubject about 120 years, that is to ſay from the firſt coming in of Joſeph Telephin the Miramomoline, Anno 1091, unto the going out of Mahomet, ſurnamed the Green, Anno 1214 During which time the affairs of the Moores in Spain were ſo well conducted, that they loſt nothing to the Chriſtians, but Extremadura, taken from them by Alfonſo the ſecond in the accompt of Caſtile, the ſeventh in accompt of Leon, Anno 1147; and the City of Lisbon, taken from them in the ſame year alſo by Alfonſo, the firſt King of Portugal. But Mahomet the Green being vanquiſhed in the great fight at Sierra Morena, by the joynt Forces of the confederated Chriſtians, Anno 1214. left off all further care of the Moores in Spain; after his going thence diſtracted once again into many Kingdoms, almoſt as many as great Towns; all of them ſwallowed up in a little time by the Kings of Caſtile, Aragon, and Portugal. And amongſt them the Kingdom of Corduba, not able to ſtand long on this new foundation, was ruinated and brought under the command of the Caſtilians, by their King Ferdinand the ſecond, Anno 1236. Since that time there is no more mention of the Kingdom of Corduba.

Granada.

The Armes whereof were Or, a Lion Gules, armed and Crowned of the firſt, a Border Azure charged with 8 Towers Argent.

7. GRANADA.

GRANADA is bounded on the Weſt, with Andaluſia; on the Eaſt, with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the North, with New Caſtile; on the South, with the Mediterranean only. So called from Granada, the chief City and Seat Royal of it.

It is in length 200 miles, 100 miles in breadth, and about 700 miles in compaſs: a Kingdom of no great extent, but ſuch as contained in it more fair Towns, ſtrong Fortreſſes, and defenſible Lakes, then the like quantity of ground in the world beſides. The North part of the Countrey plain; the South parts over-ſpread with the Alpuxarras, and other ſpurs and branches of the Oroſpeda. In the time of the Moores wonderfully well inhabited, and full of all ſorts of commodities; the Hils planted with Vines and Fruits, the Plains and Valleys ſwelling with Corn and Gardens: ſince their expulſion, neither much peopled, nor very fruitful, for want of men to dreſs and manure the Land.

The principal Cities of it, are 1 Granada, ſituate on two Hils, divided by a Valley, through which runneth the River Darien; conſiſting of four ſeveral parts, called Alhambre, Sierre de ſol, Granada, and Antequerula: the two firſt ſtanding on the Hils, the two laſt in the Valley; the whole circuit being about ſeven miles, and containing in the time of the Mooriſh Kingdom, about 200000 of ſouls. Fenced with ſtrong wals, fortified with 130 Turrets, and repleniſhed with abundance of wholſom and pleaſant Springs. The Merchants and Gentry of the beſt ſort, do dwell in that part which is called Granada; the houſes of which are for the moſt part built of free ſtone, with delicate and artificial Maſonry, ſhewing great magnificence. Herein ſtandeth the Cathedral Church, a work of admirable ſtructure; of Figure round, as having ſometimes been a Mahometane Moſquit. Here is alſo the place which they call Alcazar, repreſenting a little Town, to which are ten Gates. In the Alhambre is the Palace of the Mooriſh Kings, covered with Gold, indented with Moiſaical work; and which by reaſon of the ſtructure, and multitude of Fountains which are about it, may be put amongſt the Wonders of the World; having withall a goodly proſpect over all the Town, lying under it upon the Eaſt; a ſpacious Champian towards the North, and the ſnowie tops of Sierra Novade towards the South. This City is the ordinary Parliament, and Court of Juſtice for all the Southern parts of Spain; as Valladolit is for the Northern: Madrid, which is the higheſt Court, having juriſdiction over, and receiving Appeals from both. A Town firſt raiſed out of the ruines of Illiberis, ſituate not far off on the hill Elvire, much mentioned in the ſtories of Rome and Carthage. In the two other parts of the Town, there is nothing remarkable, inhabited only by Mechanicks of the poorer ſort. 2 Alhama, ſeated amongſt ſteep and craggie rocks, out of which iſſue Medicinal Waters, occaſioning a great reſort of the Spaniſh Gentry: the firſt Town taken by the Spaniards in their laſt long war againſt the Moores for the recovery of this Kingdom, Anno 1482. and looked on by the Moores as a ſad preſage of a ruinated and expiring Empire. 3 Guadix, an Epiſcopal See, about nine leagues from Granada, 4 Veles Malaga, by Ptolemie called Cex, by Antoninus, Sexicanum) ſituate at the foot of the Mountains called Alpuxarras, a large branch of the Oroſpeda, over-ſpreading a great part of this Countrey; heretofore planted with incredible numbers of Moors, who choſe to dwel there for the ſtrength and ſafety of the ſituation; ſince their expulſion, deſolate and unfrequented, nothing remaining of them now but the Arabick Language; which is ſtill ſpoke by thoſe few people which inhabit in it. The Mountains in this tract ſo high, that from the tops hereof a man may eaſily diſcern the whole courſe of the Straight of Gibraltar, together with the Towns of Ceuta, and Tangier, in Africk. 5 Ronda, at the foot of another branch of the Oroſpeda, called from this Town, Sierra de Ronda.

Granada. Ronda. Not far from which, by Munda, now a very ſmall Village, was fought that memorable battel betwixt Cæſar and the Sons of Pompey, the honour of which fell to Cæſar, who then made an end of the Civil Wars, which that very day four years before, were begun by Pompey the Father. In this fight was Cn. Pompeius ſlain, and his Forces broken: Cæſar himſelf being ſo put to it, that ſeeing his Souldiers give back, he was fain to maintain the fight by his own great courage, bidding them remember, that at Munda they forſook their General. The ſhame of which reproach, and his noble example, encouraged them to a new onſet, which was honoured with a ſignal and remarkable Victory: this being the laſt fight that Cæſar was in, murdered not long after in the Senate-houſe. And of this fight he uſed to ſay, That in all other places he fought for his honour, but in this for his life. 6 Antiquera, heretofore a well-fortified Town, bordering cloſe upon Caſtile. 7 Maxacra, on the ſhore of the Mediterranean, ſuppoſed to be the Margis of Ptolemie. 8 Vera, on the ſame ſhore, the furtheſt Town of Bætica, and of this Countrey towards Murcia: ſuppoſed to be the Virgao of Plinie, from whence the neighbouring Creek or Bay was called Virgitanus. 9 Loxa, on the River Darion, enjoying a ſituation both ſtrong and pleaſant. 10 Malaga, or Malaca, ſituate at the mouth of Guadalquiver, once ſacked by Craſſus the rich Roman; who flying out of Spain, to avoid the fury of Marius and Cinna, who had ſlain his Father and Unkle, hid himſelf and his Companions in a Cave hereabouts, for eight moneths together: but after hearing of their deaths, iſſued out, and ranſacked, amongſt many other Cities, this Malaga. A Town of great traffick, and much reſort, eſpecially for Raiſins, Almonds, Malaga Sacks: well fortified, and of great importance, as a Town of War; and to the great prejudice of the Moores taken by Ferdinand the Catholick, Anno 1487. the conqueſt of the whole Kingdom of Granada following not long after. It was ſince made a Biſhops See, or reſtored rather to that dignity which it had of old. 11 Almeria, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, the Abdera of Mela; a Colony of the Carthaginians, and anciently a Biſhops See. 12 Carthema, 13 Coin, and 14 Baſa, more within the Land: this laſt the ſtrongeſt Bulwark of the City of Granada, on the North-eaſt whereof it ſtandeth. A place of great ſtrength both by Art and nature, and by the Moores defended with ſo great a gallantry, that it held out a ſiege of ſeven moneths againſt an Army of 13000 Horſe, and 24000 Foot, King Ferdinand the Catholick being there in perſon: and yeelded at the laſt, Decemb. 4. 1489. upon better conditions then any Town had done before it.

As for the fortunes of this Countrey, after the Conqueſt of it by the Moores and Saracens, it was a part or member of the Kingdom of Corduba; and ſo continued till that Kingdom was ſubdued by the Spaniards. But the Moores were too ſtout to yeeld all at once. Having yet ground enough both to ſecure themſelves in, and endow their King: they are reſolved, though they had loſt one Kingdom, to erect another. And therefore Corduba being taken, and that Kingdom ruinated, the Moores, with Mahomet Aben Alhamar their unfortunate, but valiant King, removed themſelves unto Granada, and there renew their ſtrength and Kingdom; which laſted 256 years, under 20 Kings, whoſe names here follow in this Catalogue of

The Kings of Granada.

1377	9	Mahomet Vermeil. 2.	1482	20	Mahomet Boabdelin, the laſt King of the Moores in Spain.

Of all which there is little left upon Record, their whole time being ſpent in defending their borders againſt the encroachments of Caſtile; or elſe in Civil Wars and diſcords amongſt themſelves: in which they were ſo frequent, and ſometimes ſo violent, as if they had no Enemy near them. Mahomet Aben Ezar the fourth King, depoſed by Mahomet Aben Levin; and he again thruſt out by Iſmael the Son of Ferrachen, before he could enjoy the fruits of his treaſon. Mahomet, Son of Iſmael, murdered by his Subjects; Joſeph, the Son of Mahomet ſlain by Mahomet Lagus; and he again depoſed by Mahomet Vermeil; who in the end was miſerably ſlain by Pedro the Cruel of Caſtile, to whom he had fled for help and ſuccour. After this time they ruined and depoſed one another till the end of their Kingdom; the Succeſſor never ſtaying for the death of his Predeceſſor, but violently making way for himſelf to enter on the Government: even Mahomet Boabdelin the laſt King hereof, not having patience to expect the death of his Father; but ſetting him beſides the Throne, as he himſelf was for a time, by Muley Boabdelin his Unkle: and thereby opening a fair Gate for Ferdinand, King of Caſtile and Aragon, to bring in his Forces, to the ſubduing of them all. Such was the fortune of this Kingdome, that as it began under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Caſtile: ſo it ended under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Caſtile alſo. In the firſt year then of this mans Reign did the war begin, or rather in the laſt year year of his Father, who by taking Zahara from the Christians gave the first occasion: and in the tenth year of the war (for so long it lasted) Anno 1492, the Empire of the Moores ended in Spain, by the valour of Ferdinand the Catholick, and Isabel his Wife; after their first entrance into it, more than 760 years. Granada.

Such of them, as after the decay of their Kingdom had a desire to stay in Spain, which had for so long time been their native Countrey, were suffered so to do by the prudent Victors, (fearing a desolation of the Countrey, if they should abandon it); conditioned that they would be Christned. And that they might be known to be as they professed, the Inquisition was established in the City of Granada, consisting of a certain number of Dominican Fryers: who finding any counterfeit, or Apostate Christians, were first gently to reprove and exhort them; and after, if no amendment followed, to inflict such punishment on them as was accustomed in like cases. By the terror of which Inquisition, many professed in shew the Christian Faith. But being Christians only in the outward shew, and practising on all occasions against the State, the Kings of Spain resolved long ago on their Extermination; but never had opportunity to effect it, till the year 1609. At what time Philip the third having made a peace with England, and a truce with Holland; and finding the Moores of Africk so embroyled in wars, that they were not able to disturb him; put that extreme rigour in execution, which had before been thought of in their consultations: 1100000 of them being forced to quit this Countrey, and provide new dwellings; under colour that they went about to free themselves from the Inquisition, and to recover their old Liberty lost so long before.

The Forces which the Kings of Granada in the times of their greatest power were able to raise, were far beyond the Ameasurement and extent of their Kingdom; not above 700 miles in compass, as before is said: but so exceeding populous, and well accommodated with all manner of necessaries, that within two daies space, the King hereof was said to have been able to draw together 50000 Horse and 200000 Foot, for defence of his Kingdome. Turquet reports it so in his Spanish History. But this proved more then they were able to do in their greatest need; when this Kingdom was finally invaded, and at last subdued, by Ferdinand and Isabel Kings of Spain: though possibly by reason of their divisions at that time, some following the party of Mahomet Boabdelin, and others that of his Unkle Muley chosen King against him; they might not joyn together in a common interest for the defence of their Estate. The Armes whereof were Or, a Pomgranat (or apple of Granada) slipped, Vert.

8. MURCIA.

MURCIA is bounded on the West, with Granada: on the East, with Valentia; on the North, with Valentia, and a part of Granada; and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea; so called from Murcia the chief City. In former times esteemed a rich and wealthy Countrey, stored with all sorts of fruits; and so abounding in Silver Mines, that when the Romans were Lords of it, they kept continually four hundred men at work, and received 2500 Drachmas of daily profit; now for the most part barren, and but ill inhabited.

Cities of note there are not many in so small a Countrey. The principal, 1 Murcia, by Ptolemie called Menralia, seated upon the River Segura; a Bishops See, situate in a pleasant and delightful Plain, planted with Pomgranats, and other excellent fruits: from this, the Countrey had the name of the Kingdom of Murcia. 2 Carthagena, or Nova Carthago, first built by Asdrubal of Carthage, the Brother of Annibal, for the better receiving of such aids, both of men and money, as should come from Africa. Situate in a Demi-Island, in the very jawes of the Mediterranean; by which, and by a deep Marish on the West side of it, so impregnably fortified; that if Scipio, afterwards called Africanus, who then lay at the siege thereof, had not been shewed a way over that Marish, at a dead low water, by poor Fishermen of Tarragon, who knew the secret; he had there lost both his time and Honour. Nothing more memorable, in the sackage and spoyl thereof, (though there was found abundance of Armes and Treasure) than the vertue of Scipio, who finding there many Spanish Ladies of great birth, and beauties, left there as Hostages for the Spaniards with the Carthaginians, would not permit any of them to be brought before him; for fear it should betray him to some inconvenience. Being reedified it was made a Roman Colony, and one of the seven Juridical Resorts of Tarraconensis: by Constantine made the chief City of the new Province of Carthaginensis, which was hence denominated: Afterwards twice sacked by the Gothes and Vandals, it lay for a long time buried in its own ruines. And though again new built and peopled, it is still but small; containing at the most but 600 Housholds: and would be utterly abandoned, but for the safety of the place, and the strength thereof, garrison'd, and fortified very strongly by King Philip the second, for fear of surprisal by the Turks; and the security of the Haven (which is withall very large and capacious) coming from a little Island, lying at the mouth thereof; by which assured from tempestuous winds, and the violent ragings of the Sea. Hence the occasion of that Saying of Andreas Doria, Admiral unto Charles the fifth, that there were but three safe Ports in the Mediterranean; that is to say, August, July, and this Carthagena: meaning as I conceive, that those two moneths being commonly free from tempestuous weather, were of as great safety to the Mariners, as this famous Port. 3 Lorca, another Port Town, situate on a Creek more within the Land. 4 Almanca, 5 Sarazal, two strong Towns bordering on Valentia; well fortified, when Murcia and Valentia were in several hands. 6 Cervillan. 8 Alhama. 8 Ric, &c.

Toledo. This Countrey being part of the Province of Carthaginenſis, was by the Alani taken from the Romans, at their firſt entrance into Spain; from them recovered by Wallia, the firſt King of the Gothes, in this part of Europe. Together with the reſt of Spain, it was ſubdued by the Moores of Africk, in the diſtractions of whoſe Empire after the going hence of the Moores of Africk, it was made a diſtinct Kingdom by Aben-Hut, of the race of the Kings of Saragoſſa, who had ſeized upon it, Anno 1228, and for a time was the moſt puiſſant King of the Moores in Spain, commanding over this Countrey, Granada, and a great part of Andaluſia. Invited to a Feaſt, made drunk, and then baſely murdered by Aben Arramin a falſe ſervant of his, Anno 1236. one Aben Hudiel ſeized on the Realm of Murcia, diſturbed in his poſſeſſion by Alboaquis, the laſt King hereof. But he not able to defend himſelf againſt his Competitor, ſurrendred it to Ferdinand the ſecond of Caſtile, whom he put into poſſeſſion of the Fort of Murcia, and many other places of great importance; conditioned, that Alboaquis ſhould enjoy the title of King of Murcia, as long as he lived, under the Soveraignty of Caſtile; and that Ferdinand ſhould enjoy one half of the profits of it. This was in the year 1241, after it had continued in the ſtate of a Kingdom, but 12 years only, united to Caſtile without bloud or trouble, and ſo remains ever ſince.

9. TOLEDO.

THe Kingdom of TOLEDO, ſo called from Toledo the chief City of it, contained once the greateſt part of that Countrey which is now Called New-Caſtile; of which it is now reckoned only for a part or Member. The Countrey lying next unto it was anciently the Seat of the Carpentani; the nature of the ſoyl we ſhall finde elſe-where.

Principal Cities of this Kingdom, 1 Toledo, of great Antiquity, as being taken by Fulvius a Roman Prætor, in the time of Scipio Africanus; and then a City of good note. Pleaſantly ſeated on the Tagus, beautified with many Pieces of rare and excellent Architecture; and fortified with 30 Towers ſtanding on the wals. By reaſon of the ſituation of it in the very midſt almoſt of Spain, it is paſſing well inhabited, as well by the Nobility, who reſide there for pleaſure, and by Scholars, who abide in it for their ſtudies; as by Merchants, who reſort thither for their profit: beſides ſuch Souldiers and their Officers, who are continually garriſoned in it for defence thereof. The private buildings generally are but mean, and ordinary; though by farre more handſom in the inſide than the outſide promiſeth: moſt of them being furniſhed with water from the River Tagus, conveyed into them by the admirable inventions of one James, a native of Cremona in the Dukedom of Millain. The ſtreets narrow, cloſe, hilly, and uneven, exceeding troubleſom to walk or go upon, eſpecially in ſlippery or dirty weather, by reaſon of its ſteep and uneven ſituation on the ſide of a rocky hill: by which, and by the River which almoſt ſurrounds it, it is naturally very ſtrong, and well helped by Art. For that cauſe made the ſeat of the Gothiſh Kings: by one of which called Bamba, ſo repaired and beautified (beſides the addition of a ſtrong Wall for defence of the place) that he is by ſome accounted for the founder of it. For ſo we finde it in theſe old verſes.

Erexit (fautore Deo) Rex inclytus Urbem
Bamba, ſuæ celebrem portendens Gentis honorem.

That is to ſay,

King Bamba (God aſſiſting) rais'd this Town,
Extending to the ancient Gothes renown.

When the Gothes fell, it was in chief eſtimation amongſt the Moores, and by them advanced unto the honour of a Kingdom; whereof more anon: but under both (as it continueth to this day) the See of of an Archbiſhop, who is the Metropolitan of Spain, and Preſident for the moſt part of the Inquiſition. his revenue anſwerable to his place; the greateſt of any Clergy-man in the Chriſtian World, next to the Popes of Rome; as being eſtimated at 300000 Crowns per annum. Finally, this City hath been honoured with no fewer than 18 National Councils, here holden in the time of the Gothes; and is now a famous Univerſity for the ſtudy of the Civil and Canon Lawes, and hath to this day the temporal Juriſdiction over 17 walled Towns, beſides Villages. 2 Calatrava, the next Town of note, is ſituate on the River Ana, of moſt fame in theſe later times for an Order of Knights, called the Knights of Calatrava; of which more when we come to Caſtile. Neighboured by the ruines of a ſtrong and famous City Caſtulo, which being under the command of the Romans, was by the Gyreſoeni, a people that dwelt on the other ſide of the River, ſuddenly entred, and taken. But Sertorius following after them by the ſame Gate, put them all to Sword: and cauſing his men to apparel themſelves in the cloathes of the Enemy, led them to the chief City of the Gyreſoeni; who ſuppoſing them to be their own party, opened their Gates, and were all either ſlain or ſold for ſlaves. More of this Town anon when we come to Caſtile; to which now belonging. 3 Talbora, commonly called Talvera de la Reyna, or the Queens Talvera: and called ſo on occaſion of an execrable murder, committed there by the command of Queen Mary, the Widow of Alfonſo the ſixth, on the Lady Leonore de Guzman, her husbands Paramour. A proper and neat Town it is, pleaſantly ſeated on the Tagus; ſuppoſed to be the Libora of Ptolemy, and now belonging to the Archbiſhop of Toledo, as chief Lord thereof.

thereof. 4 Medina Zelim, commonly called Medina Celi, of great importance when poſſeſſed or neighboured by the Moores. Now of moſt note for giving the title of Dukes to the illuſtrious Family De la Cerde, deſcended from Ferdinand, the eldeſt Son of Alfonſo the fift; claiming by that deſcent a title to the Crown of Caſtile. What other Towns belonged unto it we ſhall ſee anon.

As for Toledo in ſelf, it the time of the Romans it was the Metropolis of the Province of Tarraconenſis; after that the ſeat Royal of the Gothiſh Kings; removed hither from Tholouſe in Languedoc: forced by the Moores at their firſt entrance into Spain, Anno 716. more prudently aiming at the head, than the Gothes poſſibly expected from ſuch Barbarians. In the Confuſions of that Kingdome, betwixt the beginning of the reign of Mahomet the fourth, and the ſecond coming in of the Moores of Africk, made a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf; continuing in that eſtate, till taken from Haia Alcaduchir the laſt King hereof, by Alfonſo the firſt, King of Caſtile, Anno 1083. This Alfonſo being the younger Son of Ferdinand, the firſt King of Caſtile and Leon, had the Kingdom of Leon for his part. Ejected out of that by his Brother Sancho King of Caſtile, he lived in exile with the Moores, kindly received and entertained by Almenon the Father of this Hyaia, King of Toledo, till the death of his Brother. After which coming to the Crowns of Caſtile and Leon, Anno 1073. he picked a quarrel with his Hoſt, and beſieged Toledo; his long abode there making him acquainted with all advantages that might facilitate his deſigns: which notwithſtanding held him a ſiege of five years, before he could make himſelf Maſter of it; by him incorporated preſently on the taking of it, with the reſt of that Kingdom, and made the head of New-Caſtile. But for the Kings hereof, as well thoſe who held it but for life, as thoſe who left the ſame unto their Poſterity, they are theſe that follow.

The Mooriſh Kings reigning in Toledo.

A. Ch.

1 Galafroy, King of Toledo in the time of Charlemaigne, under the Vaſſalage of the great Caliphs of Damaſcus, ſubdued by Abderamen the firſt King or Miramomolin of the Moores in Corduba, of the Houſe of Humeia.

787 2 Zuleima, eldeſt Son of Abderamen King of Corduba, being diſpoſſeſſed of the Realm of Corduba and the reſt of his Eſtates in Spain by Hizen his younger Brother, reigned a while in Toledo; of which outed alſo not long after: Toledo from that time continuing a Member of the Kingdom of Corduba, till the latter end of the reign of Abderamen the ſecond. At what time 833 3 Aben Lope (the Son of Muſa Aben Cacia, a Goth by Nation and deſcent, but a Moor by profeſſion, who had cauſed the Toledans and others of the Moores of Spain to rebell againſt Abderamen) aſſumed unto himſelf the title of King of Toledo: a ſtrict confederate of Ordogno the 11th King of Leon, by whom ſupported in his wars againſt thoſe of Corduba, but at laſt vanquiſhed and diſſeized by Mahomet the Son of Abderamen, Anno 848.

990 4 Abdalla, a great man among the Moores, during the contentions betwixt Zuleima and Hizen the ſecond for the Realm of Corduba, ſeized on the City of Toledo which he held as King: and kindly entertained Mahomet Almohadi, made King of Corduba during thoſe contentions, by whom ſucceeded in this Kingdom.

995 5 Mahomet ſurnamed Almohadi, of the Regal Family of Humeya King of Corduba, and diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the faction of Zuleima, retired to Toledo, and was kindly entertained by King Abdalla, whom he ſucceeded in this Kingdom.

999 6 Obeydalla the Son of Mahomet, ſlain in his wars with Hizen the King of Corduba, in the firſt or ſecond year of his reign.

1010 8 Hizen the Son of Hairan, of whom nothing memorable.

1045 9 Ali Maynon, or Almenon as the Spaniards call him, the Son of Hizen, who entertained Alphonſo the ſixt of Leon, when diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtate by his Brother Sancho.

1076 10 Hizen II. Son of Ali Maymon.

1078 11 Hiaya ſurnamed Alcadarbile, the Son of Ali Mainon and Brother of Hizen, a cruel Prince and ill beloved of his ſubjects; which gave occaſion unto Alphonſo King of Caſtile and Leon ſpoken of before to invade this Kingdom, by whom at laſt it was ſubdued, and Toledo with its Territories added unto Caſtile as before is ſaid, anno 1083. By which means there accrewed to the Realm of Caſtile, beſides Toledo it ſelf, and the Towns ſpoken of already, thoſe of Illeſcus, Eſcallona, Magneda, Canales, Coria, Conſuegra, Berlanga, Guadalaiara, Arienca, and divers others, now paſſing in the eſtimate of New Caſtile.

But to conclude, Toledo thus reduced under the command of the Chriſtians, was forthwith made the Metropolitan City of Spain (in regard of Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual matters) as it had been before in the time of the Gothes: and ſhortly after honoured by Alphonſo with the title of the Imperial City, that King upon the conqueſt hereof, having aſſumed unto himſelf the ſtile of Emperor of Spain, but ſomewhat too affectedly, as the caſe then ſtood, there being other Kings in Spain as well as he. In which reſpects he gave unto this City for the Armes hereof, in a Pile Azure, a Crown Mitral Imperial Or, garniſhed with ſundry precious Gems Proper; changed afterwards by Alphonſo the 3d of Caſtile and 8th of Leon, affecting the ſame title of Emperor, to an Emperor ſitting on his throne in a Robe Castile. of Gold, with a Globe in his left hand, and a sword in his right. But the Blazon of these Armes I finde not, nor much worth the searching: the old Coat being worn again after his decease.

10. CASTILE.

CASTILE is bounded on the East, with Navarre, Aragon, and part of Valentia; on the West, with Portugal; on the North, with Biscay, Guipuscoa, and the Asturias; on the South, with Extremadura, Andelusia, and Granada. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

This was the most prevailing Kingdom of all this Continent, to which the rest are all united either by Mariages or Conquest. Divided commonly into the New and the Old, parted from one another by the hils of Sevogia: the one being called the Old Castile, because it was the ancient Patrimony of the first Earls hereof; and the other named the New, from that addition which was made to the first inheritance, by the Conquest of the Realm of Toledo and other pieces from the Moores. The old Castile is the less fruitful of the two, more fit for pasturage than Corn; but better stored with that, and all sorts of fruits, than the neighbouring Countreys, which lie betwixt it and the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean: the new more plain and Champain, better stored with fruits; and furnished with sufficient plenty of Corn and other provisions necessary for the life of man. The Old Castile watered with the Rivers of 1 Relaunos, rising not far from Burgos; 2 Tormes, passing by Salamanca; 3 Duero, the Receptacle of the others: The New with 4 Zaruma, honoured with the Neighbourhood of Madrid; 5 Tavina, and 6 Tagus, the most famous River of all Spain.

The OLD CASTILE is situate on the North of the New, and hath for the chief Cities of it 1 Soria, of great note in the ancient Story, by the name of Numantia, which for the space of fourteen years withstood the whole forces of Rome: during which time they valiantly repulsed their Enemies, and forced them to dishonourable Compositions. But finding at the last no hope of holding longer out, they gathered together all their Armour, Money and Goods, laid them in an heap, then set fire unto them, and finally burnt themselves in the midst of the flame; leaving Scipio (who had brought them to that extremity) nothing but the bare name of Numantia, to adorn his triumph. 2 Avila, situate under the great Mountains, which are call'd from hence the Mountains of Avila. Known anciently by the name of Abule, and by that name giving the title of Abulensis to the renowned Tostatus, who was Bishop of it. A Man, who in his time was President of the Counsell to John, King of Aragon; yet could finde leisure enough not only to attend his Episcopal charge, but to compile those learned and painfull Commentaries on a great part of the Bible. Of which and his other abilities (besides that which hath before been noted of him) we may take that Elogie which Casaubon hath given him, in his Book against Baronius, saying, Laudo acumen viri, si in meliora incidisset Tempora, longè maximi, 3 Valodolid, a fine neat Town, and one of the antienteſt Universities of Spain: discontinued for a time by Students, and then restored again by King Philip the second, whose birth-place it was; and who erected here a Colledge (among others) for the education only of young English Fugitives. Seated upon the River Pisuerga, and one of the Chanceries of the Kingdoms of Castile and Leon. By means whereof, and of the Kings Court here residing in the Summer times, it became in little space, a fair, large, populous City, and of great resort; not yeelding unto any in Spain, except Lisbone and Sevill. It is called in Latine, Vallis oletum, and Vallis Oletana, from the abundance of Olives growing near it; but by Ptolemie, Pintia. 4 Segovia, a Bishops See, of great trade in cloathing; situate under a branch of the Mountain Idubeda, called from hence the hils of Segovia. 5 Burgos, near the head of the River Relaunos, or Relanzon, at the foot of the great Mountain d'Oca, part of the Idubeda; built out of certain Villages lying hereabouts by Nugno Bellides, a German, Son-in-law unto one of the first Earls of Castile. For a long time the seat of those Kings, since of the Arch-bishops hereof, the Cathedral being one of the faireſt in Spain; built with such Art, that Mass may be sung aloud in five several Chappels, without disturbing one another. This City doth contend for Primacy and Precedency (in Civil matters) with that of Toledo, of which it hath the first place or vote, in all Parliaments or Assemblies of the States of Castile. But yet to satisfie Toledo, the Controversie is still undecided, and was once finely taken up by one of the Ferdinands, saying, that he would first speak for Toledo, and then Burgos should speak for it self. Without the Wals of this City is a famous Nunnery, called De las Huelgas, consisting of 150 Religious women, all of noble Houses. 6 Cividad Rodrigo, a Bishops See, on the River Gada. 7 Zamora, a strong and well-built City, and a Bishops See, the Sentica of Ptolemie; situate on the River Duero, and now famous for the best Bag-pipes. 8 Tordesillas, the Segisana of the Antients. 9 Lerma, not far from Burgos, the chief seat of the Dukes so called, a Prince of great possessions, and the chief of the Family of Roias and Sandoval. 10 Salamanca, the most famous University of Spain, especially for the study of the Civil and Canon Lawes; first instituted by Ferdinand the second of Castile, Anno 1240. and by an Order of the Popes, together with Paris, Oxford, and Bononia in Italie, created a Generale Studium; wherein there were to be Professors of the Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, and Arabick Tongues, besides those of the Arts. It was of old called Salmantica, is now a Bishops See, situate on the River Tormes, as before was said.

Not far from this City, about the times of our Grandfathers, was discovered in a Valley situate amongst high and impassable Mountains, a kind of Paneços or Savage people, never heard of in Spain before.

before. The occaſion this. An Hawk of the Duke of Alva's which he very much valued, flew over thoſe Mountains; and his men not being able to finde her at firſt, they were ſent back by the Duke to ſeek her. Clambring from one hill to another, they hapned at laſt upon a large and pleaſant Valley, where they ſpied a company of naked Savage people, hemmed in amongſt many craggy Rocks. The Salvages gazing a while upon them ran into their Caves, made in the hollowes of the Rocks, the beſt houſes they had: which being obſerved by the Falconers, they returned again unto their Lord, telling him, that in ſtead of a Falcon, they had brought him newes of a New World in the midſt of Spain, and of a race of People which came in with Tubal. Strongly affirming what they ſaid, they obtained belief. And the Duke ſhortly after went with a Company of Musketiers, and ſubdued them eaſily; they having no offenſive Weapons but only Slings. They worſhipped the Sun and Moon, fed upon nothing that had life; but had good ſtore of excellent fruits, roots, and ſprings of water, wherewith Nature was well contented. And though their language was not altogether underſtood by any; yet many of their words were found to be purely Baſquiſh. Reduced on this diſcovery to Chriſtianity; but eaſily diſcernible by all other Spaniards, by their tawny complexions, occaſioned by the reverberation of the Sun-beams from thoſe rocky Mountains, wherewith on all ſides they are encompaſſed. The Truth hereof, beſides the Credit of James Howell in his Inſtructions for Forein Travel, I have upon inquiry, found to be atteſted by men of gravity and great place in this Realm of England; employed there in affairs of publick intereſs. Satisfied therefore in the truth of the Relation, I am partly ſatisfied in the men. Whom I conceive to be ſome remnant of the ancient Spaniards, who hid themſelves amongſt theſe Mountains for fear of the Romans. Their language and Idolatry ſpeak them to be ſuch. For had they either fled from the Gothes or Moores, there had been found ſome Croſs, or other Monument of Chriſtianity, as in other places; or ſome ſuch mixture in their ſpeech, as would have ſavoured ſomewhat of the Gothes, or Romans. But it is time I ſhould proceed.

NEW CASTILE is ſituate on the South of the old. The chief Cities there, 1 Signenca, a City heretofore of the Celtiberi, now a Biſhops See, beautified with a fair Cathedral; ſuppoſed to be the Condabora of Ptolemie. 2 Madrid, upon the Guadarama, now the ſeat of the Kings; whoſe reſidence there, though the Countrey be neither rich nor pleaſant, hath made it of a Village the moſt populous City in all Spain. It is a cuſtom in this Town, that all the upper Rooms in their houſes do belong to the King, except ſome compoſition be made with him for them. And of this Town the Spaniards do uſe to brag to ſtrangers, that they have a City walled with Fire; and then make good the boaſt by ſaying, That it is ſituate in the midſt of Quarries of Flint. 3 Alcala de Henares (of old called Complutum) renowned for an Univerſity of Divines, founded here in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick, by Franciſco de Ximines, Cardinal and Archbiſhop of Toledo; and by him furniſhed with the ableſt men both for Divinity and the tongues, that all Spain afforded. By whoſe joynt diligence and ſtudy in turning over ſo many Copies of the Bibles, gathered together at his charge from all parts of the World, he publiſhed the Complutenſian Edition of the holy Scriptures in the original Greek, Hebrew, and vulgar Latine, with the Tranſlation of the Septuagint into Latine alſo. A work of very great charge and pains (taking up 15 years in doing) but of greater profit; there being at the end thereof an Hebrew Dictionary for the underſtanding of that language. 4 Alcaraz, amongſt the mountainous tracts of Oroſpeda, called Sierra de Alcaraz; memorable for a great diſcomfiture given unto the Moores, Anno 1094. 5 Molina, in the ſame mountainous tract, hence called Monte de Molina; remarkable for giving the title of Lord to the Kings of Caſtile, who in the Regal ſtile are called Lords of Molina: the Signeury hereof accrewing to that Crown, by the mariage of Sancho the third with Mary the Daughter of Alfonſo the laſt Lord Proprietary. The Territory large, and the Town of ſtrength: well fortified in the times fore-going, both by art and nature. 6 Cuenca, ſeated at the ſpring-head of the River Xucar, and not far from that of the Tagus alſo, amongſt the Mountains of Oroſpeda; built by the Moores on the top of thoſe craggie hils, whom it ſerved for an impregnable Fortreſs againſt the Chriſtians, till taken by Sancho the ſecond of Caſtile, Anno 1177.

Here alſo is the Eſcuriall, or Monaſtery of S. Laurence, built by King Philip the ſecond. A place (ſaith Quade, who ſpendeth 13 pages in its deſcription) of that magnificence, that no building in times paſt, or this preſent, is comparable to it. The front toward the Weſt is adorned with three ſtately gates; the middlemoſt whereof leadeth into a moſt magnificent Temple, a Monaſtery in which are 150 Monks of the order of S. Jerome, and a Colledge: that on the right hand openeth into divers offices, belonging to the Monaſtery; that on the left, unto Schooles and out-houſes, belonging to the Colledge. At the four corners there are four turrets of excellent workmanſhip; and for height, majeſtical. Towards the North, is the Kings Palace; on the South part, divers beautiful and ſumptuous Galleries; and on the Eaſt ſide, ſundry gardens and walks, very pleaſing and delectable. It containeth in all 11 ſeveral quadrangles, every one incloyſtred; and is indeed ſo brave a ſtructure, that a voyage into Spain were well imployed, were it only to ſee it, and return. Here is alſo in this tract the old Town of Caſtulo (the Caſtaon of Strabo) then the chief City of the Carpentani, and the birth-place of Himilce the Wife of Annibal; from whence this whole Tract had the name of Saltus Caſtulonenſis, and ſo called by Cæſar: now a poor Village, known by the name of Caſtona la Veia; in which is ſomewhat to be found of the ancient ruines. But of this more already, when we were in the Kingdom of Toledo, to which it more properly belonged.

The old Inhabitants of theſe Caſtiles were the Vaccai, Ventones, Arevaca, Oretani, Carpentani, Dittani, &c. From none of which the name of Caſtile can be deduced: ſo that we muſt fetch it either from the Caſtellani, once a People of Catalogne; or from ſome ſtrong fortified Caſtles erected in the frontiers againſt the Moores. This laſt conjecture may ſeem probable, becauſe the Armes of this Kingdom

Caſtile. are Gules, a Caſtle triple-towred, Or. Neither is it any way ſtrange for Provinces, eſpecially ſmaller ones, ſuch as at firſt this was, (though now much extended both in bounds and power) to take their names from a Caſtle. For (to go no further) even with us Richmondſhire was ſo called from the Caſtle of Richmond, there built by Alun Earl of Bretagne; and Flintſhire took denomination from a Caſtle built of Flint-ſtones, by Henry the 2d. We may ſee hereby how much Celius Secundus Curio was deceived, who writeth that Alfonſo the third having overthrown Mahomet Enaſer King of Morocco, and put 60000 of his men to the Sword; aſſumed theſe Arms, that thus named this Kingdom, which was before called the Kingdom of the Baſtitanes; becauſe that victory, like a ſtrong Caſtle, had confirmed his Eſtates unto him. Whereas, in caſe there were no other Error in his ſuppoſition; the Baſtitanes were no Inhabitants of Caſtile, but of Valentia, and Murcia: Provinces far enough off from the Old Caſtile, at the firſt taking of that name. And for the former Etymology, it appeareth moſt evidently, in that the people are by the Latines called Caſtellani, the Countrey Caſtella; the ſame name with thoſe elder Caſtellani, which inhabited Catalogne. But not to ſtand upon the name, certain it is, that the Inhabitants hereof having been conquer'd by the Romans, and made a part of their Empire; fell by degrees to the Alani, and from them to the Gothes, as hath been ſhewn already on ſome other occaſion. From them extorted by the Moors, with the reſt of Spain; recovered foot after ſo ot by the Kings of Leon: governed, under them, at firſt by Provinciall Earls; Commanders of ſo many Caſtles in the Countrey of the Vaccæi, fortified and defended againſt the Moors. Ordogno the ſecond harbouring ſome ſuſpicions againſt theſe Earls, cauſed them all to be cruelly murthered. The people upon this revolted from the Crown of Leon; governed firſt by Judges, then by Earls again, as an abſolute and free Eſtate. Ferdinand Gonſales, the firſt that re-aſſumed the title of Earl of Caſtile, coming to the Court of Leon with a brave retinue; ſold to King Sancho, an Hawk, and an Horſe, of excellent kinds, for a ſum of money: conditioned, that if the money were not paid at the time agreed on, it ſhould be doubled and redoubled, till the debt were ſatisfied. This money by the negligence of the Kings Officers, who looked upon the contract as a matter of jeſt, became ſo great a ſumme; that the King, to ſatisfie Gonſales, made him the firſt Proprietary Earl of Caſtile, An. 939. releaſing that Eſtate from all acknowledgement to the Kings of Leon. Nugna, or Elvira, as ſome call her, Siſter and Heir of Garcias the fourth Earl hereof, brought this Eſtate by marriage to Sancho, ſurnamed the Great, King of Navarre, An. 1028. by whom it was erected into a Kingdom, and given by him to Ferdinand his ſecond Sonne, An. 1034. Kings of moſt note and obſervation in the courſe of their ſtory, are, 1 Ferdinand their firſt King, who added Leon to his Kingdom in right of Sancha his Wife, Siſter and Heir of Veramund the laſt King thereof, of the race of Pelagius. 2 Alfonſo the firſt, who ſubdued the Kingdom of Toledo, adding it by the name of New Caſtile, unto his Eſtate. 3 Alfonſo the third, who conquered from the Crown of Navarre, whatſoever lay on the Caſtilian ſide of the River Iberus: and grew ſo great, that he cauſed himſelf to be ſolemnly crowned Emperour of Spain, in the Cathedrall Church of Leon, by the Arch-biſhop of Toledo; and gave his Sonne Sancho the title of King of Caſtile in his own life time. 4 Alfonſo the 4th, the chief of the Confederates againſt Mahomet Enaſer, the Miramomoline of Morocco; whom he vanquiſhed in the famous battell of Muradal, or Sierra Morena, An. 1214. added Alava and Guipuſcoa to his other Eſtates. 5 Ferdinand the third, who incorporated Leon and Caſtile into one Eſtate; and added the Kingdoms of Murcia, Corduba, and Sevil, taken from the Moors, unto his Dominions. 6 Alfonſo the fifth of Caſtile, and the ninth of Leon, elected Emperour of the Germans, but more famous for his eminence in Aſtronomy; the Author of the Alfonſine Tables; compiled by many learned men aſſembled together by his means in the City of Toledo, where in the compiling of it, it is affirmed by a Spaniſh Writer that he ſpent more than the Revenues of the Pope in ten years did amount unto. 7 Sancho the third, Sonne of this Alfonſo, the Author of the great breach in the Line of Caſtile; for having the hap to ſurvive Ferdinand ſurnamed de la Cerde his elder Brother, he made himſelf ſo ſtrong a party in his Fathers life-time that he ſucceeded in the Kingdom, depriving his Brothers Children of their right therein, though many attempts were made in their favour afterwards. Don Alfonſo eldeſt Sonne of which Ferdinand maryed into France, was Father of Lewis Earl of Clermont, who by Leonora de Guſman a Duaghter of the now houſe of Medina Sedonia, was Father of Lewis, John, and Iſabella de la Cerde (in which laſt the male Iſſue being quite extinct) the whole rights of that Line remained; brought by her to her Husband Bernard, a baſe Sonne of the houſe of Foix, created by King Henry the ſecond, the firſt Earl of Medina Celi, whoſe ſonne called Gaſton left the name of Foix, and took unto himſelf that of de la Cerde continued ever ſince in his poſterity (advanced unto the honour of Dukes of Medina Celi in the perſon of Lewis the fifth Earl) the better to preſerve in memory their deſcent from, and lawfull title to that Crown. And for the better keeping and preſerving of their claim unto it, it is affirmed to be the cuſtome of this Houſe, once at the leaſt in the life-time of every Duke, to put up a petition to the King then reigning, for reſtitution to the throne, which the King receiving as of courſe, doth of courſe ſubſcribe this anſwer to it, viz. No eſt ligar, that is to ſay, there is no room for him. 8 Pedro the Cruel, driven out of his Kingdom by Henry of Tranſtamare his Brother; reſtored again for a time by the valour of Edward the Black Prince, Sonne of Edward the third. 9 John, ſonne of Henry of Tranſtamare, who maryed his ſonne Henry to Katharine Daughter of John of Gaunt, by Conſtance one of the Daughters of Don Pedro the Cruel; ſo uniting both titles into one. The times in which theſe Princes and the reſt did reign, appeareth in theſe Catalogues of the Earls and Kings of Caſtile, which are theſe that follow.

The Caſtile.

The Earls of Caſtile.

A. Ch.

910 1 Ferdinand Gonſales, the firſt Proprietary Earl.
932 2 Garcias, Sonne of Ferdinand.
980 3 Sancho, or Sanctias, Sonne of Garcias.
1018 4 Garcias II. Sonne of Sancho, ſlain by treaſon, without iſſue.
1028 5 Nugna, or Elvira the Siſter of Garcias the ſecond, maryed to Sancho King of Navarre, Father of Ferdinand, made by him the firſt King of Caſtile.

The Kings of Caſtile.

1036 1 Ferdinand, King of Caſtile by the gift of his Father, and of Leon in right of his Wife. 33.
1067 2 Sancho, Sonne of Ferdinand, King of Caſtile only, his younger Brother Alfonſo ſucceeding in Leon. 6.
1073 3 Alfonſo, the Brother of Sancho, King of Leon, and afterwards of Caſtile alſo.
1108 4 Urraca Queen of Caſtile and Leon. / Alfonſo II. King of Navarre and Aragon. } 15.
1122 5 Alfonſo III. King of Caſtile and Leon, the Sonne of Urraca, by Raymond of Burgundy her former Husband.
1157 6 Sancho II. the elder Sonne of Alfonſo the third; his younger Brother Ferdinand ſucceeding in Leon. 2.
1159 7 Alfonſo IV. ſurnamed the Noble, Son of Sancho the 2d. 55.
1214 8 Henry, Son of Alfonſo the fourth. 3.
1217 9 Ferdinand II. Sonne of Alfonſo the ninth of Leon, and of Berenguela the Siſter of Henry ſucceeded his Father in Leon alſo, Anno 1230. the Kingdoms never ſince diſ-joyned, though the title of Leon in ſhort time became diſcontinued.
1252 10 Alfonſo V. furnamed the Wiſe, Son of Ferdinand the ſecond, King of Caſtile and Leon; and Emperour Elect. 32.
1283 11 Sancho III. the 2d Sonne of Alfonſo the fifth; the children of Ferdinand de la Cerde, his elder Brother being ſet beſides. 12.
1295 12 Ferdinand III. of Caſtile, and IV. of Leon, Son of Sancho the third. 18.
1312 13 Alfonſo VI. Son of Ferdinand. 38.
1350 14 Pedro, the Sonne of Alfonſo, for his infinite Tyrannies ſurnamed the Cruel. 18.
1368 15 Henry II. the Baſtard Sonne of Alfonſo the ſixth, Earl of Tranſtamare. 11.
1379 16 John, the Sonne of Henry the ſecond. 11.
1390 17 Henry III. Sonne of John, and huſband of Catharine, the Daughter of John of Gaunt, and the Lady Conſtance, one of the Daughters of King Pedro. 17.
1406 18 John II. Sonne of Henry and Katharine. 48.
1454 19 Henry IV. Son of John the 2d. 21.
1475 20 Iſabel, Siſter of Henry the fourth, maryed to Ferdinand V. Sonne of John King of Aragon.

Of whoſe Acts and Iſſue we will make more ample mention, when we ſhall come to ſpeak of the Monarchy of Spain, which began in them, and hath been ſince continued in their Poſterity. The Arms of theſe Kings we have ſeen before.

The chief Orders of Knighthood within theſe Kingdoms of Caſtile and Leon, long ſince united into one, were three in all, partly Religious, partly Military; and one Order of Religious perſons, not known in any Countrey but Spain alone.

This of the laſt ſort is called the Order of Mercie, or de la mercede; firſt inſtituted by K. James of Aragon, in the chief Church of Barcelone, An. 1218. Admitted afterwards into the Kingdoms of Caſtile, where of moſt eſteem; but ſo that in remembrance of their firſt foundation they ſtill retain their antient Arms, which are thoſe of Aragon, viz. a Croſſe Argent, and four Bends Gules; in a field Or. Their habit white; the Rule of their Order, that of S. Auguſtine: The practice and profeſſion of it to gather Alms amongſt the People, wherewith to redeem ſuch Chriſtian Captives, as either by Piracy, the chance of War, or by ſome other means are enthralled to the Turks, and Moors: ſending their Agents yeerly to Algeers and Feſſe, to inform them of the ſtate, age, and quality of each ſeverall Captive; and after on Inſtruction from the Brethren of this Society, to deal in the redemption of them. A buſineſſe which they manage with great care and faithfulneſſe, and are accordingly truſted with great ſums of money, given and collected to that end; few men here dying, who give not ſome Legacy or other to this pious uſe. Nor are the Kings behind hand in ſo good a work, promoting it with a liberall purſe, and giving as much ordinarily out of his Eſtate, as the Brethren have collected in all Spain beſides. And to ſay truth, it doth concern him more then others, becauſe they are his Subjects chiefly, for whoſe redemption the whole ſumme is given and gathered: Religious perſons ranſomed firſt, and then the Laity; the young and ſerviceable men before old and impotent: if after the Redemption of the Spaniſh Captives they have any ſtock left, they keep it not till another year; but therewith ranſome Captives of ſome other Nations. So that this ſeemeth to ſucceed

Portugal. in the place of the now antiquated and uſeleſs Orders of Knighthood, which were heretofore of great authority and power, that is to ſay,

1 Of Calatrava, a Town of the Kingdom of Toledo, abandoned by the Templers, to whom the defence thereof belonged, on the approach of the Moors; made good by Raymond the Abbot of Piſaria, and the Monks of Ciſteaux. An. 1157. For the future preſervation and defence whereof, they ordained this Order; which in proceſs of time grew to ſuch eſtate, that beſides eight fair Priories, they enjoyed in Spain no leſs than 61 Towns and Caſtles. The Knights hereof do wear for their Habit, a White Robe with a Red Croſſe upon their breaſts; confirmed by Pope Alexander the 3d, An. 1164, under the Diſcipline of Ciſteaux. Their reſidence is at Caſtle-Covo, bound by their Order to ſerve in the Wars againſt the Infidels; upon which ſervices they have been ſeen ſometimes in the field, with 300 great Horſe.

2 Of S. Jago, inſtituted by the Canons of Eloy, and certain Gentlemen of Caſtile, in imitation of the Order of Calatrava; for the ſecurity and entertainment of Chriſtian Pilgrims, travelling to the Shrine of S. Jago: confirmed by the ſaid Pope Alexander the 3d, An. 1175. under the Rule of S. Auguſtine. Their habit is a White Robe; with a Red Croſſe like a Sword: the companions of it according to the firſt Founders, being part Eccleſiaſticall, and part Secular; whereof theſe laſt are only tyed unto the vow of conjugall Chaſtity. They grew in little time unto ſuch eſteem, that beſides two Colleges or Seminaries in Salamanca, and a Colledge in Sevil; they had four Hermitages in the Mountains, and five Hoſpitalls well endowed for the entertainment of Strangers; together with 90 Towns and Caſtles in ſeverall parts of the Kingdom. The whole number of Gentlemen, beſides Friers ſerving in their Cures, and other Miniſters, is above 600. Their firſt reſidence at the Hoſpitall of S. Mark, in the Suburbs of Leon; on a diſlike with Ferdinand the ſecond King of Leon, removed to Ucles in Caſtile, beſtowed upon them by Alfonſo the 4th. Upon this occaſion being divided, they have ſince two Maſters or Commendadors, the one called the Commendador of Leon, who reſides at S. Marks; the other the Commendador of Caſtile, who reſides at Ucles.

3 Of Alcantara, a Town of Extremadura, defended by Ferdinand of Leon againſt the Moors, where he framed this Order; confirmed by Pope Lucio, An. 1183. Others aſcribe it to Alfonſo, the Succeſſor of that Ferdinand, An. 1217. by whom endowed with all the Lands of the Calatravians in the Realm of Leon; but acknowledging the Superiority thereof, and under the ſame Rule of Ciſteaux. Their device at firſt was a Pear-tree Vert, in a Field Or; to which hanged a pair of Shackles, as a ſign of their ſubjection to them of Calatrava; changed An. 1411. to a White Robe, and a Green Croſſe on th eir Breaſts.

I omit the Order of the Dove and Reaſon, inſtituted by K. John of Caſtile, becauſe of ſmall eſteem, and but ſhort continuance. And ſo much for Caſtile, the firſt of thoſe three greater kingdoms of Spain, under which all the reſt are now reduced; containing in this Continent all the Provinces and Eſtates before deſcribed, amounting to two third parts of the whole; and many large eſtates elſewhere, as ſhall be ſhewed hereafter in its proper place. Paſs we on next to Portugall, the ſecond in repute of the ſaid three Kingdoms; not ſo much for the largeneſs of the Territories, which it had on the Continent, as for its great Appendixes in all other parts of the World.

11 The Kingdom of PORTUGAL.

THE Kingdom of PORTUGAL containeth 1 Portugal it ſelf; 2 Algarve, or Regnum Algarbiorum; and 3 the Terceras or Iſles of Azores: theſe laſt not reckoned parts of Spain by any of our Writers either old old or new; but made by us a part hereof, becauſe ſituate over againſt Portugal, one of the firſt additions which was made unto it on the Ocean; and finally, becauſe I know not under what other head to reduce them better.

And firſt for PORTUGAL it ſelf, it is bounded on the North, with the Rivers Minio, and Avia, which part it from Gallicia; on the South, with Algarve; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Ocean; and on the Eaſt, with the two Caſtiles, and Extremadura; from which divided by a line drawn from Ribadania, ſtanding on the Avia, to Badaios, on the Anas or Guadiana. Extended on the Sea-coaſt from North to South, 400 miles: the breadth of it in the broadeſt place (not taking in the Iſlands into this accompt) 100 miles; in the narroweſt, 80; the whole circumference 879 miles, and in that compaſs 1460 Pariſhes.

It was firſt called Luſitania from the Luſitani, the chief Inhabitants thereof, and took the name of Portugal, either from the Haven or Port of Cale, now called Caia, ſometimes a very rich and flouriſhing Emporie; or rather from the Haven Town of Porto, at the mouth of Duerus, where the Galls (or the French rather) uſed to land their Merchandiſe: which was therefore called Portus Gallorum, and which Town was given in Dower with Tereſa, the Daughter of Alfonſo the ſixth, to Henry of Lorain, with the title of Earl of Portugal. Whoſe Succeſſors coming to be Kings, extended this name to all thoſe Countreys which they got from the Moors, as it continueth at this day.

The Air is very healthy, the Countrey for the moſt part hilly, and bare of Corn, ſupplyed from France and other parts of the North; that which they have being as good as any in Europe, if not better. The ſoyl, and people, in all places not rich alike. For where the ſoyl is richeſt, as in the parts lying on the North of Duero, there the People are pooreſt; in regard of the great diſtance thereof from Lisbon, and ſo not benefited by the trading of that wealthy City. And where the ſoyl is pooreſt, there the the People be richeſt, helping themſelves by trade and manufactures; eſpecially by making of Silks, and Salt, ſufficient for themſelves, and for other Countreys. But where there is a defect of Corn, that defect is otherwiſe ſufficiently recompenſed with abundance of Honey, Wine, Oyl, Allom, Fruits, Fiſh, Salt, white Marble, and ſome Mines of Silver, &c. Portugal.

The people are of a more plain and ſimple behaviour, than the reſt of Spain; and (if we beleeve the old Proverb) none of the wiſeſt. For whereas the Spaniards are ſaid to ſeem wiſe, and yet to be Fools; the French to ſeem Fools, and yet to be wiſe; the Italians both to ſeem wiſe and to be ſo; the Portugals are affirmed to be neither wiſe indeed, nor ſo much as to ſeem ſo. But little different from which is the Spaniſh By-word, which telleth us of the Portugals, that they are Pocos y Locos, few and fooliſh; which others vary with the addition of another part of their Character; ſaying they are Pocos, Sotos, y Devotos, few and fooliſh, but withall devout. They have great animoſities (if it be not grown to an Antipathie) againſt the Caſtilians, for bereaving them of their Kingdom and Liberty, though both of late recovered by them: but when moſt Fools, were counted for good Sea-faring men, and happy in the diſcovery of forain Nations.

Rivers it hath of all ſorts, both great and ſmall, almoſt 200. Thoſe of moſt note, 1 Minius, full of red Lead, (from hence called Minium by the Latins) navigable with ſmall Veſſels 100 miles. 2 Lethes, now Lavada. 3 Muliadas, now Mondego. 4 Tagus. 5 Duerus, and 6 Anas; theſe three laſt common alſo to the reſt of Spain: Anas, or Guadiana paſſing by Portugal but for ſeven Leagues only, Tagus for 18, and Duero for 80. None of them navigable for any long ſpace by ſhips of burden; the Rivers of all Spain being generally ſwift of courſe, reſtrained within narrow Channels, banked on both ſides with very ſteep Rocks, which make them incommodious for Navigation: Inſomuch that it is reckoned for a great Prerogative of Tagus, and the Realm of Portugal, that this River is there navigable with great ſhips 15 or 20 miles within the Continent. But here that want is ſomewhat tolerably ſupplyed with three excellent Havens. 1 That of Lisbon upon Tagus, and 2 Porto on Duero, to the North of Lisbon, of which more anon; 3 of Setaval, South of Lisbon, ſituate on a Golf of 20 miles in length, and three in breadth; a place of principal importance to thoſe parts of the Realm. Rivers however of great fame, according to whoſe courſe the whole Countrey was divided by the Romans, into Ulteriorem, lying beyond Duero Northwards; 2 Citeriorem, on the South of Tagus; and 3 Interamnem, betwixt both.

Principal Cities of this part, 1 Lisbon, ſeated upon Tagus, a famous City for traffick, the Portugals in all their Navigations ſetting ſayl from hence. By the Latines called Olyſippo, and Uliſſippo, becauſe as ſome ſay Ulyſſes built it, coming hither in the courſe of his ten years travel; a thing meerly fabulous, it being no where found, that Ulyſſes did ever ſee the Ocean. But like enough it is, that this Town being ſeated conveniently for Navigation, and inhabited by Sea-faring men, might at the firſt be conſecrated to the memory of ſo great a Traveller; as Athens being a place of Learning, was dedicated to Minerva, whom the Greeks call Athene. It is in compaſſe ſeven miles, and containeth upwards of 30 Pariſhes, and in them 20000 houſes; all of neat and elegant building. Turrets, and Towers it numbreth upon the Walls about 76, Gates towards the Sea-ſhore 22. And towards the Continent ſituate upon five ſmall Hills, betwixt which is a Valley which runs down to the River: on the higheſt Hill an antient Caſtle, not ſtrong, but by reaſon of the ſituation, ſerving now only for a Priſon for men of quality: the entry of the River being defended by the Caſtle of Caſcais; and neerer to the City by the Fort of S. Julians, and the Rock of Belem, munitioned with 20 Peeces of Ordnance. This City heretofore was honoured with the Seat of the Kings, ſince of the Vice-roys, an Arch-biſhops See, the Staple of Commodities for all the Kingdom, and thought to be more worth than the whole Realm beſides: ſaid by ſome French Writers to be the beſt peopled City in Chriſtendom, next unto Paris; and by Botero an Italian, made to be the fourth Mart Town of Europe; the other three being Conſtantinople, Paris, Moſco. In which they do great wrong to London, as populous and well-traded as the beſt of them all. 2 Santaren, on the Tagus, ſo called from S. Irene, a Nun of Tomar, (a Monaſtery, in which the old Kings of Portugal did uſe to be crowned) here martyred by the Moors; by Ptolemy called Scabaliſcus, then a Roman Colony. 3 Sintra, upon the main Atlantick, at the end of the huge Mountains, called Montes Lunæ; whither by reaſon of the cool refreſhings from the Sea, and pleaſure of the Woods adjoyning, the Kings of Portugal uſed to retire in the heats of Summer. 4 Conimbre, on both ſides the River Mondego, pleaſantly ſeated amongſt Vineyards and Woods of Olives, a Biſhops See, and an Univerſity; the Maſters whereof made the Commentary on moſt part of Ariſtotle, called from hence Schola Conimbricenſis. Then on the North of the River Duero, betwixt that and Minio, are 5 Braga, by Ptolemy called Bracaria Auguſta, reckoned by Antonine for one of the four chief Cities in Spain; the Royall ſeat when time was, of the Suevian Kings, and now the See of an Arch-biſhop, contending for the Primacy with him of Toledo. 6 Porto, the Haven of the Galls, on the mouth of Duero. 7 Miranda, a Biſhops See on the ſame River. 8 Bragance, the Duke whereof is ſo great a Prince, that it is thought a third part of the People of Portugal are his Vaſſals, and live on his Lands; originally deſcended from Alfonſo, naturall Sonne to John the firſt; created by his Father Earl of Borcellos, after Duke of Bragance; the later Dukes, ſince the time of King Emanuel being withall of the right Royall Blood: two ſteps of main advantage to the Regall Throne, lately aſcended and obtained by John Duke of Bragance, now called John the 4th. And finally, on the South of Tagus, betwixt that and the Kingdom of Algarbe, there is 9 Ebora, in the middeſt of a large and ſpacious Plain, an Arch-biſhops See, and an Univerſity; this laſt of the Foundation of King Henry the Cardinall. 10 Portelegre, a Biſhops See. 11 Olivenca on the Guadiana. 12 Beia, by Pliny called Pax Iulia, now Meau, and not very well inhabited, but antiently a Roman Colony, and one of the three Juridicall Reſorts of Luſitania.

2 The Kingdom of ALGARVE, lyeth on the South of Portugal, from which divided by a line, drawn from Aſcorin on the Weſtern Sea, to Odechere a Caſtle on the Guadiana; on the Eaſt bounded by Andaluzia; on the Weſt, and South, by the main Atlantick. This the moſt wild and deſert part of all this Kingdom, barren and drie: peopled with few Towns, nor thoſe very populous: hilly and Mountainous withall, but yeelding by the benefit of the Sea a great trade of fiſhing, of Tunny ſpecially; whereof more caught upon this coaſt than in all the Kingdom.

The name it took from the Weſtern ſituation of it, for ſo the word Algarve ſignifieth in the Arabick tongue. The utmoſt end of it called anciently Promontorium Sacrum, now the Cape of S. Vincent; becauſe the bones of S. Vincent religiouſly preſerved by the Chriſtians, were here burnt and ſcattered about by the Moors. Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Niebla, the Seat of Aben Mefad, once a King of this Countrey. 2 Silvis, an Epiſcopall See, ſeated in the In-land parts. 3 Villa nova, ſituate beyond the Cape. 4 Tavila, the Balſa, and 5 Faro, the Oſſonoba of Ptolemy; both noted Ports on the Atlantick. 6 Lagos, another Haven Town alſo.

This Countrey conquered by the Moors with the reſt of Spain, in the diſtractions of their power, was for a time under the ſoveraignty and command of the Kings of Sevil. Recovered from the Moors of Sevil, by the Kings of Morocco, it became ſubject unto them till they left this Countrey, and after their retreat was parcelled among many Princes. One of which called Aben Mefad, reigning in Niebla and the parts adjoyning, being diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtate by Alfonſo the Wiſe, moſt of the other Towns and Princes ſubmitted to him, and became his Vaſſals, An. 1257. More abſolutely ſubdued, and made ſubject to the Crown of Portugal by Alfonſo the third, An. 1260. to whom the ſaid Alfonſo, the tenth of that name in Leon, and the fifth in Caſtile, had given the ſame in Dowry with Beatrix his Daughter. From which maryage iſſued Dionyſius or Denys King of Portugal, the firſt that ever uſed the title of Rex Algarbiorum, An. 1279.

3 The AZORES are certain Iſlands lying in the Atlantick Ocean, oppoſite to the City of Lisbon, from which diſtant but 250 Leagues. Situate betwixt the 38 and 40 degrees of Northern Latitude; and one of them in the firſt Longitude, which is commonly reckoned from theſe Iſlands, as being the moſt Weſtern part of the World, before the diſcovery of America.

They were thus called from the multitude of Goſ-Hawks which were found there in the beginning; (the word Azor in the Spaniſh tongue ſignifying a Goſ-Hawk): though at this time there be none of them to be found. Called alſo the Flemiſh Iſlands, becauſe firſt diſcovered by the Flemings, and the great numbers of them in the Iſle of Faial (one of the chief of all the pack) where there are yet ſome Families which reſemble the Flemings, both in their complexion and habit; and not far from the place of their abode a Torrent, which the Spaniards call Riberados Flamengos, or the River of Flemings. They are alſo called the Terceras, from Tercera the chief Iſle among them.

The Air of thoſe Iſlands is generally good, and ſubject unto few diſeaſes, except that which the Portugals call the Blood; being an impoſtumation of the blood breaking out at the Eyes or other parts of the Body. Some other inconveniences they are ſubject to, proceeding from the humidity of the place; the great winds and ſtorms, of ſuch a violent and ſtrange kind of working, that barres of Iron as big as a mans Arm, have in ſix years been worn as little as a ſtraw. All of them well ſtored with Fleſh, Fiſh, and other things neceſſary, except Salt and Oyl; with which they are furniſhed out of Portugal. Wines they have alſo for their own uſe, but not to be tranſported far becauſe of their weakneſs: for which cauſe alſo, the richer men provide themſelves of Canary Wines; or thoſe of the Iſland of Madera. Of like nature is their Wheat, and other fruits, which hold not good above a year. All of them ſubject unto Earthquakes, and ſome to breathings out of fire; which continually ſendeth forth fuming vapours. The chief commodities which they tranſport unto other Countreys, are Canary birds for Ladies, Oad for the Diers, Joyners-work which they ſell to the Spaniards, and Beeves for the victualling of ſuch ſhips as come there to be victualled.

The Inhabitants are generally laborious, excellent Husbands on their grounds; inſomuch as they make Vines to grow out of Rocks; much given to Joynery, by which they make many pretty fancies, much eſteemed by the Spaniards; but not ſo expert at it as thoſe of Nuremberg. They take great pains to teach their Cattell underſtanding; the Oxen being taught to know when their Maſter calleth them. In other things they conform to the Portugals, both in their cuſtoms and apparell; but with ſome ſmattering of the Fleming, which Nation they affect above any other.

The Iſlands nine in number, and diſtinguiſhed by the ſeverall names of, 1 Tercera, 2 S. Michael, 3 Faial, 4 Gratioſa, 5 S. George, 6 Pico, 7 Corvo, 8 Flores, and 9 S. Maries, of which S. Michaels and St. Maries lie next to Spain; Tercera on the North-weſt of of thoſe; (by conſequence the third in Order, whence it had the name) S. Georges, Gratioſa, Pico, Fayal, on the Weſt of that; and finally thoſe of Corvo, and Flores, neereſt to America.

1 TERCERA, the chief of all the reſt, 18 miles in compaſſe, well ſtored with Peaches, Apples, Limons, Oranges: and for the Kitchin, with Turneps, Cabages, plenty of Pot-herbs, and as good Batato-roots (which are the beſt food the people have) as any be in the World; but more eſteemed in Portugal than they be in this Iſland, by reaſon of their great abundance. Here is alſo great quantity of the beſt kind of Woad, (which from hence is called Iland-Woad) and a Plant about the height of a man, which bears no Fruit, but hath a Root as profitable as thoſe that do: out of which the People draw a thin and tender film, wherewith they fill their Mattreſſes, in ſtead of Feathers. Fowl enough for the uſe of man, and yet none of prey. No Port of any ſafety in it but that of Angra; and that made ſafe by Art, and not by Nature: the whole begirt with Rocks, which ſtick out like

portance in it, 1 Praye, on the Sea-ſide, well walled, but not but not very well peopled. 2 S. Barbara, 3 S. Sebaſtians, 4 Gualne, and 5 Villa Nova, Burroughs of good note. 6 Angra, the chief not of this Iſland only, but of all the nine; the Reſidence of the Governour, and an Arch-biſhops See, who hath in it his Cathedrall Church. Seated on a convenient Bay made in the form of a Creſcent, with two Promontories on each ſide, (like the two horns of a half-Moon) bearing into the Sea; each fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle for defence of the Haven; the Town it ſelf alſo well-walled about, and environed with ſharp Rocks on all ſides. Both Town and Caſtles well garriſoned, and no leſs diligently guarded. This in regard of its great ſtrength, and commodious Haven, is eſteemed the principall of theſe Iſlands, and communicates its name unto all the reſt: though neither neereſt unto Spain, nor the greateſt in compaſs.

2 S. MARIES, ſo called from the Saint (as S. Georges and S. Michaels are) unto which it is dedicated; is the moſt Southern of theſe Iſles, and the next to Spain: twelve miles in circuit, inhabited by Spaniards only, and thoſe much given unto the making of Earthen Veſſels. So naturally fenced with Rocks, that it is, and may be eaſily kept by the Inhabitants, without the charge of a Garriſon. The chief Town of it hath the name of St. Maries alſo, which it either giveth unto the Iſland, or borroweth from it.

3 S. MICHAELS, directly North of S. Maries, from which little diſtant, the biggeſt in the whole pack; as being 20 miles in length, though the breadth not anſwerable: much ſubject unto Earthquakes and fiery vapours. Of moſt note amongſt our modern Geographers, who have removed hither the firſt Meridian (by which they divide the World into Eaſt and Weſt) from the Canaries, or Fortunate Iſlands; where it was fixed in the time of Ptolemy, and others of the antient Writers.

And this remove ſeems countenanced even by Nature it ſelf, it being obſerved that the Compaſſe when it cometh under the Meridian drawn through this Iſle, hath little or no Variation at all, but pointeth almoſt directly towards the North; whereas in all other places or leſs Meridians, Eaſt and Weſt, it pointeth not ſo directly North, but more or leſs to the North-eaſt, or the North-weſt; which the Mariners call the Variation, or the North-eaſting, and the North-weſting of the Compaſs. And yet it is obſerved of late, that there is ſome more ſenſible variation of it in this Iſle of S. Michael, than in that of Corvo: which therefore is conceived more fit for the firſt Meridian.

The chief Town hereof, beſides many Burroughs and leſſer Hamlets, Punta del Gada, ſeated upon a dangerous Sea, and without any Port; yet more frequented by Strangers than the Port of Angra, becauſe here they may go in and out as they pleaſe, but not ſo in the other.

4 FAYAL, 17 or 18 miles in length, plentifully provided with all things neceſſary for the life of man, and well furniſhed with Woad; for which Commodity much frequented by the Merchants of England. The chief Town of it Dorta, defended with a Caſtle, and that guarded by Spaniards; both Town and Iſland taken by Sir Walter Raleigh, An. 1597. This Action was called the Iſland-Voyage, undertaken as well to divert the War which the Spaniards threatned to bring to our own doors; as by ſeizing ſome of theſe Iſlands, to intercept the Spaniſh Fleets in their return, and to hinder them in their ſetting out: by which means, wanting their Indian Gold, they might be brought to better terms with their neighbour Nations. And though the Engliſh were not able to hold it long, yet it was ſaid, that the booty got in this Expedition, amounted to 400000 Crowns; beſides the honour of beating the Spaniard upon his own ground. It took this name from its abundance of Beeches.

5 GRATIOSA, not above five or ſix Leagues in compaſs; but ſo well furniſhed with fruits, that they ſend much yearly to Tercera; inhabited by Portugals only, but ſo poor that they are not able to bear the charge of a Garriſon. The chief Town of it called La Plaia.

6 S. GEORGES, twelve miles long, about three in breadth; mountainous, and full of Forreſts: but thoſe Forreſts ſo well ſtored with Cedars, that they uſe them many times for ſhipping, and ſometimes for Fewell. The chief Town of it called S. Georges, as the Iſland is.

7 PICO, lyeth on the South of the Iſle of S. George, and took this name from an high Hill in the form of a Pyramid, which the Portugals generally call a Pike, or Pico. Repleniſhed with fruits, ſome Cedars, and a Tree called Teixo, of great bulk, and as much beauty: the wood thereof exceeding hard, red within and waved; ſo admirably beautifull, that it is allowed only to the Kings Officers, the other Subjects being interdicted the uſe of it (but on ſpeciall licence) by a publick Edict. In bigneſs it is ſecond only unto that of S. Michael, if not equall to it; hardly ſo much in length, but of greater breadth. The chief Towns of it, 1 S. Sebaſtians, 2 Callota de Neſquin, both upon the Sea, and in the Eaſt parts of the Iſland.

8 FLORES, directly Eaſt from Fayall, ſo called from its abundance of Flowers, (as Gratioſa from the like flouriſhing Verdure of it) is in compaſs not above 8 miles; but plentifully furniſhed with Cattel, and good grounds to feed them. The chief Town of it Santa Crux. The Iſle (though ſmall, yet) twice as big as the Iſle of 9 CORVO, ſo called from its abundance of Crowes, ſituate on the North hereof, and but little diſtant: both very unſafe, and both moſt miſerably poor, by reaſon of the many Pirates which lie betwixt them, to intercept ſuch ſhips as trade towards America. But this, though much ſmaller than the others, may in time be of more eſteem than any of them, in regard it is conceived to be the moſt naturall place for the firſt Meridian; as before was noted: the Needle here pointing directly to the North, without Variation. Which whether it proceed from ſome ſecret inclination of the Load-ſtone to that part of the World, more in this place than any other; or that being ſituate betwixt the two great Continents of Europe and America, it is drawn equally towards both, by the magneticall vertue of the Earth it ſelf: I leave to be diſputed by more able judgements.

Portugal. These Islands were first discovered and subdued by the Portugals, under the conduct, or by the direction of Prince Henry, Sonne of John the first; who first made the Portugals in love with the Seas. And they were also the last Members of the Crown of Portugal which held out for Don Antonio the Bastard, against Philip the second of Castile: against whom the Island of Tercera was for a while gallantly defended by Emanuel de Silva, with the help of the French; but taken at the last by the Marqueſſe of Santa Cruz, and the French, after promise of life, cruelly murdered in cold blood. After which, garrisoned at the first by none but Portugals. But upon some commotion hapning in that Kingdom, it was thought fit, on some reason of State, to make sure of the best Islands by Spanish Garrisons; which accordingly were put into the Castles of Angra, in Tercera; the Towns of Punta del Gada, in S. Michaels; and Dorta in Fayall. And to say truth, the Spaniards had good reason to be carefull of them, these Islands being of such importance, as without them the Navigation of the Indies, Æthiopia, Brasil, and New Spain, could not be continued: because the Fleets which come from those Countreys to Lisbon, or Sevill, must in a manner of necessity touch upon some of them; as well in following their course if they come from the West, as in recovering such winds as are usefull to them, if they come from the East.

But to return again to the main Land of Portugal, know, that the antient Inhabitants of it were the Lusitani, dwelling betwixt Tagus and Duerus, the old Lusitania being bounded within those Rivers; the Celtici, and Turditani, who took up also some part of Bætica, dwelling on the South of Tagus; and the Gallaici Bracarii (so called to difference them from the Gallaici Lucenses who possessed Gallicia) on the North of Duerus. Subjected first unto the Romans, by whom accompted one of the three parts of Spain. In the declining of their Empire conquered by the Alani; and from them taken by the Suevians; who, for a time, made the City of Braga the Royall seat of their Kings. The Suevians lost it to the Gothes, and the Gothes to the Moors, as hath been shewn already in their severall stories. Recovered in part by the Kings of Leon; to whom that part continued subject, till given by Alfonso the sixth of Leon, in Dowry with his base Daughter Terasa, to Henry of Lorrein; whose vertue and good service merited no less reward, An. 1099. Who having fortunately governed it by the title of an Earl, for the space of 12 years, left his Sonne Alfonso, Heir both to his Fortunes and Vertues; honoured with the title of King of Portugal, by the Soveraigns of Leon, for his most gallant demeanor shewn in the battell of Obrique, An. 1139. He had before the Assumption of the Regall Stile, ruled 27 years with a great deal of honour; and he reigned here with no less, 45 years after that Assumption, reverenced by his Friends, and feared by his Enemies. So that the whole time of his sitting in the Chair of State, was 72 years: a longer enjoying of Soveraignty, than any Prince, since the first beginning of the Roman Monarchy. His Successors we shall have in order, in the following Catalogue. But we must first tell you, as in other places of this Work, that the Princes of most note in the whole succession, are, 1 Henry of Lorrein (whom some make a Burgundian of the City of Besancon) who coming into Spain to the Holy Wars, and deserving nobly in the same; was honoured by Alfonso the sixth, with his Daughter Terasa and the Town of Portio for her Dower: given to him with the title of Earl of Portugal. He extended his Estate as far as Conimbre, on the South of the River Duero; that River being before that time the utmost bound of it that way. 2 Alfonso the first King, who took Lisbon from the Moors, An. 1247. and made it the Seat of his Kingdom, which he extended South-ward as far as Algarve. 3 Alfonso the 3d, who partly by Conquest, and partly by Mariage, added Algarve to his Estate; getting it by the Sword, and confirming it to him by the Bed. He also did prevail so far with Alfonso the Wise, (never the wiser for so doing) as to get his Realm discharged of the Homage which formerly had been done to the Kings of Leon, An. 1270. 4 Alfonso the 4th, confederate with the fifth of the same name in Castile, against Alboacen the Miramomolin of Africk, at the fight neer the River Salado, not far from Tariff; where they discomfited the vast Army of Moors, consisting of 470000 Horse and Foot. 5 John the first, the base sonne of Pedro the first, setting aside the Lady Beatrix, Queen of Castile, the Daughter of Ferdinand the first, and the Lawfull Children of his Father, being many in number; by force and colour of Election obtained the Kingdom. Fortified it by his mariage with the Lady Philip, Daughter of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster; a strong Competitor at that time for the Crown of Castile: on which relation, this King, the four Kings next succeeding, and two of this Kings younger Sonnes, were made Knights of the Garter. 6 Edward the sonne and Successor of John the first, of whom there goes a story, that on the day of his Coronation, he was advised by a Jew, (one of his Physitians) learned in Astrology, to defer the Ceremony untill noon, in regard he found by his Art, that if they did proceed unto it in that conjuncture, his Reign would be very short and full of trouble. But the King either out of magnanimity or contempt of that Art, going on with the Ceremony; the Jewes prediction was found true: for he reigned not fully five yeers, and with ill successe in his attempts against the Moors. 7 Henry Duke of Viseo (Visontium the Latines call it) the second sonne of John the first, created Knight of the Garter by King Henry the sixth, An. 1444. By whose encouragement, and example, the Portugueze began to be affected to forain Voyages: discovering in his time, (and for the most part under his conduct also) the Islands of Azores, Madera, Holy-Port, those of Capo Verde, and a great part of the coast of Africk, as far as Guinea; He dyed An. 1465. 8 Alfonso the fifth, who warring on the Moors in Africk, took from them the strong Towns of Tanger, Alcaser, and Arzilla. 9 John the 2d, under whose reign, the Portugals fully setled themselves in Guinea, and the Realms of Congo; discovering all the Coasts and Isles of Africk, (not before discovered) as far as to the Cape of Good-hope, Anno 1487. planting, and fortifying as they passed: the whole Discovery of Africk, the East-Indies, and Brasil, being perfected in the Reign of King 10 Emanuel; under whom also they discomfited great Armies of the Turks, and Sultans of Egypt, bringing by Sea the riches of the East into the West. 11 Sebastian, the Granchild of King John, Sonne of Emanuel, embarking himself unadvisedly in the Wars of Africk, lost his life (as it is generally supposed) at the battell of Alcasar, in which three Kings fell in one day. But many of the Portugals are of opinion, that he was not killed, but that for shame and sorrow he returned not home; wandring from one place to another, and at the last was found and avowed at Venice: thence carryed to Naples, where he was kept three dayes in a dark Dungeon, without any sustenance but a knife and a halter; brought into Spain by the Kings command, where at last he dyed. A man in whom so many circumstances met, to make up a truth, that the very Spaniards used to say, that either he was the true Sebastian, or else the Devil in his likeness. But whether true or not, is not now materiall, death having put an end to that disputation; though the controversie which ensued upon his death for the Crown of Portugal be not yet decided. For though King Philip the 2d of Spain succeeded in next after Henry the Cardinal King (who only came upon the Stage that the Competitors might have time to declare their Titles); and claimed the Crown as eldest Heir male, and neerest Kinsman to King Henry: yet all the World was not well satisfied, in the Justice and Equity of his demands. In the carrying on of which affairs he seemed to deal very candidly to the eyes of men, not biassed by their proper Interest: offering to submit his Title to a Disputation, professing that the Laws of Portugal were more favourable to him, than the Law of Castile; and openly acknowledging, that if he should chance to die before the said Henry, his eldest Sonne, as being a degree further off, would come behind some others of the Pretendants to it, of whom himself had the precedence. But finding nothing done by Henry, and meaning to make sure work after his decease, (Antonio the Bastard having got possession of Lisbon, and taking on himself as King, by a popular and tumultuous Election) he raised an Army under the command of Ferdinand de Toledo, Duke of Alva, and subdued all that stood against him; Katharine the Dutchess of Braganze, Daughter of Prince Edward, surrendring also all her interests and pretensions to him; so entring by a mixt title of descent and Arms, An. 1580. Threescore yeers it was peaceably enjoyed by the Kings of Spain, when sodainly dispossessed by a potent faction, appearing for John Duke of Braganze, descended from the youngest Sonne of King Emanuel: which brought so cunningly and successively in his behalf, that the K. of Spain was sooner disseized of Portugal, than he heard of any plot or practise set on foot against him, An 1639. In which it is to be observed, that as King Philip the 2d, for the better obtaining of this Crown, had embroyled the French, ingaging that King in a bloody war against the Protestants of that Kingdom; to make him sure enough from troubling him in his present Enterprize: so the French Ministers had caused a revolt in Catalogne; to the end, that when the King of Spain was busied in reducing that Province, the Portugals might have opportunity to redeem themselves from the power of the Spaniards; whom the Antipathie betwixt the Nations made lesse pleasing to them. Nor was it a partiall defection only, or the loss of Portugal and no more; but a generall falling off of the whole Estate, in Africk, Asia, America, in the Isles and Continents: the Accessories, (excepting only the Town of Ceuta in Barbary) going the same way, as the Principall did. And here me thinks that grave and deliberate Nation of the Spaniards may be justly taxed, for committing a greater Solœcism in point of State, than ever people did before them: in that having got the full and peaceable possession of the Crown of Portugal, and all the out-parts and Members of it; they continued all the Garrisons and strong holds of the whole Estate, in the hands of the Natives. By means whereof, when Portugal it self fell off from the King of Spain, the Provinces and Plantations did the like, without any hæsitancie: which, had some of the chief peeces in every Province, Factory, and Plantation, being brought by little and little (if not all at once) into the power of the Castilians; might have been easily prevented. Nor hath the Spaniard hitherto attempted any thing materiall, for the recovery of that Kingdom: having been ever since so overlaid by the French in Catalogne, Navarre, Biscay, Flanders, Artoys, and Italy; that he hath not had much leizure to attend that business. But leaving him and them to their own affairs, it is now time to represent you with a Catalogue of

Reign

The Kings of Portugal.

Valentia.

1580 18 Philip the ſecond of Spain, Sonne of Charls King of Caſtile and Emperour, and of the Lady Mary his Wife, daughter of Emanuel. 18.

1598 19 Philip II. of Portugal, and III. of Spain.

1621 20 Philip III. of Portugal, and IV. of Spain. During his Reign the Portugueze weary of the Spaniſh Government, choſe for their King 1636 21 John Duke of Bragance, the IV. of that name, a Prince of great poſſeſſions, and of Royall race, who hitherto hath peaceably enjoyed it.

Now that we may the better ſee by what title, both the Kings of Spain, and the Dukes of Bragance, claim the Crown of Portugal; and what other pretenders there were to it, on the death of Sebaſtian; and what right as well Antonio the Baſtard (but alleadging a ſentence of Legitimation) as the Princes of the Houſe of Savoy did pretend unto it: we will lay down their Genealogies from King Emanuel, in this following Scheme.

Emanuel had theſe Children.

1 John, King of Portugal — John Prince of Portugal — Sebaſtian, King of Portugal.

2 Lewis — Don Antonio a Baſtard. — Chriſtopher and others.

3 Henry the Cardinall, King of Portugal.

4 Edward: 1 Mary, wedded to Alexander Duke of Parma. — Rainuccio Farneſis. 2 Katharine, maryed to John Duke of Bragance.

5 Mary, maryed to Charles the fifth, King of Caſtile. — Philip the II. King of Spain.

6 Beatrix maryed to Charles Duke of Savoy.

By this it may appear how the claims are grounded; but whether title will prevail cannot now be told. Suffice it, that as the Royall line of Portugal did begin in an Henry, ſo it ended in an Henry alſo: the male line failing in the perſon of the Cardinall-King, and the Crown falling (on whomſoever it ſhall faſten) on the Heirs of the Females.

The principall Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, are, 1 Of Avis, ſo called from a Town of that name in Portugal, the ſeat thereof; founded by Sanctius or Sancho the firſt, in imitation of the Order of Alcantara, whoſe Green Croſs they wear; but equall to it neither in power nor riches.

2 Of CHRIST, inſtituted by Denys King of Portugal, who conferred on them all the Lands and Poſſeſſions of the exautorated Templars; confirmed by Pope John the 22d. An. 1321. Their Robe is a Black Caſſock under a White Surcoat; over which a Red Croſs, ſtroaked in the midſt with a white line: their duty to expell the Moors out of Batica, the next Neighbour to Portugal. To which Crown they have added many gallant Countreys in Aſia, Africk, and Braſil; and ſo improved their own Eſtates, that all the Iſles in the Atlantick do belong to them: beſides the rents of the Mine of S. George in Guinea, amounting to 100000 Ducats of yearly income.

The Arms are Argent, on five Eſcocheons Azure, as many Bezants in Saltier of the firſt, pointed Sable, within a Border Gules, charged with ſeven Towers, Or. Which five Eſcocheons were born in memory of five Kings, whom Alfonſo the firſt King ſlew at the battell of Obrique, An. 1139. the Border with the Towers or Caſtles, being added by Alfonſo the third, on his Inveſtiture into the Kingdom of Algarve, by Alfonſo the fifth of Caſtile, An. 1257. whoſe Daughter Beatrix he then maried, and ſo conceived himſelf to have ſome relation to the Arms of that Kingdom. And ſo proceed we on to thoſe Provinces, which are under the Government of Aragon; the third great body of this State.

VALENTIA hath on the Eaſt, the Mediterranean; on the Weſt, parts of Caſtile, and Aragon; on the North, Catalogne; and Murcia, upon the South. It is watered with the Rivers 1 Xucar, called of old Sucron, and Surus; 2 Guadalander, ſignifying a River of pure water; and 3 Millar.

This Countrey ſtandeth in the moſt temperate and pleaſing Air of all Spain, full of Gardens, and places of wonderfull delight; where groweth abundance of Rice, Sugar, Corn, and Fruit: garniſhed all the yeer long with ſweet-ſmelling flowers, and miraculouſly fruitfull of Pomgranats, Limons, and other delicacies. It hath alſo Mines of Silver at Buriol, of Gold at Lodar, of Iron at Finiſtrat, of Alabaſter at Piacent, and of Allom, Lime, and Plaiſter in many places. From thence alſo come the beſt Silks in the World, Cotton of Marcia, Crimſon, Scarlet, and other precious colours, and rich perfumes. Finally, all the ſenſes of man may be delighted, and refreſhed, with that which comes from this happy Region; in quality and ſweetneſſe much like that of Naples. The delicacy and great pleaſures whereof, have made the Inhabitants of it to be thought leſſe warlike than the other Spaniards. The Sheep of this Countrey alſo bear the fineſt Fleeces, of any in Spain; firſt ſtocked with Cotſwold ſheep from England, at the requeſt of John King of Aragon, An. 1465. by the imprudent courteſie of K. Edward the fourth.

Places of moſt note in it are, 1 Alicante, a noted Port on the Mediterranean, whence come our true Alicant Wines, made of the juice of Mulberies; by Ptolemie called Illicias, by Mela, Ilice; from whence the Bay adjoyning is called Sinus Ilicitanus, now the Bay of Alicante. 2 Orivela, a Bishops See, on the River Segura, which divides this Province from Murcia. 3 Segorve, a Bishops See, by Ptolemie named Segobriga, the chief City in old times of the Celtiberi. 4 Xelva, supposed to be the Incibilis of Livie, where Scipio defeated Hanno and his Carthaginians. 5 Valentia, a fair, pleasant, and well-traded City, the See of an Archbishop, and giveth name to the whole Province: in its first glory, one of the chief Roman Colonies in these parts of Spain; in its last, the Royal Seat of the Mooriſh Kings of this Countrey. Situate three miles from the Mediterranean, not far from the mouth of the River Dureas, now called Guadalander: and is by some said to have been heretofore named Roma, which signifieth strength. But when the Romans mastered it, to distinguish it from their Rome, it was called Valentia: which in the Latine Tongue, is of the same signification with the Greek ἡ Ρώμη. Here is an University, in which S. Dominick, the Father of the Dominicans, studied. 6 Laurigi, now a smal Village, once a Town of great strength, called Lauron: which Sertorius besieged, took and burned, even then when Pompey, whose confederates the Lauronites were, stood with his whole Army nigh enough unto the flame to warm his hands; and yet durst not succour it. 7 Cullera, a Sea Town standing at the mouth of the River Xucar. It was formerly named Sucron, after the name of the River: and is famous in Plutarch, for the victory which Sertorius here got of Pompey; Pompey's Army being not only overthrown, but himself with life hardly escaping. 8 Morvedre, situate in or near the place of the old Saguntum; the People whereof when besieged by Annibal, continued so obstinate in the expectation of aid from Rome, that they chose rather to burn themselves, than yeeld up the Town: the occasion of the second War betwixt Rome, and Carthage. First Founded by the Zacynthians, and after this destruction of it, repaired, or re-edified by the Romans, (they could not possibly do less) by whom made a Colonie. 9 Gandia, which gives the title of a Duke to the house of Borgia, and was the stile of Francisco Borgia, the eldest Son of Pope Alex. the sixth (of this noble Family) called commonly in Guicciardine by the name of the Duke of Gandie. 10 Denia, seated on the brink of the Mediterranean, over which it hath a goodly prospect; the Marquisate of the Duke of Lerma. First Founded by the Massilians, by whom called Dianium. Not far from which is the Promontory of Ferraria, of old called Promontorium Dianium, the Refuge of Sertorius in his Wars against Pompey, and Metellus, both of great renown: the one aged, and of much experience; the other young, and of high resolutions. And yet Sertorius found himself more troubled with the old mans gravity, than the young mans gallantry: insomuch as he was used to say, That had it not been for the old Woman Metellus, he would have whipped the Boy Pompey home with Rods. For he had twice overcome this Great Pompey, before Metellus was joyned in the Action with him: the first time dangerously wounding, and the second time driving him out of the Field. But fighting against both he was over-matched; and yet seemed rather to retire than flie before them: the Spaniards behaving themselves very valiantly in the time of these Wars under him; to which Florus alludeth, saying, Nec unquam magis apparuit Hispani militis Vigor, quàm Romano duce. At the last when he had a long time upheld the Marian faction, he was traiterously murthered by Perpenna one of his Associates; for which Metellus and Pompey had a Triumph at Rome. So high an estimate did they set upon the casual death of this poor Proscript.

Catalonia.

The Ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Bastitani, the Edetani, Contestani, and some part of the Celtiberi; originally of the Province of Tarraconensis, afterward (in the sub-dividing of that Province by Constantine) of Carthaginensis. In the declining of the Empire first subdued by the Alani, who were scarce warm in their new dwellings, when dissetsed by the Gothes. From the Gothes taken by the Moores, of whose Kingdom reckoned as a Province; till the fatal overthrow given to Mahomet Enasir at the battel of Sierra Morena, and the departure of the Moors of Morocco to their own Countrey, which followed presently upon it. By Zeit Aben-Zeit, the Brother of this Mahomet, made a distinct Kingdom of it self, Anno 1214. but taken from him by one Zaen a Prince of the Moores of Spain, under colour that he had a purpose of turning Christian, and making his Kingdom subject to the Crown of Aragon, (as indeed he did) Anno 1228. Conquered from Zaen the new King, before he could enjoy the sweets of a new raised Kingdom, by James King of Aragon, Anno 1238 Since reckoned a Member of that Kingdom, never dismembred from the body of it since the first uniting. But still so overgrown with Moores (not to be blamed for loving such an excellent seat) that at the final expulsion of that people by King Philip the third, there were reckoned no fewer, than 22000 Families of them in this little Countrey.

The Armes hereof were Gules, a Tower embattelled Argent purfled (or pennond) Sable.

CATALONIA is bounded on the North-east, with the Land of Rousillon and the Pyrenees; on the East, with the Mediterranean; on the South, with Valentia; and on the North and North-west, with Aragon. The Countrey somewhat mountainous and full of Woods, and not very well cultivated: beholding more in that respect, for Corn, Fruits, and other necessary provisions unto the courtesie of the Sea, which serves them out of other Countreys, than to the Goodness of the Land. And yet it is as well watered as most parts of Spain, having in it besides the Ebro, or Iberus, common to many other Provinces; and Cinia, which runneth betwixt it and Valentia; the Rivers of, 1 Tardera, 2 Lobregat, 3 Segre, 4 Francolino, 5 Besons, and 6 Onhar.

Catalonia. The name of Catalonia ſome derive from the Caſtellani, who formerly inhabited ſome part hereof: others will have it called Catalonia, corruptly for Gothalania, from the mixture of the Gothes and Alani, ſucceſſively the Maſters of it: and ſome more improbably from one Carthalot, a Noble man of this Countrey, who lived here they know not when. More like it is, that it took this name from the Catalauni, an old French people of Languedoc, the adjoyning Province; from whom the fields called Campi Catalaunici near unto Tholouſe, took denomination. But from what root ſoever they came, certain it is that they are generally a ſtout and couragious People, as may be ſeen by their exploits in moſt parts of Greece, which they miſerably ſpoyled and pillaged many years together, in the time of Andronicus the ſecond, to whoſe aid called in. But then withall they are a very perverſe and obſtinate people, little obſervant of the pleaſure or profit of their natural Princes; but on the other ſide, ſo zealous in defence of their own Priviledges, that they have created more trouble to their Kings under that pretence, than all the reſt of the ſubjects of Spain. Of which we need no other inſtance than their late revolt unto the French, Anno 1638. which drew after it the loſs of the Realm of Portugal, and many Towns of great importance in Flanders, and the reſt of the Netherlands.

Principal places in it are, 1 Barcelone, ſituate on the Mediterranean, near the River Lobregat; accommodated with a large and commodious Port, where commonly the Spaniſh Souldiers do embark, which are bound for Italie. The Town adorned with large ſtreets, handſome buildings, ſtrong wals, and a very pleaſant ſituation: called Barcino by the ancient writers, in whoſe time it was a Roman Colony; now honoured with a Biſhops See, and the Seat of the Vice-roy. 2 Tarragone, ſeated alſo on the Mediterranean, Eaſt of the River Francolino: built, fortified and peopled by the two Scipio's, the Father and Unkle of Africanus, for a Counter-Fort to Carthagena (or New Carthage) not long before founded by the Carthaginians. Afterwards made the Metropolis of Tarraconenſis, hence denominated; but ſtript of that honour by Toledo, and is now but two miles in compaſs, and containing not above 700 Families. Yet ſtill it holdeth the reputation of an Archbiſhops See, contending with Toledo for the Primacy of all Spain (as Braga alſo doth in the Kingdom of Portugal): the controverſie being undecided to this very day. 3 Ampurias, on the ſame ſea alſo, once of great eſteem, founded by the Maſſilians; a Roman Colony, and a well Traded Town, as the name doth ſignifie: this being the Emporia ſpoken of by Strabo and Ptolemie; now not obſervable for any thing but a ſafe Road for ſhips. 4 Blanos, 5 Palamos, and 6 Roſas, all Ports on the ſame Sea, but ſubject unto divers winds, and not very ſpacious. More in the Land are 7 Girone, a ſmall but handſomly built, and a well traded Town; a Biſhops See, and the title of the eldeſt Son of Aragon, called Prince of Girone. Which title was firſt given to John, the eldeſt Son to King Pedro the fourth, immediately upon his birth, Anno 1351. and hath ſince continued. 8 Tortoſa, on the River Ebro, in the moſt rich and pleaſant part of all the Countrey; recovered from the Moores by Raymond the fifth, Earl of Barcelone and Prince of Aragon, about the year 1146. The principal Agent in that work, William Raymond of Monenda, Seneſchal of Catalogne; rewarded for his good ſervice in it, with a third part of the City. A goodly Town, and of good importance; garriſoned by the French, ſince the late revolt of Catalonia from the King of Spain; and like to draw a great part of this Province after it, whileſt it continueth in their power, or the poſſeſſion of their party. 9 Urgel, a Earls honour, and a Biſhops See, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenees. 10 Momblane, which heretofore gave the title of Duke, to the ſecond Sons of the Kings of Aragon. 11 Moncada, once a Town of ſtrength, but of more note for giving denomination to the noble Family de Moncada, Hereditary Seneſchals of Catalogne, and Lords of Bearn. Here is alſo on the Eaſt part where it joyneth with the land of Rouſillon, the Promontory called of old Templum Veneris, now Cabo de Ceux. And not far from Barcelone the Mountain called Moniſerrato, on the ſides full of Hermitages and Anchorets cells; and having towards the ſummit of it, a Chappel dedicated to the Virgin Mary: much famed and reſorted to by Pilgrims from all parts of the World, for her miraculous Image, which is there enſhrined.

The old Inhabitants of this Province were the Caſtellani, Auxitani, Indigites, Coſetani, with part of the Ilercones and Iaccetani; all of them part of Tarraconenſis. In the declining of the Empire, ſeized on by the Alani; and they ſoon after vanquiſhed, if not diſpoſſeſſed, by the power of the Gothes. Loſt to the Moores in the general ruine of the whole; from them recovered by the puiſſance of Charles the Great: who having taken the City of Barcelone, Anno 801. gave it to one Bernard a Frenchman, with the title of Earl, who Governed the Countrey for that Emperor; as Wifredus, or Godfredus his ſucceſſor, did for Lewis the Godly. Godfredus Son to this Godfrede, by the gift of Charles the Groſs, was the firſt Proprietary; united unto Aragon, by the mariage of Earl Raymond, with the Heir of that Kingdom. Firſt held in Vaſſalage of the French, but that acknowledgement releaſed to King James the firſt, Ann. 1260. by the King St. Lewis, the King of Aragon releaſing at the ſame time his pretenſions and rights of Soveraignty to Carcaſſon, Beziers, Albi, Niſmes, and ſome other pieces in France, of old belonging to that Crown. But before that the Catellans had neglected the acknowledgement of their ſubjection to that Crown, it being ordered by Alfonſo the ſecond King of Aragon, about the year 1180. that the year of the reigns of the Kings of France ſhould no more be uſed in any inſtruments or writings which concerned that People; but the year only of the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour: which in effect was to diſclaim the Soveraignty of the Crown of France.

The Armes hereof were four Pallets Gules, in a field Or; now the Armes of Aragon. Which Armes were given to Geofrie, ſurnamed the Hairie, the firſt Earl hereof, by Lewis the Stammering, Emperor and King of France, to whoſe aid he came againſt the Normans with a Troop of Horſe: and being bloudy in the fight, deſired of the Emperor to give him ſome Coat of Armes, which he and his Poſterity might from thenceforth uſe. Who dipping his four fingers in the bloud of the Earl, drew them thwart his Shield (which was only of Plain Gold, without any Deviſe) ſaying, This ſhall be your Armes hereafter.

11. The Kingdom of MAIORCA.

THE Kingdom of MAIORCA contained the Iſlands of Majorca, Minorca, Ebuiſa, and Frumentaria, in the Mediterranean; the Land of Rouſillon, Sardaigne, or Cerdagne, in the Continent of Spain; and the Earldom of Montpelier, in France.

The Land of ROUSILLON, which is the firſt Member of this Kingdom, is ſituate betwixt two Branches of the Pyrenees; bounded on the South with the Mediterranean; on the Weſt, with Catalogne; on the North, with the ſaid Pyrenees; on the Eaſt, with Languedoc in France. Places of moſt importance in it, are 1 Helna, a Biſhops See on the River Techo. 2 Collibre, now a poor and ignoble Village, of note only for a ſafe and commodious Harbour; but formerly the great and famous City of Illiberis, ſo often mentioned in the wars betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3 Perpignan (in Latine, Perpinianum) built in the year 1068. by Guinard Earl of Rouſillon, in a pleaſant Plain on the River Thelis: now a rich Town, well traded, and as ſtrongly fortified againſt the French; to whoſe fury in the time of war it is ſtill expoſed. Beſieged by Henry, Son to King Francis the firſt, with a puiſſant Army, Anno 1542. Partly to be revenged upon Charles the fifth, who had before attempted Marſeilles in Provence; and partly to get into his hands a chief door of Spain, by which he might at all times enter into that Kingdom. But he found here ſuch ſtrong reſiſtance, that he was fain to raiſe his ſiege, with as little honour, as Charles had gotten by the Expedition which he made into Provence. 4 Salſus (the Salſulæ of Strabo) a ſtrong place on the Frontier of Languedoc; fortified according to the Rules of modern Fortification, and one of the chief Bulwarks againſt the French. 5 Rouſillon, a Caſtle of more honour and antiquity, then ſtrength or beauty, by Plinie, and other Ancients, called Ruſeino, the Countrey Comitatus Ruſeinonenſis, now Rouſillon, and the Land of Rouſillon; accounted heretofore a part of Gaule Narbonenſis, and added unto Spain in the time of the Gothes. On the death of Gerrard, the laſt Proprietary Earl, it was added to the Crown of Aragon by Alfonſo the ſecond; by James the firſt, laid to the Kingdom of Majorca; united to the Crown again by King Pedro the fourth. After that ſold (or rather pawned) by King John the ſecond, to Lewis the eleventh of France for the ſum of 300000 Crowns, Anno 1462. and freely returned back again to Ferdinand the ſecond, (after called the Catholick) by King Charles the eighth, Anno 1493, conditioned that he ſhould not hinder him in the Conqueſt of Naples. Joyning hereto as part of the Kingdom of Majorca, was the Countrey of Sardaigne, or Cerdagne; the habitation of the Cerretani in former times, and afterwards accounted of as a part of Aragon. The chief Town of thoſe Cerretani, called Julia Lybica; the principall now being hath the name of Cardona (or Sardona as the Spaniards commonly pronounce) retaining ſome reſemblance to the name of the Nation. The Countrey lying in the Valleys of the Pyrenees, and conſequently in a corner ſomewhat out of the way; was thought fit to be added to the Land of Rouſillon (for the better endowment of this Kingdom): the fortunes of which it hath ſince followed, as appendent on it; pawned when that was unto the French, and with that reſtored.

2 The Earldom of MONTPELIER is ſituate in the Province of Languedoc, adjoyning to the Land of Rouſillon; ſo called from Montpelier, the chief City: for the deſcription whereof, we muſt ſend the Reader back to France, having ſpoken of it there already. All I ſhall here repeat is this, that Mary the Daughter of William the laſt Earl thereof, brought it by mariage to her Husband Peter the ſecond, King of Aragon: and that it was ſold to Philip de Valoys the French King, by James King of Majorca, of that name the third. Nothing elſe memorable in the ſtory and affairs of this little Earldom, but

Majorca. the fortunes of the two last Countesses of it. Of which the first being Daughter of Emanuel Comnenus Emperor of Constantinople, and affianced to Alfonso the second, King of Aragon, was brought as far as Montpelier in her way towards Spain, and there lodged with her whole retinue in the house of William then Earl thereof, Anno 1174. But hearing that Alfonso, contrary to his word and promise, was in treaty of another mariage with the Princess Sancha of Castile (which he celebrated very shortly after) and ashamed to return to the Court of her Father after such an injury; she hearkned to the counsel of her Lords and followers, who perswaded her to mary with Earl William, then a lusty Batchelor; which was done accordingly. To him she brought a Daughter named Mary (their only childe) afterwards maried to Don Pedro the second, Son of Alfonso, and successor to him in that Kingdom: so that although the Mother could not have the happiness to be Queen of Aragon; yet the Daughter had. But being of no very great beauty, the King her husband grew weary of her, and would have been divorced, had the Pope consented: whose consent not being to be had, he forsook her bed, and betook himself to other women. Which the Queen not being otherwise able to remedy, prevailed with one of the Grooms of his chamber called Pedro Flavian, to bring her one night unto his bed (when some other Mistress was expected) and by him did conceive that night, as it after proved: the King perceiving the deceit on the morrow morning, neither well pleased, nor much offended at the honest fraud they had put upon him. Of this conjunction was born a Son at Montpelier, whom they named James; successor to his Father in the Kingdom of Aragon, and to his Mother (the last Countesse of it) in the Earldom of Montpelier: united in his person into one Estate, and by him finally parted from it in the erection of the new Kingdome of Majorca, as before was said.

3 The Island of MAJORCA is situate in the Mediterranean, just over against Valentia; from which distant about 60 miles: about 300 miles in circuit, the length above an hundred, the breadth somewhat under; the number of Inhabitants reckoned at 30000. The Land on all sides towards the Sea is somewhat mountainous, and barren withall: the In-lands more Champian and fruitful; yeelding sufficient quantity of Oyl, Corn, Wines, and Fruits, for the use of its people. The whole Island is divided into 50 parts, (as so many Wapentakes) in every one of which are reckoned from 300 to 600 Families. No hurtful Creatures are here bred, except Conies only; and those not hurtful but by accident, of which more anon.

Places of chief note in the former times were 1 Palma, and 2 Pallentia, which had the rights of Roman Citizens. 3 Cinium, and 4 Cunici, which enjoyed the rights of the Latines; and 5 Bochri (or Bocchorum) which was in the condition of a Town confederate; besides divers others not so priviledged. Of these none left at this day but Palma only, vulgarly called Majorca, by the name of the Island; a Bishops See, the Seat of the Vice-roy for these Isles, and an University: the birth-place of Raymundus Lullius, a man of great wit, and profound judgement, the Author of some Books in the Art of Chymistrie; whose Works are read and studied in that University, as Aristotles are in others. This is the greater of the two Islands called Baleares, whence it had the name. Adjoyning hereunto two others of inferiour note, called Dragonera, and Cabrera; of which nothing memorable.

4 MINORCA, so called because it is the lesser of the Baleares, is situate Eastward of Majorca, from which distant near 100 miles; of about 60 miles in length and 150 miles in Circuit. More fruitful than the other, though less in quantity; of a rich soyl, which breedeth them great herds of Cattel, and Mules of the largest size of any in Spain: accommodated also with two convenient Havens, the one called Maon, the other Farnessus. Other considerable places are 1 Minorca, now so called by the name of the Island, but anciently known by the name of Mago: situate in the East part thereof, first founded by the Carthaginians, as the name imports. And so was also 2 Jamno, seated in the West (Duo parva Oppida, quibus a Pœnis indita nomina, saith Severus, Bishop of these Isles, Anno 420, or thereabouts.) It is now called Citadella or the little City. Here was also in the mid-land a third Town called Saniſera by Pliny, of which I finde now no track remaining.

5 EBUSA, now called YVICA, lyeth between the main Land and the Baleares, opposite to the Promontorie of Ferraria in the Realm of Valentia; from which distant about 50 miles, and near an hundred miles in compass. The Countrey plentiful of Corn, and all manner of Fruits; breeding no hurtful Creature, except Conies only; which many times destroy their Harvest. The chief Town here, is Yvica, (of old called Ebusus) the Inhabitants of which make yearly great store of Salt; wherewith they do not only furnish Spain, but some parts of Italie.

6 FRUMENTERA, so called from the plenty of Corn, is distant ten miles from Yvica, and about 60 miles from the main Land of Spain; in circuit about 70 miles. Not well inhabited by reason of the multitude of Serpents; for which called qy the Grecians Ophiusa, and Colubraria by the Latines. Both Islands anciently known by the name of Pityusæ, and Pityodes, from the abundance of Pines there growing.

About these Islands are six others of little worth, called 1 Vedra, 2 Conirello, and 3 Dragonago; 4 Another called Moncolibre, betwixt Majorca, and the influx of the River Iberus. 5 Alsaques, lying in the very mouth of that River: and 6 Scombraria, (anciently called the Island of Hercules) over against Carthagena; so named from a kind Tunny in Latine named Scombri, of which great shoales use to lie about it. All these, together with the Baleares, make up the Province of the Islands, the seventh Province of Spain.

But the chief glory of these Islands were the BALEARES, so called (as the general conceit is) from the Greek word βάλλειν, which signifieth to throw; because the people were so expert in throwing their Slings or Darts: but as Bochartus will needs have it (to the same effect) from Baal-iare, a Punick or Phœnician word, signifying a master in the Art of slinging. An Art so naturall and innative to the them, that Parents used to give no meat unto their Children, after some fit age, but what they could hit down with their Slings, from the top of a Beam. Of their dexterity at this weapon, there is much mention made in the Ancient Writers, as well Historians as Poets. And from this exercise they had the name also of Insulæ Gymnasiæ; or else because the people of it used to go naked to the wars, (and possibly enough in those first Ages of the world, at other times also) from the Greek word γυμνὸς, the same with Nudus in the Latine. Nor were they good at slinging only, but at swimming too, an exercise not ordinarily performed but by naked people; at which the very women are at this day expert: Biddulph reporting, in the relation of his travels, that being becalmed about these Islands, there came a Woman swimming from one of them with a Basket of fruit to sell. But that which made them most talked of in former times, was their harm done them by their Conies, which here, and in the neighbouring Continent increased so wonderfully: that Varro telleth us of a Town in Spain undermined by them; and Strabo, that they did not only destroy their Plants, but rooted up many of their trees. Insomuch that the Inhabitants did request the Romans to give them some new seats to inhabit in; ἐκβαλλειν γὰρ ὑπὸ πλήθους ζώων τὰ τῶν, being ejected by those creatures out of their possessions, whose multitudes they were not able to resist. And when that could not be obtained, they moved Augustus Cæsar (as Plinie telleth us) for some aid against them; who in stead of Souldiers, sent them Ferrets, by which their numbers were diminished in a little time.

These Islands were first planted by the Tyrians or Phœnicians, the founders of many of their Cities; one of which in the Isle of Ebusus had the name of Phœnissa: From them also they derived the Art of Slinging. Made subject to the Carthaginians, under the conduct of Hanno and Himilco, Anno M. 5500 or thereabouts; at what time the Decemviri governed Rome. Under that State they remained subject till the end of the second Punick war: when Carthage was no longer able to protect them, made a State of themselves; till conquered by Metellus, the Brother of him who subdued Creet. The people were much given to Piracy, and seeing the Roman Navy saying by their Coasts, supposed them to be Merchant men; assaulted them, and at first prevailed. But the Romans getting betwixt them and the shore, discovered from whence they came, and forced them to an unwilling submission; for which Metellus was rewarded with the honour of a Triumph. Being once made a Province of Spain, they always after that followed the fortunes thereof. In the distraction of the Empire of the Moores in Spain, they were united into one Kingdom, by the name of the Kingdom of Majorca; won from the Moores by Raymond Earl of Barcelone, with the help of the Genoese, 1102. By the Genoese delivered to the Moores again; and from them reconquered by James King of Aragon, descended from that Raymond, Anno 1228.

Of these Estates consisted the Kingdom of Majorca, erected by King James the first, immediately almost on his recovery of these Islands from the hands of the Moores; and by him given unto James his second Son, who fearing the displeasure of his Brother King Peter the third, submitted his new Kingdom to the Vassalage of the Crown of Aragon. Yet could not this so satisfie the ambition, or jealousies of those mightier Kings, as to preserve his Successors in possession of it: By Pedro the 4th extorted from King James, the fourth and last King thereof, under colour of denying his accustomed Homage. So ended

The Kings of Majorca, of the House of Aragon.

	4	James III. But being aided by them, and attempting the recovery of it, he was discomfited and slain in the Isle of Majorca, Anno 1348. as before is said.

The Forces of this little Kingdom may be best estimated by the Army which the Moores brought into the field against James the first, for defence of the Island of Majorca, consisting of 50000 Horse: but better by the Army of James the last King hereof, in defence of his Estates against Pedro the 4th; (for the Moors might possibly be aided by the rest of their Nation) consisting of 3000 Horse, and 15000 Foot, of his naturall Subjects.

ARAGON, hath on the East, the Land of Rousillon, and the Pyrenees; on the West, the two Castiles; on the North, Navarre; on the South, and South-East, Catalonia, and some part of Valentia. So called from the River Aragon, by which it is divided from the Realm of Navarre; where the first Princes of this house, having won certain Towns from the hands of the Infidels, commanded as Lords Marchers, under the Kings of that Realm: and called themselves for that reason, the Earls

Aragon. of Aragon: ſpreading the name as they enlarged their bounds, by enſuing conqueſts: as in like manner the great Earldom of Moſellets, founded by the diſherited Sons of Clodion ſecond King of the French, was named from that River, upon the courſe whereof, and the parts adjoyning, it was firſt erected.

The Countrey lyeth on both ſides of the River Iberus, and hath alſo ſeveral Riverets, as Gallego, Senga, Xalon, and Cagedo, running like ſo many veins through the body of it, yet is generally ſo deſtitute of waters, and ſo ill-inhabited, eſpecially towards the Mountains of the Pyrenees; that one may travel many dayes, and find neither Town, nor houſe, nor people. But where the Rivers have their courſe, the Caſe is different; the Valleys yeelding plenty both of Corn and Fruits, eſpecially about Calatainb, where the air is good, and the ſoil fruitful.

The antient Inhabitants were the Celtiberi, who took up a great part of Tarraconenſis; divided into leſſer Tribes, not here conſiderable. Theſe ſprung originally from the Celtæ, (as before is ſaid) the greateſt and moſt potent Nation of all Gallia: who being too populous for their Countrey, or willing to employ themſelves upon new Adventures, paſſed the Pyrenees, and mingled themſelves with the Iberi. From thence the name of Celtiberi, and Celtiberia, according unto this of Lucan.

Gallorum, Celtæ miſcentes nomen Iberi.

Who being chas'd from Gaul, their home, did frame,
Of Celtæ and Iberi mixt, one name.

Places of moſt importance in it, are, 1 Jacca, the chief City heretofore of the Jaccetani, ſeated amongſt the Pyrenees; and for that cauſe choſen for the chief ſeat and reſidence of the firſt Kings of Aragon: continued there till the taking of Saragoſſa, by Alfonſo the firſt. 2 Calatainb, ſeated on Xalon in the beſt Countrey of Aragon; ſo called from Aiub a Mooriſh Prince, the firſt Founder of it. Not far from which upon an hill, ſtood the old Town Bilbilis, a Municipium of the Romans, and the birth-place of Martiall. 3 Venaſque, amongſt the Pyrenees. 4 Balbaſtro, on the Senga, formerly called Burtina, now a Biſhops See. 5 Lerida, on the River Segre, as ſome ſay, but others place it on the Senga: which riſing in the Pyrenees, divideth Catalonia from Aragon, and ſo paſſeth into Iberus. Now an Univerſity, called formerly Ilerda, and famous for the Incounter hapning nigh unto it betwixt Herculeius Treaſurer or Queſtor to Sertorius, and Manilius Proconſul of Gallia: wherein Manilius was ſo diſcomfited, and his Army conſiſting of 3 Legions of Foot, and 1500 Horſe ſo routed; that he almoſt alone was ſcarce able to recover this City, few of his Souldiers ſurviving the overthrow. 6 Moſon, famous for entertaining the King of Spain every third year: At which time the people of Aragon, Valence, and Catalogne, preſent the King with 600000 Crowns, viz. 300000 for Catalogne, 200000 for Aragon, and 100000 for Valentia. And well may they thus do, for at other times the ſit Rent-Free as it were: only they acknowledge the King of Spain to be the head of their Common-wealth. This Revenue is proportionably 200000 Crowns a year, all which, if not more, the King again expends, in maintaining his Vice-Royes in their ſeveral Provinces. 7 Hueſca, (called of old Oſca) ſomewhat South of Iaca, an Univerſity, a place long ſince dedicated to learning. For hither Sertorius cauſed all the Noblemens Sons of Spain to be brought, and provided them of School-maſters for the Greek and Latine tongues: bearing their Parents in hand, that he did it only to make them fit to undergoe charge in the Common-wealth; but indeed to have them as hoſtages, for their Fathers Faith and Loyalty towards him. 8 Saragoſſa, on the River Iberus, called at firſt Salduba, by reaſon of the Saltpits there: but being afterwards re-edified by Cæſar Auguſtus, it had the name of Cæſarea Auguſta (whence that of Saragoſſa had its origination) by whom firſt made a Colonie of the Romans, and afterwards a Municipium or Free-Burough, ſuffered to live according to the Laws of the Countrey. Under the Romans, it was one of the ſeven Juridical Reſorts of Tarraconenſis; under the Moores a peculiar Kingdom of it ſelf; and now a Biſhops See, and an Univerſity. Amongſt the Kings of it, when it was a Kingdom, two are chiefly famous, viz. 1 Marſilius, who joyned with the confederate Moores and Chriſtians, againſt Charles the Great, in the battel of Roncevaux. 2ly, Aigoland, of whom there goeth a tale in Archbiſhop Turpine, that being by the ſaid Charles perſwaded to become a Chriſtian; he came unto the Emperours Court very well accompanyed, according to the time appointed. Where finding many Lazars and poor People before the Gates, attending for their uſuall Alms from the Emperours Table; he asked what and who they were, and was anſwered, that they were the poor ſervants of God: upon which words he ſpeedily returned again, Proteſting that he would never ſerve that God, who could keep his Servants no better. Took from the Moores by Alfonſo King of Aragon and Navarre, Ann. 1118. it was made the ſeat Royall of the Kings of Aragon, removed hither from Iacca: and of late times hath been the Seat of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Spain. Which together with the being an Archbiſhops See, and an Univerſity, hath ſo enriched it, that it is one of the faireſt Cities in all Spain, for handſomneſſe of ſtreets, and ſumptuouſneſſe of Palaces, and publick buildings; containing 17 Pariſh Churches, and fourteen Monaſteries, beſides divers Chappels, erected in moſt parts of it to the Virgin Mary.

Who

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Tract, hath been ſhewn before; toſſed from the Carthaginians unto the Romans, from them to the Gothes, and finally unto the Moores. Recovered from the Moores about the firſt beginning of the Kingdoms of Leon, and Sobrarbre. At which time one Aznar, a man of great puiſſance and action, poſſeſſed himſelf of ſome Lands on the Banks of the River Aragon, to be holden by him and his Succeſſors of the Kings of Sobrarbre, or Navarre, Anno 775; the Title of Earl being given unto him, and them, for their greater honour. The ſixth of which from Aznar was Fortunio Ximines, whoſe Daughter Urraca being maried to Don Garcia Inigo King of Navarre, Anno 867, conveyed this Earldom to that Crown: of which it continued a Member till Sancho the Great, King of Navarre, and Earl of Aragon, erected it into a Kingdom, and gave it unto Raymir his natural Son, Anno 1034. The whole ſucceſſion I ſhall borrow from the Spaniſh Hiſtories; firſt taking (as in other places) ſome ſhort notes of the Princes which have been moſt obſervable in the courſe of the Story. Of which the principal were, 1 Aznarius the firſt Earl, his Eſtate then containing ſome few Towns on the River of Aragon: not much enlarged when made a Kingdom by Sancho King of Navarre, ſurnamed the Great, deſcended from Fortunio the ſecond of Navarre, and Urraca the Siſter and Heir of Fortunius Ximines, the laſt Earl of Aragon. 2 Raymir the firſt King, baſe Son to Sancho the Great, advanced to this honour to the prejudice of Garcia, eldeſt Son of Sancho; for ſtanding ſo generouſly in defence of Donna Elvira, the Wife of his Father, wrongfully and unnaturally accuſed of Adultery, by the ſaid Garcia her own Son: againſt whom he undertook to maintain her honour in a ſingle Combat. 3 Raymond, Earl of Barcelona, who by mariage with Petronilla the Heir of Aragon, united Catalonia unto that Kingdom. 4 Peter the ſecond, who on a ſuperſtitious zeal, firſt made his Kingdom tributary to the See of Rome, Anno 1214. But preſently repenting of it, he ſided againſt the Pope with the Albigenſes; ſlain in their cauſe by Simon de Montfort, and the reſt of his Aſſociates in that war. 5 James the firſt, who conquered the Kingdoms of Valentia, and Majorca; and was the firſt that enlarged his Dominions upon the Seas: being ſhut up from making any further impreſſion on the Moores, by the interjection of Caſtile betwixt him and them. 6 Peter the third, pretending a title unto Sicil, in right of Conſtantia his Wife, the Daughter of Manfred King thereof, and by the laſt Will of Corradine, rightful King both of that and Naples, extorted that Iſland from the French, maſſacred by him at the fatal Sicilian Veſpers. 7 James the ſecond, by whom the Iſle of Sardinia was added to the Crown of Aragon. 8 Martin the laſt of the maſculine race of the Houſe of Barcelone; to whom ſucceeded, 9 Ferdinand of Caſtile, Son of John King of Caſtile, and Leonora the Daughter of Peter the fourth of Aragon. 10 Alfonſo Son of Ferdinand, adopted by Queen Joan the ſecond, got the Kingdom of Naples. Of Ferdinand the ſecond, ſurnamed the Catholick, we ſhall ſpeak more anon in the cloſe of all.

The Earls of Aragon.

775	2	Aznarius II. Son of Aznario the firſt.
	3	Galindo, Son of Aznario the ſecond.
	4	Ximines Aznario, Son of Galindo, ſlain in the battel of Roncevall againſt Charles the Great.
803	5	Ximines Garcia, brother to Galindo.
	6	Fortunio Ximines, Son of Ximines Garcias, the laſt of the male iſſue of Aznarius.
	7	Fortunio II. King of Navarre, and Earl of Aragon in right from his Mother Urraca, the Siſter and Heir of Fortunio Ximines, the laſt Earl of the Houſe of Aznarius.
901	8	Sancho, ſurnamed Abarca, King of Navarre, and Earl of Aragon.
920	9	Garcia, Son of Sancho King of Navarre, &c.
969	10	Sancho II. of Aragon, and III. of Navarre.
993	11	Garcias, ſurnamed the Trembler, King of Navarre, and Earl of Aragon, Son to Sancho the third.
1000	12	Sancho the Great, King of Navarre, and Earl of Aragon in his own right, and of Caſtile in the right of Elvira his Wife; Monarch of all Spain, then in the hands of the Chriſtians, except the Kingdom of Leon only: erected the Earldom of Aragon into a Kingdom, and gave it for the reaſon before ſpecified, to his Son Raymir.

1458 19 John II. Sonne of Ferdinand, and Brother of Alfonſo, King of Navarre alſo in right of Blanch his Wife. 20.
1478 20 Ferdinand II. of that name of Aragon, Sonne of John the ſecond, King of Aragon and Navarre by a ſecond Wife: and the fifth of that name of Caſtile and Leon, which Kingdoms he obtained by the mariage of Iſabel or Elizabeth, Siſter and Heir of Henry the fourth; uniting thereby the great Eſtates of Caſtile and Aragon, and all Appendixes of either. In which regard he may well challenge the firſt place in the Catalogue of the Monarchs of Spain, to be preſented in due ſeaſon.

In the mean time to draw to a concluſion of the affairs and Eſtate of Aragon, we are to underſtand, that of all the Kingdoms which belong to the Spaniard, it is the moſt priviledged, and free from the abſolute command of the Kings of Spain: having in it ſuch a temper or mixture of Government, as makes the Kings hereof to be well-nigh titular; of little more authority than a Duke of Venice. For at the firſt erecting of this Eſtate, the better to encourage the people to defend themſelves againſt the Moors, they had many Priviledges indulged them; and amongſt others the creating of a Juſticiar or popular Magiſtrate; which, like the Ephori of Sparta, had in ſome caſes, ſuperiority over their Kings, reverſing their judgements, cancelling their Grants, and ſometimes cenſuring their proceedings. And though King Philip the ſecond in the buſineſs of Antonio de Perez had made a Conqueſt of that Kingdom, and annulled all their Priviledges; yet after of his own meer goodneſs he reſtored them (in part) again, as they continue at this day.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, are, 1 Of S. Saviour, inſtituted by Alfonſo the firſt, An. 1118. to animate the Members of it againſt the Moors. Of the habit and cuſtoms of this Order I have met with nothing.

2 Of Monteſa, inſtituted by James the firſt, King of Aragon, An. 1270. or thereabouts. Endowed with all the Lands of the Templars (before diſſolved) lying in Valentia; together with the Town and Caſtle of Monteſa, made the Seat of their Order, whence it took the name. Subject at firſt, unto the Maſter of the Order of Calatrava, out of which extracted; and under the ſame Rule of Ciſteaux. But after, by the leave of Pope Benedict the 13th, they quitted themſelves of that ſubjection; and in ſign thereof, changed the Habit of Calatrava, which before they uſed, to a Red Croſs upon their Breſts, now the badge of the Order.

The Arms of Aragon ſince poſſeſſed by the Earls of Barcelone, are Or, four Pallets Gules: before which, they were Azure, a Croſs Argent.

The Monarchie of SPAIN.

THus having ſpoke of Spain, and the Eſtate thereof, when broken and divided into many Kingdoms; let us next look upon it as united into one main body: effected for the moſt part by Ferdinand the laſt King of Aragon, before mentioned. Before which time Spain being parcelled into many Kingdoms, was little famous, and leſs feared; the Kings thereof as the Author of the Politick Diſpute, &c. hath well obſerved, being only Kings of Figs and Oranges. Their whole puiſſance was then turned againſt one another; and ſmall Atchievments had they out of that Continent, except thoſe of the Houſe of Aragon upon Sicilie, Sardinia, and the Baleares. Thuanus, a diligent Writer of the Hiſtory of his own times, (if in ſome things he favour not more of the Partie than the Hiſtorian) telleth us, that before this Kings Reign, the name and glory of the Spaniards was like their Countrey; hemmed in by the Seas on ſome ſides, and the Hills on the other: Potiuſq; patuiſſe exteris invadentibus, quam quicquam memorabile extra ſuos fines geſſiſſe. 'Tis true, that Sancho the Great, King of Navarre, aſſumed unto himſelf the Title of King of Spain; and that Alfonſo the firſt of Caſtile, and the ſixth of Leon, cauſed himſelf to be crowned Emperour of Spain, in the Cathedrall Church of Leon: Titles ambitiouſly affected upon no good ground, and ſuch as ended with their Perſons. But this Prince worthily named the Great, ſeized on the Kingdom of Navarre, conquered Granada from the Moors, ſubdued the Kingdom of Naples, united Aragon to Caſtile, baniſhed 124000 Families of the Jewes; began by the conduct of Columbus, the diſcovery of the Weſtern Indies: and finally, by marying his Daughter Joan to Philip, Sonne of the Emperour Maximilian, Duke of Burgundy, and Lord of the greateſt part of the Netherlands; laid the Foundation of the preſent Auſtrian greatneſs. Continued ſince by ſo many intermariages, betwixt the Spaniſh and Imperiall Branches of that potent Family; that Philip the ſecond might have called the Arch-duke Albertus, Brother, Couſin, Nephew, and Son. A ſtrange Medley of Relations. Thus by the puiſſance of this Prince, the Spaniards became firſt conſiderable in the eye of the World, and grew to be a terror to the Neighbouring Nations. Nomen Hiſpanicum obſcurum antea et Vicinis pene incognitum, (ſaith the ſame Thuanus) tum primùm emerſit, tractuq; temporis in tantam magnitudinem excrevit, ut formidoloſum ex eo, & terribile toti terrarum Orbi eſſe cœperit. And he ſaith true, with reference to the French, and Italian Nations; to whom the Spaniards have adminiſtred no ſmall matter of fear and terrour: though unto others they appear no ſuch dreadfull Bugg-bears. But ſure it is, and we may warrantably ſpeak it without any ſuch impreſſions of fear and terror, that this Kingdom ſince that time is wonderfully both enlarged and ſtrengthned: ſtrongly compacted in it ſelf with all the Ligaments both of Power and State, and infinitely extended over over all parts of the World, his Dominions beholding (as it were) both the rising and setting of the Sun; which before the Spaniard no Monarch could ever say. A greater change, than any man can possibly imagine to have been effected in so short a time, as was between the first year of Ferdinand the Catholick, and the last year of Charles the fifth.

Concerning the title of the most Catholick King, re-attributed to this Ferdinand, I find that Alfonso the first of Oviedo, was so named for his sanctity: with whom it died, and was revived in Alfonso the Great, the twelfth King of Leon and Oviedo, by the grant of Pope John the 8th. After it lay dead till the days of this Prince, who re-obtained this title from Pope Alexander the sixth: either because he compelled the Moores to be baptized, banished the Jews, and in part converted the Americans unto Christianity; or because having united Castile to his Dominions, surprized the Kingdom of Navarre, and subdued that of Granada, he was in a manner the Catholique, or general King of all Spain. The last reason seemeth to sway most in the restauration of this attribute, in that when it was granted and confirmed on Ferdinand, by Pope Alexander the sixth; the King of Portugal exceedingly stomached at it: quando Ferdinandus imperio universam Hispaniam (saith Mariana) non obtineret, ejus tum non exigua parte penes Reges alios. It seems Emanuel could not think himself a King of Portugal, if the title of the Catholick King did belong to Ferdinand. Wherein he was of the same mind, as was Gregory the Great, who when John of Constantinople had assumed to himself the title of the Oecumenical or Catholique Bishop; advised all Bishops of the World to oppose that arrogancy: and that upon the self-same reason, Nam si ille est Catholicus, vos non estis Episcopi, for if John were the Catholique Bishop, they were none at all. But upon what consideration soever it was first re-granted, it hath been ever since assumed by his Posterity: to whose Crown as hereditary and in common use, as the most Christian King to France, the Defender of the Faith to England.

And yet there was some further reason, why the Spaniard might affect the title of Catholique King, his Empire being Catholique in regard of extent (though not of Orthodoxie of doctrines) as reaching not over all Spain only, but over a very great part of the World besides. For in right of the Crown of Castile he possesseth the Towns of Mellila and Oran, the Haven of Masalquivir, the Rock of Velez, and the Canary Islands in Africk; the Continent and Islands of all America except Brasil, and some plantations in the North, and in the Cannibal Islands, of the English, Hollanders, and a few poor French. In the right of the Kingdom of Aragon, he enjoyeth the Realms of Naples, Sicil, and Sardinia, with many Islands interspersed in the Mediterranean; and in the right of the house of Burgundy, the Counties of Burgundy and Charolois, the greatest part of Belgium, with a title unto all the rest: besides the great Dukedom of Millain, the Havens of Telamon and Plombino, and many other pieces of importance in Italy, held by investiture from the Empire. To which if those Estates be added which accrewed to Philip the second by the Crown of Portugal, we have the Towns of Ceuta, Tangier, and Maragon in Barbary, the Fortresses of Arguen and S. George in Guinea, the Islands of Azores, Madera, Capes Verd, S. Thomas, Del Principe, on this side of the Cape, and of Mesambique on the other: in Asia all the Sea-coast almost from the Gulf of Persia unto China, and many strong holds in the Moluccoes, Bantan, Zeilan, and other Islands; and finally in America the large Countrey of Brasil, extending in length 1500 miles. An Empire of extent enough, to appropriate to these Monarchs the stile of Catholique.

The Monarchs of Spain.

A. Ch.

Isabel, Queen of Castile, Leon, Gallicia, Toledo, Murcia, Lady of Biscay, conquered Granada, and discovered America.

Philip Archduke of Austria, Lord of Belgium.

1516 3 Charles, King of Castile, Aragon, Naples, &c. Archduke of Austria, Duke of Millain, Burgundy, Brabant, &c. Earl of Catalogne, Flanders, Holland, &c. Lord of Biscay, Friseland, Utrecht, &c. and Emperor of the Germans. He added the Realms of Mexico and Peru, the Dukedoms of Gelderland and Millain, the Earldom of Zutphen, and the Signeuries of Utrecht, Over-Yssell, and Groyning, unto his Estates. A Prince of that magnanimity and puissance, that had not Francis the first in time opposed him, he had even swallowed all Europe. He was also for a time of great strength and reputation in Tunis and other parts of Africa, disposing Kingdoms at his pleasure: but the Turk broke his power there, and being hunted also out of Germany, he resigned all his Kingdoms, and died private. 42.

1558 4 Philip II. of more ambition, but less prosperity than his Father; fortunate only in his attempt on the Kingdom of Portugal, but that sufficiently ballanced by his ill successes in the Netherlands, and against the English. For the Hollanders and their Confederates drove him out of eight of his Belgick Provinces: the English overthrew his Invincible Armada, intercepted his Plate-Fleets, and by awing the Ocean had almost impoverished him. And though he held for a time an hard hand upon France, in hope to have gotten that Crown by the help of the Leaguers: yet upon casting his Accompts, he found that himself was the greater loser by that undertaking. So zealous in the cause of the Romish Church, that it was thought that his eldest Son Charles was put to death with his consent in the Inquisition house, for seeming favourably inclined to the Low-Countrey-

Hereticks, as the Spaniards called them. These four great Kings were all of the Order of the Garter; but neither of the two that followed.

1598 5 Philip III. Finding his Estate almost destroyed by his Fathers long and chargeable Wars, first made peace with England, and then concluded a Truce for twelve years with the States of the Netherlands: which done, he totally banished all the Moores out of Spain, and was a great stickler in the Wars of Germany.

1621 6 Philip IV. Son of Philip the third, got into his power all the Lower Palatinate; but lost the whole Realm of Portugal, and the Province of Catalonia, with many of his best Towns in Flanders, Artois, and Brabant, and some Ports in Italy: not yet recovered to that Crown, from the power of the French.

This Empire consisting of so many several Kingdoms united into one Body, may seem to be invincible. Yet had Queen Elizabeth followed the counsel of her men of War, she might have broken it in pieces. With 4000 men, she might have taken away his Indies from him: without whose Gold, the Low Countrey Army (which is his very best) could not be paid, and by consequence must needs have been dissolved. Nay Sir Walter Raleigh, in the Epilogue of his most excellent History of the World, plainly affirmeth, that with the charge of 200000 l. continued but for two years, or three at the most, the Spaniards might not only have been perswaded to live in peace; but that all their swelling and overflowing streams, might be brought back to their natural channels, and old banks. Their own proverb saith, the Lion is not so fierce as he is painted: yet the Americans tremble at his name, it's true; and it is well observed by that great Politician Machiavel, that things which seem to be, and are not, are more feared far off, than neer at hand. Nor is this judgement built upon weak conjectures but such as shew the power of Spain not to be so formidable, as it's commonly supposed: which I find marshalled to my hand in this manner following. 1. The disjointedness of his Realms and other Estates, severed by infinite distances both of Sea and Land, which makes one part unable to relieve or defend the other. 2ly, The slowness of his Preparations in offensive or defensive Wars, his Forces of necessity being long a gathering in places so remote from the Royal Seat; and being gathered no less subject to the dangers both of Sea and Land, before united into a body, and made fit for action. 3ly, The danger and uncertainty which the most part of his Forinsique Revenues are subject to, many times intercepted by Pirates and open Enemies; sometimes so long delayed by cross Winds and Seas, that they come too late to serve the turn. 4ly, The different tempers and affections of a great part of his Subjects, not easily concurring in the same ends, or travelling the same way unto them. 5ly, The discontentedness of the Aragonians, Portugueze, and Italian Provinces, not well affected, for their private and particular reasons, unto the Castilians; apt to be wrought on by the Ministers of neighbouring Princes, whom jealousies of State keep watchful upon all advantages, for the depressing of his power. 6ly, And last of all, the want of people of his own natural Subjects, whom he may best relie on for the increase and grandour of his Estates; exhausted and diminished by those ways and means, which have been touched upon before; without any politique or provident course, to remedy that defect for the time to come. And this I look on as the greatest and most sensible Error in the Spanish Government: therein directly contrary to the antient Romans. Who finding that nothing was more necessary for great and important enterprizes than multitudes of Men, employed all their studies to increase their numbers by Mariages, Colonies, and such helps; making their conquered Enemies free Denizens of their Common-wealth: by which means the number of the Roman Citizens became so great (all being equally interessed in the preservation of it) that Rome could not be ruined (in Annibals judgement) by any forces but her own. But on the other side the Spaniards employ none in their Plantations but their own native Subjects, and so many of them also in all their enterprizes both by Sea and Land, that so many thousands going forth every year, in the flower of their age, not one of ten returning home, and those few which return, either lame or old: the Countrey is not only deprived of the Men themselves, but also of the Children which might be born. An evidence whereof may be, that John the first of Portugal, who reigned before the several Voyages and Plantations of that people, was able to raise 40000 Men, for the War of Africk: whereas Emanuel who lived after those undertakings, had much ado to raise 20000 foot and 3000 horse on the same occasion; and Sebastian after that found as great a difficulty, to raise an Army of 12000.

As for the Forces which the King of Spain is able to make out of all his Estates, they may be best seen by his preparations for the Conquest of England, France and Flanders. In his design for England, An. 1588. he had a Fleet consisting of 150 sayl of Ships, whereof 66 were great Galleons, 4 Galeasses of Naples, 4 Gallies, the rest smaller Vessels: fraughted with 20000 Souldiers for land service, 9000 Saylers, 800 Gunners, 400 Pioneers, 2650 peeces of Ordinance: not reckoning into this accompt the Commanders and Voluntaries, of which last there were very great numbers, who went upon that service for Spoil, Merit, or Honour. In the design of Charles the fifth for the Conquest of Provence, he had no less than 50000 in the field; and in that of Philip the second for the reducing of Flanders, the Duke of Alva had an Army, at his first setting forward out of Italy, consisting of 8800 Spanish foot, and 1200 horse; all of them old experienced Souldiers, drawn out of Naples, Sicil, and the Dutchie of Millain, 3600 German foot, 300 Lances, and 100 Harcubusiers on horseback of the County of Burgundy, all old Souldiers also; besides many Voluntiers of great rank and quality, very well attended, and his old standing Army in the Belgick Provinces; a strength sufficient to have conquered a far greater Countrey.

Of standing forces in this Countrey, he maintaineth in these Realms of Spain, but three thousand horse, and in his Forts and Garrisons no more thrn 8000 Foot: his Garrisons being very few, and those thoſe upon the Frontiers only, and in Maritime Towns; his Gallies ſerved with ſlaves out of Turkie, and Barbary. And yet he is able on occaſion to raiſe very great forces, partly becauſe the ordinary ſubjects are ſo well affected to their Prince, whom they never mention without reverence: and partly in regard there is ſo great a number of Feudataries and Noblemen, who are by Tenure to ſerve perſonally at their own charges for defence of the Realm. And certainly it muſt be a conſiderable force which the Noblemen of Spain are able to raiſe, conſidering the greatneſs of their Revenue, and the number of Vaſſals which live under them: it being ſuppoſed that the Dukes of Spain (of which there were 23 when my author lived) were able one with another to diſpend yearly from 50000 Ducats to a 100000, ſome going very much above that proportion; and that of 36 Marqueſſes and 50 Earls, the pooreſt had 10000 Ducats of yearly Rent; and ſo aſcending unto 50 and 60000. The Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and others of the greater Clergie, being all endowed with fairer Temporal Eſtates, than in moſt places of Europe; are alſo bound to ſerve (though not perſonally) on the like occaſions. And to theſe ſervices the Noblemen are for two reaſons more forwards than the other Feudataries. 1 Becauſe their honors deſcend not de jure from the Father to the Son, unleſs confirmed to the Son by the Kings acknowledgement and compellation: which makes them more obſervant of him, than in France or England, where it is challenged as a Birth-right. 2 Becauſe out of the groſs body of theſe Noblemen, the King doth uſe to honor ſome with the title of Grandees; priviledged to ſtand covered before the King, and to treat with him as their Brother: which being the higheſt honor which that State can yeeld, keeps thoſe great perſons in a readineſs to obey his pleaſure, in hope to come to an honor of ſo high eſteem.

For the Revenues of this King, which ordinarily ariſe out of his Eſtates (taking Portugal into the accompt) they are computed at 11 millions of Crowns yearly, that is to ſay, four from his Dominions in Italy, two from Portugal and the Appertinents thereof, three from the Weſt Indies, and the other two remaining from his Kingdoms in Spain. Beſides this he receiveth yearly the Revenues of the Maſterſhips of all the great Orders in his Kingdom, incorporated to the Crown by Ferdinand the Catholick, not without good Policy and reaſon of State: the Maſters (or Commendadors, as they call them) of thoſe ſeveral Orders drawing after them ſuch troops of the Nobility, Gentry, and other dependants; that their power began to be ſuſpected by the Kings themſelves. By which addition there accreweth to the Crown (beſides the opportunity of preferring ſervants of the greateſt merit) above 150000 l. of yearly Rents. As for his Caſualties and extraordinary ways of raiſing money, they are very great: reckoned by the Author of the General Hiſtory of Spain to amount (according to divers opinions) to 14. 18. and 23 millions of Crowns. For making up which ſum, he puts in the Firſt Fruits, and ſome, part of the Tenths of Rectories; and other Church preferments, amounting to three millions yearly. And the Author of the Politique Diſpute, &c. affirmeth the Pardons ſent to the Indies, given him by the Pope, to be worth half a million of pounds yearly. Adde hereunto the fall and diſpoſal of all Offices, which make up a good round ſum; and the free Gifts and Contributions of his Subjects, which amount unto a good Revenue. For the Kingdom of Naples preſents him every third year with a million and 20000 Crowns; and Caſtile only at one time granted a Contribution of four millions, to be paid in four years: his Subjects generally being ſo well affected unto the Crown, that he can demand nothing in reaſon of them which they are not ready to grant; the King of Spain being called in that regard by the Emperor Maximilian the King of Men. And yet this great King is not counted to be rich in treaſure, his expences being very great. Firſt, in keeping Forts and Garriſons in many parts of his Eſtates againſt the revolt of the Natives; Secondly, maintaining ſo many Frontier places, againſt forein Invaſions; Thirdly, in the continual pay of an Armada for Conducting his Plate-Fleets from America; And laſt of all the many and unprofitable Wars of King Philip the ſecond, ſo plunged the Crown in the Gulfes of Bankers and Money-changers, that much of the Revenues of it ſtand ingaged for payment to this very day.

Of the OCEAN and ISLES OF BRITAIN.

BEfore we can arrive in Britain, the laſt Weſtern Dioceſe, we muſt croſs the OCEAN, that ingens and infinitum pelagus, as Mela calleth it; in compariſon of which, the Seas before-mentioned are but as Ponds or Gullets: a Sea in former times known more by fame than tryal, and rather wondred at on the ſhore ſide, than any more remote place of it. The Romans ventured not on it with their Veſſels, unleſs in the paſſage from France to Britain: and much famed is Alexander for his hazardous voyage on this unruly Sea, he having ſayled in all but 400 Furlongs from the ſhore. The name and pedegree take here both from the Poets and Etymologiſts. The Poets make Oceanus to be the Son of Cœlum and Veſta, or of Heaven and Earth. They termed him the father of all things, as, Oceanumq; patrem rerum, in Virgil, becauſe moiſture was neceſſarily required to the conſtitution of all bodies: and uſually painted him with a Buls head on his ſhoulders, (whence Euripides called him Ωκεανὸς Ταυρόκερως, Oceanus Tauriceps) from the bellowing and fury of the Winds; which from it come to the ſhore, and to which it is ſubject. As for the Children attributed unto him, they are doubtleſs nothing but the clowds and vapours hence ariſing. The name of ὠκεανὸς Oceanus, ſome derive from ὠκὺς, celer, becauſe of its ſwiftneſs; ſome from κέω, fundo, divido, becauſe it cleaveth and interlaceth the Earth: and others make it ὠκεανὸς, quaſi ὠκυαυὸς παρὰ τὸ ὦκυ ῥέειν, celeriter fluendo, which agreeth in meaning with the firſt. Particular names it hath divers, according to the name of the ſhore by which it paſſeth, as Cantabricus, Gallicus, Britannicus, &c. The chief Iſles of it, appertaining to Europe, beſides thoſe called the Azores or Iſles of Tercera, which we have ſpoken of when we were in Portugal; thoſe of the Aquitain Ocean, deſcribed in our Hiſtory of France; thoſe of the Netherlands, and the Northern Seas, which are to be deſcribed hereafter in their proper places, are the Britiſh Iſlands: by many of the moſt antient and approved Writers called ſimply BRITAIN, becauſe united all in that common notion; though afterwards diſtinguiſhed into the particular appellations of Great Britain, Ireland, and the reſt. Of which, as lying in my way betwixt Spain and Germany; or rather as the next Dioceſe of the Empire to France and Spain, under the Prætorio Præfectus of Italy, I am next to ſpeak.

Of BRITAIN.

BRITAIN, according to the largeſt latitude of that name and notion, comprehendeth all thoſe Iſlands both great and leſs, which lie in compaſs about Albion, or Britain properly ſo called: by Ptolemie called Britanniæ, in the plural number. For ſpeaking of France he thus ſubjoyneth, Ex adverſo hujus Britannia Inſula, Albion ipſi nomen fuit, cum Britanniæ omnes vocarentur. i. e. Oppoſite hereunto lieth the Iſland of Britain, which formerly by a more proper name was called Albion, the name of Britain comprehending all the Iſles adjoyning. And in this Latitude and extent we now take the word; the whole dominion of theſe Iſlands, diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral names, being united in the perſon and under the command of the King of Great Britain: that name including all the reſt, as appendants of it; with reference to this called the Iſles of Britain, or the Britiſh Iſlands. Thus Ariſtotle in his Book De Mundo (if the Book be his) Quo in mari duæ Inſulæ Britannicæ ſitæ ſunt, quarum maximæ Albion & Ierna; i. e. In which Sea there are ſituate two Britiſh Iſlands of great note and comcompaſs, Albion, (or Britain properly ſo called) and Ireland. Ptolemie goeth to work more punctually, and he ſtates it thus; Complectitur prima hæc Europæ tabula duas Britannicas inſulas, quas Dionyſius Bretanides vocat, Hiberniam nempe & Albionem, cum minoribus aliquot adjacentibus inſulis, ut ſunt Orcades, Ebudæ, Thyle, Mona, & reliquæ ſuis nominibus expreſſæ: that is to ſay, This firſt Table of Europe comprehendeth the two Iſlands of Britain, which Dionyſius call the Britanides, namely Ireland and Albion, with ſome leſſer Iſlands joyning to it, as the Orcades, the Hebrides, Thule, Angleſey, (or Man) and others called by diſtinct names. By which we ſee, firſt that the general name of Britain or the Britiſh Iſlands, comprehendeth all thoſe which are ſituate in the Britiſh Ocean: and ſecondly, that the greateſt and moſt famous of them, more ſpecially called Britain by the following Writers, was antiently called Albion, by its proper name. And it was called Albion, as my Authors tell me, either from Albion the Brother of Bergion, the Son of Neptune, mentioned by Aeſchylus, Dionyſius, Strabo, Mela, Solinus, Pliny, and others; it being not improper that the greateſt Iſland of the Ocean, ſhould be denominated from a Son of the greateſt Sea-god: or from the old word Ἄλφον, ſignifying White amongſt the Greeks, (from whence the Latines had their Album,) by reaſon of the white chalkie cliffs, ſeen by the Mariners a far off as they ſayled thoſe Seas.

But to return again to Britain in the general notion, and to the ſeveral Iſlands which that name includeth, we may diſtinguiſh them into the Greater, and the Leſſer; the Greater ſubdivided into 1 Great Britain, or Britain ſpecially ſo called, and 2 Ireland; the Leſſer 1 the Orcades, 2 the Hebrides, 3 Man, 4 Angleſey, 5 the Iſlands of the Severn Sea, 6 the Sorlinges, or Iſles of Silly, 7 Wight, 8 Thanet, 9 Sunderland, and 10 Holy Iſland.

GREAT BRITAIN.

TO ſpeak much of GREAT BRITAIN, or BRITAIN ſpecially and properly ſo called, I hold ſomewhat ſuperfluous, it being our home, and we therefore no ſtrangers to it. Yet as Mela once ſaid of Italy, De Italia, magis quia ordo exigit, quam quia monſtrari egeat, pauca dicentur, nota ſunt omnia, ſo ſay I of Britain. It is ſo obvious to the eye of every Reader, that he needs not the ſpectacles of Letters. Yet ſomething muſt be ſaid, though for methods ſake, rather than neceſſity. Firſt then, we will begin with laying out the bounds thereof (as in other places); which are, on the Eaſt, the German Ocean, dividing it from Belgium, Germany, and Danemark; on the Weſt, S. Georges Channel, which divides it from Ireland; and to the North of that, with the main Vergivian or Weſtern Ocean, of which the Antients knew no ſhore; on the North, with the Hyperborean or Deucaledonian Ocean, as Ptolemie cals it, extending out to Iſeland, Freezeland, and the ends of the then known World; and on the South, the Engliſh Channel, which divides it from France.

The length hereof from North to South, is reckoned at 620 Italian miles; the greateſt breadth from Eaſt to Weſt, meaſured in a right line, no more than 250 of the ſame miles, but by the crooks and bendings of the Sea-coaſt, comes to 320 miles: the whole circumference accompted 1836 miles. The greateſt Iſland in the World, except Java, Borneo, Sumatra, and Madagaſcar; and therefore by Solinus and ſome other Antients (to whom thoſe Iſlands were not known) called the other world: by others of late times, the Lady and Miſtreſs of the Seas. Situate under the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th Climes: ſo that the longeſt day at the Lizard point in Cornwall (being the moſt Southernly part hereof) containeth 16 hours and a quarter; at Barwick which is the Border of England and Scotland, 17 hours 3 quarters; and one hour more at Straithby head, in the North of Scotland; where ſome obſerve that there is ſcarce any night at all in the ſummer Solſtice, but a darker Twilight. To which alludes the Poet, ſaying, Et minima contentos nocte Britannos: and the Panegyriſt in the time of Conſtantine, amongſt other commendations which he gives to Britain, ſaith, that therein is neither extreme cold in Winter, nor any ſcorching heats in Summer, and that which is moſt comfortable, long days, and very lightſome nights. Nor doth the Panegyriſt tell us only of the temperateneſs of the Air, or the length of the days; but of the fruitfulneſs of the ſoyl: "affirming Britain to be bleſſed with all the commodities of Heaven and "Earth; ſuch an abundant plenty of Corn, as might ſuffice both for Bread and Wine; the Woods "thereof without wild Beaſts, the Fields without noyſome Serpents, infinite number of milch-"Beaſts, and Sheep weighed down with their own Fleeces. Whereto adde that of Alfred of Beverley, a Poet of the middle times, ſaying thus of Britain.

Et cujus totus indiget orbis ope.
Inſula prædives, cujus miretur & optet
Delicias SOLOMON, Octavianus opes.

Yet all the World ſupply from her requires:
Able to glut King SOLOMON with pleaſures,
And ſurfet great Auguſtus with her treaſures.

Proceed we next to the name of Britain, of which I find many Etymologies, ſome forced, ſome fabu-

England. lous and fooliſh, and but few of weight. That which hath paſſed for currant in former times, (when almoſt all Nations did pretend to be of Trojan race) was that it took this name from Brutus, affirmed to be the Son of Silvius, who was the Grandchild of Æneas, and the third King of the Latines of the Trojan blood. Which Brutus having unfortunately killed his Father, and thereupon abandoning Italy with his friends and followers; after a long voyage, and many wandrings, is ſaid to have fallen upon this Iſland, to have conquered here a race of Giants; and having given unto it the name of Britain, to leave the Soveraignty thereof unto his poſterity, who quietly enjoyed the ſame, till ſubdued by the Romans. This is the ſum of the Tradition concerning Brute: Which though received in the darker times of ignorance, and too much credulity; in theſe more learned days hath been laid aſide, as falſe and fabulous. And it is proved that there was no ſuch man as Brutus, 1 From the newneſs of his Birth, Geofry of Monmouth, who lived in the reign of King Henry the ſecond, being the firſt Author which makes mention of him: for which immediately queſtioned by Newbrigenſis, another Writer of that Age. 2ly, By the ſilence of of all the Roman Hiſtorians, in whom it had been an unpardonable negligence to have omitted an Accident ſo remarkable, as the killing of a Father by his own Son (eſpecially when they wanted matter to fill up the times) and the erecting of a new Trojan Empire in ſo great an Iſland. 3ly, By the Arguments which Cæſar uſeth to prove the Britains to be derived from the Gals; as Speech, Laws, Cuſtoms, Diſpoſition, Making, and the like. 4ly, And leſt it might be ſaid, that though the Britans in Cæſars time were of Gallick race, yet there had been a former and more antient people, who had their Original from the Trojans: Tacitus putteth off that diſpute with an Ignoramus, Qui mortales initio coluerint parum compertum eſt, ſaith that knowing writer. And 5ly, By the Teſtimony of all Roman Hiſtories, who tell us that Cæſar found the Britains under many Kings, and never under the command of one ſole Prince, but in times of danger. Summa Belli adminiſtrandi communi conſenſu commiſſa eſt Caſſivellauno, as it is in Cæſar: Dum ſinguli pugnabant, univerſi vincebantur, as we read in Tacitus. To omit therefore that of Brutus, and other Etymons as unlikely, but of leſs autority: the name of Britain is moſt probably derived from Brit, which in the antient Britiſh ſignifieth Painted; and the word Tain, ſignifying a Nation: agreeable unto the cuſtom of the antient Britans, who uſed to diſcolour and paint their bodies, that they might ſeem more terrible in the eyes of their enemies. Britain is then a Nation of painted men; ſuch as the Romans called Picts in the times enſuing. Which I prefer before the Etymologie of Bochartus, a right learned man, but one that wreſteth all originations to the Punick or Phœnician language: by whom this Iſland is called Britain or Bretannica, from Barat anac, ſignifying in that language a land of Tynne, wherewith the Weſtern parts of it do indeed abound. Other particulars concerning the Iſle of Britain, ſhall be obſerved in the deſcription of thoſe parts into which it now doth ſtand divided, that is to ſay, 1 England, 2 Wales, and 3 Scotland.

ENGLAND.

ENGLAND is bounded on the Eaſt, with the German; on the Weſt, with the Iriſh; on the South, with the Britiſh Oceans; and on the North, with the Rivers of Tweed and Solway; by which parted from Scotland: Environed with turbulent Seas, guarded by inacceſſible Rocks: and where thoſe want, preſerved againſt all forein invaſions by ſtrong Forts, and a puiſſant Navy.

In former time the Northern limits did extend as far as Edenburgh Fryth on the Eaſt, and the Fryth of Dunbriton on the Weſt, (for ſo far not only the Roman Empire, but the Kingdom of Northumberland did once extend:) the intervenient ſpace being ſhut up with a wall of Turfes by Lollius Vrbicus, in the time of Antoninus Pius. But afterwards, the Romans being beaten back by the Barbarous people, the Province was contracted within narrower bounds; and fortified with a Wall by the Emperor Severus, extending from Carlile to the River Tine, the track whereof may eaſily be diſcerned to this very day. A Wall ſo made, that at every miles end there is ſaid to have been a Caſtle, between every Caſtle many Watch-Towers; and bewixt every Watch-Tower a Pipe of Braſs, conveying the leaſt noiſe unto one another without interruption: ſo that the news of any approaching enemy was quickly over all the Borders, and reſiſtance accordingly provided. In following times the ſtrong Towns of Barwick, and Carlile, have been the chief Bars, by which we kept the backdoor ſhut: and as for other Forts, we had ſcarce any on the Frontiers, or Sea Coaſts of the Kingdom; though in the midland parts too many. Which being in the hands of potent and factious Subjects, occaſioned many to rebel; and did create great trouble to the Norman Kings: till in the latter end of the reign of King Stephen, 1100 of them were levelled to the very ground, and thoſe few which remained diſmantled, and made unſerviceable. The Maritime parts were thought ſufficiently aſſured by thoſe Rocks and Cliffs, which compaſs the Iſland in moſt parts: and hardly any Caſtle all along the ſhore, except that of Dover; which was therefore counted by the French, as the Key of England. But in the year 1538. King Henry the eighth, conſidering how he had offended the Emperor Charles the fifth, by his divorce from Queen Catharine; and incurred the diſpleaſure of the Pope, by his falling off from that See; as alſo that the French King had not only maried his Son to a Neece of the Pope, but a Daughter to the King of Scots; thought fit to provide for his own ſafety, by building in all places where the ſhore was moſt plain and open, Caſtles, Platforms, and Blockhouſes; many of which in the long time of peace enſuing were much neglected and in part ruined.

moſt ſtately, royal, and invincible Navy: with which ſhe always commanded the Seas, and vanquiſhed the mightieſt Monarch of Europe; whereas her predeceſſors in their Sea ſervice, for the moſt part, hired their men of War, from the Hanſmen, and Genoeſe. Yet did neither of theſe erect any Caſtles in the inward part of the Realm: herein imitating Nature, who fortifieth the head and the feet only, not the middle of Beaſts; or ſome Captain of a Fort, who plants all his Ordinances on the Wals, Bulwarks, and Out-works; leaving the reſt by theſe ſufficiently guarded. England.

The whole Iſland was firſt called Albion, as before is ſaid, either from the Giant Albion, or ab albis rupibus, the white Rocks towards France. Afterwards it was called Britain, which name being firſt found in Athenæus, amongſt the Grecians, and in Lucretius and Cæſar, amongſt the Latines; followed herein by Strabo, Plinie, and all other antient writers, except Ptolemie only, by whom called Albion as at firſt; continued till the time of Egbert the firſt Saxon Monarch, who called the Southern parts of the Iſland by the name of England, from the Angles, who with the Jutes and Saxons conquered it.

It is in length 320 miles, enjoying a ſoil equally participating of ground fit for tillage, and paſture: yet to paſture more then to tillage are our people addicted, as a courſe of life not requiring ſo many helpers, which muſt be all fed and paid; and yet yielding more certain profits. Hence in former times Husbandry began to be neglected, Villages depopulated, and Hinds for want of entertainment to turn way-beaters: whereof Sir Thomas Moore in his Utopia complaineth, ſaying, that our Flocks of Sheep had devoured not only men, but whole houſes and Towns. Oves (ſaith he) quæ tam mites eſſe, tamq; exiguo ſolent ali; nunc tam edaces, & indomitæ eſſe cœperant, ut homines devorent ipſos, agros, domos, oppida vaſtent, ac depopulentur. To prevent this miſchief, there was a Statute made in the fourth year of Henry the ſeventh, againſt the converting of Arable Land into Paſture ground: by which courſe Husbandry was again revived, and the ſoil made ſo abounding in Corn, that a dear year is ſeldom heard of. Our Vines are nipped with the cold, and ſeldom come to maturity; and are more uſed for the pleaſantneſſe of the ſhade, than for the hopes of wine. Moſt of her other plenties and Ornaments, are expreſſed in this old verſe following.

Anglia, 1 Mons, 2 Pons, 3 Fons, 4 Eccleſia, 5 Fœmina, 6 Lana.

That is to ſay;

For 1 Mountains, 2 Bridges, 3 Rivers, 4 Churches faire, 5 Women, and 6 Wooll, England is paſt compare.

1 For the Mountains lifting up here and there their lofty heads, and giving a gallant proſpect to the lower Grounds; the principal are thoſe of Mendip in Somerſet, Malvern hils in Worceſterſhire, the Chiltern of Buckinghamſhire, Cotſwold in Gloceſterſhire, the Peak of Darbyſhire, Yorke Wolds, &c. All of them either bowelled with Mines, or clothed with Sheep, or adorned with Woods. The exact deſcription of which, would require more time then I can ſpend upon that Subject. Proceed we therefore to

2 The Bridges, which are in number 857. The chief of which are, the Bridge of Rocheſter, over Medway, the Bridge of Briſtoll, over Avon, and the Bridge of London, over Thames. This laſt ſtanding upon 19 Arches of wonderfull ſtrength and largeneſſe, ſupporteth continual ranges of buildings, ſeeming rather a ſtreet then a Bridge; and is not be paralleld with any Bridge of Europe; though of late by ſome defacements made by fire, Anno 1632. the buildings are not ſo contiguous, as they were before.

The Rivers of this Countrey are in number 325. The chief is Thamiſis, compounded of the two Rivers, Thame and Iſis; whereof the former riſing ſomewhat beyond Tame in Buckinghamſhire, and the latter beyond Cyrenceſter in Gloceſterſhire, meet together about Dorceſter in Oxfordſhire: the iſſue of which happy conjunction is the Thamiſis or Thames. Hence it flyeth betwixt Berks, Buckinghamſhire, Middleſex, Surrey, Kent, and Eſſex; and ſo weddeth himſelf to the Kentiſh Medway, in the very jawes of the Ocean. This glorious River feeleth the violence of the Sea more then any River in Europe; ebbing and flowing twice a day, more than 60 miles: about whoſe banks are ſo many fair Towns, and Princely Palaces, that a German Poet thus truly ſpoke.

Ut nunc Auſonio Thamiſis cum Tibride certet.

We ſaw ſo many Woods and Princely Bowers,
Sweet Fields, brave Palaces, and ſtately Towers:
So many gardens, dreſs'd with curious care,
That Thames with Royal Tiber may compare.

The ſecond River of note, is Sabrina or Severn. It hath its beginning in Pinlimmon hill in Montgomeryſhire, and his end about ſeven miles from Briſtoll: waſhing in the mean ſpace, the wals of Shrewsbury, Worceſter, and Gloceſter. 3 Trent, ſo called, for that 30 kind of Fiſhes are found in it, or that it receiveth 30 leſſer Rivers: who having his Fountain in Staffordſhire, and gliding through the Countries of Nottingham, Lincoln, Leiceſter, and York; augmenteth the turbulent current of Humber, the moſt violent ſtream of all the Iſle. Yet Humber is not, to ſay truth, a diſtinct River, having a ſpring head of his his own; but rather the mouth or Æſtuarium of divers Rivers here confluent and meeting together, namely, Youre, Darwent, and eſpecially Ouſe and Trent. And as the Danow, having received into its Channell the Rivers Dravus, Savus, Tibiſcus, and divers others, changeth his name into Iſter: So alſo the Trent, receiving and meeting the waters above named, changeth his name into this of Humber; Abus, the old Geographers call it. 4 Medway, a Kentiſh River, famous for harbouring the Royal Navy. 5 Tweede, the North-eaſt bound of England, on whoſe Northern bank is ſeated the ſtrong and impregnable Town of Barwick. 6 Tine, famous for Newcaſtle and her inexhauſtible Coal-pits. Theſe and the reſt of Principal note are thus comprehended in one of M. Draytons Sonnets.

Our Flouds Queen Thames for Ships and Swans is crown'd,
And ſtately Severn for her ſhore is prais'd,
The Cryſtal Trent for Fords and Fiſh renown'd,
The Avons fame to Albions cliffes is rais'd.
Carlegion Cheſter vaunts her holy Dee,
York many Wonders of her Ouſe can tell,
The Peak her Dove, whoſe banks ſo fertile be,
And Kent will ſay her Medway doth excell.
Cotſwoll commends her Iſis to the Thame,
Our Northern borders boaſts of Tweeds fair flood;
Our Weſtern parts extoll their Willies Fame,
And the old Lea brags of the Daniſh blood.

4 The Churches, before the generall ſuppreſſion of Abbies, and ſpoiling the Church ornaments, were moſt exquiſite, the chief remaining, are 1 the Church of S. Paul founded by Ethelbert King of Kent, in the place where once was a Temple conſecrated to Diana: A Fabrick of the largeſt dimenſions of that kind, of any in the Chriſtian World. For whereas the ſo much celebrated Temple of S. Sophia in Conſtantinople, hath but 260 foot in length, and 75 in breadth: this of S. Paul is 690 foot long, and 130 foot broad, the main body being 102 foot high, over which the Steeple of the Church was mounted 482 foot more. Which Steeple being made with Timber, and covered with Lead, was by the careleſneſs of the Sexton, in the fifth year of the reign of Q. Elizabeth, conſumed with fire; which happning in a thundering and tempeſtuous day, was by him confidently affirmed to be done by Lightning, and was ſo generally believed till the hour of his death: but not many years ſince to diſ-abuſe the world, he confeſt the truth of it; on which diſcovery the burning of S. Paul's Steeple by lightning was left out of our common Almanacks; where formerly it ſtood amongſt the ordinary Epoches, or accounts of time. A Church of ſuch a gallant proſpect, and ſo large dimenſions, that had not the late reparation of it been diſcontinued, it would have been the ſtatelieſt and moſt majeſtical Fabrick in the Chriſtian World. 2ly, The Collegiate Church of S. Peter in Weſtminſter, (wherein I have the honour to be a Præbendary) famous for the Inauguration and the Sepulture of the Kings of England, the Tombes whereof are the moſt ſumptuous, and the Chappell the moſt accurate piece of building in Europe. 3ly, The Cathedral Church at Lincoln. 4ly, For a private Church, that of Radcliffe in Briſtoll. 5ly, For a private Chappell, that of Kings Colledge in Cambridge. 6ly, For the curious workmanſhip of the glaſs, that of Chriſt Church in Canterbury. 7ly, For the exquiſite beauty of the Fronts, thoſe of Wells and Peterborough. 8ly, For a pleaſant lightſome Church, the Abbey Church at Bath. 9ly, For an antient and reverend Fabrick, the Minſter of York. And 10ly, to comprehend the reſt in one, our Lady-Church in Salisbury, of which take theſe Verſes.

Mira canam, ſoles quot continet annus, in unâ
Tam numeroſa, ferunt, æde feneſtra micat.
Marmoreaſq; tenet fuſas tot ab arte columnas,
Comprenſas horas quot vagus annus habet.
Totq; patent portæ, quot menſibus annus abundat:
Res mira, at verâ res celebrata fide.

How many days in one whole year there be,
So many Windows in one Church we ſee.
So many marble Pillars there appear,
As there are hours thoughout the fleeting year.
So many Gates as Moons one year do view,
Strange tale to tell, yet not ſo ſtrange as true.

5 The Women generally are more handſome then in other places, ſufficiently endowed with naturall beauties, without the addition of adulterate Sophiſtications. In an abſolute Woman, ſay the Italians, are required the parts of a Dutch-Woman, from the girdle downwards; of a French-Woman, from the girdle to the ſhoulders; over which muſt be placed an Engliſh face. As their beautes, ſo alſo are their Prerogatives the greateſt of any Nation; neither ſo ſervilely ſubmiſſive as the French, nor ſo jealouſly guarded as the Italian: but keeping ſo true a decorum, that as England is termed the Purgatory of Servants, and the Hell of Horſes; ſo it is acknowledged the Paradiſe of Women. And it is a common by-word among the Italians, that if there were a Bridge built over the Narrow Seas, all the Women of Europe would run into ENGLAND. For here they have the upper hand in the ſtreets, the upper place at the Table, the thirds of their Husbands eſtates, and their equall ſhare in all Lands, yea even ſuch as are holden in Knights ſervice: priviledges wherewith other Women are not acquainted. Of high eſteem in former times amongſt forain Nations, for the modeſty and gravity of their converſation; but of late times ſo much addicted to the light garb of the French, that they have loſt much of their antient honour and reputation amongſt the knowing and more ſober men of forain Countries, who before admired them. England.

6 The Wooll of England, is of exceeding fineneſs, eſpecially that of Cotſwold, in Gloceſterſhire; that of Lemſter, in Hereforeſhire; and of the Iſle of Wight. Of this Wooll are made excellent broad-clothes, diſperſed all over the World, eſpecially High-Germany, Muſcovie, Turkie, and Perſia, to the great benefit of the Realm: as well in return of ſo much money which is made of them, as in ſetting to work ſo many poor people, who from it receive ſuſtenance. Before the time of King Edward the third, Engliſh men had not the art, or neglected the uſe of making cloth: till whoſe time our Wooll was tranſported unwrought. And as his Succeſſors have laid impoſitions on every cloth ſold out of the Realm; ſo his Predeceſſors had, as their occaſions required, ſome certain Cuſtomes granted on every ſack of Wooll. In the beginning of this Edwards Wars with France, the Cities and Towns of Flanders being then even to admiration rich, combined with him, and aided him in his Wars againſt that King. And he for his part by the compoſition then made, was to give them 140000 l. ready money, to aid them by Sea and Land, if need required, and to make Bruges, then one of the great Mart Towns of Chriſtendome, the Staple for his Wools. Here the Staple continued 15 years, at which time the Flemmings having broke off from the King; and he having by experience ſeen what the benefit of thoſe Staples were; removed them from Bruges into England. And for the eaſe as well of his Subjects in bringing their Wools unto the Ports, as of ſuch Forain Merchants as came to buy; he placed his Staples at Exceſter, Briſtoll, Wincheſter, Weſtminſter, Chicheſter, Canterbury, Norwich, Lincoln, York, and Newcaſtle, for England; at Caermarden for Wales; and at Dublin, Waterford, Cork, and Tredah, for Ireland. He further enacted, that no Engliſh, Iriſh, or Welch men ſhould tranſport this Stapled commodity, no not by Licenſe (if any ſuch ſhould be granted) on pain of Confiſcation, and Impriſonment during the Kings pleaſure. Laſtly, he allured over hither divers Flemmings, which taught our men the making of clothes, (who are now grown the beſt Clothworkers in the World:) and to encourage men in that Art, it was by a Statute of the 27th of Edward the third, enacted to be Felony, to carry any Wools unwrought. When England had ſome ſhort time enjoyed the benefit of theſe Staples, the King removed them to Callice, which he had conquered, and deſired to make wealthy. From hence they were at ſeverall times and occaſions tranſlated, now to one, now to another Town in Belgium: and happy was that Town, in what Countrey ſoever, where the Engliſh kept a houſe for this Traffick; the confluence of all people thither to buy, infinitely inriching it. Antwerp in Brabant long enjoyed the Engliſh Merchants, till upon ſome diſcontents between King Henry the ſeventh, and Maximilian, Archduke, and Lord of Belgium, they removed: but at their return again, were received by the Antwerpians, with ſolemn Proceſſion, Princely Triumph, ſumptuous Feaſts, rare Banquetings, and other expreſſions of much Love, but more Joy. And giving of ſome Cotſwold Sheep by Edward the fourth, to Henry of Caſtile, and John of Aragon, Anno 1465. is counted one of the greateſt prejudices, that ever hapned to this Kingdom.

The Wooll tranſported bringeth into the Kingdom no leſs than 1500000 l. and the Lead half the ſum, ſo that Lewis Guicciardine reporteth, that before the Wars of the Low-Countries, the Flemmings and the Engliſh bartered wares yearly for 12 Millions of Crowns.

The next commodity to the Wooll, though not mentioned in the verſe fore-going, are the rich and inexhauſtible Mines of Cole, Lead, and Tin: to ſay nothing of the Mines of Iron, as bringing more damage to the publick by the ſpoil of Woods, then profit to particular perſons in the increaſe of their Eſtates. The Mines of Cole chiefly enrich Newcaſtle in Northumberland and by that the great City of London, and many other good Towns beſides: which could not poſſibly ſubſiſt in this general decay of Woods, and neglect of planting, but by this commodity. The Mines of Lead are moſt conſiderable in the Peak of Darbyſhire; thoſe of Tin in Cornwall, where they dig Tin not much inferiour to Silver in fineneſſe. A commodity which brought great wealth to England in former times, the art of making it not being elſewhere known in Europe; till one of the Tin-workers, flying out of England for a murder, paſſed into Germany, Anno 1240. and there diſcovered ſome Tin Mines in Miſnia, not known before, and ſet on foot that trade amongſt them, to the great prejudice (ſaith my Author) of the Earls of Cornwall, who had before the ſole Monopoly of that uſeful metal.

To theſe particulars being matters of profit and neceſſity, if I would add ſuch things as are for delight and pleaſure; I might ſubjoyn the Bels and Parks; for which this Kingdom is as eminent among forain Nations, as for any of thoſe mentioned in the ſaid old Verſe. The Bels ſo many, tunable, and of ſuch excellent Melody to a Muſical eare (bronght more to the command of the skilful ringer than in former times) that it is thought there are more good Rings of Bels in this part of the Iſland than in half Chriſtendom beſides. Parkes more in England than in all Europe. The firſt of which kind for the incloſing of Veniſon, being that of Woodſtock, made by King Henry the firſt: whoſe example being followed by his Succeſſors, and the Lords and great men of the Realm; the number ſo increaſed in a little time, that at the laſt, beſide 55 Forreſts, and 300 Chaſes, there were reckoned 745 Parkes in England; all well repleniſhed either with Red or Fallow Deer.

And that the Deer might graze with pleaſure, and the Sheep with ſafety, great care was taken by our progenitors for the deſtruction of Wolves. I know it hath been a tradition of old Writers, that England. England never had any Wolves at all, and that they would not live here brought from other places; but it is not so: here being store of them, till Edgar King of England commuted the 20 l. of Gold, 300 l. of Silver, and 300 head of Cattel imposed as an yearly tribute by King Athelstane upon Idwallo Prince of Wales, for the like yearly tribute of 300 Wolves: by which means they were quite rooted out in time the Welch protesting at the last they could find no more.

England

The Air of this Countrey is very temperate, neither so hot as France and Spain in the Summer, because of its northerly situation; nor so cold in the Winter; because the aire of this Kingdom being gross, cannot so soon penetrate as the thin air of those Countries. For to say truth, the air in the Winter time is thick and foggy, cloudy, and much disposed to mists; especially near the Sea, and the greater Rivers: insomuch that many times, the Sun is not seen to shine out clearly for some weeks together. And thereupon there goeth a tale, that the great Constable of Castile being Ambassador to King James in the first Winter of his reign, and tarying here about a moneth; is said not to have seen the Sun all the time of his stay: which occasioned him at his going on ship-board, to desire such Lords and Gentlemen as attended him thither, to present his humble service to the King their Master, and to the blessed Sun of Heaven when they chanced to see him. And something also touching the temperature of the Air, may be ascribed unto the Winds, which participating of the Seas, over which they passe unto us, do carry with them a temperate warmth.

But if warmth were all the benefit we received from the Seas, it might indeed be said, that we were come from Gods blessing into the warm Sun: but it is not so. For there are no Seas in Europe that yield more plenty of fish then ours. Our Oysters were famous in the times of the old Romans, and our Herrings are now very beneficial unto the Netherlands; to whom, the Englishmen, reserving to themselves a kind of Royalty, (for the Dutch by custom demand liberty to fish of Scarborough Castle in Yorkshire) have yielded up the commodity; By which those States are exceedingly enriched, and our Nation much impoverished, and condemned for lazines and sloth. Besides the losse of imployment for many men, who using this trade might be a seminary of good and able Mariners, as well for the Wars, as for further Navigations and discoveries; cannot but be very prejudicial to the strength and flourishing of the Common-wealth and Empire of England.

But to make this appear more fully in all particulars, I shall extract some passages out of a M. S. discourse of the late learned Knight Sir John Burroughs, principall King of Arms by the name of Garter, entituled, The Soveraignty of the British Seas. By which it doth appear, that there is fishing in those Seas for Herrings, Pilchards, Cod, Ling, or other Fish, at all times of the year: and that too in so plentiful a manner, that not long since neer Minnegal on the Coasts of Devonshire 500 Ton of Fish were taken in one day, and 3000 pounds-worth in another neer S. Ives in Cornwall; the Hollanders taking at one draught 20 lasts of Herrings. 2ly, That almost all Nations hereabouts, as French, Spaniards, Netherlands, and those of the Hanse, do mightily improve themselves both in power and wealth, by the benefit of the English Fishing; insomuch as 10000 Sail of Forain Vessels (of which 1400 from the Town of Emden in East-Friseland only) are thought to be maintained by this trade alone. 3ly, That the Hollanders in particular employ yeerly 8000 Vessels of all sorts for this trade of Fishing on our Coasts, whereby they have a Seminary of 150000 Saylers and Mariners, ready for any publick service: all which maintain treble that number of Men, Women and Children, of severall trades upon the Land. 4ly, That for the holding up of this trade, the said Hollanders, inhabiting a Tract of Land not so big as many of our Shires, do build 1000 sail of Ships yearly; and thereby furnish all the parts of the World (even as far as Brasil,) with our commodities; returning home those of other Countries in exchange thereof, which they sell to us many times at their own prices. 5ly, That the said Hollanders, (as appeared upon computation) made in one year of the Herrings only, caught upon these Coasts, the sum of 5 Millions of our pounds, (the Customs, and tenth Fish, advancing to the publick Treasury no lesse then 800000 l. Sterling): it being thought, that the Herrings caught by those of the Hanse Towns, and other Nations, amount to as great a sum as that. 6ly, and finally, that by erecting only 250 Busses, (Vessels of great Bulk and Stowage, but not swift of sail) for the Herring-Fishing, (which is not a sixth part of those which are imployed yearly by the Hollanders) either at the publick charge of the State of England, or by private Adventurers thereto authorized and regulated; there would be found imployment yearly for 1000 ships, and at least 20000 Mariners and Fishers at Sea, and consequently for as many Tradesmen and Labourers at Land: by means whereof, besides the vindication of our credit now at such a losse, there would arise in Customes, Tonnage, Poundage, and other Imposts, no lesse than 300000 l. per Annum to the publick Treasury. The prosecution of which Project (if not in greater proportion than that before) as it was once designed by Mr. Atturney Noy, my much honoured Friend: so do I heartily commend it to the care of the State, and to his Successors in that Office, as the fittest remembrancers to advance it: there being no readier way than this to make the people wealthy, and the Nation formidable.

For notwithstanding these advantages of Fish, the Diet of England is, for the most part, Flesh, in London only there are no fewer the 67500 Beefs, and 675000 Sheep slain, and uttered in a year, besides Calves, Lambs, Hogs-flesh, and Poulterers ware. To prove this, Suppose there be in London 60 Butchers Free of the City, whereof every one, and one with another, killeth an Oxe a day, as at least they do. Then reckon (as the London Butchers do affirm) that the Forainers in the Suburbs & Villages sell four for their one. Lastly, count for every Oxe ten Sheep, (for this is also certainly known) to be killed and sold, and you have both the numbers above-mentioned. The Earl of Gondamor, once the Spanish Lieger here, having in some severall Market daies seen the severall Shambles of this great City, said to them who made the discovery with him, That there was more flesh eaten in a moneth in that Town, than in all all Spain in a year. Now had I his skill who by the length of Hercules Foot, found out the proportion of his whole body, I might by this provision of Flesh consumed in the head, guess at the quantity of that which is spent in the body of the Realm. But this I leave to be determined by an abler hand. The usual and natural drink of the Countrey is Beer, so called from the French word Boire. (for Wines they have none of their own growing, as before is said) Which, without controversie, is a most wholesome and nourishing beverage; and being transported into France, Belgium, and Germany, by the working of the Sea is so purged, that it is amongst them in highest estimation; celebrated by the name of la bonne Beere d' Angle Terre. And as for the old drink of England, Ale, which cometh from the Danish word Oela, it is questionless in it self, (and without that commixture which some are accused to use with it) a very wholesome drink; howsoever it pleased a Poet in the time of Henry the third, thus to descant on it:

Nescio quid monstrum Stygiæ conforme paludi,
Cervisiam pleriq; vocant; nil spissius illa
Dum bibitur, nil clarius est dum mingitur, ergo
Constat quòd multas fæces in ventre relinquit.

In English thus;

Of this strange drink so like the Stygian lake,
Men call it Ale, I know not what to make.
Folk drink it thick, and piss it very thin;
Therefore much Dregs must needs remain within

Now to conclude this generall discourse concerning England, there goes a tale, that Henry the seventh (whose breeding had been low and private) being once pressed by some of his Councell, to pursue his title unto France; returned this Answer: that France indeed was a flourishing and gallant Kingdom; but England in his mind was as fine a Seat for a Countrey Gentleman, as any could be found in Europe.

Having staid thus long in taking a Survey of the Country it self, together with the chief commodities and pleasures of it; and amongst them of the Women also, (as the method of the old Verse led me on:) it is now time that we should look upon the men. And they are commonly of a comely feature, gracious countenance, for the most part gray-ey'd, pleasant, beautiful, bountiful, courteous; and much resembling the Italians in habit, and pronunciation. In matters of war, (as we are ready to prove) they are both able to endure, and resolute to undertake the hardest enterprises: in peace quiet, and not quarrelsome; in advice or counsell, sound and speedy. Finally, they are active, hearty, and chearfull. And yet I have met with some Gentlemen, who upon the strength of a little travell in France, have grown so un-Englished, and so affected or besotted rather on the French Nation, that they affirm the English, in respect of the French, to be an heavy, dull, and Phlegmatick people; of no dispatch, no mettle, no conceit, no audacity, and I know not what not. A vanity, meriting rather my pity, than my anger. Perhaps in vilifying their Nation, they had consulted with Julius Scaliger, who in the 16 Chap. of his 3d Book De re Poëtica, giveth of the two most noble Nations, English, and Scotish, this base and unmanly Character, Gothi belluæ, Scoti non minùs; Angli perfidi, inflati, feri, contemptores, stolidi, amentes, inertes, inhospitales, immanes. His bolt (you see) is soon shot, and so you may happily guess at the quality of the Archer. A man indeed of an able learning, but of his own worth so highly conceited, that if his too much learning made him not mad, yet it made him to be too peremptory and arrogant. To revenge a National disgrace on a Personal, is an ignoble victory. Besides Socrates resolution in the like kind, in my opinion was very judicious. εἰ δέ με ὄνος ἐλάκτισε, δίκην αὐτῷ ἐλάγχανον; If an Asse kick us, we must not put him in the Court. To confute his censure in every point, would be to him too great an honour, and for me too a great labour; it being a task, which of it self would require a Volume. The best is, many shoulders make the burden light; and other Nations are as deeply engaged in this quarrell against that proud Man, as ours: for so maliciously hath he there taxed all other people, that that Chapter might more properly have been placed among his Hypercriticks.

How the English, and Germans, which of all Nations are thought most given to their bellies, do agree and differ in this point; the same Scaliger hath thus shewed in one of his Epigrams.

Tres sunt Convivæ, Germanus, Flander, & Anglus,
Dic quis edat melius, quis meliúsve bibat.
Non comedis Germane, bibis; tu non bibis Angle,
Sed comedis; comedis Flandre, bibísq; benè.

Dutch, Flemmings, English, are your only guests,
Say which of all doth eat, or drink it best.
Th' English love most to eat, the Dutch to swill,
Only the Flemming eats and drinks his fill.

This

England. Thus was it in his time with the Engliſh Nation; though ſince, I fear, we have borrowed too much of the Dutch, and learnt a great deal more then needs of the Flemming alſo.

The Nobility of this Countrey is not of ſo much unlimited Power, as they are (to the prejudice of the State) in other Countries; the name of Dukes, Earls, and Marqueſſes, being meerly titular: whereas in other places they have ſome abſolute, ſome mixt government; ſo that upon any little diſtaſt, they will ſtand on their own guard, and ſlight the power of their Soveraign. And on the other ſide, the Commonalty enjoy a multitude of Privileges above all other Nations; being moſt free from Taxes, and burdenous Impoſitions, but what they take upon themſelves by their own conſent. They have twice in a year (a laudable cuſtome no where elſe to be ſeen) Juſtice adminiſtred even at their own doors, by the Itinerary Judges of the Kingdom: an Order firſt inſtituted by King Henry the ſecond. They dwell together with the Gentlemen, in Villages, and Towns, which makes them ſavour of civility and good manners: and live in far greater reputation, than the Yeomen in Italy, Spain, France, or Germany; being able to entertain a ſtranger honeſtly, diet him plentifully, and lodge him neatly.

The Clergy was once of very great riches, as appeareth by that Bill preferred to King Henry the fifth, againſt the temporal revenues of the Church; in which it was ſuggeſted, that they were able to maintain 15 Earls, 1500 Knights, 6000 men of Arms, more than 1000 Alms-houſes, and yet the King might clearly put up 20000 l. per Annum into his Exchequer. How true this was, I cannot ſay. But after this, King Henry the eighth took his Oppotunities, to pare away the excreſcencies of it; demoliſhing the Monaſteries, and Religious houſes, and paring off the ſuperfluities of Biſhopricks and Cathedrall Churches: in which he found not a few followers amongſt the Miniſters and great Officers of Seate, and Court in the time of King Edward the ſixth, and Queen Elizabeth. Yet leſt they not the Clergy ſo poor and naked, or deſtitute of the encouragements and rewards of learning, but that they have been ſtill the objects of a covetous envy, (that which the former Harpies left them being thought too much): though for abilities of learning (I dare boldly ſay it) not to be paralleld in the World. For beſides 5439 Parochial Benefices, being no Impropriations; and beſides the Vicarages, moſt of which exceed the competency beyond the Seas: there were left in England at the time of the Reformation under Queen Elizabeth, 21 Biſhopricks, (taking thoſe of Wales into the reckoning) 26 Deaneries, 60 Archdeaconries, and 544 Dignities and Prebends; moſt of which, places of faire revenue. And as for the maintenance of Prieſts, Monks, and Friers, before the Reformation, there were reckoned 90 Colleges, beſides thoſe in the Univerſities, 110 Hoſpitals, 3374 Chanteries and free Chappels, and 645 Abbeys and Monaſteries: more then half of which had above the yearly income of 200 l in old rents, many above 2000, and ſome 4000 almoſt. So ſtudious were our Anceſtors both in thoſe times of blindneſſe, and theſe of a clearer ſight, to encourage men to learning, and then reward it.

The Souldiery of England is either for the Land, or for the Sea. Our Victories by Land are moſt apparent, over the Iriſh, Scots, Cypriots, Turks, and eſpecially French; whoſe Kingdom hath been ſore ſhaken by the Engliſh many times, eſpecially twice by King Edward the third, and Henry the fifth: this latter making ſo abſolute a conqueſt, that Charles the ſeventh like a poor Roy d' Ividot, confined himſelf to Bourges, where (having caſheered his retinue) he was found in a little Chamber at Supper, with a napkin only laid before him, a rump of Mutton and two Chickens. And ſo redoubted even after our expulſion from France, (our civill diſſenſions rather cauſing that expulſion, then the Frenchmens valour) was the Engliſh name in that Countrey: that in the Wars between King Charles the eighth, and the Duke of Bretagne, the Duke, to ſtrike a terror into his enemies, apparelled 1500 of his own Subjects, in the armes and Croſs of England. But as the Aſs, when he had on the Lions skin, was for all that but an Aſs and no Lion: ſo theſe Britons, by the weak reſiſtance they made againſt their Enemies, ſhewd that they were indeed Britons, and no Engliſhmen. Spain alſo taſted the valour of our Land-Souldiers, when John of Gaunt purſuing his title to Spain, was ſent home with 8 Waggons laden with gold, and an annual penſion of 10000 marks; as alſo when the Black Prince re-eſtabliſhed King Peter in his Throne. And then alſo did they acknowledge, though they felt not the puiſſance of the Engliſh, when Ferdinand the Catholique ſurprized the Kingdom of Navarre. For there were then in Fontarabia, a Town of Guipuſcoa, 6000 Engliſh Foot, who lay there, to joyn with this Ferdinand in an expedition againſt France. Concerning which Guicciardine giveth this Item, That the Kingdom of Navarre was yielded rather for the fear and reputation of the Engliſh Forces that were at hand, then by any puiſſance of the King of Aragon. Since thoſe times the Spaniard much eſteemed us, as appeareth by this ſpeech of theirs to our Souldiers at the Siege of Amiens. You are all tall Souldiers, and therefore when you come down to the Trenches, we double our guards, and look for blowes; but as for thoſe baſe and cowardly French, when they come, we make account we have nothing to do, but play, or ſleep on our Ramparts. The like the Netherlanders can teſtifie, only this is the grief of it, The Engliſh are like Pyrrhus King of Epirus, fortunate to conquer Kingdoms, but unfortunate to keep them. Not to ſay any thing of the late, but great experience, which the Engliſh Souldiery hath gotten by the Civill broiles among themſelves. At which my heart ſo aketh, and my hand ſo trembleth, that I ſhall only adde in the words of Lucan,

Heu quantum potuit cœli pelagiq; parari,
Hoc quem Civiles fuderunt ſanguine dextræ!

That is to ſay,

How much both Sea and Land might have been gain'd
By that dear blood, which Civil wars have drain'd!

As for their valour at Sea, it may evidently be perceived in the battel of Scluſe, wherein King Edward the 3d, with 200 Ships, overcame the French Fleet conſiſting of 500 Sail; of which he ſunk 200, and ſlew 30000 Souldiers. Secondly, at the battel in 88. wherein a few of the Queens Ships vanquiſhed the invincible Armado of the King of Spain, conſiſting of 134 great Galleons, and Ships of extraordinary bigneſs. Sir Francis Drake with 4 Ships, took from the Spaniard one million, and 189200 Ducats in one Voyage, An. 1587. And again with 25 Ships, he awed the Ocean, ſacked S. Jago, S. Dominico, and Cartagena; carrying away with him, beſides Treaſure, 240 Pieces of Ordnance. I omit the Circumnavigation of the whole World, by this Drake and Candiſh; and the voyage to Cales: as alſo how one of the Queens Ships named the Revenge, in which Sir Richard Greenvile was Captain, with 180 Souldiers (whereof 90 were ſick on the ballaſt) maintained a Sea-fight for 24 hours againſt above 50 of the Spaniſh Galleons. And though at laſt, after her Powder was ſpent to the laſt barrel, ſhe yeelded upon honorable terms; yet ſhe was never brought into Spain: having killed in that fight more than 1000 of their Souldiers, and ſunk four of their greateſt Veſſels. I omit alſo the diſcovery of the Northern paſſages, by Hugh Willoughby, Davis, and Frobiſher; concluding with that of Kekerman, Hoc certum eſt, omnibus hodie gentibus navigandi induſtria & peritia ſuperiores eſſe Anglos; & poſt Anglos, Hollandos: Though now I know not by what neglect, and diſcontinuance of thoſe honorable imployments, the Hollanders begin to bereave us of our antient Glories, and would fain account themſelves Lords of the Seas, and probably had been ſo indeed, had not His Majeſty by the timely reinforcing of his Naval Power, An. 1636. recovered again the Dominion of it.

The Engliſh Language is a De-compound of Dutch, French and Latine; which I conceive rather to adde to its perfection, than to detract any thing from the worth thereof; ſince out of every Language we have culled the moſt ſignificant words, and equally participate of that which is excellent in them; their imperfections being rejected. For it is neither ſo boyſterous as the Dutch, nor ſo effeminate as the French; yet as ſignificant as the Latine, and in the happy conjunction of two words into one, little inferior to the Greek.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted, as ſome ſay, by S. Peter and Paul; more probably (as others ſay) by Joſeph of Arimathea, whoſe body they find to have been interred in the Iſle of Avalonia, where the Abby of Glaſtenbury after ſtood. But that of his plantation being almoſt rooted out by long Perſecutions, and no ſupply of Preachers ſent from other places; Lucius a King of Britain (and the firſt Chriſtian King of Europe,) An. 180. or thereabouts, ſent his Ambaſſadours to Eleutherius the then Pope of Rome to be furniſhed with a new ſupply of Paſtors, if not to plant, yet at the leaſt to water, and confirm the Goſpel planted here before; but almoſt rooted out again by prevailing Gentiliſm. At which time Lucius did not only receive the Faith himſelf, but by the piety of his example, and the diligence of the firſt Preachers ſent from Rome (being both of them natural Britans) it ſpread by little and little over all his Dominions; and in ſome tract of time over all the Iſland. Which being thus recovered to the Faith of Chriſt, was forthwith furniſhed with Biſhops and Metropolitans, according to the number of the provinces and principal Cities (twenty eight in all) continuing here as long as Chriſtianity it ſelf. For not to truſt herein to the autority of the Britiſh Hiſtory, we find three Biſhops of this Iſle ſubſcribing to the Council of Arles, An. 314. viz. Eborius Biſhop of York, Reſtitutus Biſhop of London, and Adelfius, Biſhop of Colcheſter, there called Colonid Londinenſium: and ſome of them alſo preſent in the Council of Sardira, An. 358. concurring with the reſt in voting to the condemnation of the Arian Hereſies; and the ſame or others the next year in the Synod of Arimin. And when the Britans were expulſed their native Countrey, or ſhut up in the mountainous parts of the Ordovices, and Silures, which we now call Wales; they carried Chriſtianity and Biſhops along with them: Auguſtine the Monk, finding no fewer than ſeven Biſhops in the Britiſh Church, when he was ſent by Gregory the Great to convert the Engliſh. And yet it is no fabulous vanity, (as ſome men ſuppoſe) to ſay that Auguſtine the Monk firſt preached the Goſpel in England; becauſe it muſt be underſtood, not with Relation to the Britans, but the Engliſh Saxons: from whom theſe parts of the Iſle had the name of England; and from whom both the Britans, and the Faith it ſelf were driven into the Mountains of Wales and Cornwal, and Heatheniſm introduced again over all the Kingdom. Long after which it pleaſed God, that Gregory the Great, (but at that time a Deacon only in the Church of Rome) ſeeing ſome handſom youths to be ſold in open Market, demanded what and whence they were: to whom it was anſwered they were Angli: and well may they be ſo called (ſaith he) for they ſeem as Angels. Asking again of what Province they were amongſt the Angli; and anſwer being made of the Province Deira (part of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians) therefore (ſaid he) de ira Dei ſunt liberandi. And laſtly, underſtanding that the King of their Nation was named Alle; how fitly (ſaid he) may he ſing Allelujahs to the moſt High God? After which time he ſeriouſly endeavoured the Converſion of the Engliſh Nation; which being Pope he happily effected, by the travel and diligence of Auguſtine the Monk, the firſt Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And ſo well did the work proſper after this beginning, that not only all the Saxons did receive the Goſpel, but communicated the Light of it to other Nations: the Haſſians, Franconians, and England. Turingians being converted by Winifred; the Friſons or Hollanders by Wittikind the firſt Biſhop of Utrecht; the Saxons of Weſtphalen, by Weldrode, the firſt Biſhop of Breme; all of them being Engliſh Saxons, as we we find in Beda and ſome others.

Now as theſe parts of Britain were the firſt which generally entertained the Goſpel; ſo were they the firſt alſo in theſe latter times, which univerſally ſubmitted to the Reformation of ſuch corruptions, as had been brought upon them by the power and tyranny of the Church of Rome. Endeavoured firſt in France, by the Albigenſes, and Waldenſes, as was ſaid before. Who being ſuppreſſed and ruinated by the ſword of the Kings of France, ſheltred themſelves in the mountainous parts of Gaſcoigne and Guienne, then in poſſeſſion of the Engliſh; who by that means became acquainted with their Tenets: maintained here publickly by Wiclef, and ſpreading under-hand amongſt the people of this Kingdom, till the times of Luther, and the Reformation by him aimed at. Which being in moſt other Countries received tumultuouſly, by the power of the People; was here admitted upon mature deliberation, by the authority and conſent of the Prince and Prelates: the Architects in this great work, without reſpect unto the Dictats of Luther, or Calvin, looking only on Gods Word and the Primitive Patterns, aboliſhing ſuch things as were repugnant unto either, but ſtill retaining ſuch Ceremonies in Gods publick worſhip, as were agreeable to both, and had been countenanced by the practice of the Primitive times. A point wherein they did obſerve a greater meaſure of Chriſtian prudence and moderation, than their neighbour Churches; which in a meer deteſtation of the See of Rome, allowed of nothing which had formerly been in uſe amongſt them, becauſe defiled with Popiſh Errors and abuſes: and thereby utterly averting thoſe of the Papal party from joyning with them in the work, or coming over to them when the work was done. Whereas had they continued an allowable correſpondency in theſe extrinſecals of Religion, with the Church of Rome; their party in the world had been far greater, and not ſo much ſtomached as it is. And ſo it was conceived by the Marqueſs de Rhoſne, after Duke of Sally, and Lord High-Treaſurer of France, and one of the chief men of that party there: when being ſent Ambaſſadour to King James, from King Henry the 4th, he had obſerved the Majeſty and Decency of Gods publick Service, in ſome Cathedrals of this Kingdom; Religion would be ſoon defaced, and trod under foot; if not preſerved and fenced about with the hedge of Ceremonies.

As for the Government of the Church ſince the laſt Converſion, as by the piety and example of Lucius there were founded three Archbiſhopricks, and 25. Biſhopricks, according to the number of the Archi-Flamines and Flamines (whoſe great Revenues were converted to more ſacred uſes) in the times of Idolatry: So by the like pious care of Pope Gregory the Great, by whoſe means this laſt Converſion happned; Archbiſhopricks, and Biſhopricks were deſigned to convenient places. The number 26 in all, to each Province twelve, beſides the two Archbiſhops and Metropolitans: wherein he had the happineſs to have his deſires fulfilled, though the number was not made compleat till theſe later days, nor with ſuch equal diſtribution, as he did intend For in the Province of York laid waſt and deſolate by the Danes, and not ſo ſoon converted as the other was; the number of the Suffragan Biſhops came not up to his purpoſe, but did as much exceed in the Province of Canterbury: eſpecially when King Henry the 8th had incorporated Wales with England; and founded five Epiſcopal Sees out of the ruines and Revenues of ſome principal Monaſteries: of which none but the Biſhoprick of Cheſter (and that of the Iſle of Man, which maketh up the 27th) were laid unto the Provine of York. And ſo it ſtood, notwithſtanding the alterations of Religion, without any diſpute, till Calvin having hammered out his new Presbyterie, and recommended it to the uſe of all Chriſtian Churches (the Hiſtory whereof we had ſuccinctly in the Alpine Provinces) found many apt Scholars in moſt places to decry this Order, though conſonant to the Word of God, and moſt pure Antiquity.

But the truth is, it was not ſo much the Authority of Calvin, or the malignant zeal of Beza, or the impetuous clamors of their Diſciples, which cauſed the Epiſcopal Order to grow out of credit; as the Avarice of ſome great perſons in Court and State, who greedily gaped after the poor remnant of their Poſſeſſions. It had been elſe a miracle that Calvins Plat-form, made only for the uſe of a private City, and not proportioned, no nor intended at the firſt, to the eſtate of other Churches, eſpecially where the Biſhops had been inſtrumental in the Reformation; ſhould be ſo headily received in ſome Kingdoms, and ſo importunately and clamorouſly deſired in others.

The moſt valorous Souldiers of this Countrey, when poſſeſſed by the Britains, were 1 Caſſibelane, who twice repulſed the Roman Legions, though conducted By Cæſar; and had not a party here at home been formed againſt him; he had for ever done the like. 2 Pratuſagus, King of the Iceni. 3 Conſtantine the Great. 4 Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies. In the times of the Saxons, 5 Guy Earl of Warwick, 6 King Edmund Ironſide; and 7 Canutus the Dane. Under the Normans, of moſt note have been, 1 William, ſurnamed the Conqueror, 2 Richard, and 3 Edward, both the firſt of thoſe names, ſo renowned in the wars of the Holy-Land; 4 Edward the 3d, and 5 Edward the Black Prince, his Son, Duo fulmina belli, as famous in the wars of France; 6 Henry the fifth, and 7 John Duke of Bedford his Brother, of equal gallantry with the other. 8 Montacute Earl of Saliſbury. 9 S. John Faſtolf, and 10 S. John Hawkwood, of great eſteem for valour in France, and Italy: not to deſcend to later times. And for Sea Captains, thoſe of moſt note, have been Hawkins, Willoughby, Burroughs, Jenkinſon, Drake, Frobiſher, Cavendiſh and Greenvile; of ſome of which we have ſpoke already, and of the reſt may have an opportunity to ſay more hereafter.

Scholars of moſt renown amongſt us, 1 Alcuinus, one of the Founders of the Univerſity of Paris. 2 Beda, who for his Piety and Learning obtained the Attribute or Adjunct of Venerabilis. Concerning which the Legends tell us, that being blind, his Boy had knaviſhly conducted him to preach to an head of ſtones; & that when he had ended his Sermon with the Gloria Patri, the very ſtones concluded, ſaying Amen,

Amen, Amen Venerabilis Beda. But other of the Monkiſh writers do aſſign this reaſon, & both true alike; that at his death ſome unlearned Prieſt intending to honour him with an Epitaph, had thus far blundered on a verſe, viz. Hic ſunt in foſſa Bedæ oſſa: but becauſe the verſe was yet imperfect, he went to bed to conſider of it, leaving a ſpace betwixt the two laſt words thereof; which in the morning he found filled up in a ſtrange Character, with the word Venerabilis; and ſo he made his Verſe, and Beda (pardon this diverſion) obtained that Attribute. 3 Anſelm, and 4 Bradwardin, Archbiſhops of Canterbury, men famous for the times they lived in. 5 Alexander of Hales, Tutor to Thomas Aquinas, and Bonaventure. 6 Thomas of Walden, the profeſſed enemy of Wiclef, againſt whom he writ. 7 John Wiclef parſon of Lutterworth, in the County of Leiceſter, who ſo valiantly oppoſed the power and Errors of the Church of Rome; though he vented many of his own. Then ſince the times of the Reformation, 1 John Jewel, Biſhop of Saliſbury, to whoſe learned and induſtrious labours, in defence of the Religion here by law eſtabliſhed, we are ſtill beholding. 2 Dr. John Reynolds, and 3 Mr. Richard Hooker, both of Corpus Chriſti Colledge in Oxon; the firſt, a man of infinite reading, the ſecond of as ſtrong a judgement. 4 Dr. Whitakers of Cambridge, the Antaganiſt of the famous Bellarmine. 5 Dr. Thomas Bilſon, and 6 Dr. Lancelot Andrews, both Biſhops of Wincheſter, the Ornaments of their ſeveral times. 7 Biſhop Montagne of Norwich, a great Philologer and Divine. 8 Dr. John Whitguift, and 9 Dr. William Laud, Archbiſhops of Canterbury. Of which laſt, and his diſcourſe againſt Fiſher the Jeſuite, Sir Edward Dering, his profeſſed enemy, hath given this Character, that in that Book of his he had muzled the Jeſuits, and ſhould ſtrike the Papiſts under the fift rib, when he was dead and gone: and that being dead, whereſoever his grave ſhould be, PAULS (whoſe reparation he endeavoured, and had almoſt finiſhed) would be his perpetual Monument, and his own Book his laſting Epitaph. And as for thoſe who have ſtood up in maintenance of the Church of Rome, thoſe of moſt note were Dr. Harding, the Antagoniſt of Biſhop Jewel. 2 Nic. Sanders, and 3 Dr. Thomas Stapleton, to whoſe writings the great Cardinal Bellarmine doth ſtand much indebted. 4 Campian, and 5 Parſons, both Jeſuites, 6 and William Reynolds a Seminary Prieſt, and the Brother of Dr. John Reynolds ſpoken of before. Of which two Brothers (by the way) it is very obſervable, that William was at firſt a Proteſtant of the Church of England, and John trained up in Popery beyond the Seas. William out of an honeſt zeal to reduce his Brother to this Church, made a journey to him: where on a conference betwixt them it ſo fell out, that John being overcome by his brothers arguments returned into England, where he became one of the more ſtrict or rigid ſort of the Engliſh Proteſtants; and William being convinced by the reaſons of his Brother John, ſtaid beyond the Seas, where he proved a very violent and virulent Papiſt. Of which ſtrange accident Dr. Alabaſter, who had made trial of both Religions, and amongſt many notable whimſeys had ſome fine abilities, made this following Epigram; which for the excellency thereof, and the rareneſs of the argument, I ſhall here ſubjoyn. England.

Bella inter geminos pluſquam Civilia Fratres, Traxerat ambiguus Religionis apex.
Ille Reformatæ Fidei pro partibus inſtat;
Iſte reformandam denegat eſſe fidem,
Propoſitis cauſæ rationibus, alterutrinque;
Concurrere pares, & cecidere pares.
Quod fuit in votis, Fratrem capit alter-uterque;
Quod fuit in fatis, perdit uterque fidem.
Captivi gemini ſine captivante fuerunt,
Et victor victi tranſuga caſtra petit.
Quod genus hoc pugnæ eſt, ubi victus gaudet uterque;
Et tamen alter-uter ſe ſuperaſſe dolet?

Which excellent Epigram, though not without great diſadvantage to the Latine Original, I have thus tranſlated:

In points of Faith ſome undetermin'd jars,
Betwixt two Brothers kindled Civil wars.
One for the Churches Reformation ſtood:
The other thought no Reformation good.
The points propos'd, they traverſed the field
With equal skill, and both together yield.
As they defir'd, his Brother each ſubdue's;
Yet ſuch their Fate, that each his Faith did looſe.
Both Captive's, none the priſoners thence to guide;
The Victor flying to the Vanquiſht ſide.
Both joy'd in being Conquer'd, (ſtrange to ſay)
And yet both mourn'd becauſe both won the day.

And then for men of other Studies, 1 Lindwood the Canoniſt, 2 Coſins, and 3 Cowel, eminent in the ſtudies of the Civil Laws; 4 Bracton, and 5 Briton of old times; 6 Dier, and 7 Coke of late days, as eminent for their knowledge in the Laws of England. 8 Johannes de Sacro Boſco, the Author of the Book of the Sphere, and 9 Roger Bacon, a noted Mathematician in the darker times. 10 Sir Francis Bacon the learned Viſcount of S. Albans, of whom more hereafter. 11 Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellor, one of England. the Reſtorers of Learning to the Iſle of great Britain. 12 Sr. Henry Savile of Eaton, the reviver of Chryſoſtom, 13 Sir Henry Spelman, a right learned antiquary, and a religious aſſertor of the Churches rights. 14 Camden, Clarentieux, the Pauſanias of the Britiſh Iſlands. 15 Matthew Paris, 16 Roger Hoveden, 17 Henry of Huntingdon, 18 William of Malmesbury, 19 Matthew of Weſtminſter, and 20 Thomas of Walſingham; all known Hiſtorians. And finally for Poetry, 1 Gower, 2 Lidgate, a Monk of Burie, 3 the famous Geoffry Chawcer, Brother in Law to John of Gaunt the great Duke of Lancaſter; of which laſt Sir Philip Sidney uſed to ſay, that he marvelled how in theſe miſtie times he could ſee ſo cleerly, and others in ſo cleer times go ſo blindly after him. 4. Sir Philip Sidney himſelf, of whom and his Arcadia, more when we come to Greece. 5 The renowned Spencer, of whom and his Faerie Queen in another place. 6 Sam. Daniel, the Lucan, 7 with Michael Draiton, the Ovid of the Engliſh Nation. 8. Beaumount, and 9 Fletcher, not inferiour unto Terence and Plautus; with 10 My friend Ben. Johnſon, equal to any of the antients for the exactneſs of his Pen, and the decorum which he kept in the Dramatick Poems, never before obſerved on the Engliſh Theatre. Others there are as eminent both for Arts and Arms, as thoſe here ſpecified, of whom, as being ſtill alive, I forbear to ſpeak; according to that caution of the Hiſtorian, ſaying, Vivorum ut magna admiratio, ita Cenſura eſt difficilis.

But from the men to return again unto the Countrey, we find it to be ſubject (according to the ſeveral reſpects of Church and State) to a treble diviſion: viz. 1 into 6 Circuites deſtinated to the Itinerary Judges; Secondly, into 22 Epiſcopal Dioceſes; Thirdly, into 40 Shires. The Realm was firſt divided into Circuits by King Henry the ſecond, who appointed twice in the year, two of the moſt grave and learned Judges of the Land, ſhould in each Circuit adminiſter Juſtice in the chief or head Towns of every Countrey. Of theſe Judges one ſitteth on matters Criminal, concerning the life and death of Malefactors; the other in actions Perſonal, concerning title of Land, Debts, or the like, between party and party. The firſt Circuit (for we will begin at the Weſt) comprehendeth the Counties of Wilts, Somerſet, Devon, Cornwal, Dorſet, and Southampton; the ſecond containeth the Counties of Oxford, Berks, Gloceſter, Munmouth, Hereford, Worceſter, Salop, and Stafford; The third hath in it the Counties of Surrey, Suſſex, Kent, Eſſex, and Hartford; The fourth conſiſteth of the Shires of Buckingham, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Norfolk, and Suffolk; The fift of the Shires of Northampton, Rutland, Lincoln, Nottingham, Darby, Leiceſter, and Warwick; And the ſixt and laſt, of the Shires of York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Weſtmerland, and Lancaſter. So that in theſe ſix Circuits are numbred 38 Shires. The two remaining are Middleſex, and Cheſhire: whereof the firſt is exempted, becauſe of its vicinity to London; and the ſecond as being a County Palatine, and having peculiar Judges and Counſellours to it ſelf.

The ſecond diviſion, but more antient far in point of time, is that of Dioceſes, 22 in all, proportioned according to the number of Epiſcopal Sees: each Dioceſe having in it one or more Arch-Deaconries, for diſpatch of Eccleſiaſtical buſineſs; and every Arch-Deaconrie ſubdivided into Rural Deanries, fewer or more, according to the bigneſs and extent thereof. Of theſe there are but four in the Province of York, that is to ſay, the Dioceſes of York, Cheſter, Durham, and Carlile: the other 18 (together with the 4 of Wales) being reckoned into that of Canterbury. In reſpect of which great authority and juriſdiction, the Archbiſhops of Canterbury had antiently the titles of Primates and Metropolitans of all England; for ſome ages before the Reformation, uſed to take place in all General Councils, at the Popes right foot. Which cuſtom took beginning at the Council of Laterane, when Urban the ſecond called Anſelm the Archbiſhop of Canterbury from amongſt the other Prelates then aſſembled, and placed him at his right foot, ſaying, Includamus hunc in Orbe noſtro tanquam alterius Orbis Papam. This hapned An. 1099. They were antiently alſo Legati nati; which honourable title was firſt given to Archbiſhop Theobald, by Innocent the ſecond, and continued unto his ſucceſſors. And both to honour their calling in the courſe of their Government, and to have the benefit of their Counſel being men of learning; both the Archbiſhops and the Biſhops, were antiently priviledged to have their place and ſuffrage in the High Court of Parliament (ever ſince any Parliaments were firſt held in Eegland) as Peers of the Realm; and that too in a double reſpect: firſt in relation had to their ſacred Office, and ſecondly to thoſe temporal eſtates and Baronies, which they held of the King. Yet did they not enjoy in the times of their greateſt power and flouriſh, all the Prerogatives and Priviledges of the temporal Barons: as neither being tryed by their Peers in Criminal cauſes, but left to an Ordinary Jury; nor ſuffered in examinations to make a Proteſtation upon their honour, to the truth of a fact, but put unto their Oaths like others of the lower Clergy. As for their Eccleſiaſtical Courts, it was antiently Ordered alſo, that beſides ſuch as appertained to the Archbiſhops themſelves; beſides thoſe holden by the Chancellours and Archdeacons of every Biſhop, in their ſeveral Dioceſes; and ſome in many private Pariſhes which they called Peculiars; and finally beſides the Courts of Viſitation, held every two years by the Archdeacons or their Officials, and every third year by the Biſhop himſelf in perſon, or his lawful Deputy: there ſhould be alſo Synods or Convocations, which are the Parliaments of the Clergy, aſſembled primarily for the Reforming of the Church in Doctrine and Diſcipline; and ſecondarily for granting Tenths and Subſidies to the King: Which Synods whether they be National or Provincial only, do naturally conſiſt of all the Right Reverend Fathers, the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, the Deans, Archdeacons, and one Prebend out of each Cathedral, and a certain number of the Clergy, (two for every Dioceſe) elected by the reſt to ſerve for them in that great Aſſembly; the Clergy not being bound antiently by any Act, to which they had not given conſent by thoſe their Proxies: Of which ſo called and met together, the Biſhops ſitting by themſelves make the Upper Houſe, the Deans, Archdeacons, and the reſt, doe conſtitute the Lower Houſe of Convocation.

The third and laſt Diviſion, though the ſecond in courſe of time, is that of Shires made by King Alfride, Alfride, both for the easier Administration of justice; and to prevent such Outrages and Robberies, as (after the example of the Danes) the natural Inhabitants of the Realm began in all places to commit. For over every one of these Shires or Counties, he appointed an High-Sheriff and divers Officers, to see into the behaviour of private men, and to punish such as were delinquent: and in times of war either already begun, or intended, he instituted a Prefect or Lieutenant; to whom he gave authority to see their musters, their provision of arms; and if occasion served, to punish such as rebelled or mutinied. This wise King ordained also, that his Subjects should be divided into tens or tithings, every of which severally should give bond for the good abearing of each other; and he who was of that dissolute behaviour, that he could not be admitted to these tithings, was forthwith conveyed to the house of correction. By this course every man was not careful only of his own actions, but had an eye to all the nine for whom he stood bound; as the nine had over him: insomuch that a poor girl might travel safely with a bag of gold in her hand, and none durst meddle with her. The antientest of these ten men were called κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the Tithingmen. Ten of the nighest and neighbouring tithings, made the lesser Division which we call hundreds: which name cannot be derived from the like number of villages, for none of our hundreds are so large: and one of them there is in Berk-shire, which containeth five hamlets only. We have then a division of the Realm into 40 Shires; of the Shires into divers hundreds; and of the hundreds into ten tithings. And this division made by Alfride still remains in force: as also doth the High Sheriff, and the rest of the subordinate Officers: the office of the High Sheriff consisting especially at this time, in executing Arrests, assisting the Itinerary Judges, gathering the Kings Fines and Amerciaments, and raising the Posse Comitatus, if occasion be. But for the Civil part of government in the several Counties, it is most in the hands of such as we call Justices of the Peace, authorised by Commission under the Great Seal of England: appointed first by that prudent Prince King Edward the first, by the name of Custodes Pacis, Guardians of the Peace, and first called Justices of the Peace in the 36 of King Edward the 3d, Cap. 11. A form of Government so much conducing to the prosperity of the Countrey, and the security of the People; that King James, the first Monarch of Great Britain, established it by Law in the Kingdom of Scotland. Then for the Courts, which are still kept in every Shire, they are either the County Court holden every moneth, wherein the Sheriff or his sufficient Deputy commonly presideth; or the Assizes and Court of Gaol-delivery held twice a year by the Judges Itinerant, assisted by the Justices of the Peace, and others in Commission with them. There are also two Officers in every hundred chosen out of the Yeomanrie, whom we call the Constables of the hundred: who receiving the Precepts or Warrants of the Sheriff, or Justices, dispatcheth them to the Tithingman or Petit Constable of each town, and village, in their several Divisions. And in each hundred, a Court kept once in three Weeks, by the Steward of the hundred, or his Deputy, capeable of Pleas or Actions under the value of 40*s.* though in some few of these Courts also (as in that of Slaughter-hundred in Gloucestershire) the value of the Action, by some special Charter, be left unlimited. The like Courts also holden in some antient Burroughs. And besides these in every Village are two several Courts, and these two holden twice a year, if occasion be, held by the Steward of the Manour: in the one of which called the Court Leet, there is Enquirie made into Treasons, Felonies, Murders, and other Cases, falling between the King and the Subject; and in the other, which we call by the name of Court Baron, such only as concern the Lord and Tenants, and these last for the most part summoned at the will of the Lord: So that Comines had (we see) good reason for this Affirmation, that of all the Signeuries in the World that ever he knew, the Realm of England was the Countrey in which the Common-wealth was best governed.

To return again unto the Shires, some of them take their names from the old Inhabitants, as Cumberland from the Cymbri or antient Britans; Essex, and Sussex, from the East and South Saxons: some from the situation of them, as Northumberland, Norfolk, Suthfolk, Devonshire; this last so called from Devinam, a Welch or British word, signifying Low Vallies, of which it very much consisteth: Some from the form or figure of them, as Cornwall, from the resemblance which it hath to an horn; and Kent, (in Latin, Cantium) because it lieth in a Canton or Corner of the Island: Some from some Accidents therin, as Berkshire or Berockshire from the abundance of Boxe, which the Saxons call by the name of Beroc: the most part from the principal Town of all the County, as Gloceſter, Oxford, and the like. Of these Shires the biggest beyond all compare, is the County of York, out of which 70000 men may be raised for present service, if need so require. And in them all are comprehended 8709 Parishes (besides those of Wales) not reckoning in such Chappels as we call Chappels of Ease, in greatness not inferiour to many Parishes; 22 Cities, and 585 Market Towns which are no Cities; and in the Towns and Villages to the number of 145 Castles, or ruines of Castles; few of them places of importance, and such as are belonging generally to the Kings, who suffer not any of their Subjects to nest themselves in Strong Holds and Castles.

Cities of most observation in it, 1 London, seated on the Thames, by which divided into two parts, conjoyned together by a stately and magnificent Bridge, spoken of before. The River capeable in this place of the greatest Ships, by means whereof it hath been reckoned a long time for one of the most famous Mart Towns in Christendom: and not long since, had so much got precedency of all the rest, that the greatest part of the wealth of Europe was driven up that River. A City of great note in the time of the Roman conquest; to whom it was first known by the name of Londinum: a Town at that time of great trade and riches; and by them honoured with the title of Augusta. Increased of late very much in buildings; contiguous to some Towns and Villages, from which in former times disjoyned by some distant intervals. So that the Circuit may contain 8 miles at least: in which space are 122 Parish Churches; the Palace of the King, the houses of the Nobility, Colledges for the study of the Laws, I mean not the Civil Law, which is Jus Gentium, but (as we call it) the Common Law, appropriate only to England. this Kingdom. It is wondrous populous, containing welnigh 600000 people, which number is much augmented in the Term time. Some compare London with Paris thus: London is the richer, the more populous, and more antient; Paris the greater, more uniform, and better fortified. But for my part, as I doe not think that London is the more populous; so neither can I grant that Paris is the greater City, except we measure them by the Wals. For taking in the Suburbs of both, and all that passeth in Accompt by the name of London: I cannot but conceive, that if London were cast into the same orbicular figure, the circumference of it would be larger than that of Paris. For uniformity of building, Paris indeed doth go beyond it; but may in that be equalled also in some tract of time, if the design begun in King James his reign, tending to the advancement of such uniformity, be not interrupted. For other things, certain it is that London is the antienter City, as being an Archbishops See in the time of the Britains, when the name of Paris was scarce heard of; a Bishops See at the first conversion of the Saxons: increased so much in wealth and honour from one Age to another, that it is grown at last too big for the Kingdom; which whether it may be profitable for the State, or not, may be made a question. Great Towns in the body of a State, are like the Spleen or Melt in the body natural; the monstrous growth of which impoverisheth all the rest of the Members, by drawing to it all the animal and vital spirits, which should give nourishment unto them; And in the end cracked or surcharged by its own fulness, not only sends unwholesom fumes and vapours unto the head, and heavy pangs unto the heart, but draws a consumption on it self. And certainly the over-growth of great Cities is of dangerous consequence, not only in regard of Famin, such multitudes of mouthes not being easie to be fed: but in respect of the irreparable danger of Insurrections, if once those multitudes, sensible of their own strength, oppressed with want, or otherwise distempered with faction or discontent, should gather to an head, and break out into action. Yet thus much may be said to the honour of London, though grown by much too big now for the kingdom, that it is generally so well governed, and in so good peace; that those Murders, Robberies, and outrages so frequent in great and populous Cities beyond the Seas, are here seldom heard of. 2. York, in the West Riding of that County, the second City of England, as the old Verse hath it.

Londinum caput est & Regni urbs prima Britanni, Eboracum à primâ jure secunda venit.

That is to say,

In England, London is the chiefest Town;
The second place York claimeth as its own.

And so it may, being indeed the second City of the Kingdom, both for fame and greatness. A pleasant, large, and stately City, well fortified and beautifully adorned, as well with private as publick Edifices; and rich, and populous withall. Seated upon the River Ouse, or Vre, which divides it in twain; both parts being joyned together with a fair stone Bridge, consisting of high and mighty Arches. A City of great estimation in the time of the Romans, the Metropolis of the whole Provine or Diocese of Britain; remarkable for the death and burial of the Emperour Severus, and the birth of Constantine the Great: by consequence the Seat of the Primate of the British Church, as long as Christianity did remain amongst them. Nor stooped it lower when the Saxons had received the Faith: and notwithstanding those mutations which befel this Kingdom, under the Saxons, Danes, and Normans, it still preserved its antient lustre; and increased it too. Adorned with a stately and magnificent Cathedral, inferiour to few in Europe; and with a Palace of the Kings, (called the Manour-house) the dwelling in these later days, of the Lord President of the Court or Councel here established by King Henry the 8th, for the benefit of his Northern Subjects, after the manner of the French Parliaments, or Presidiall Seiges. 3. Bristol, the third in rank of the Cities of England, situate on the meeting of the Frome and Avon, not far from the influx of the Severn into the Ocean: in that regard commodiously seated for trade and traffick; the Ships with full sayl coming into the City, and the Citizens with as full purses trading into most parts of the World, with good Faith and Fortune. A Town exceeding populous, and exceeding cleanly, there being Sewers made under ground, for the conveyance of all filth and nastiness, into the Rivers. Churches it hath to the number of 18 or 20, reckoning in the Cathedral, and that of Ratcliff. The Cathedral first built by Rob. Fitz. Harding, Son to a King of Denmark, once a Burger here, and by him stored with Canons Regular, Anno 1248. but made a Bishops See by King Henry 8th, Anno 1542. The principal building next the Church, an antient Castle, a piece of such strength, that Maud the Empress having took King Steven Prisoner, thought it the safest place to secure him in. 4. Norwich, the fourth City of the first rank, of which more hereafter. 5. Oxford, the first of the second rank of English Cities seated upon the Ouse or Isis: but whether so called as Vadum Isidos, Ouseford, or the Ford of Ouse; or Vada boum (as the Grecks had their Bosphori in former times) I determine not. An antient Town, and antiently made a seat of Learning, coeval unto that of Paris, if not before it; the University hereof being restored rather than first founded by King Alured, Anno 806. after it had been overborn a while by the Danish Furies; but hereof as an University, more anon. This only now, that for the stateliness of the Schools and publick library, the bravery and beauty of particular Colleges, all built of fair and polished stone; the liberal endowment of those houses, and notable encouragements of Industry and Learning in the salarie of the Professors in most Arts and Sciences, it is not to be parallelled in the Christian World. The City of it self well built, and as pleasantly seated, formed in the Figure of a Cross, two long streets thwarting one another, each of them near a mile in length; containing

containing in that compaſs 13 Pariſh Churches, and a See Epiſcopal founded here by the King Henry 8th, An. 1541. The honorary Title of twenty of the noble Family of the Veres, now Earls of Oxon. 6. Saliſbury, firſt ſeated on the Hill, where now ſtands old Saliſbury, the Sorbiodunum of the Antients. But the Cathedral being removed down into the Vale, the Town quickly followed, and grew up very ſuddenly into great Renown; pleaſantly ſeated on the Avon, (a name common to many Engliſh Rivers) which watereth every ſtreet thereof; and for the populouſneſſe of the place, plenty of Proviſions, number of Churches, a ſpacious Market-place, and a fair Town-hall, eſteemed the ſecond City of all the Weſt. 7. Gloceſter, by Antonine called Glevum, by the Britains Caer Glowy, whence the preſent name; the Saxons adding Ceſter, as in other places. A fine neat City, pleaſantly ſeated on the Severn, with a large Key or Wharf on the banks thereof, very commodious to the Merchandize and trade of the place: well Built, conſiſting of fair large Streets, beautified with a magnificent Cathedral; and ſituate in ſo rich a Vale, that there is nothing wanting to the uſe of man, except only Wine, which life or luxury may require. 8. Cheſter, upon the River Dee, built in the manner of a quadrate, incloſed with a wall, which takes up more than two miles in compaſs; containing in that compaſs 12 Pariſh Churches, and an old Cathedral dedicated antiently to S. Wereburg Daughter of Wolfere K. of the Mercians, and Viſitreſs of all the Monaſteries of England. But made a Biſhops See by King Henry the 8th. The buildings generally fair, the Streets wide and open, with Galleries before every door, under which a man may walk dry from one end to the other. The reſt of chief note ſhall be ſpecified on another occaſion, with this advertiſement, that the ordinary Cities of England are not to be compared with thoſe of France, and Italy: Firſt becauſe the Nobles and Gentry of thoſe Countries live for the moſt part in the Cities, ours in Country-Villages; And ſecondly, becauſe the Londoners ſo ingroſs all trading, that they draw thither all the Wealth and treaſure of the Kingdom. By means whereof, that every day increaſeth in wealth and beauty; the reſt (except Briſtol only) doe decay as ſenſibly: that City being like the Spleen in the body natural, the monſtrous growth whereof ſtarveth all the reſt of the Members. Liene excreſente, reliquum corpus contabeſcit, as the Doctors have it. England.

There are in England but two Univerſities, which may equal ſix, nay ten of all other Countries, (ſo that Paris be not in the number) moſt of them being no better than our Colleges of Weſtminſter, Eaton, or Winchеſter; and none ſo liberally endowed, as ſome one of theſe in the Univerſities. Of which there are 16 in Cambridge, ſome of them called only by the name of Hals, but theſe endowed with Lands and Fellowſhips as the others are. In Oxford there are 18 Colleges endowed with Lands, beſides ſix Hals, where Students live at their own charges: in both of them, Profeſſors of the Arts and Sciences, as alſo of Divinity, Law, Phyſick, and the Learned Languages, with liberal Salaries; and in each to the number of 3000 Students, ſo regular in their lives and converſations, as are not to be found in the World beſides. The fairer and more antient, Oxford, which of long time, together with Paris in France, Bononia in Italy, and Salamanca in Spain, hath been honoured with the Title of Generale ſtudium. For that the Univerſity of Cambridge, (though giving upper hand to her ſiſter of Oxford, ſhe may take place of all the Univerſities in the World beſides) is not of ſo long ſtanding, as that of Oxford, is evident by the teſtimony of Robertus de Remington, cited by Maſter Camden, viz. Regnante Edwardo primo, (It ſhould rather be read ſecundo) de ſtudio Grantbridge facta eſt Academia, ſicut Oxonium: where the word ſicut doth not import an identity of the time; but a relation to Oxford, as to the pattern. We ſee this truth yet clearer in the Bull of Pope John the 21, the contemporary of our Edward 2d, as I find in the work of that great Searcher of Academical Antiquities, Mr. Brian Twine. Apoſtolica authoritate ſtatuimus (ſaith the Bull) quod Collegium magiſtrorum & ſcholarium ejudem ſtudii (ſpeaking of Cambridge) Univerſitas ſit cenſenda, &c. But what need more than the Reſolution of the Commons of the firſt Parliament holden under King James? For when the Clerk of that Houſe had put the name of Cambridge before Oxford; they taking diſdainfully that Hyſteron Proteron, commanded the Antiquities of both Univerſities to be ſearched, and after ſearch made gave the place to Oxford. But to proceed, the Univerſity of Cambridge as it was much of a later Foundation, ſo was it long before it grew into eſteem: inſomuch that when William of Wainflete Biſhop of Winchеſter, and Founder of Magdalen College in Oxon (whereof I was once an unworthy Member) perſwaded King Henry the ſixth to erect a College in Oxford, as ſome of the Kings his Predeceſſors had done before him: immo potius Cantabrigiæ (replyed the King) Ut duas ſi fieri poſſit in Anglia Academias habeam. No ſaid the King, in Cambridge rather, that ſo, if poſſible, I may have two Univerſities in my Realm of England.

As for the Story of this Countrey, that it was firſt peopled out of Gaul is affirmed by Cæſar, and proved by many ſtrong and concluding Arguments; as their Religion, Manners, Languages, Cuſtoms, and the neerneſs of the one to the other. To omit therefore the Fable of Brute, and the Catalogue of 68 Kings, which are ſaid to have reigned here ſucceſſively before the coming of the Romans; Certain it is, that Cæſar found the countrey cantoned into many Kingdoms (four in Kent alone) & the people to be very rude & illiterate. Such Learning as they had was locked up in the breſts of the Druides; who committed nothing unto writing, and by that means kept the People in continual ignorance: communicating what they knew to none but thoſe of their own Order, and therein being ſought to by the Druides or Prieſts of Gaul; who came over into this Iſland to them, and did from them receive the knowledge of their ſacred Myſteries. Being conquered or diſcovered rather by Julius Cæſar, it was not ſo much as looked after by the two next Emperours: Auguſtus and Tiberius counting it an high point of Wiſdom, not to extend the Empire beyond the Ocean. Caligula had once a mind to the Adventure, but he durſt not follow it. But Claudius, his Succeſſor, undertook the Enterpriſe; ſollicited thereunto by Bericus a noble Briton, who for ſedition and ſome practices againſt the publick, was expelled the Countrey. Hereupon Aulus Plautius is ſent over with ſome Roman Forces, by whom and P. Oſtorius Scapula England. Scapula, his Succeſſor, Togodumnus and Caractacus, two Kings of the Britans, were ſeverally overcome in battel, a Roman Colony planted at Camalodunum, and the Southern parts thereof reduced to the form of a Province. After this time by little and little the whole was conquered, as far as to the Frythes of Dunbarten and Edenburgh: Agricola in the time of Domitian, having the happineſs, and good fortune, to goe beyond the furtheſt of his Predeceſſors; and ſo much moderation not to venture further, where there was nothing to be got but blows, cold, and hunger.

At the firſt entrance of the Romans, the Iſland was divided into ſeveral Nations, each governed by its own own Kings and particular Princes, different in their ends and counſels, and ſo more eaſily ſubdued by united Forces. The principal of which (for it is needleſs to make mention of inferiour Clans) were 1 the Danmonii, containing Devonſhire, and Cornwal; whoſe chief Cities were Iſca, now Exeter, and Volcha neer the Town of Falmouth in Cornwal. 2 The Durotriges, inhabiting only in the County of Dorſet; whoſe chief City was Danium or Durnovaria, which we now call Dorcheſter. 3 The Belgæ, planted in the Counties of Somerſet, Southampton, and Wilts, whoſe chief Cities were Aquæ calidæ, now Bath; Venta Belgarum, now Wincheſter; and Sorbiodunum, the ſeat of old Saliſbury. 4 The Attrebatii, confined within Barkſhire only, the chief City of whom was Gualena, where now is Wallingford. 5 The Regni, poſſeſſed of Suſſex and Surrey, whoſe chief Cities were Vindelis, now Winchelſey; and Neomagus, ſituate ſome ten miles from London. 6 The Kantiani, or the Kentiſh, having Durovernum, now Canterbury, Dubris, now Dover, and Rhutupiæ, now called Richborough, for their principal Cities. 7 The Trinobantes of Middleſex, and Eſſex, where London called afterwards Auguſta Trinobantum; and Camalodunum the firſt Roman Colony, now called Maldon, the Seat Royal of Cunabelinus, King of the Trinobantes in the time of the Romans 8 The Catieuchlani, dwelling in the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford and Hartford, whoſe Towns of moſt importance were Magivintum, now called Dunſtable; and Verulamium, (neer S. Albans) the ſtrongeſt Hold the Britains had in their wars with Cæſar. 9 The Iceni, living in the Counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Huntington, and Cambridge; their principal Cities being Villa Faſtini, now S. Edmundsbury, Sitomagus, now Thetford, Durolis, now Godmancheſter; and Camboritum, or Cambridge. 10 Coritani, who took up the whole Counties of Lincoln, Leiceſter, Rutland, Nottingham, Northampton, and Darby; principal Towns of which were Lindum, now Lincoln, Rhugo, where now is Leiceſter, Gunſennæ not far from Stamford, now called Bridge-Caſterten; Agelocis, now Littleburough, a ſmall Village neer Newark upon Trent; Tripontium, now Torceſter, not far from Northampton. 11 The Brigantes, the greateſt Nation of the Iſland, filling all Yorkſhire, the Biſhoprick of Durham, Cumberland, Weſtmerland, and the County Palatine of Lancaſter, in a word all the North of England, (except Northumberland, the dwelling of the 12 Oltadini, whoſe chief Town was Bremenium, thought now to be Ribcheſter in Ruddisdale.) Principal places of which large and potent Nation, were Iſaurium, now Aldborrow in the North Riding; Eboracum, or York, in the Weſt Riding; and Petuaria thought to be Beverley, in the Eaſt Riding of Yorkſhire; Vinovium, where now is Bincheſter, in the Biſhoprick; Epiacum, now Pap-Caſtle in Cumberland; Calatum, now Wheallop-Caſtle in Weſtmerland; and Rhigodunum, now Rible-Cheſter in the County Palatine of Lancaſter. 13 The Cornavii, ſeated in the counties of Cheſter, Salop, Worceſter, Stafford, and Warwick, whoſe principal Towns were, Deuvania, or Legio viceſima Victrix, now Weſt-Cheſter; Uricomium, now Wroxeter, an ignoble village; Pennocrucium, now Penkridge, not far from Stafford; Brannogenium, now Worceſter; Mandueſſedum, now Mancheſter, on the River Anker. 14 And laſt of all, the Dobuni of Oxford and Gloceſter-ſhires; principal places of the which were, Dorcinia, now Dorcheſter, ſeven miles from Oxford, and Corinium, or Cyrenceſter, neer the heap of the Thames. Such names as are comprehended under the name of Wales, and Scotland, ſhall be remembred when we come to ſpeak of thoſe Countries.

Theſe, and the reſt of Wales and Scotland (as far as the Romans did proceed) being once ſubdued; Britain became a Member of the Roman Empire; yet ſo that many of the Tribes had their own Kings, and were ſuffered to govern by their own Laws: it being a known cuſtom amongſt the Romans, as we find in Tacitus, habere ſervitutis inſtrumenta & Reges, to permit Kings ſometimes in the conquered Countries, making them inſtrumental to the peoples bondage. And it is ſaid of Lucius Verus the Roman Emperour, that having put an end to the Parthian war, Regna Regibus, Provincias Comitibus ſuis regendas dediſſe: he gave thoſe Kingdoms he had conquered to be ruled by Kings; the Provinces to be governed by Provincial Earls. Kings of which kind were Codigunus and Pratuſagus, ſpoken of by Tacitus; Lucius, before-mentioned, the firſt Chriſtian King, and Coilus the Father of Helena, Mother of Conſtantine the great. But as afterward in the Heptarchie of the Saxons, that King who over-ruled the reſt, and was of moſt power and eſtimation, was called the Monarch of the Engliſh: ſo probable enough it is, that he amongſt the Britiſh Kings, who was in moſt credit with the Romans, or of moſt power amongſt his neighbours, might be permitted to aſſume the Title of King of Britain. The Catalogue of whom from Caſſibelane to Conſtantine, I have here ſubjoyned, according to the tenor of the Britiſh Hiſtory.

The Kings of Britain after the coming in of the Romans.

A. Ch.
	1	Caſſibelane, King of the Trinobantes, Commander of the Britans in the war againſt Julius Cæſar.
	2	Theomantius.
	3	Cymbeline.
	4	Guiderius.
45	5	Arviragus, by Hector Boetius called Pratuſagus, in whoſe time Britain was ſubdued by Aulus Plautius, ſent hither from the Emperour Claudius.
73	6	Marius.

125 7 Coilus, the ſuppoſed Founder of Colcheſter.
180 8 LUCIUS, the firſt Chriſtian King of Britain, and of all the World; who dying without iſſue, left the Roman Emperor his Heir.
207 9 Severus, Emperor of Rome, and King of Britain.
211 10 Baſſianus Caracalla, Son of Severus, Emperor of Rome after his Father; who loſt the Kingdom of Britain to 218 11 Carauſius, a Native of the Iſland, who rebelling againſt Caracalla, obtained the Kingdom for himſelf.
225 12 Alectus.
232 13 Æſclepiodorus.
260 14 Coilus II. the Father of Helena.
289 15 Conſtantius, Emperor of Rome, in right of Helena his Wife, ſucceeded on the death of Coilus the 2d.
16 Conſtantine the great, the Son of Helena and Conſtantius, who added his Eſtates in Britain to the Roman Monarchy.

But to proceed, Britain being thus made a Member of the Roman Empire, it was at firſt divided into three Provinces only, that is to ſay, Britannia prima, (ſo called becauſe firſt ſubdued) containing all the Countries on the South ſide of the Thames, and thoſe inhabited by the Trinobantes, Iceni, and Cattieuchlani, whoſe Metropolis or chief City was London. 2 Britannia Secunda, comprising all the Nations on the further ſide of the Severn, whoſe chief City was Caer-Leon upon Uſk, in the County of Munmouth; and 3 Maxima Cæſarienſis, including all the reſt to the Northern border, whereof the Metropolis was York: each Province having ſeveral Cities, 28 in all. Accordingly, the Church conforming to the Platform of the Civil State, there were appointed for the Government hereof eight and twenty Biſhops, reſiding in thoſe ſeveral Cities: three of the which reſiding in the principal Cities, were honored with the Title of Metropolitans, and a ſuperiority over all the Biſhops of their ſeveral and reſpective Provinces. And in this ſtate it ſtood till the time of Conſtantine, who in his new moulding of the Empire, altered the bounds, and enlarged the number of the Provinces; adding two more unto and out of the former, viz. Valentia, containing all the Countrey from the Frith of Solway, and the Picts wall on the South, to the Friths of Edenburgh and Dunbritton North; and Flavia Cæſarienſis, comprehending all between Thames and Humber, the reſt betwixt the Humber and the bounds of Valentia, continuing under the old name of Maxima Cæſarienſis, though now made leſs than any of the other four. The number of the Provinces being thus enlarged, he made the whole a full and complete Dioceſe of the Roman Empire, (whereas Spain had Tingitana added to it, as before was ſhewn) ſubordinate, as Spain was alſo, to the Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum, and governed by his Vicarius or Lieutenant General. By which diviſion or rather ſubdiviſion of the Roman Provinces, there was no other alteration made in the Eccleſiaſtical government, but that the Britiſh Church became more abſolute and independent than it was before; and had a Primate of its own (as each Dioceſe had) reſiding in the ſame City with the Vicar or Lieutenant General (which was then at York) of as great power and juriſdiction in the Iſle of Britain, as any Patriarch of Alexandria, Rome, or Antioch, in their ſeveral Patriarchates. The Metropolitans were no more than before they were: It being ordered by a Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, that their number ſhould not be augmented by any alteration made of the Roman Provinces. As for the Forces which the Romans kept here in continual pay, as well to keep their Coaſts and Frontires againſt the Enemy, as for retaining of the Natives in their due obedience; they came in all (if Panciroll be not miſtaken in his reckoning) to 23000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe: three Legions keeping here their conſtant and continual Reſidence, that is to ſay, the ſixt Legion, ſurnamed Victrix, at York; the 20th Legion ſurnamed alſo Victrix, at Weſt Cheſter; and the ſecond Legion ſometimes at Iſca Dannoniorum, which we now call Exeter, ſometimes at Iſca Silurum, which is now Caer-Leon upon Uſk. Which Legions with their Aides and Cohorts, may well make up the number ſpoken of before. Of ſo high eſtimation was this Iſland in the State of Rome.

Yet could not all theſe Forces ſo preſerve the Countrey from forein Enemies, but that in the declining of the Roman Empire, the Saxons made great ſpoils on the coaſts thereof; as did the Scots and Picts on the Northern borders: againſt all which the Romans held out well enough; and made good their ground; till the recalling of the Legions out of Britain for defence of Italy it ſelf, then waſted and deſtroyed by the barbarous Nations. Which hapned in or about the year of Chriſt 407, and ſome 470 years from the firſt invaſion; Honorius being at that time the Roman Emperor, and Victorinus the laſt Governor for the Empire, in the Iſle of Britain. For though the noble Ætius, on the Petition and complaint of the ſlaughtered people, unmercifully butchered by the Scots and Picts, ſent ſome ſmall Forces to aſſiſt them againſt thoſe Enemies: yet were they preſently called back for defence of Gaul, againſt the Hunnes breaking in upon it. And then the wretched Britains hopeleſs of all help from Rome, and being unable, by their own ſtrength to repel the Enemy, by reaſon of their long eaſe and diſuſe of Arms; applyed themſelves to Aldroenus, King of Armorica in France, (called Little Britain) a Prince extracted from the ſame ſtock, for relief and ſuccour. Whoſe Brother Conſtantine (according to the Britiſh ſtory) paſſing over with a competent Army; and having valiantly repulſed the barbarous people, was crowned King of Britain: the firſt of a new race of Kings, which ſwayed the Scepter, with much trouble and continual conflicts, either againſt the Scots or Saxons, till they were finally ſubdued and ſhut up in Wales. Thoſe of moſt obſervation in the courſe of the ſtory, were, 1 Conſtantine the firſt King, and the reſtorer of the Countrey to Peace and quiet, traiterouſly murdered by a Pict. 2 Vortiger, E. of the Gevilles, (now Cornwal) Protector of Conſtantius, the Son of Conſtantine, taken out of a Monaſtery;

Saxons after whoſe death, (wherein he was conceived to have had an hand) he got the Kingdom to himſelf: but being unable to defend it againſt the Enemy, and make his title alſo good againſt the other children of Conſtantine, firſt called in the Saxons. 3 Vortimer, eldeſt Son of Vortiger, who overthrew the Saxons in many battels; but in the midſt of his Succeſſes was poyſoned by Rowena a Saxon Lady, ſecond Wife of Vortiger. 4 Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies, of whom the Monkiſh writers, and other Legendaries, report ſo many idle and impoſſible actions. Doubtleſs he was a Prince of moſt perfect vertue, a great preſerver of his Countrey from approaching ruine, & worthy the pen of an able Panegyriſt; by whom his brave atchievements might have come entire unto us, without the intermixture of thoſe feats of Chivalry, affabulated to him and his Knights of the Round-table. For by the overſtraining of ſome Monkiſh Writers, Geofry of Monmouth and the reſt, they have given too juſt occaſion to poſterity to ſuſpect that vertue, which they intended to advance; and filled us with as much ignorance of the ſtory, as admiration of the perſons. But this hath not been the ill hap of King Arthur and his Nobles only; Charlemagne and the Twelve Peers of France, men of great vertue and renown, ſuffering as deeply in the ſame kind, by the folly of the French Romances. It is affirmed of this Arthur, (but how true I know not) that he began the cuſtom of celebrating the Nativity of our Lord and Saviour for the twelve days following, with ſuch paſtimes and ſports as are (or have been uſed of late) by the Lords of Miſrule in ſome Gentlemens houſes: an Inſtitution which the Scotiſh Writers of thoſe times much blame, perhaps not unjuſtly; it being a time more fit for our devotions than ſuch rude diſports. But to proceed, King Arthur dying, left the Crown to 5 Conſtantine, the Son of Cador Duke of Cornwall, his neereſt kinſman, ſlain by Aurelius Conanus, his own Nephew, who ſucceeded after him: which fraction did ſo weaken the diſtreſſed Britans, that they were forced to withdraw themſelves beyond the Severn; as 6 Careticus, or Caradoc, by the joynt forces of the Saxons, to change the plain Countries beyond the Severn, for the ſafer, but more fruitleſs Mountains. Of the reſt, till Cadwallader, there is little left of any certainty, but their names only; which are thus ranked in the ſecond race of who on a ſuperſtitious zeal travelled in a pilgrimage to Rome, there to receive the habit of a Religious Order from the hands of Pope Sergius, where he dyed not long after, Anno 689. After whoſe death, his Succeſſors were no longer called Kings of Britain, but Kings or Princes of Wales. And there we ſhall be ſure to find them.

And ſo the Britans leave the Stage, and the Saxons enter; a great and potent Nation amongſt the Germans, but greater by the aggregation of many people, under their name and ſervice, than in themſelves: the Juites and Angles joyning with them, and paſſing in Accompt as the ſame one Nation. Their Countries different as their names, until this Conjunction; but neighboring neer enough to unite together: the Angles dwelling at the firſt in that part of the Cimbrian Cherſoneſe, which we now cal Selſwick, where ſtill the Town called Angolen doth preſerve their memory; the Juites upon the North of them, where there is ſtill a Province called by the name of Juiteland; the Saxons South of both in the Dukedom of Holſtein, ſituate in the very neck of that Cherſoneſe where it joyneth with Germany. Joyning their powers they ſpread themſelves with good ſucceſs, to the South and Weſt; of which more hereafter. And growing Maſters of the Seas, infeſted with continual Piracies the Coaſts of Britain; occaſioning herein an Officer of great truſt and power, appointed to defend and ſcour thoſe Seas, in the Notitia, called Comes Littoris Saxonici. Known by this means amongſt the Britans, they were called in by Vortiger, to aid him againſt the Scots and Picts; whom they overcame in a pitched field neer Stamford, in the County of Lincoln: for ſo far had the barbarous people marched without any reſiſtance. Rewarded for this victory with the Iſle of Thanet, and after with the whole County of Kent, they began to quarrel with their hoſts: whom by degrees they diſpoſſeſſed of all the Countrey on this ſide of Severn; parcelling it into ſeven Kingdoms, called the Saxons Heptarchie, that is to ſay, 1 Of Kent, 2 of the South-Saxons, 3 of the Weſt-Saxons, 4 of the Eaſt-Saxons, 5 of the Eaſt-Angles, 6 of the North-Humbers, and 7 of the Mercians. The beginning, period, and Kings of which ſeveral Kingdom, and the uniting of them into one Monarchy, we are next to ſhew.

1. The Kingdom of KENT, confined within that County only, was begun by Hengiſt, who with his Brother Horſus had the leading of the Saxon Forces, at their firſt entry into Britain, An. 455. being the ſixt year after their firſt coming in: who reſtoring Paganiſm to this Countrey, when the reſt of the Iſle was Chriſtian, occaſioned the diſtinction of Kent and Chriſtendom. The Kentiſh, afterwards the firſt of the Saxons who received the Goſpel, by the preaching of Auguſtine the Monk, the Apoſtle of the Engliſh Saxons. Principal Cities of this Kingdom, were 1 Canterbury, once the Regal ſeat of the Kings of Kent, till given by Ethelbert, on his converſion, to Auguſtine the firſt Archbiſhop thereof, and his Succeſſors: afterwards the See of thoſe Archbiſhops, who had here their Palace and Cathedral, the Kings removing to Reculver. Seated in the Eaſt part of the Countrey, about ſeven or eight miles from from the Sea, a little Brook serving it thence with some commodities. A City of more Antiquity and fame, than beauty; being now ruinous and decayed, and having nothing in it worth observation, but the Cathedral Church, first founded by Ethelbert before mentioned; but afterwards new built upon his foundations, in the form it now stands by Archbishop Lanfrank, Will. Corboyle, and some other of their Successors in the said See. The Archiespiscopal Palace is a goodly building, and the ruines of S. Augustines Monastery shew what once it was. 2 Dover, antiently called Dubris, seated on the Sea-shore, where the passage is shortest into France; for that cause fortified with a strong and (in those days accounted an) impregnable Castle; esteemed one of the keys of England, and the chief of the Cinque-Ports; now giving the title of an Earl to the house of Hunsdon, chief of the Family of the Caries, neerly allied to Queen Elizabeth of famous memory. 3 Rochester, seated on the Medway, not far from Chatham, (the station of the Royal Navy) an antient City, but of no greatness; in former times called Durobrivis, after that Roffa, thence the name Roff-chester; a Bishops See, the second for Antiquity in all the Island. 4 Maidstone, upon the Medway also neer the head thereof, the largest and most beautifull in all this Countrey, and most commodiously seated for publick business.

II. The Kingdom of SOUTH-SEX, or of the SOUTH-SAXONS, was began by Ella, a noble Captain of that people, An. 488. It contained only the two Counties of Sussex and Surrey, which were thence denominated: the first so called quasi South-Sex, the Countrey of the South-Saxons; the second quasi South-Rey, as lying on the South-side of the River Thames, in the same sense as S. Maries Church on the other side of that River (in respect of London) is called S. Mary Over-Rey. The Christian Faith suppressed here, as in other places, was restored again in the time of King Edilwalch, by the preaching of S. Wilfride, Archbishop of York, living here in Exile. Places of most importance in it, were, 1 Chichester, built by Cissa the 2d King hereof, and called Cissan-cester, encompassed almost round with the River Lavant, falling not far off into the Sea: the chief Town of Sussex, and a Bishops See, removed hither from Sealsey, a Demy-Island, in the time of the Norman Conqueror, where it was first planted by Archbishop Wilfride. 2 Hastings, one of the Cinque-ports, in Sussex also; the landing place of the Normans, and famous for the overthrow of King Harold in the fields adjoyning. 3 Guildford, upon the River Wey, the chief Town of Surrey, well built, and having in it two Parish-Churches. 4 Arundel, in a Dale or Valley on the River Arun, and from thence so named: belonging to the Crown in the time of the Saxons, when given by the Testament of King Alfride unto Anthelm, his Brothers Son. Of great note for a beautiful and capacious Castle; but more for giving the title of Earl to the noble Families of the Albeneys, the Fitz-Alans, and the Howards: this last of such a large and diffused Nobility, that in the year 1641. there were no fewer than eight Howards, in the House of Peers. 5 Kingston upon the Thames, so called to distinguish it from Kingston upon Hull in Yorkshire: heretofore famous for the Coronation of the Monarchs of the English Saxons, whence it had the name of Kingston, or the Kings Town. This Kingdom had only three Kings, crushed in the infancy thereof by more potent neighbours.

590	3	Cheulin, King of West-Sex, called himself King of the South-Saxons.
	4	Edelwach, or Ethelwolf, the first Christian King, overcome and slain in battel by Ceadwall, King of the West-Saxons, An. 687. After whose death Berthan and Authun, two Brethren, took on themselves the Government, with the title of Dukes or Captains; and held it for a little while. But not being able to withstand the puissance of the West-Saxons, this Kingdom was subdued by Ina, the Successor of Ceadwall; by whom united to that Crown.

III. The Kingdom of WEST-SEX, or of the WEST-SAXONS, the third in order, and that which did in fine prevail over all the rest; contained the Counties of Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, Dorset, Wilts, Southampton, and Berks: begun by Cerdic, a noble Commander of the Saxons, arriving with new Forces out of Germany, An. 495. who having overcome the Britans of this Western tract, conducted by Natanland their Chieftain, entituled himself King of the West-Saxons, An. 522. The Christian Faith suppressed here, as elsewhere, was restored again in the time of Kingils, their first Christian King; by the preaching of S. Birinus, Bishop of Dorchester neer Oxford, then a great City of no fewer than ten Parishes,

Saxons. now reduced to one. Chief Cities of this Kingdom, were 1 Exeter, a fair and goodly City, and a Bishops See, removed hither from Cridington or Kirton, by Leofricus, An. 1049. Seated upon the bank of the River Ex, whence the name of Ex-ceaſter; environed with deep ditches, and very ſtrong wals, in compaſs about a mile and half beſides the Suburbs, in which are contained in all 15 Pariſh Churches, beſides the Minſter, a beautiful and ſtately Fabrick. 2 Bath, ſo called from the Bathes there being, the chief City of Somerſet; by the Latines called Aquæ Solis, by the Greeks Θέρμα Σέρμαλα, for the ſelf ſame reaſon. Situate in a low Vallie, environed about with Hils very ſteep and high, from whence come many Rivulets and freſh Springs, to the great commodity of the people. A fine neat Town, and beautified with as neat a Church, heretofore a Monaſtery, partner with Wels, the Biſhops See, in the ſtile Epiſcopal; and gives the Title of an Earl to the noble Family of the Bourchiers. 3 Falemouth, in Cornwall, ſeated upon a large and capacious Bay, ſo full of Creeks and Roads, capeable of the beſt Ships, that it is ſaid, an hundred ſayl of Ships may be lodged therein with ſuch convenience, that from the top of the one, the Maſt of another is not to be ſeen; the mouth or entrance of it defended for the greater ſafety with two very ſtrong Caſtles built by Henry the 8th; that of S. Mandits on the Eaſt, and that of Pendinas (commonly called Pendennis) upon the Weſt. 4 Dorcheſter, the chief Town of Dorſetſhire, which is thence denominated, by Antoninus called Durnovaria, the principal at that time of the Durotriges: an Inland Town, and conſequently of no great trading: not ſo much famous for ought elſe as giving the Title of a Marqueſs to Henry Earl of Kingſton, of the noble Family of the Pierrepoints. 5 Wilton, the head Town, in thoſe times, of Wiltſhire, and a Biſhops See, honored with the reſidence of nine ſeveral Biſhops. But by tranſlating of the See to Sarum, (or Sariſbury) as the fitter place, and carrying thither therewithall the thorow-fare which before was here; it fell by little and little into decay; and is now hardly worth the reputation of a Market-Town. 6 Wincheſter called Venta in the times of the Romans, by the Saxons Vent-ceaſter, ſituate on the banks of a pleaſant River, the ſeat Royal of the Weſt-Saxon Kings, who had here their Palace called Wolves-eye: ſo named from the Kings of the Wolphian Family, and the ſituation of it in the circlings of the fore-ſaid River, which the old Saxons called an Eye: not from the Wool-Staple here kept, as ſome; much leſs from Cardinal Wolſey, as others moſt abſurdly think. The houſe given after to the Biſhops, and made their Palace. The Town in compaſs two miles, beſides the Suburbs; commodiouſly ſeated in a low place, between very ſteep Hils, by which it is defended both from cold and wind. Afflicted very much ſince thoſe times both by war and fire, half of the ground within the Town being fields and gardens: but ſtill adorned with a magnificent Cathedral, and a gallant (but no great) Caſtle, bravely mounted upon an hill for defence and proſpect; beſides a College, and an Hoſpital added ſince thoſe days. 7 Southampton, conveniently ſeated on an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of burden to the very Key; which maketh it one of the richeſt Towns in thoſe parts of England. Well built, of fair large ſtreets, beautified with five Pariſh Churches, and fortified with high wals, a double ditch, and a right ſtrong Caſtle: but the Caſtle now decayed and ruined. 8 Reeding, on the Banks of the River Kennet, where it falleth into the Thames, by which means it hath the convenience of both Rivers: A Town of great trade for clothing, well-built, and of three Pariſh Churches: heretofore beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle and a goodly Monaſtery, but both now decayed. 9 Windſor, called Windleſhores in the old Saxon, ſituate neer the Banks of the Thames on a riſing ground, which gives it a fair proſpect over all the Countrey; adorned in ſucceeding times with a Palace Royal of the Kings of England, and the ſeat of the Order of the Garter. 10 Wallingford, the Gualleua of the Antients, and then the chief Town of the Attrebatii, as it was afterwards (in the time of the Saxons) of the County of Berks: a mile in compaſs at that time within the wals, fortified with an impregnable Caſtle, and adorned with twelve Pariſh Churches. So deſolated by a Plague, An. 1348. that there is now but one Church left, hardly Inhabitants enough to keep that in repair; and nothing of the wals left (as not much of the Caſtle) but the track and ruins.

IV. The Kingdom of EAST-SEX, or the EAST-SAXONS, was begun about the year 527, by Erchenwin, deſcended from Woden, the common Progenitor of the Saxons; from whom we have the name of Wedneſday, or Wodenſday, as they called it formerly. It contained only the Counties of Middleſex, Eſſex, and ſo much of Hartfordſhire, as is in the Dioceſe of London. The Chriſtian Faith expulſed here aa in other places, was reſtored again in the time of Sebert, the Founder of the Abby Church of S. Peter in Weſtminſter, by the preaching of Mellitus the firſt Biſhop of London after the entrance of the Saxons; ſuppreſſed again by Seward, and Sigebert, the Sons of Sebert; but ſetled ſtronger than before by Cedda, the next Biſhop there. Principal Cities of this Kingdom, beſides London, ſpoken of already, were

1 Weſtminſter, ſituate in thoſe times, a mile from London, now adjoyning to it. The See of the Archbiſhop of London in the time of the Britans: afterward by the Saxons, called Thorn-eye, or the Thorny Iſland; till the new Minſter built by Sebert as before is ſaid, and the weſtern ſituation of it in regard of S. Pauls, built at the ſame time by Ethelbert the King of Kent; gained it this new name. A City honored with the ſeat of the Kings of Eaſt-Sex, and ſince thoſe times with that of the Kings of England; the names of the old Palace of the one, and the new Palace of the other, ſtill remaining there; beautified upon that occaſion with more ſtately and magnificent houſes, belonging to the King, Biſhops, and Nobility, than all the other in the Kingdom; having of late a new Town added to it in the Convent Garden (a place belonging formerly to the Monks of Weſtminſter) for uniformity of building, and handſome ſtreets, inferior to no City of France, or Italy. 2 Colcheſter, the chief Town of Eſt-ſex, ſituate neer the Sea, on the River Coln; a Colony of the Londoners in former times, thence called Colonia Londinenſium, and Colonia only, then a Biſhops See: from which, or from the River, with the Addition of Ceaſter, after the manner of the Saxons, came the name of Colcheſter. A fair and well built Town, and of good reſort, fortified with an old Roman wall, and having in it to the number of 14 Churches. 3 Ithanceſter in Dengy Hundred, where S. Ceadda the ſecond Biſhop of London, baptized the relapſed Eaſt-Saxon. 4 Hartford, the chief Town of the County ſo called; by Beda named Herudford, and of great note in his time for a Synod there held in the dawning of the day of Chriſtianity amongſt the Saxons; in which S Auguſtine the Monk, the firſt Apoſtle of that people, had a conference or conſultation with the Britiſh Biſhops: More memorable in the following times, for giving the title of an Earl to the illuſtrious Family, ſurnamed De Clare; the addition of an Honor, and a goodly Patrimony to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter; and at this time, the title of Earl, and Marqueſs, to the noble Family of the Seymours.

V. The Kingdome of the EAST-ANGLES, ſo called from the Angli or Engliſh, which poſſeſſed theſe parts, and the Eaſtern ſituation of it; begun by Uffa, a great Commander of the Saxons, Anno 575. contained the Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeſhire, and the Iſle of Ely. The Chriſtian Faith firſt planted here in the Reign of Redwall the third King, by the Miniſtry of Felix a Burgundian, the firſt Biſhop of the Eaſt-Angles; the See whereof was afterwards removed to Norwich. Places of moſt importance in it, were 1 Dunwich on the Sea-ſhore, the firſt Biſhops See of the Eaſt-Angles, for the County of Suffolk; then a Town capable of that Dignity, now ruinous, decayed, and for the greateſt part worn into the Sea. 2 Ipſwich in the ſame County of Suffolk, and the chief of the Countrey, a rich, populous, and well traded Empory, conſiſting of no fewer than twelve Pariſh Churches. 3 Norwich, the head City of Norfolk, ſituate on the River Yare, which runs thence to Yaremouth; lying out in length a mile and an half, half as much in breadth, and in that Circuit comprehending about 30 Pariſhes; well walled about with many a Turret, and 12 Gates for entrance; but hath within it much waſt ground, the City ſuffering great loſs both in wealth, and buildings, by Kets Rebellion, in the time of King Edward the ſixth. Recovered of the firſt blow by the Dutch Manufactures, of the laſt ſtill languiſhing: yet ſtill it glorieth in the beauties of a fair Cathedral, the three Palaces of the Biſhops, the Dukes of Norfolk, and the Earls of Surrey; and the ruines of an antient Caſtle of the Saxons building. 4 North Elmham, the Biſhops See of the Eaſt-Angles, for thoſe parts which we now call Norfolk: both this, and that of Dunwich ruinated in the Daniſh Wars, but this reviving at the end of 100 years, and here continuing; both Sees united unto one; till removed to 5 Thetford, another Town of this County, ſituate on the confluence of the Thet, and the leſſer Ouſe: a larger Town than either of the other two, from whence at laſt removed to Norwich. 6 Cambridge, the chief Town of that County, by Antonine called Camboritum, whence the modern name: unleſs we rather fetch it from a Bridge over the River Cam or Grant (for ſome call it Grantbridge) as perhaps we may. A Town well built by reaſon of the Univerſity, ſaid to be founded by Sigebert, King of the Eaſt-Angles, of whom it is affirmed by Beda that he Founded a School for the education of children in the ways of good Learning; but he ſpeaketh neither of Univerſity, nor nameth Cambridge for the place. 7 Ely, ſituate in the Iſle ſo named, occaſioned by the divided ſtreams of Ner and Ouſe, with the over-flotes of other Rivers; turning a great part of this tract into Fens and Marſhes, the Inhabitants whereof were called Girvii. A place of no great beauty or reputation, as ſituate in a foggy and unhealthful air; but only for a fair Monaſtery, built by S. Ethelreda, Wife of Egfride, King of the Northumbers, by her made a Nunnery; afterwards rebuilt and repleniſhed with Monks by Ethelwold Biſhop of Wincheſter, An. 970. or thereabouts; finally made a Biſhops See in the time of King Henry the firſt, Anno 1109.

870	15	S. Edmund, deſcended from Anna, the 7th King hereof, Martyred by the Danes for his ſtout and conſtant perſeverance in the Faith of CHRIST; from whence the fair Town of S. Edmundsbury, in the County of Suffolk took denomination. After whoſe death the Kingdom poſſeſſed by the Danes, till vanquiſhed by King Edward the Elder, by whom it was united unto the reſt of England.

VI. The Kingdom of NORTHUMBERLAND, ſo called from the ſituation on the North of Humber, contained the Counties of York, Lancaſter, Durham, Weſtmorland, Cumberland, and Northumberland properly ſo called; and all the Southern parts of Scotland, as far as to the Frythes of Edenburgh and Dunbritton, formerly reckoned of as Members of the Roman Empire. Extorted from the Britans by Occa, the Son, and Ebuſa, the Brother of Hengiſt, Conducters of new Forces hither, (all of the Nation of the Angli) by the leave of Vortiger; under pretence of guarding theſe Countries from the inroads of the Scots and Picts. By them divided into two Provinces, the one called Deira, extending from the Humber, to the River of Twede; the other called Bernicia, reaching from Twede to the two Frythes before-mentioned: both Governed a long while by Dukes, under the Soveraignty and homage of the Kings of Kent. In the year 547. Duke Ida takes unto himſelf the title of King of Bernicia, and Anno 559. Duke Ella doth the like in Deira. Towns of moſt notice in this laſt (for the former is now reckoned as a part of Scotland) beſides York, ſpoken of before, were 1 Loncaſter, the chief Town of that County, ſituate on the River Lon, which with addition of Ceaſter much uſed by the Saxons, made the name thereof; called for the ſame reaſon Longovicus by the Emperor Antonine. The Town not very well peopled, nor much frequented, but of ſufficient fame in our Engliſh Annals for thoſe noble perſons, which have ſucceſſively born the titles of Earls and Dukes of it; the greateſt Princes for revenue, of any Subjects in Chriſtendom. 2 Kendall, or Candale, ſituate in a dale on the River Can, whence it had the name; the chief Town of Weſtmorland: built in the manner of a Croſs, two long and broad ſtreets thwarting one another. A rich, populous, and well-traded Town, eſpecially for the making of fine woollen cloth; but of more fame for giving the title of an Earl to John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; and to John de Foix, created Earl hereof by Henry the ſixth. 3 Carlile, upon the River Eden, a frontire Town betwixt the Romans and the Scots, as now between the Scots and Engliſh: conſumed to aſhes in the time of the Daniſh furies; afterwards re-built by William Rufus, made an Epiſcopal See in the reign of K. Henry the firſt, and beautified with a Cathedral founded at the perſwaſion of Athelwolfus, the firſt Biſhop thereof. 4 Monck-cheſter, on the Northern banks of the River Tine, which maketh there a ſafe and capacious Haven. Of no great note, till the Norman conqueſt, when from a Caſtle built by Robert Son of William the Conqueror, it was called New-Caſtle: growing from that time forwards to ſuch wealth and trading, by the neighbourhood of the Cole-mines there, that it is now the goodlieſt Town in all the North; fortified with ſtrong wals, beautified with five fair Churches, and giving to the L. Will. Cavendiſh, Viſcount Mansfield, the honorary titles of Earl and Marqueſs. 5 Hagueſtade, or Hextold, by the Romans called Axelodunum, by the Normans, Hexham; a Biſhops See in the firſt times of Chriſtianity amongſt theſe Northumbers, ſpecially ſo called, converted to the faith in the time of Oſwald their tenth King, by the Miniſtry of Aidan the firſt Biſhop of Lindisfarn: Eata the fifth Biſhop, erecting here an Epiſcopal See, for the better propagation of the Goſpel amongſt this people; after a ſucceſſion of ten Biſhops ruinated and ſuppreſſed by the Daniſh furies. 6 Dunholm, now Durham, ſituate on an hill as the name importeth, a Biſhops See, tranſlated hither with the body of S. Cutbert, An. 990. or thereabouts, from Lindisfarn, a ſmal Iſland on the Coaſt of Northumberland, where it was firſt erected by S. Aidanus, the firſt Biſhop thereof: planted in Lindisfarn, becauſe of the ſolitude of the place; tranſlated hither to avoid the fury of the Danes, who then raged extremely in theſe Quarters. And being ſetled here, was fortified with ſuch ample priviledges, and poſſeſſions, by the Saxon Kings; that the Biſhops were reputed for County Palatines, at and before the Norman Conqueſt. 7 Halifax, in the Weſt Riding of Yorkſhire, of great wealth by making of cloth. 8 Rippon, in the ſame, adorned with a fair Cathedral or Collegiate Church, ſubordinate to that at York. 9 Godman ham, (by Beda called Gotmandin Gahaun) famous in thoſe days for a Temple of the Saxon-Idols, burnt down and utterly deſtroyed by Coife, the chief Prieſt thereof, converted to Chriſtianity by Paulinus the firſt Archbiſhop of York, and the Apoſtle of the Northumbers in theſe parts. The Catalogue of the Kings of which mighty Nation, by reaſon of the diviſion of it into two Kingdoms, as before is ſaid, is very intricate and confuſed; the Kingdoms being ſometimes united, and ſometimes diſ-joyned. But in regard that the moſt prevalent King of either was called King of Northumberland, the other of Bernicia or Deira only, I ſhall accordingly ſubjoyn them in this order following.

The

The Kings of Northumberland.

A. Ch.

547 1 Ida, the first King.
560 2 Ella, King of Deira.
589 3 Ethelrick, Son of Ida King of Bernicia.
593 4 Ethelfride.
617 5 Edwin, Son of Ella, the first Christian King.
633 6 Ofrick.
634 7 S Oswald.
645 8 Ofwy, who having subdu'd and slain Ofwin King of Deira; was the first absolute King of all Northumberland, no more divided after that.
671 9 Egfride.
686 10 S. Alfride.
705 11 Ofred.
716 12 Kenred.
718 13 Osrick II.
729 14 Ceolnulph.
738 15 Ogbert.
758 16 Eswulph.
759 17 Edilwald.
765 18 Alured.
774 19 Ethelred.
778 20 Alfwald.
789 21 Ofred II.
794 22 Ethelred II. After whose death, slain by his treacherous and rebellious Subjects (as many of his Predecessors had been before) the kingdom became distracted into parts and factions; invaded by the Danes on the one side, the Scots and Picts on the other, who during these distractions had possessed themselves of all the Countries on the other side of the Twede. At the last An. 827. they yeelded themselves to Egbert, the most potent King of the West Saxons; ruled by his Deputies for a while, then subdued by the Danes, and finally recovered to the Crown of England, by Athelstan and Edred An. 950. or thereabouts. Content since that to give the Title of an Earl to some eminent persons, both of English and Norman races: as it hath done since the first year of King Richard the 2d to the noble Family of the Percies, descended by Joscelin of Brabant, Brother of Adelize the second Wife of King Henry the first, from Charles the Great, Emperor, and King of France.

VII. The Kingdom of MERCIA, was begun by Cridda, or Creodda, a great Commander of the Angli, or English Nation; who setling in the heart of Britain, where the people were last used to Arms, made themselves masters of the Counties of Glouceſter, Worceſter, Hereford, Salop, Cheſter, Stafford, Derby, Nottingham, Leiceſter, Rutland, Lincoln, Huntingdon, Northampton, Warwick, Oxon. Buckingham, Bedford, and the rest of Hartfordſhire: which bounded in a manner by all the rest of the Saxon Kingdoms, had the name of Mercia, from the word Meare, which signifieth a bound or limit. The Christian Faith suppressed here, as in other Kingdoms of the Saxons, was restored again in the reigns of Penda, Peada, and Wolfhere, by the Preaching of S. Chad, the first Bishop of Lichfield. Places of most observation in it, 1 Hereford, seated on the banks of the River Wye, in the midole of most flourishing meadows, and no less plentiful Corn-fields; raised out of the ruines of Ariconium here placed by Antonine, the tract of which name it doth still retain. A Bishops See in the time of the Britans, restored to that dignity by the Saxons, An. 680. the honorable title of the Bohuns, once Earls hereof; and afterwards of Henry of Bullingbrook, Duke of Hereford. 2 Worceſter, pleasantly seated on the Severn, over which it hath a very fair Bridge with a Tower upon it. A Bishops See, An. 679. beautified with a fair Cathedral, and every way considerable for situation, number of Churches, neat buildings, the industry of the Inhabitants, and giving the title of an Earl to the noble Family of the Somersets, extracted by the Beauforts from John of Gaunt. 3 Lichfield, the first Bishops See amongst the Mercians, founded there An. 646. by Ofwy King of the Northumbers, but fixed and setled by S. Chad in the reign of Wulfhere, King of the Mercians; endowed in the very infancy with such fair possessions, that in the year 793. Adulfus, the Bishop hereof, was made Archbishop of the Mercians. But it proved only a personal honor, and died with him. 4 Coventry, so called from an old Covent or Religious house, which gave name unto it. Situate in Warwickshire, and now the principal of that County, though esteemed a County of it self. Beautified with a goodly wall, two fair Parish Churches, large streets, and very handsom houses. A City of great trade and riches, though destitute of all advantages, which a navigable River might afford it; heretofore of great fame for a stately monastery, to which the See Episcopal was for a while removed from Lichfield; now a ruine only. 5 Leiceſter, once a Bishops See, the Dioceſe taken out of Lichfield, An. 733. removed to Dorcheſter neer Oxon, and thence to Lincoln. Beautified in those days with a fair Collegiate Church, a magnificent Abby, and a strong Castle; all decayed and ruined by the iniquity and injury of these later times: the Town remaining in as good plight both for trade and buildings, as most Towns do which want a Navigable River. Of most fame for the Earls thereof, Algar and Edwin, noble Saxons, Simon de Montfort the Catiline and great Incendiary of this Kingdom; the Princes of the house of Lancaſter, who bore this title; with some others since. 6 Darby, upon the River Derwent, a well-traded Town, and of good resort; adorned with five Churches, a goodly stone bridge, and a large Market-place; the honorary title of the noble Family of the Stanleys, created Earls hereof by King Henry the 7th. 7 Nottingham seated on the Trent, but very high upon an hill, which over-looks it: For buildings, fair streets, and a spacious Market-place, not giving way to many Cities; but of most fame for a Royal and magnificent Castle, which for strength, stateliness and prospect, may justly challenge the precedency of most in England. 8 Lincoln, a Town in those days of great strength and note, one of the best peopled Cities in all the Heptarchy; and of great merchandize and traffick both by Sea and Land: insomuch that Remigius, then Bishop of Dorcheſter, thought fit to translate hither the Episcopal See. Now much decayed, Saxons. and thence the Proverb, that Lincoln was, London is, &c. The chief fame which now it hath is for the Minſter, one of the ſtateliest Piles in England, and perhaps in Chriſtendom; high ſeated on an hill, and from thence diſcerned over all the Countrey. 9 Huntingdon, or the Hunters Town, from the great ſport the Hunters found in the neighbouring Forreſt; commodiouſly ſeated on the Northern bank of the River Ouſe, riſing unto the North with a ſoft aſcent, conſiſting of four Pariſh Churches, and ſhews the ruines of a Caſtle built by Edward the Elder, An. 917. 10 Peterburgh, ſeated in a Nook or Angle of Northamptonſhire, where formerly had been a gulf or whirl-pool of exceeding depth: but made firm ground by Wolfere King of the Mercians, when he laid the foundations of the Monaſtery, An. 633. dedicated to S. Peter, whence it had this name, before then called Medanſhede. A Town, but for the Church, of no great eſteem, as ſtanding out of the way for trade, and in no plauſible place for health or pleaſure: yet ſhewing two handſom ſtreets, a large Market-place, and a fair Pariſh Church (beſides the Abby) made an Epiſcopal See by King Henry the 8th. 11 Northampton, built on the Northern bank of the River Antona (now Nen) whence it had the name. A Town which for the beauty and circuit of it need not give way to many Cities; fortified heretofore with a very ſtrong Caſtle, and ſeated in ſo good an Air, that once the Students of Cambridge had a purpoſe to remove their Univerſity hither. The noble Familie of the Comptons are now Earls hereof. 12 Bedford, ſo called from Beds and Lodgings on the Ford, built on both ſides thereof, for the uſe of Travellers; growing in time to ſo great bigneſs as to contain in it five Pariſh Churches: famous in former times for the great battel fought in the adjoyning fields, An. 572, in which Cuthwolf the Saxon vanquiſhed the Britans, and became Maſter of the Countrey. But more famous for giving the title of Duke to John of Lancaſter, Regent of France for King Henry the ſixt, and Jaſper of Hatfield, Uncle to King Henry the 7th. 13 S. Albans, ſo called from a famous Monaſtery here founded by Offa the great King of the Mercians, in honor of S. Alban, the Proto-Martyr of Britain, a Citizen of Verulamium, neer adjoyning to it: out of the ruines whereof, decayed by Age, and deſtroyed by War; aroſe the preſent greatneſs of S. Albans, the faireſt and beſt-traded Town in the County of Hartford. 14 Buckingham the chief Town of the County ſo called, ſituate on the River Ouſe: fortified by King Edward the Elder againſt the Danes, Anno 915. otherwiſe not much obſervable, but for thoſe many noble perſonages which have had the title of Dukes hereof.

824	17	Ludecan.
839	19	Berthulf.
852	20	Burdred, a Subſtituted King of the Weſt-Saxons, and the laſt King of the Mercians (the ſhort reign of his ſix Predeceſſors portending that fatal period to be neer at hand.) After whoſe death, An. 886. this Kingdom for ſome few years tyrannized over by the Danes, was united by King Alured, to the Engliſh Monarchy.

Such was the Order and Succeſſion of the Saxon Kings, during the Heptarchie, or diviſion of it into ſeven Kingdoms; continuing ſeparate and diſtinct till the prevailing fortune of the Weſt-Saxons, brought them all together into one, by the name of England. But ſo, that they were ſubject for the moſt part unto one alone, who was entituled Rex Gentis Anglorum: thoſe which were ſtronger than the reſt, giving the Law unto them in their ſeveral turns; and are theſe that follow.

The Monarchs of the Engliſh Saxons in the time of the Heptarchy.

A. Ch.
455	1	Hengiſt, King of Kent, who firſt brought the Saxons into Britain.
481	2	Ella, the firſt King of the South-Saxons.
495	3	Cerdic, the firſt King of the Weſt-Saxons.
534	4	Kenrick, King of the Weſt-Saxons.
561	5	Cheuline, or Celingus, King of the Weſt-Saxons.
562	6	Ethelbert, King of Kent, the firſt Chriſtian King of the Saxons.
616	7	Redwald, King of the Eaſt-Angles.
617	8	Edwin, King of Northumberland.
634	9	Oſwald, King of Northumberland.
643	10	Oſwy, King of Northumberland.
659	11	Wulfhere, King of Mercia.
675	12	Ethelred, King of Mercia.
704	13	Kenred, King of Mercia.
709	14	Chelred, King of Mercia.

716 15 Ethelbald King of Mercia.
758 16 Offa the Great King of the Mercians.
794 17 Egfride, King of Mercia.
796 18 Kenwolf, King of Mercia.
800 19 Egbert, the Son of Alcmond, King of the Weſt-Saxons, who having vanquiſhed all the reſt of the Saxon Kings, and added moſt of their Eſtates unto his own; cauſed the whole united body to be called Engel-lond, or England, in a Parliament or Councel held at Wincheſter, An. 819. being the 19th year of his Reign over the Weſt-Saxons; and by that name he was then crowned in the preſence of his Nobles, and the reſt of his Subjects; leaving it unto the reſt of his Succeſſors.

But before we come to the recital of their names, we are to take notice of the Danes, the next conſiderable Actors on the Stage of England; who in the time of this Egbert firſt invaded the Countrey, and after exerciſed the patience of his Poſterity, till in fine they got the kingdom to themſelves. Of the Original and firſt Succeſſes of this people, we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Denmark. Suffice it here to know, that having taken up the void Rooms of the Iuites and Engliſh in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe; they thought it not amiſs to follow them into Britain alſo; making a Diſcovery of ſome part of the Coaſts thereof with three Ships only, Anno 787, being the firſt year of Bithric (the Father of Egbert) King of the Weſt Saxons. Which having done, and prepared themſelves for the undertaking, in the time of Egbert they invaded Northumberland, the Iſle of Shepey in Kent, and the Coaſts of Wales; not without much difficulty driven out by him. In the Reign of the three Kings ſucceeding, having vanquiſhed the Northumbrians, Eaſt-Angles, and a part of the Mercians; they erected in thoſe kingdoms many petit Tyrannies: By Alfred firſt ſtopped in their Career; by Edward the Elder outed of the Eaſt-Angles, and by Athelſtan of Northumberland alſo; the Danes for ſome time after being ſubject to the Engliſh Government, mixing in marriages and alliance, and incorporate with them. By the valour and good Fortune of Swain their King, they recovered their power again in England; and in the perſon of Canutus obtained the kingdom: who having impolitickly ſent back his Danes into their Countrey (as if a kingdom got by force could be held by favour) opened a way to their excluſion from the Crown; which happened within ſeven years after his deceaſe. Which ſaid, we come to the Succeſſions of

The Kings of England of the Saxon Race.

819 1 Egbert, the laſt King of the Weſt Saxons, and the firſt of England. 18.
837 2 Ethelwolf, the Eldeſt Son of Egbert. 20.
857 3 Ethelbald, the Eldeſt Son of Ethelwolf. 1.
858 4 Ethelbert, the Brother of Ethelbald. 5.
863 5 Ethelfred, the Brother of the two former Kings, the third Son of Ethelwolf, and as much moleſted by the Danes, as his Brethren were. 10.
873 6 Alfride, the fourth Son of Ethelwolf, who totally united the Saxon Heptarchie into one Eſtate; vanquiſhed the Danes, whom he made ſubject to his commands, though he could not expel them. He divided England into ſhires, and reſtored the Univerſity of Oxon.
900 7 Edward, ſurnamed the Elder, the Son of Alfride, who recovered the Eaſt Angles from the power of the Danes, whom he ſhut up in Northumberland. 24.
924 8 Athelſtan, the Son of Edward, who ſubdued the Britans of Cumberland, and Cornwall; and compelled the Danes to ſubmit themſelves to the Engliſh Government. In his time lived S. Guy of Warwick, famous for overcoming Colbrand the Daniſh Champion (the great Goliah of that people) neer the Wals of Wincheſter. 10.
940 9 Edmund, the Brother of Athelſtan, by whom the Danes of Northumberland were brought under obedience; and the kingdom of the Britans in Cumberland utterly ſubverted.
946 10 Edred the Brother of Edmund and Athelſtan, ſo fortunate againſt the Danes, that he compelled them to be chriſtened. 9.
955 11 Eawy, the Son of Edmund.
959 12 Edgar, the Brother of Edwy, ſurnamed the Peaceable, the moſt abſolute Monarch of England ſince the time of the Saxons; by whom the tribute of money impoſed by Athelſtan on the Welch, was exchanged into a tribute of Wolves. 16.
975 13 Edward II. Son of Edgar, treacherouſly murdered by his Stepdame, to make way for Ethelred her Son, hence ſurnamed the Martyr. 3.
978 14 Ethelred, the younger Son of Edgar, and half Brother of Edward, enjoyed the Crown unquietly which he got unjuſtly. Oppreſſed and broken by the Danes, he was fain to buy his peace of them at the yearly tribute of 10000 pounds; inhanced to 48000 pounds within ſhort time after; which moneys were raiſed upon the ſubjects, by the name of Danegelt. Weary of theſe exactions, he plotted warily with his ſubjects to kill all the Danes, as they ſlept in their beds; which accordingly was put in execution on S. Brices night, Novemb. 12. Anno 1012. To revenge this out-rage and diſhonor, Swaine King of Denmark, with a Fleet of 350 ſhips, came into England; the fear whereof compelled Ethelred, a weak and impuiſſant Prince, to fly into Normandy; leaving his poor Subjects to the mercy of the Daniſh Tyrant, who miſerably plagued them till his death. To whom ſucceeded his Son Cnute (Canutus) a more temperate Prince; who maugre Ethelred now returned, or his Son Edmund Ironſide, a moſt valiant King, did in the end poſſeſs himſelf of the whole kingdom.

England. 1016 15 Edmund II. ſurnamed Ironſide, having in vain attempted to recover his Kingdom; at laſt divided it with Canutus: not long after which he was treacherouſly and baſely murdered. By Edward, ſurnamed the Out-Law, his Eldeſt Son, he was Grand-father of Edgar Atheling, and of Margaret, Wife of Malcolm the third, King of the Scots.

The Daniſh Kings.

1017 1 Canutus King of Denmark and Norwey, after the death of Edmund the 2d, ſole King of England. He married Emma the Widow of Ethelred, and daughter of Richard Duke of Normandy. 20.

1037 2 Harald the baſe Son of Canutus, ſurnamed Harfuger. 4.

1040 3 Canutus II. commonly called Hardy-Cnute, the lawful ſon of Canutus by Emma the Widow of Ethelred the 2d, and Mother of Edward, ſurnamed the Confeſſor; the laſt King of the Danes in England. After whoſe death, that People having tyrannized in England for the ſpace of 255 years, (of which they had Reigned only 26) were utterly expelled the Countrey, or paſſed in the Accompt of Engliſh; Edward the Confeſſor, the youngeſt Son of Ethelred, being advanced unto the Throne, by the power and practices of his Mother Emma, and the abſence of the Children of Edmund Ironſide his elder Brother, Anno 1042.

Now concerning the Danes abiding here, and going hence, as they did, I obſerve three cuſtoms yet in uſe amongſt us. Firſt, each Engliſh houſe maintained one Dane, who living idly like the Drone among the Bees, had the benefit of all their labour, and was by them called Lord Dane; and even now when we ſee an idle fellow, we call him a Lordane. 2 The Danes uſed when the Engliſh drank, to ſtab them, or cut their throats: to avoid which villany, the party then drinking, requeſted ſome of the next unto him, to be his ſurety or pledge, whilſt he paid nature her due: and hence have we our uſual cuſtom of pledging one another. 3 The old Romans at the expulſion of their Kings, annually ſolemnized the Fugalia: according to which pattern the joyful Engliſh having cleared the Countrey of the Danes, inſtituted the annual ſports of Hock-tide; the word in their old tongue, the Saxon, importing the time of ſcorning, or triumphing. This ſolemnity conſiſteth in the merry meetings of the Neighbours in thoſe days, during which the Feſtival laſted, and was celebrated by the younger ſort of both ſexes, with all manner of exerciſes, and paſtimes in the ſtreets, even as Shrove-tide yet is. But now time hath ſo corrupted it, that the name excepted, there remaineth no ſign of the firſt Inſtitution.

The Saxons reinthroned.

1042 16 Edward III. ſurnamed the Confeſſor, half Brother both to Edmund Ironſide, and Hardy-Cnute the Dane, called out of Normandie, where he lived with the Dukes his Couſins, ſucceeded in the Realm of England. This King collected out of the Daniſh, Saxon, and Mercian Laws, one univerſal and general Law; whence our Common Law is thought to have had its Original: which may be true of the written Laws, not of the cuſtomary and unwritten Laws; theſe being certainly more antient. He was in his life of that Holineſs, that he received power from above to cure many Diſeaſes; amongſt others the ſwelling of the throat, called by us the Kings Evil: a Prerogative that continueth Hereditary to his Succeſſors of England. Finally, after his death, he was Canonized for a Saint; and dyed, having reigned 24 years.

1066 17 Harald II. Son to Earl Godwin, was choſen King in the nonage of Edgar Atheling, Grandchild to Edmund Ironſide, the true Heir of the kingdom: to which Harald might pretend ſome title as being born unto Earl Godwin by Thyra the baſe daughter of Canutus the firſt, Siſter by the whole blood to Harald Harfuger, and of the half blood to Canutus the ſecond, the laſt Kings of the Danes in England. But William Duke of Normandy, (of which people we have ſpoke already when we were in France, and ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Denmark, as the laſt Actors on the Theatre or Stage of England: This William I ſay) pretending a Donation from his Couſin, King Edward the Confeſſor; invaded England, ſlew Harald, and with him 66654 of his Engliſh Souldiers, and poſſeſſed himſelf of the kingdom; uſing ſuch Policy in his new Conqueſt, that he utterly diſheartned the Engliſh from hopes of better Fortune. From him beginneth the new Accompt of the Kings of England, thoſe of the former Line being no longer reckoned in the computation of the firſt, ſecond, or third, &c.

The Norman Kings.

1067 1 William, ſurnamed the Conqueror, after the vanquiſhment and death of Harald, acknowledged and Crowned King, altered the antient Laws of England, and eſtabliſhed thoſe of Normandy in place thereof: governing the people abſolutely by the power of the Sword, and giving a great part of their Lands to his former Followers, and ſuch as were ingaged in the Action with him; from whom moſt of our antient Families doe derive themſelves; thoſe Lands to be holden in Knights-ſervice, which drew along with it the Wardſhip of the Heir in Minority, as a charge laid upon the Land.

1089 2 William II. ſurnamed Rufus, ſecond Son to the Conqueror, ſucceeded by the appointment of his Father, and was crowned King; ſlain afterwards in the New Foreſt, by an arrow levelled at a Deer.

1102 3 Henry, for his learning ſurnamed Beau-clerk, the third Son of the Conqueror, in the abſence of his Brother Robert (in the Holy-Land Wars) entred on the Kingdom, and afterwards took from him alſo the Dukedom of Normandy, and put out his eyes. Deprived of all his male-iſſue, he left one only Daughter whoſe name was Maud; firſt maried to the Emperor Henry the fifth, and after to Geofry Plantagenet Earl of Anjou, Tourein, and Maine. 34.

1136 4 Stephen, ſecond Son of Stephen Earl of Champagne and Blais, and of Alice Daughter to the Conqueror, ſucceeded; who to purchaſe the peoples love, releaſed the tribute called Danegelt: he ſpent moſt of his reign in War againſt Maud the Empreſs. 19.

The Saxon blood reſtored.

1155 5 Henry II. Son to Maud the Empreſs, Daughter to Henry the firſt, and to Maud Daughter to Malcolm King of Scotland, and Margaret, Siſter to Edgar Atheling; reſtored the Saxon blood to the Crown of England. His Father was Geofry Earl of Anjou, Tourein, and Maine; which Provinces he added to the Engliſh Empire, as alſo the Dutchie of Aquitain, and the Earldom of Poictou, by Eleanor his Wife; and a great part of Ireland by conqueſt. Happy in all things, the unnatural rebellions of his Sons excepted. 34.

1189 6 Richard, the Son of Henry, ſurnamed Ceur de Lyon, warred in the Holy-Land, overcame the Turks, whom he had almoſt driven out of Syria; took the Iſle of Cyprus; and after many worthy atchievements, returning homewards to defend Normandy, and Aquitain againſt the French, was by Tempeſt caſt upon Dalmatia; and travelling through the Dominions of the Duke of Auſtria, was taken Priſoner, put to a grievous ranſom; and after his return, ſlain at the ſiege of Chaluz, in the Province of Limoſin. 12.

1201 7 John Brother of Richard, an unhappy Prince, and one that could expect no better; as being an unnatural Son to his Father, and an undutiful Subject to his Brother. Diſtreſſed for a great part of his reign, by Wars with his Barons; outed of all Normandy, Aquitain, and Anjou, by the power of the French; to whom alſo he was likely to have loſt the Realm of England: Finally, after a baſe ſubmiſſion of himſelf and his kingdom to the Popes Legate, he is ſaid to have been poyſoned at Swinſtede Abby. 17.

1218 8 Henry III. Son of John, expelled the invading French out of England, and by a Compoſition with King Lewis the 9th, was reſtored unto the Dukedom of Guyenne, held by his Succeſſors till the reign of King Henry the ſixt. Exhauſted by the Pope, and oppreſſed a long time by his factious and unruly Barons, but at laſt victorious. 56.

1274 9 Edward, the Son of Henry, awed France, ſubdued Wales, brought Scotland into ſubjection; of whoſe King and Nobility he received homage. 34.

1308 10 Edward II. Son of Edward the firſt, a diſſolute Prince, hated of the Nobles, and contemned by the vulgar, for his immeaſurable love to Peirce Gaveſton, and the Spencers; was twice ſhamefully beaten by the Scots: and being depoſed by a ſtrong faction raiſed againſt him by his Queen, and Roger Lord Mortimer; was barbarouſly murdered in Berkley Caſtle. 19.

1327 11 Edward III. Son of Edward the 2d, a moſt vertuous and valorous Prince, brought the Scots to obedience, overthrew the French in two great Battails, took the Town of Callice, and many fair Poſſeſſions in that kingdom. 50.

1377 12 Richard II. another of our unfortunate Kings, loſt many of his Peeces in France, and at laſt bein over-awed by his two great Uncles of Lanceſter and Gloceſter, and taken Priſoner by his Couſin, the Duke of Hereford, he was forced to reſign his Crown, and afterwards was murdered at Pomfret Caſtle.

The Lancaſtrian Line.

1399 13 Henry IV. Son to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter, the fourth Son to Edward the 3d, was by the power of the Sword, but with the conſent of the people, ſetled in the Throne; and ſpent his whole Reign in ſuppreſſing home-bred Rebellions. 15.

1414 14 Henry V. the mirrour of Magnificence, and Pattern of true vertue, purſued the Title of France, and won it, being ordained Heir apparent to the French Crown, but lived not to poſſeſſe the kingdom. 9.

1423 15 Henry VI. a pious, but unfortunate Prince, was crowned King of France in Paris; which he held during the life of his Uncle John of Bedford, and Humphrey of Gloceſter; after whoſe deaths, he not only loſt France to the French, but England and his life to the Yorkiſh Faction. 38.

The Yorkiſh Line.

England.

Mortimer Earl of March, the Son of Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, and of Philippa his Wife, ſole Daughter of Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third Son of the ſaid King Edward, and Elder Brother of John of Gaunt. The claim firſt ſet on foot by his Father, the Duke of York, who loſt his life in purſuance of it in the Battail of Wakefield; with better fortune and ſucceſs perſued by King Edward himſelf, who finally after nine bloody Battails, fought between the Houſes (eſpecially that of Towton, in which were ſlain 36000 Engliſh) was quietly ſeated in the poſſeſſion of England and Ireland. 23.

1484 17 Edward V. his Son, was before his Coronation murdered by his Uncle Richard, in the Tower of London.

1484 18 Richard III. Brother of Edward the 4th, a moſt wicked and tyrannical Prince, to make way unto the Diadem, murdered King Henry the 6th, and Prince Edward his Son. 3 George Duke of Clarence, his Brother. 4 Haſtings a faithful ſervant to King Edward. 5 Rivers, Vaughan, and Gray, the Queens kindred. 6 Edward the 5th his Soveraign, with his Couſin Richard. 7 Henry Duke of Buckingham his dear Friend, and greateſt Coadjutor in theſe his ungodly practices; and his Wife Anne; ſo to make way to an inceſtuous marriage with his Neece Elizabeth, the Eldeſt Darghter of Edward the 4th, but before the ſolemnity he was ſlain at Boſworth. 3.

The Union of the Families.

1487 19 Henry VII. Earl of Richmond, Heir to the Houſe of Lancaſter, (as Son of Margaret Daughter of John Duke of Somerſet, Son of John Earl of Somerſet, Son of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter) after the overthrow of Richard, maried Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir to Edward 4th, uniting by that mariage the divided Families. He was alſo extracted from the Britiſh, and French, Royal blood, as being Son to Edward Tudor Earl of Richmond, Son to Owen Tudor (deſcended from Cadwalladar, the laſt King of the Britans) and Katharine of France, Widow of Henry the 5th. His whole wars was againſt home-bred Rebels; the chief being Lambert, and the Followers and Fautors of Perken Warbeck. 23.

1509 20 Henry VIII. Heir to both Families, between which were fought for the Diadem, 17 pitched Fields; in which periſhed 8 Kings and Princes, 40 Dukes, Marqueſſes, and Earls, 200000 of the common people, beſides Barons, and Gentlemen. This King baniſhed the uſurped Supremacy of the Popes, and began the Reformation of Religion; though formerly he had writ a Book againſt Luther, for which the Pope gave him the honourable Title of The Defender of the Faith, afterwards made Hereditary by Act of Parliament to his Heirs, and Succeſſors. A Prince of great vices, but of greater vertues. 38.

1547 21 Edward VI. the Son of Henry the 8th by Jane Seymour his 3d Wife; out of whoſe womb he was fain to be cut, to come into the world, as Cæſar was: but he had neither Cæſars Fortune, nor length of life; dying very young, and his affairs conducted by divided Counſels; though otherwiſe of great hopes, and of a pregnancy of judgement above his yeers. 6.

1553 22 Mary, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th by Katharine of Spain, the Widow of his Brother Arthur, reſtored the Popes Supremacy baniſhed by her Father, with the whole maſs of Popery aboliſhed in her Brothers Reign. To which Religion ſo addicted, that in the ſhort time of her Reign there was more blood ſhed, than in the whole 44 years of her Siſter Elizabeth. In the laſt year of her Reign ſhe loſt Calice to the French, which proved the loſs of her life alſo, as it was ſuppoſed. 5.

1558 23 Elizabeth, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th by the Lady Anne Bullein his ſecond Wife; a moſt gracious Heroick Princeſs; was by the divine providence of God preſerved from the practices of her Enemies in her Siſters reign, to ſway the Scepter of the Kingdom. She purſued the Reformation of Religion, begun in the times of her Father and Brother; refined the corrupt coin brought in by her Father; furniſhed the Royal Navy with all kind of warlike Ammunitions; encreaſed the Revenue of the Univerſities; by the Statute of Proviſions; ſuccoured the Scots againſt the French, the French Proteſtants againſt the Papiſts, and both againſt the Spaniard: defended the Netherlands againſt the attempts of Spain; commanded the whole Ocean; entred League with the Muſcovite; and was famous for her prudence and government amongſt the Turks, Perſians and Tartars, yea her very Enemies. Finally ſhe died in the 45 year of her reign, and the 70th of her life, on the 24th of March, Anno 1602. according to the computation of the Church of England, which beginneth the new year with the Feaſt of the Annunciation. To whom ſucceeded JAMES the ſixth King of the Scots, with the joy of all men, as the next undoubted heir of the Crown. Of whom we ſhall ſay more when we come to ſpeak of the Monarchs of Britain; of which he was the firſt ſince the fall of the Roman Empire, and ſuch more properly than the greateſt of all thoſe Emperors had been before; None of them having all the North parts of Britain it ſelf, or any part of Ireland at all, nor many of the Iſles adjoyning, under their Dominion.

In the mean time to look on England as a State diſtinct, we will conſider it and the Kings thereof, with with reference to reputation abroad, and power at home; with the Revenues, Arms, and Military Orders of it, as in other places. And first for Reputation, when all Christendom in the Council of Constance, was divided into Nations, Anglicana Natio was one of the Principal, and not Subaltern; and had its vote of equal balance with the Nations of France, or Italy, in all affairs concerning the doctrine, discipline, and peace of the Church, which were there debated. And for the place due to the Kings hereof in those General Councils, and the rank they held among other Christian Princes; I find that the Emperor of Germany was accounted Major filius Ecclesiæ; the King of France, Minor Filius; and the King of England, Filius tertius, & adoptivus. The King of France in General Councils, had place next the Emperor, on his right hand; the King of England on his left hand; and the King of Scotland, next before Castile. Now indeed the King of Spain being so much improved, is the dearly beloved Son of the Church; and arrogateth to himself the place above all other Princes: but in the time of Pope Julius, the controversie arising between the Ambassadors of the two Princes, for precedency; the Pope adjudged it to belong of right unto England. And Pope Pius the fourth, upon the like controversie, arising between the Ambassadors of France, and Spain, adjudged the precedency to the French.

Touching the Souldierie of England, and their most notable atchievements, both by Sea and Land, sufficient hath been said already. What Forces the Kings hereof have been able to raise, and may command for present service, will best be seen by the action of King Henry the 8th at Bullen, the Armies of Queen Elizabeth in 88. and the numbers of the trained Bands of the several Counties. First, for the Action of King Henry the 8th, he had in his Avant-guard 12000 Foot, and 500 Light Horse in blew Jackets with red Guards; in the Rere-ward a like number both of Horse and Foot; and in the main Battail 20000 Foot and 2000 Horse, all in Red Jackets and yellow Guards: the whole number 44000 Foot and 3000 Horse. They drew after them 100 great Peeces, besides small ones; and for conveyance of their Ordinance, Baggage, and other necessaries, no fewer than 25000 Draught-horses, besides other carriages. In the next place for 88. the Queen dispersed in several places on the Southern Coasts of the Kingdom, to hinder the landing of the Enemy, 25000 Souldiers of both sorts; at Tilbury, for the defence of the City of London, under the command of the Earl of Leicester, 22000 Foot, and 1000 Horse: and for the Guard of her own person, under the Lord Hunsdon, 34000 Foot, and 2000 Horse: in all, the number of 84000 men: besides those goodly Troops, which the Nobility and Gentry did present her with, at their own proper charges. And as for the trained Bands, the number of both sorts disciplined and mustered to be ready upon all occasions: in the 8th year of King James, (for I have since seen no Muster-Roll of them) amounted to 296150 able men, 144300 Armed men, 935 Demilances, 677 Light Horse, 16545 Pioneers; besides what was required of Peers and Prelates, supposed to amount to 20000 Armed men, and 4000 Light Horse. And for their strength at Sea, besides the Navy Royal consisting of about 30 gallant Ships, (besides the lesser Vessels); the best and bravest, that any Prince in Christendom can boast of, as his own propriety: there are such store of Colliers and Merchants ships, fit for any service, that in the year 88 aforesaid, the Queen had 100 Sayl of good Ships to oppose the Spaniard; and 20 more, to wait upon the motions of the Duke of Parma. And in the year 1597. she set out for the Island Voyage, no fewer than 120 Sayl of all sorts, of which 60 were men of war.

As for the Revenues of this Kingdom, Boterus reckoned them in the time of King Henry the 7th, to be no more then 400000 Crowns per Annum; but grants, that afterward they were improved to a million more, by King Henry the 8th; the dissolution of Monasteries, and the benefit redounding from the Court of Wards, making that improvement. And to say truth, the Universal dissolution of Religious Houses of all sorts, did for the time so mightily increase his annual Income; that he was fain to erect two new Courts (the Court of Augmentation, and the Court of Surveyors) for the better managing of the same. But these Additions being wasted by his own exorbitant expences, and the several Alienations made by King Edward the sixth; those Courts of new Erection were dissolved again; and the Revenue fell so short of its former height, that in the 12 year of Queen Elizabeth, the profits of the Crown (besides the Court of Wards, and the Dutchie of Lancaster) came to no more than to 188197 l. 4 s. Of which 110612 l. 13. s. went out that year upon the Navy, the charge of Houshold, and other necessary Assignments. Since which time the great increase of trading, both at home and abroad, and the great glut of money in all parts of the World; hath added very much to the Intrado: The certainty whereof as I doe not know, so neither will I aim at it by uncertain Hear-say.

The Arms of the Realm of England, are Mars, 3 Lions passant Gardant, Sol. The reason why these Arms quartered with the French, took the second place, are 1 becaus that France at the time of the first quartering of them, was the larger and more famous kingdom. 2 That the French seeing the honour done to their Arms, might more easily be induced to have acknowledged the English Title. 3 Because the English Arms, were compounded of the Lion of Aquitaine, and the two Lions of Normandy, being both French Dutchies.

The principal Orders of Knight-hood are, and were, 1 of the Round Table, instituted by Arthur King of the Britans, and one of the Worlds nine Worthies. It consisted of 150 Knights, whose names are recorded in the History of King Arthur, there where Sir Ure, a wounded Knight, came to be cured of his hurts: it being his Fate that only the best Knight of the Order should be his Chirurgeon. The Arms of most of these, with their several Blazons (I know not on how good authority) we find in Bara, the French Herald. The principal of them were Sir Lancelot, Sir Tristrum, Sir Lamorock, Sir Gawin, &c. all placed at one Round Table, to avoid quarrels about priority and place. The England. Round Table hanging in the great Hall at Winchester, is falsely called Arthurs Round-Table, it being not of sufficient Antiquity, and containing but 24 Seats. Of these Knights there are reported many fabulous Stories. They ended with their Founder, and are feigned by that Lucian of France, Rablaies, to be the Ferry-men of Hell; and that their pay is a piece of mouldy bread, and a phillop on the nose.

Round

2 Of S. George, called commonly the Garter, instituted by King Edward the third, to increase vertue and valour in the hearts of his Nobility; or, as some will, in honor of the Countess of Saliburies Garter, of which Lady, the King formerly had been inamoured. But this I take to be a vain aud idle Romance, derogatory both to the Founder, and the Order; first published by Polydore Virgil, a stranger to the affairs of England, aud by him taken upon no better ground than fama vulgi, the tradition of the common people; too trifling a Foundation for so great a building; Common bruit, being so infamous an Historian, that wise men neither report after it, nor give credit to any thing they receive from it. But for this fame or common bruit, the vanity and improbabilities thereof have been elsewhere canvassed. Suffice it to observe in this time and place, that the Garter was given unto this Order, in testimony of that Bond of Love and Affection, wherewith the Knights or Fellows of it were to be bound severally unto one another, and all of them joyntly to the King as the Soveraign of it. So saith the Register of the Order, (in which occurreth not one word of the Ladies Garter) affirming that King Edward did so fit the habit unto that design, Ut omnia ad amicitiam & concordiam tendere nemo non intelligat: But to return unto the Order, there are of it 26 Knights, of which the Kings of England are Soveraigns: and is so much desired for its excellency, that 8 Emperors, 21 forein Kings, 22 forein Dukes and Princes, besides divers Noble-men of other Countries, have been Fellows of it. The Ensign is a blew Garter, buckled on the left leg, on which these words are imbroydered, viz. Honi soit qui mal y pense. About their necks they wear a blew Ribband, at the end of which hangeth the Image of S. George; upon whose day the Installations of the new Knights are commonly celebrated.

3 Of the Bath, brought first into England, 1399, by Henry the fourth. They are created at the Coronation of Kings and Queens, and the Installation of the Princes of Wales: their duty to defend true Religion, Widows, Maids, Orphans, and to maintain the Kings Rights. The Knights thereof distinguished by a Red Ribband, which they wear ordinarily about their necks, to difference them from Knights Batchelors, of whom they have in all places the precedency; unless they be also the Sons of Noble-men, to whom their birth gives it before all Orders.

4 Of Baronets, an Order instituted by King James, in the 9th year of his Reign, for the furtherance of the Plantation of Ulster. They have Precedency of the Knights of the Bath, but not of those of the Garter, nor of the younger Sons of the Nobility. But this being Hereditary, not personal, and rather civil than military; is not so properly to be ranked amongst Orders of Knighthood.

There were in England, at and since the time of the Reformation, Archbishops 2. Bishops 20.
